5157<sup>2</sup>. For the Voluntary in the Lord . . . was Divine from conception, and was the Divine good itself; but the Voluntary by birth from the mother was evil; and therefore this was to be rejected, and a new one procured in its place from the Divine Voluntary through the Intellectual, or from the Divine good through the Divine truth; thus from His Own power. Tr.

5236<sup>4</sup>. That innocence alone acknowledges and receives the Lord. Sig.

5249<sup>2</sup>. The celestial Angels . . . are in the Divine sphere of the Lord, thus as it were in the Lord; and they are in the perception of the inmost joy when they are in thought about the Lord, and about the salvation of the human race by the Lord's having made the Human in Himself Divine.

5256. Those who at this day come into the other life from the Christian Church almost all have an idea of the Lord as of another man . . . But those who have been Gentiles, and have been converted to Christianity, in the other life adore the Lord alone; and this because they have believed . . . that the Supreme God is a Divine Man . . .

5307<sup>2</sup>. The Lord is represented by Abraham, by Isaac, Jacob, also by Moses and Elias, and by Aaron, and also by David, and by many others in the Word besides; but still not in the same way by one as by another. (Ex. seriatim.)

5316<sup>6</sup>. The Angels are in the Lord, because they are in the sphere of the Divine truth proceeds from the Lord; and therefore they are affected by the Divine things concerning the Lord and His glorification in the internal sense of the Word.

5332<sup>6</sup>. For the quality which the Lord had in the world cannot be comprehended, not even by the Angels . . .

5335<sup>3</sup>. From these things it is evident why the Lord did not manifest Himself until He was thirty years of age; for He was then in the fulness of remains. But the remains which the Lord had He had procured for Himself . . .

5477<sup>3</sup>. Hence it is evident that the Lord, who is light itself, sees each and all things which are in the thought and will of man; nay, which are in universal nature.

5585. When there is no medium which conjoins, it appears to the man as if there were no pity in the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

5962<sup>6</sup>. For in Heaven there is a continual perception of the Lord.

5964°. Hence it is evident that the Lord does not hide Himself; but that the man, Spirit, or Angel hides himself.

6006. The presence of the Lord in that (low) state. Sig.

6054°. For the Lord lives in everyone in Heaven.

6115°. The most general universal, by which all things are held together, is the Lord Himself; and that which holds together is the Divine truth proceeding from Him.

6135°. That the body of the Lord is the Divine good. Sig.

6193°. The Angels are in the manifest perception that (the influxes of good and truth are from the Lord); and they love nothing more than that they should not will and think from themselves, but from the Lord.

6197°. No one in Hell acknowledges the Lord, but they are contumelious against Him . . . But they are not unwilling to hear of the Father the Creator of the universe. Hence . . . it may be evident that the Lord is He who rules the universal Heaven . . . and that they are opposed to the Lord because they are opposed to Heaven, where the Lord is the all in all. 6475°.

6276°. For the good and truth themselves which are in the Lord's Kingdom, proceed from His Divine and Divine Human, and cause the Lord Himself to be there . . .

6325. It is an eternal Truth that the Lord rules Heaven and earth. (Continued under LIFE, and FREE.)

6340°. That those who are of the Church should hear the Lord, that is, should hear Him in the Word . . . Sig.

6380°. For everyone who is in faith in the Lord has an idea of Him according to the faculty of elevating the thoughts . . .

6402. Unless the Lord render aid. Sig. and Ex.

6428. In the Ancient Church the Lord was worshipped.

6468°. (For) the universal Heaven relates to the Lord, and the Lord is there the centre of all looks; those in Heaven look upwards to Him, and those in Hell look downwards from Him . . .

6469. The sweetness perceived by the Angels is from their not thinking and willing from themselves, but from the Lord; hence they have tranquillity, peace, and happiness.

6475. I heard it said to certain evil Spirits . . . who were continually thinking against the Lord . . . that they should . . . show a single one in Heaven who does not acknowledge the Lord, and that He is the life of all, and that they have everything which belongs to them from Him. But they were silent, because they were not able. Some of the evil Spirits who had believed that there are Heavens where the Lord is not acknowledged, wandered about and inquired for them, but as their endeavour was in vain, they returned . . . Hence it is evident that the Lord inflows into all, both generally through Heaven, and also singularly and universally from Himself; and that where the good of charity is, there He is; and that where the contrary is, there also He is, but no otherwise than in order to give them life; and, so far as can be done, to withdraw them from evil. 6477. H.6.

6478°. (Thus) the Lord is in each one; for the Lord is such that He wills to give Himself to all. Hence happiness and bliss are increased with those who are images and likenesses of Him.

6482. The Lord's universal government, that what is universal is not possible without singulars. Ex. . . The reason the Angels are His ministries, is that they may be in active life . . . But still the ministries which they perform are not from them, but from influx from the Lord.

6495. (Thus) the influx from the Lord is immediate, and also mediate through Heaven. But the influx which is from the Lord is the good of celestial love, thus of love towards the neighbour; in this love the Lord is present, for He loves the universal human race . . .

6645°. (For) the Lord from love which is infinite . . . wills to draw man even to Himself, and thus to bless him with all glory and happiness. Ill.

6666°. (The infernals) cannot be resisted by any Angel, but by the Lord alone.

6700. All the inhabitants of other Earths who are not idolaters, acknowledge the Lord as the only God. They do not indeed know, except a very few, that the Lord assumed the Human in this Earth . . . But they adore the Divine . . . as comprehensible by a human form . . . and (therefore) they adore the Lord. . . When told . . . that the Lord had assumed the Human in this Earth, they considered a little, and presently said that this was done for the sake of salvation of the human race.

6706. As all good proceeds from the Lord, the Lord, in the highest sense, and in a super-eminent degree, is the neighbour . . . Hence it follows that in proportion as anyone has of the Lord with him, in the same proportion he is the neighbour . . . 6819.

6714. In (Ex.ii.) it treats in the supreme sense of the Lord, how He became the Divine Law as to the Human.

6752°. For colloquy with the Lord is through the Word.

6825. They are first instructed who is the God who has delivered them, that it is the Lord . . . Tr.

6827. Thus may be named the degrees of progression in the Lord, before He became, as to the Human, the Divine Law itself.

6849. If the Lord appears to anyone in the external form it is still the interiors which are affected; for the Divine penetrates to inmost things.

7014. Here and elsewhere in the Word, in the internal sense, are described all the states of the Lord's life in the world . . .

7091°. That it was the Lord, and not Jehovah who is called the Father, (who was seen by Moses, etc., as described in Ex.xxiv.9,10.)

7097°. Those who have become such acknowledge the Father the Creator of the Universe, but not the Lord. Of the Lord they say, as does Pharaoh here of Jehovah,

'Who is Jehovah? I know not Jehovah.' Nay, as the universal sphere of Heaven is full of the acknowledgment and love of the Lord, so is the universal sphere of Hell full of the denial of the Lord and of hatred against Him; nor can they endure that He should be named.

[A.] 7118. They who are infesting, as far as possible hinder the upright whom they are infesting from thinking about the Lord. As soon as anything of thought about the Lord occurs openly, they at once take it away, which they know how to do dexterously. But as thought about the Lord is universal with those who are being infested, and is thus too interior to appear openly, for it inflows through Heaven, therefore as soon as they are not being infested they come into thought about the Lord; for that which inflows from Heaven, and reigns universally, reveals itself in all [states of] freedom. Tr.

7173. When the Spirits of Mercury saw the Sun of Heaven they said that this was not the Lord God, because they did not see a face. . . The Sun then suddenly appeared again, and in its midst the Lord encompassed with a solar circle. On seeing this, the Spirits of Mercury humbled themselves profoundly, and subsided. Then the Lord was also seen out of the Sun by the Spirits of this Earth, who when they were men had seen Him in the world, and of whom one after another confessed, and thus many in order, that it was the Lord Himself. . . Then the Lord was seen out of the Sun also by Spirits of Jupiter, who exclaimed that it was He Himself whom they had seen in their Earth when the God of the universe appeared to them. D.3292.

7212. The Lord's life (in Heaven) to eternity. Sig. . . . That the Lord's life is in Heaven, consequently that those who are there are in His life, is because they are in the truth and good which proceed from the Lord; and the good which is in the truth is the Lord Himself; and the truth in which is the good is life from the Lord, from which all live.

7252. (The Spirits of Venus) said that when they were in the world they had acknowledged . . . our Lord as their only God. They said that in their Earth they had seen Him, walking among them; and they also represented how they had seen Him.

7477. (The Spirits of Mars) acknowledge and adore our Lord more than other Spirits. They say that He is the Only God; that He rules both Heaven and the universe; and that all good is from Him. They said that it is the Lord who leads them; and that He appears quite frequently with them in their Earth.

7478. When the Lord was named I saw that these Spirits humbled themselves so inmosty and profoundly that it cannot be described; for in their humiliation they have the thought that from themselves they are in Hell, and thus are utterly unworthy to look at the Lord. . . . When they are thus humbling themselves they do not turn their faces to the Lord; for this they dare not then do; but they turn them away. D.3252. 3352.

7550. That thus the Lord may be acknowledged where the Church is as the only God. Sig. and Ex. 7598.

7622<sup>2</sup>. (Evil Spirits of Mars who) are in a strong Persuasive that they are in the Lord, and who thus believe that all things they do, even evil and wicked things, they do of the Lord's will. Rep.

7819. A man who is in the good of charity and of faith . . . loves himself as a means to the end that he may be able to serve the Lord.

7914. The man of the Spiritual Church . . . can scarcely believe that the Lord is the only God, and that His Human is Divine; and therefore, as he is not in faith, he cannot be in love to Him . . . unless he compels himself.

8018. That the Lord delivered from damnation those who were in the good of truth and in the truth of good. Sig. and Ex.

8059. The holy worship of the Lord. Sig.

8078. That faith merely natural is not to be ascribed to the Lord, but the truth of innocence which is therein. Sig. and Ex.

8080. That the truths of faith are not to be ascribed to the Lord, but the goods thereof. Sig. and Ex.

8175. That the Lord alone sustains the combats of temptations. Sig. and Ex.

8215<sup>5</sup>. 'The Ancient of Days' = the Lord as to Divine good . . .

8263. That to the Lord alone is glory. Sig. and Ex.

8265<sup>e</sup>. Damnation from the mere presence of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

8269. That the Lord dwells in good. Sig. and Ex. 8309<sup>3</sup>, Ill. 8328, Sig. and Ex.

8270. That there was no other Divine in the Ancient Churches (than the Lord). Sig.

8273. That the Lord protects against all the evils and falsities which are from the Hells. Sig. and Ex.

8281. The omnipotence of the Lord. Sig. and Ex. 8282.

—<sup>3</sup>. By 'the Lord,' in David, is meant the Lord as to Divine truth.

8330. 'Thy hands, O Lord, have prepared a sanctuary' (Ex. xv. 17) = Heaven where are those who are in the truth of faith from the Lord.

8361. For the Lord is in His precepts when one lives according to them . . .

8365. That the Lord alone preserves from evils. Sig. and Ill.

8369<sup>3</sup>. 'The Temple' signified the Lord Himself . . .

8427<sup>3</sup>. For the Lord is present in the truth which is from Himself.

8443. The presence of the Lord in truth accommodated to apperception. Sig. and Ex.

8464. This is the Lord in you. Sig. and Ex.

8472. Good and truth in Heaven is the Lord, because from Him.

8480<sup>3</sup>. They who trust in the Lord continually receive good from Him; for whatever happens to them, whether it appears prosperous or not, is still good, for as a means it conduces to their eternal happiness.

8495<sup>4</sup>. That with those who are led by the Lord all things inflow . . . Refs.

8506<sup>e</sup>. When good has been conjoined with truth the man is in the Lord, and is led by the Lord without labour and combat. This state is what is meant by the second state (of regeneration).

8512. When one lives according to order he then lives in the Lord; for the Lord is order itself . . . Not yet to live according to order is to be led by truth; and when a man is led by truth the Lord does not appear.

8555. That those who are in the truth and good of faith conquer when they look upwards to the Lord; and that they yield when they look downwards. Tr. 8604. 8606. 8608.

8581. 'Rock' = the Lord as to the truths of faith. III.

8582. That they should urgently ask the Lord . . . but from a humble heart. Sig.

8604<sup>3</sup>. For the Lord inflows with every man through the truth which is from Himself; through this He gives life to man. (Continued under LIFE.)

8625. For the Lord is called 'Priest' from Divine good, and 'King' from Divine truth.

8717<sup>2</sup>. The Lord through the truth proceeding from Him rules all things down to the veriest singulars; not as a king in the world, but as God in Heaven and the universe . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The Lord regards such things as are momentaneous . . . no otherwise than as means to eternal things . . .

8719. For the Lord does all things immediately from Himself, and mediately through Heaven . . . not that He has need of the Angels' aid, but that they may have functions and offices . . .

8721<sup>e</sup>. For the abode of the Lord with man is in the good with him . . . 8765.

8767<sup>e</sup>. He who lives according to the precepts is conjoined with the Lord; for these teach life . . . and thus open . . . the sight to the Lord.

8768. To be the Lord's. Sig. and Ex.

8769. That the Lord has all Power in Heaven and on earth. Sig.

8826. The presence of the Lord in Heaven. Sig.

8864<sup>3</sup>. Hence it is that the Lord is called 'the Word.'

8865. Such a universally Regnant must the Lord be with man; for such is the Lord with the Angels, of whom it is therefore said that they are in the Lord. The Lord becomes regnant when it is not only believed that all good and all truth are from Him, but when the man loves it to be so. The Angels are . . . in the perception also that it is so; hence it is that their life is the life of the Lord in them . . . from which it is evident that the Lord is the all in all of Heaven, and that He Himself is Heaven. When the Lord universally reigns with a man of the Church . . . the Lord is then in all the truths and goods of faith with him, as the heart is in all the blood vessels.

8866<sup>e</sup>. That it is freedom to be led by the Lord. Refs.

8867. That truths are not to be thought about from any other source than the Lord. Sig. and Ex. 8868, Ex.

8873. For life from the Lord inflows only into a humble and submissive heart . . .

8875<sup>2</sup>. That evils, punishments, and vastations are attributed to the Lord; when yet with the Lord there is nothing but love and mercy. Refs.

8906. That the things which are of the Lord are not to be attributed to self. Sig. and Ex.

8943. The Word in its inmost sense treats of the Lord alone.

8945. For the Lord is more present in interior things.

8949. (In Saturn) they worship our Lord, and acknowledge Him as the Only God; for the Lord sometimes appears under an angelic form to those who are in that Earth . . . and the Divine then shines from His face, and affects the mind . . . 9105.

8950. They would rather die than be led away from the Lord. Des.

8951. (Some in Saturn) call their nocturnal light the Lord.

8988<sup>2</sup>. To serve the Lord . . . is to be free; for man's veriest freedom consists in being led by the Lord; for the Lord inspires into the man's very will the good from which to act; and although it is from the Lord, it is apperceived as from self, thus from freedom. All who are in the Lord have this freedom, and it is conjoined with unspeakable happiness.

8995<sup>4</sup>. When a man is such, and looks to the Lord, he accounts himself, and also the world, as nothing; and if he does regard himself as anything, it is that he may serve the Lord. But previously . . . when he had looked to himself, he had accounted the Lord as nothing, and if as anything it was that he might thence have gain and honour.

9010. Those who were of the Ancient Churches knew that the Providence of the Lord is in each and all things . . . and therefore the simple . . . attributed to the Lord both good and evil . . . For when a man does evils, and thereby turns himself away from the Lord, it appears as if the Lord turns Himself away; for the Lord then appears to him behind . . .

9015. Blasphemy of the Lord and His Kingdom. Sig.

9021. The denial in every way of the Lord and His Kingdom by those who are of the Church. Sig.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence the denial of the Lord is not profanation with those who are outside the Church . . .

9049<sup>7</sup>. (Thus) the Lord when in the world spoke . . . as everywhere in the Old Testament, at the same time for the Angels in Heaven as for men in the world; for His speech was in itself Divine and heavenly, because from the Divine, and through Heaven; but the things which He spoke were presented by such things in the world as corresponded.

9088<sup>2</sup>. For the Lord inflows into those things with a man which the man knows, and not into the things which he does not know.

9096<sup>e</sup>. For the Lord instils affections for good, and aversion for evil . . .

9128<sup>3</sup>. To see from what is interior is to see from the Lord . . . He who excels in the gift of thought and perception may also apprehend from this that the Lord sees each and all things, even to the most singular, which are with man.

[A.9128<sup>4</sup>]. But evil and falsity do not come forth from what is higher, but from what is lower, than themselves; consequently not from the Lord, but from the world . . .

9166<sup>3</sup>. That truths Divine are to be confirmed by the Lord, and not by man. Sig.

9167<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that by 'the Lord,' in the Word, is meant the Lord as to Divine good . . . Ill.

9184<sup>2</sup>. The Lord then attracts to Himself all things which are of life with the man, so that they look upwards . . .

9188<sup>9</sup>. For he who will be learned in the truths and goods of faith, must be taught by the Lord, and by no means by himself. Tr.

—<sup>e</sup>. They are taught by the Lord when they read the Word not for the sake of self and the world, but for the sake of good and truth itself; for then they are illustrated.

9193<sup>4</sup>. The chief thing of the worship of the Ancient Church was to worship God under a human form, thus the Lord.

—<sup>4</sup>. The chief thing of internal worship is to acknowledge the Lord, the one and only God, and that everything good and true is from Him. Those who in the Church do not acknowledge Him cannot be in good, thus neither in truth; and those acknowledge Him who are in faith and at the same time in the good of life; but not those who are in evil of life. That to acknowledge and worship the Lord is to live according to His precepts; that is, to live a life of faith and of charity. Refs.

9194. That the Lord, who is the one and only God, is to be worshipped. Sig.

9198<sup>2</sup>. In (the Christian Church) the Lord is indeed received in doctrine, but still by few with acknowledgment of heart, and by still fewer from the affection of love. Otherwise by converted gentiles outside the Church. These worship and adore Him as their Only God . . .

9210. Such good is not from man but from the Lord; and that which is from the Lord is of the Lord.

9223. That as all goods and truths are from the Lord, they are to be ascribed to Him, and not to self. Sig. and Ex. . . (This is the first of the Church. Sig. —<sup>3</sup>.) 9300.

9227. That when man lives from good he is with the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

9229. In proportion as man can be withheld from his own proprium, in the same proportion the Lord can be present. Refs.

9256<sup>7</sup>. That the gentiles will come to the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

9258<sup>9</sup>. Hence it is evident that all good which bears any fruit is from the Lord; and unless it is from Him, it is not good.

9278<sup>3</sup>. The Lord continually protects and delivers.

—<sup>e</sup>. That the world will not acknowledge the Lord with faith of heart, because the external things which are of the world will obscure. Sig. Hence who at this day adores Him as the Lord of the whole Heaven and earth (Matt.xxviii.18); when yet all who are in the Heavens, thus who are in internals, see the Lord as their only God.

9296<sup>2</sup>. The Lord foresees this, and provides according to the state of the subsequent life; for in all the present the Lord foresees evil and provides good . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. This new Voluntary . . . is the habitation through which the Lord enters with man, and excites the man to will good, and from willing to do good . . .

9297. The continual appearance and presence of the Lord thus also in the truths of faith. Sig. and Ex.

— It is the Lord who sees man, and presents Himself with him, and gives him to see Him. Thus man does not see the Lord from himself, but from the Lord with himself.

9313. That the Lord averts all falsities from evil. Sig.

9315<sup>3</sup>. By these words (Luke xxiv.39) the Lord taught that He was no longer Jehovah under the form of an Angel, but that He was Jehovah Man. Further ill.

9322. The worship of the Lord alone. Sig.

—<sup>6</sup>. The Lord does not dwell with an Angel (or a man) except in His own with him . . . 9594.

9348<sup>7</sup>. Unless the Lord favours them . . . they act from hatred and revenge against Him, and . . . against all who profess Him.

9350. Why the Lord willed to be born on our Earth . . . Gen.art. U.113. D.4376.

9359. As the Lord appears to the inhabitants in the Earths in an angelic form, when the Spirits and Angels from those Earths hear from the Spirits and Angels of our Earth that God is actually a Man, they receive . . . acknowledge, and rejoice that it is so.

9372<sup>2</sup>. In the Word there are many who represent the Lord as to truth Divine, or as to the Word; but among these the chief are Moses, Elijah, Elisha, and John the Baptist. Ill.

9377. Humiliation and adoration from the heart, and then the influx of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

— That which inflows from the Lord is the Lord.

9378. The conjunction and presence of the Lord through the Word in general. Sig. and Ex.

9387. Joy from the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

9389<sup>2</sup>. For all the representatives of the Church treated of in the Word, in the supreme sense regard the Lord Himself; and therefore the Word in its inmost sense treats of the Lord alone, and especially of the glorification of His Human . . .

9396<sup>9</sup>. Therefore when the Word is received by man, the Lord Himself is received.

9401<sup>9</sup>. Hence it is evident that the conjunction of man with the Lord is from the Lord, and not from man.

9405. The advent and presence of the Lord in the Word. Sig. and Ex.

— What proceeds from the Lord is the Lord Himself . . .

9406<sup>6</sup>. By 'the man clothed in linen,' in the supreme sense, is meant the Lord; and as the Lord is meant there is also meant the Divine truth which is from Him; for the Divine truth which is from the Lord is the Lord Himself in Heaven and in the Church . . .

9411. Therefore when those who are in illustration are reading the Word, they see the Lord, which is effected from faith and from love . . .

9415. The presence of the Lord with them by what is intermediate. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The presence of the Lord with them by what is intermediate is said, because the Lord presents Himself present with man, and not man with the Lord; for all the good of love and truth of faith comes from the Lord, and nothing whatever of good and truth comes from man; and therefore there is the presence of the Lord with those who admit Him, that is, with those who in faith and love receive the truth Divine which is from Him. That the Lord comes to them, and not the reverse. Ill.

9455. The Testimony or Law in the ark = the Lord.

9477. By Aaron as high priest was represented the Lord as to the good of love.

9479. 'Let them make for Me a sanctuary' = a representative of the Lord, thus of Heaven. Ex.

9506. No intromission and approach to the Lord except through the good of love. Sig. and Ex. (See under CHERUB.)

9517<sup>2</sup>. Heaven and the Church . . . are guarded by the Lord by means of the elevation of their interiors to Himself; and when they are elevated they are in the good of love to Him and towards the neighbour; elevation to the Lord is attended with this. Thus are guarded the Angels of Heaven and the men of the Church. They who are elevated by the Lord continually turn the face to the Lord, because the Lord keeps them conjoined with Himself through the good of love; whereas they who are not elevated turn the face from the Lord. Tr.

9534<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that the Lord reigns also in the Hells; but with this difference—that the Divine sphere which encompasses and protects Heaven is a sphere of Divine truth conjoined with Divine good, but that which guards Hell is a sphere of Divine truth separated from Divine good . . .

9545. The Lord there as to celestial Good. Sig. and Ex.

9548<sup>1</sup>. By 'Zerubbabel' (Zech. iv.) is represented the Lord who would come and restore the Spiritual Heaven and Church.

9594<sup>7</sup>. How the Lord dwells in the Heavens. Ex.

9613<sup>3</sup>. That the universal bond is the Lord; thus love from Him, and thence love to Him.

9682<sup>2</sup>. As to what further concerns the presence of the Lord in Heaven, and, through Heaven, with man, it is to be known that the Lord is above the Heavens; for He is the Sun of Heaven, but still He is present through the light and heat thence . . . That which proceeds from the Lord is Himself. From which it is evident that the Lord is present where the good which is from Him is received . . . 9946. 9956. 10106<sup>2</sup>. 10579<sup>7</sup>.

9715. The Lord's merit and justice. Sig. and Ex.

9773<sup>2</sup>. For the Lord is in the inmost, and from the inmost proceed all things.

9776<sup>6</sup>. Inasmuch that the good and truth with man is the Lord Himself.

9780<sup>12</sup>. For in the Lord, when in the world, all things were representative of Heaven; for thereby the universal Heaven was adjoined to Him; and therefore whatever He did, and whatever He spoke, was Divine and heavenly; and the ultimates were representative. Examp.

9806<sup>2</sup>. The Lord is called 'Judge,' 'Prophet,' and 'King,' where it treats of truth; and 'Priest,' where of good. In like manner 'Christ,' 'Anointed,' or 'Messiah,' when it treats of truth; and 'Jesus,' or 'Saviour,' when of good.

9809<sup>3</sup>. 'Jehovah said to my Lord' (Ps. cx. i) . . . By 'Lord' here is meant the Lord as to the Divine Human. Ill.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'The Lord at thy right hand' (ver. 5) = the Divine truth then from Him, by which is omnipotence.

9817. The influx of the Lord through the Word into all who are in the good of love. Sig. and Ex.

9828<sup>2</sup>. As the Lord is in the good of mutual love . . . therefore they are turned to the Lord by regarding their companions from this love.

9849. For when a man turns himself away from the Lord—which takes place when he is doing what is evil—then, as the Lord is behind him, it appears to him as if the Lord does not see him, does not hear and know him, and does not remember him . . .

9879<sup>6</sup>. For the goods and truths which proceed from the Lord . . . are effigies and images of the Lord.

9938<sup>2</sup>. The Lord does not receive gifts, but gives to everyone gratis. Nevertheless He wills that they should come from man as from himself, provided he acknowledges that they are . . . from the Lord; for the Lord instils the affection of doing good from love, and the affection of speaking truth from faith . . .

9942<sup>6</sup>. For whatever (the Jews) did to the Lord represented the state of Divine truth and good then with them . . .

9954. A representative of the Lord as to the good of love. Sig. and Ex. (See under ANOINT.)

9955. A representative of the Lord as to the truth of faith. Sig. and Ex.

9971. The visible God (of the Spirits of the Second Earth) is our Lord Himself; and they also called Him the Lord . . .

9972<sup>6</sup>. The ideas of thought can be fixed and determined to the invisible God, when they are determined to the Lord, who is the visible God . . . but no otherwise.

9975. The goods which men do from the Lord are all goods, because they are done for the sake of the Lord and the neighbour . . .

10022<sup>2</sup>. For the Lord is constantly present with good and truth with every man; but He is not received except in so far as evils and falsities are removed. 10127<sup>9</sup>.

10033<sup>8</sup>. The appropriation of Divine good and Divine truth from the Lord is not possible except with those who acknowledge the Divine of the Lord; for this is the first and essential thing itself of all things which are of faith in the Church; for Heaven cannot be unclosed to others, because the whole Heaven is in this faith... Therefore let everyone within the Church beware of denying the Lord, and also of denying His Divine; for at this denial Heaven is closed and Hell is opened... 10112.

10076. See SUPREME SENSE, here.

10083<sup>5</sup>. For the first thing of all is to acknowledge that the Lord is the Saviour of the world...

10097. The acknowledgment that it is of the Lord alone. Sig. and Ex.

10112. No appropriation of good with those who do not acknowledge the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it may be evident what is the lot of those in the other life who have been born within the Church, and still at heart deny the Lord, of whatever quality they may be in moral life. By much experience it has also been given to know that they cannot be saved. III.

10125. Men themselves... do not constitute the Church... nor Angels... Heaven, but the Lord with them; for the Lord does not dwell in anything proper to man or Angel, but in what is His own with them...

10128. The reception of the Lord. Sig. and Ex. 10131.

— . Whether you say to receive good and truth from the Lord, or to receive the Lord, it is the same; for good and truth are the Lord's because from Him; thus they are the Lord in Heaven and in the Church.

10130<sup>4</sup>. The more they are in the love of self and in the love of the world, the more they turn themselves from the Lord, and have Him behind them...

10146. The Lord is indeed present with every man... With the good He is present in every single thing they think from the truths of faith and will from the good of love... But with the evil the Lord is not present in the single things... but He is present in general, through which presence they have the faculty of thinking and willing, and also—in so far as they desist from evils—of receiving faith and charity. But in so far as they do not desist from them He appears to be absent; the degrees of His absence are according to the absence of the truth and good of faith and love. Hence it is that those in Heaven are in the Lord's presence, and that those in Hell are in His absence. But still... the Lord is not absent from a man, but the man is absent from the Lord...

10155. The Perceptive that all good and all truth are from the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

10160<sup>6</sup>. (In the Golden Age) the Lord was seen by many in a human form.

10175a. By the incensing is signified the hearing and reception by the Lord of all things of worship which are from love and charity. Tr.

— . By the expiation of everyone by silver is signified the ascription of all things of worship to the Lord... Tr.

10196<sup>2</sup>. But the Lord as Heaven, which is below the Lord as a Sun, is the Divine truth.

10205<sup>2</sup>. He therefore within the Church who does not acknowledge the Lord has not any conjunction with the Divine, for all the Divine is in the Lord and from the Lord; and when there is not any conjunction with the Divine, there is not any salvation... It is otherwise with those who are outside the Church: as they are in ignorance about the Lord, worship from them is accepted by the Lord, when... they live in any mutual charity, and in any faith and love to God... In the other life also, when they are informed... about the Lord, that He is the Divine itself in a human form, they acknowledge Him...

10210<sup>2</sup>. The good of innocence is to acknowledge that all truths and goods are from the Lord, and nothing from the proprium of man; thus it is to want to be led by the Lord, and not by self... 10218, Sig.

10216<sup>2</sup>. In the Inmost Heaven, where the Lord is more present than in the Heavens below, by the names in the Word, in a good sense, is meant the Lord Himself. Enum.

10219<sup>3</sup>. As soon as a man acknowledges and believes that goods inflow from the Lord... then goods affect him... But so long as he cannot feel the influx of goods from the Lord, he does goods as of himself; but still he ought to acknowledge and believe that they are from the Lord...

10220. The ascription of all things which are of faith and love to the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

10223. That all things of truth from good are of the Lord alone. Sig. and Ex. 10227.

10230. Conjunction with Heaven by the acknowledgment that all truths and goods are from the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

10239. A representative of the purification and regeneration of man by the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

10252<sup>7</sup>. That the body of the Lord was anointed with such (spices)... signified His Divine life in the Sensuous, which is the life proper to the body, and also the resurrection of the latter. That the Lord rose again with the whole body which He had in the world, differently from other men, is known; for He left nothing in the sepulchre; and therefore He said to the disciples—who supposed that they saw a Spirit when they saw the Lord—'See My hands and My feet, feel Me, see, for a Spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see Me have.'

10287. Conjunction (of Divine truth) with those who do not acknowledge the Lord, thus who are in evils and the falsities of evil. Sig. and Ex. . . For he who does not acknowledge the Lord is not of the Church; and he who denies the Lord is in evils and falsities, because good and truth come from no other source than He. . . The conjunction of Divine truth with those who do not acknowledge the Lord . . . is profanation. Ex.

10336<sup>4</sup>. All who love the Lord above all things, and the neighbour as themselves, do good and truth for the sake of good and truth; for good and truth are the Lord Himself. . . and therefore when they love good and truth—that is, when they will and do them from love—they love the Lord. . .

10370<sup>8</sup>. The reason those have not eternal life who do not from faith acknowledge the Lord, is that the whole Heaven is in this acknowledgment; for the Lord is the Lord of Heaven and earth, as He Himself teaches. . . 'To Me has been given all Power in Heaven and on earth' (Matt. xxviii. 18), and therefore to those who do not acknowledge Him Heaven is closed; and he who does not acknowledge in the world—that is, he who is within the Church—does not acknowledge in the other life.

10377. (In the Third Earth) as in every Earth, they acknowledge God under a human form, thus our Lord; for all who acknowledge God under a human form are accepted by our Lord, and are led. The rest cannot be led, for they think without a form, thus of nature.

10429. That (such) do not receive influx from the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

10499. The elevation of the interiors to the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

10528<sup>8</sup>. The reason both 'Lord' and 'Angel' are mentioned (Mal. iii. 1) is that 'Lord' is said from Divine good, and 'Angel' from Divine truth.

10545. The Most Ancients. . . adored the Lord; He was Jehovah to them.

10579<sup>4</sup>. This was the Lord from eternity. Ex.

VOL. IV.

—<sup>7</sup>. The Lord is above the Heavens, for He is the Sun of Heaven; but still He is present in the Heavens. The Divine truth is there, and the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord as a Sun is the Lord in Heaven. . .

—<sup>10</sup>. It is to be known that. . . the Lord never turns away His faces from man, but that the man who is in evil turns away his face from the Lord. . . All infernal Spirits turn their backs to the Lord as a Sun. . .

10642<sup>8</sup>. But when the Lord is worshipped, who is the God of Heaven and earth, the Angels who are from Heaven with the man do not claim for themselves anything of the worship. . . hence through them there is opened a way even to the Lord Himself, who conjoins them with Himself in faith and love. From these things it may be evident how very important it is to worship the Lord Himself, who has all Power in the Heavens and on earth.

10645. That the Lord alone is to be worshipped from faith and love. Sig. and Ex. . . For the worship of the Lord is either from faith or from love. Ex.

— . . . Moreover the Lord does not dwell with an empty man; that is, with a man who does not know His truths and do them. . .

—<sup>5</sup>. The Lord wills the salvation of all. To will the salvation of man is to will to bring him to Himself in Heaven. This cannot be done unless the Lord is in him; and the Lord cannot possibly be in him except in such things with him as are from Himself. These are truths from good, thus His precepts which the man does from faith and from love; for there are no other recipients of the Lord and of Heaven with a man. . . That to believe in the Lord and to love Him is to do His precepts. Ill.

10646. Hence it is evident that by 'zealous is His name' is signified that the Lord does not suffer anyone to be worshipped except Himself, because from Him alone is all truth and all good, through which is salvation. The Lord is called 'zealous' because as soon as another is worshipped all truth and good recede. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. He who does not know how the case is with the worship of the Lord may believe that the Lord loves to be worshipped, and wants glory from man. . . He who so believes does not at all know what love is, and still less what the Divine love is. Divine love is to will worship and glory not for the sake of itself, but for the sake of man and his salvation; for he who worships the Lord, and gives the glory to the Lord, is in humiliation, and proprium recedes from him who is in humiliation, and in proportion as this recedes, the Divine is received. . . This is the glory of the Lord. . .

10659<sup>3</sup>. To those who are in illustration the Lord gives to understand what they believe; and those are illustrated when they are reading the Word. . . who acknowledge the Lord, and love to live according to His precepts. . . For the Lord inflows into the life of a man and thence into his faith. . . Therefore, those who are illustrated by the Lord through the Word understand that the Lord came into the world in order to subjugate the Hells, and to reduce all things there and in the Heavens into order; and that this could not possibly have been done except through the Human; for from this He could fight against the Hells, but not from the Divine without the Human; and also in order that He might glorify His Human, in order that by means of it He might keep to eternity all things in the order into which He had reduced them. Hence the salvation of man... That this is so the Word teaches, and all apprehend it who admit the Lord into their life. . .

[A.] 10660. That all the good of innocence, of charity, and of faith, is to be ascribed to the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. It is said that they are to be ascribed to the Lord, that is, it is to be acknowledged that they are from Him; for unless they are acknowledged and believed to be from the Lord they are not goods; for all good is from Him; and that which is not from Him is from man; and whatever is from man . . . is evil . .

10685. The reason the internal is opened . . . through temptations, is that when a man is in temptations . . . the Lord inflows from within and fights for him; which the man may also know from the fact that when he is in temptations he resists interiorly . . . This interior resistance does not come to the apperception of the man at the time . . . but after temptations . . . For the things which are introduced by the Lord into the internal of man, the man does not know while he lives in the world . . . but still he ought to know and acknowledge, when he has conquered in temptations, that he himself did not fight, but the Lord for him.

10729. Hence it is evident that in proportion as a man suffers himself to be led through good to truths, in the same proportion he is led by the Lord, and to the Lord.

10738. (The Spirits of the Fifth Earth) called God the Lord.

10761. It is called the Church where the Lord is acknowledged . . . for the essentials of the Church are love and faith in the Lord from the Lord . . .

10809. They then asked how the Lord appears with the Angels from our Earth. I said that He appears in the Sun as a man, encompassed with the solar fire, from which the Angels have all light in the Heavens; and that the heat which proceeds thence is Divine good, and the light is the Divine truth, both from the Divine love, which is the fieriness that appears around the Lord in that Sun . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. The reason it was given them to ask about the Lord and His appearance before the Angels from our Earth, [was that] it then pleased the Lord to present Himself as present with them, and to reduce into order the things which had been disturbed by the evil there. D.5513<sup>6</sup>.

10810. There was seen a dim cloud towards the east descending from a certain height, and which as it descended appeared by degrees [to become] lucid and in the human form, and finally this human form appeared in a flaming beam, around which were little stars of the same colour. Thus did the Lord present Himself as present with the Spirits with whom I was speaking.

All the Spirits there were gathered to this presence, and . . . the good were separated from the evil, the good to the right and the evil to the left . . . those who were good were left, in order that they might form among them a heavenly Society, but the evil were cast into Hells. I afterwards saw that that flaming beam descended into the lower parts of the earth there. Further des. D.5513<sup>7</sup>. Compare H.69.

10811. That cloud . . . was an angelic Society in whose midst was the Lord. Hence it was given to know what is meant by the Lord's words concerning the Last Judgment . . . that 'He will come with the Angels in the clouds of heaven with glory and power.' D.5513<sup>8</sup>.

10817. Those who have been born within the Church must acknowledge the Lord, His Divine and His Human, and must believe in Him and love Him. Ill.

10818. Therefore those within the Church who do not acknowledge the Lord, and His Divine, cannot be conjoined with God, and thus cannot have any lot with the Angels in Heaven; for no one can be conjoined with God except from the Lord, and in the Lord. Ill.

10819. As the Father is in the Lord, and the Father and the Lord are one, and as we are to believe in Him, and as he who believes in Him has eternal life, it is evident that the Lord is God. Ill.

10820. All who are of the Church and are in light from Heaven see the Divine in the Lord, and this in His Human; whereas they who are not in light from Heaven do not see anything except the Human in the Lord; when yet the Human and the Divine are so united in Him that they are one. Ill.

10822. The idea of three in one Person is had when it is thought that the Father is in the Lord, and that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Lord . . .

10827. As all the Divine is in the Lord, He has all Power in the Heavens and on earth. Ill.

H. 2. That the Lord is the God of Heaven. Gen.art.

—<sup>e</sup>. It is to be known that all those who have not separated truth from good . . . in the other life, when instructed, receive the heavenly idea about the Lord, that He is the God of the universe. But it is otherwise with those who have separated faith from life . . .

3. Those within the Church who have denied the Lord, and have acknowledged only the Father, and have confirmed themselves in such a faith, are outside of Heaven; and as there is not with them any influx from Heaven, where the Lord alone is adored, they are by degrees deprived of the faculty of thinking what is true about anything whatever; and at last they become either as dumb, or they speak stupidly, and in walking they lose their way, and their arms hang down and dangle as if devoid of strength in the joints. Those, moreover, who have denied the Divine of the Lord, and have acknowledged only His human, as the Socinians, are in like manner outside of Heaven, and are carried forwards a little towards the right, and are let down into the deep, and are thus completely separated from the rest from the Christian world. Those, again, who say that they believe in an invisible Divine, which they call the Being of the universe from which all things have come forth, and who reject faith concerning the Lord, have found that they believe in no God, because an invisible Divine is to them such as is [that] of nature in its primes, into which faith and love do not fall, because thought does not. These are relegated among those who are called naturalists. 83.

4. All infants—of whom is the third part of Heaven—are initiated into the acknowledgment and faith that the Lord is their Father; and afterwards that He is the Lord of all; thus the God of Heaven and earth.

7. That the Divine of the Lord makes Heaven. Gen.art.

12. From these things it may now be evident that the Lord dwells in what is His own with the Angels of Heaven; and thus that the Lord is all in all things of Heaven; and this because good from the Lord is the Lord with them; for that which is from Him is Himself; consequently that good from the Lord is Heaven to the Angels...

13. That the Divine of the Lord in Heaven is love to Him and charity towards the neighbour. Gen.art.

39. There is with every Angel and man an inmost degree... into which the Divine of the Lord first or proximately inflows, and from which it disposes the rest of the interiors... This inmost... may be called the entrance of the Lord to an Angel and to a man, and His veriest abode with them... Hence it is that man... as to all the interiors... can be elevated by the Lord to Himself, can believe in Him, be affected with love to Him, and thus see Him; and that he can receive intelligence and wisdom, and speak from reason. Hence too it is that he lives to eternity. But what is disposed and provided by the Lord in that inmost does not inflow manifestly into the perception of any Angel, because it is above his thought...

52. When the Lord appears in the midst of the Angels, He does not appear encompassed with a number, but as one in an angelic form. Hence it is that in the Word the Lord is called 'an Angel.'

55. As all receive the Heaven without them according to the quality of the Heaven within them, therefore they receive the Lord in like manner, because the Divine of the Lord makes Heaven. Hence it is that when the Lord presents Himself as present in any Society, He appears there according to the quality of the good in which the Society is, thus not in the same manner in one Society as in another; not that this dissimilitude is in the Lord, but in those who see Him from their own good, thus according to it. They are also affected at the sight of Him according to the quality of their love; those who love Him inmost are inmost affected; those who love Him less are less affected; and the evil who are outside of Heaven are tortured at His presence. When the Lord appears in any Society He appears there as an Angel; but He is distinguished from others by the Divine which shines through.

56. Heaven is where the Lord is acknowledged, believed, and loved. The variety of the worship of Him from the variety of good... is the source of the perfection of Heaven. Ex.

57. The Lord is then present with man in both (his interiors and his exteriors) as in His Heaven; for He is in His own Divine order everywhere.

69. That when the Lord presents Himself as present a whole angelic Society appears as a one in a human form, has also been granted to see. Des.

76. After His resurrection the Lord was seen (by the opening of the spiritual sight).

79. For the Lord appears in a Divine angelic form—which is the human form—to those who acknowledge and believe in a visible Divine; but not to those who acknowledge and believe in an invisible Divine...

84. That it was the Lord who was seen by Abraham, He Himself teaches in John viii. 56...

86. Appendix. (Refs. to passages about the Lord and His Divine Human.) N. 305.

87. The Most Ancients... thought from correspondence itself... and therefore the Lord was quite often seen by them, and instructed them.

118. That the Lord actually appears in Heaven as a Sun. (Continued under Sun.)

121. When the Lord appears in Heaven, which takes place quite often, He does not appear encompassed with the Sun, but in an angelic form, and distinct from the Angels by the Divine shining through His face. For He is not there in person, because the Lord in person is constantly encompassed with the Sun; but He is in presence by means of aspect; for in Heaven it is a general thing that they appear as present in the place where their aspect is fixed or terminated, although it may be very far from the place where they actually are. This presence is called the presence of the internal sight... The Lord has also been seen by me outside the Sun in an angelic form a little below the Sun on high; and also near, in a like form, with a shining face; and once also in the midst of Angels as a shining beam.

129. As the Lord in the Heavens is the Divine truth...

141. See EAST, here.

142. The whole Heaven turns itself to the Lord as to its common centre; hence all the Angels turn themselves thither. 143<sup>2</sup>.

145. The Angels see the Lord through the eyes; but the Lord sees the Angels in the forehead. Ex.

147. Hence is evident what is the quality of the Lord's presence in the Heavens—that He is everywhere, and with everyone in the good and truth which proceed from Him, consequently that He is in what is His own with the Angels. The perception of the presence of the Lord is in their interiors... Hence may be evident how it is to be understood that the Lord is in them, and they in the Lord...

214. The government (in the Celestial Kingdom) is of the Lord alone; He Himself leads them, and teaches in the things of life. The less wise interrogate the more wise... and these the Lord...

251. The influx of the Lord Himself with man is into his forehead, and thence into the whole face.

254. How the Lord spoke with the prophets. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. A Spirit infilled with the Divine from the Lord knows no otherwise than that he is the Lord...

[H.] 258. For through the Lord alone there is the communication and conjunction . . . of the Lord with man.

280. As innocence is to be led by the Lord . . .

286. Divine peace is in the Lord, coming forth from the union of the Divine Itself and the Divine Human in Him. The Divine of peace in Heaven is from the Lord, coming forth from His conjunction with the Angels . . .

297. It is to be known that the Lord Himself inflows with every man according to the order of Heaven into both his inmosts and his ultimates, and disposes him to receive Heaven. (Continued under INFLUX.)

304. Man has been so created that he may have connection and conjunction with the Lord, but only consociation with the Angels. Ex.

316. The reason the Lord rose not only as to the spirit, but also as to the body, is that the Lord glorified His whole Human . . . For the soul which He had from the Father was of itself the Divine Itself, and the Body was made a likeness of the Soul, that is, of the Father, thus also Divine. Hence it is that He . . . rose as to both . . . Ill.

318. It is a common opinion that . . . the Gentiles cannot be saved, because . . . they are ignorant of the Lord, and without the Lord there is no salvation. But . . . the mercy of the Lord is universal . . . and it is not their fault that they are ignorant of the Lord. Ex.

321. When the Gentiles hear that God became a Man . . . they at once acknowledge it and adore the Lord, saying that by all means God should have manifested Himself, because He is the God of Heaven and earth, and the human race are His. It is a Divine Truth that without the Lord there is no salvation; but this is to be understood thus—that there is no salvation except from the Lord . . .

322<sup>3</sup>. Finally I spoke to (Cicero) about the Lord—that He was born a Man, but conceived of God; and that He put off the maternal human, and put on the Divine Human; and that it is He who rules the universe. To these things he replied that he knows many things about the Lord, and had apperceived in his own way that it could not have taken place otherwise if the human race were to be saved.

341. In proportion as anyone has been removed from his own proprium, in the same proportion he is in the proprium of the Lord. The proprium of the Lord is what is called the justice and merit of the Lord.

376<sup>e</sup>. As all the good which is conjoined with truths is from the Lord, it follows that no one can be in love truly conjugal unless he acknowledges the Lord and His Divine; for without this acknowledgment the Lord cannot inflow, and be conjoined with the truths which are with the man.

391<sup>e</sup>. But all these functions of the Angels are functions of the Lord through the Angels . . .

417<sup>e</sup>. The things in the Earths in the Universe have been revealed and shown to me to the end that it may be known . . . also, that our Lord is everywhere acknowledged as the God of Heaven and earth.

447. The resuscitation of man is effected by the Lord alone . . .

523. The Lord never does anything contrary to order, because He Himself is order . . .

536. That the Lord rules the Hells. Gen.art.

538. The sphere of falsity from evil flowing forth from Hell . . . is especially an endeavour to destroy the Divine of the Lord, and this because all good and truth are from Him.

545. That the Lord casts no one into Hell. Gen.art.

546<sup>2</sup>. If therefore the Lord were to avert Himself, and a man were left to evil alone, he would no longer be man. From these things it is evident that the Lord inflows with good with every man, equally with the evil and with the good; but with the difference that He is continually withdrawing an evil man from evil, and continually leading a good man to good.

548<sup>2</sup>. From these things it is evident that the Lord withdraws every Spirit to Himself by means of Angels, and also by means of influx from Heaven . . .

549. The reason the Lord from His Divine Essence, which is good, love, and mercy, cannot act in the same way with every man, is that evils and falsities stand in the way, and not only blunt but also reject His Divine influx. Ex.

562<sup>2</sup>. A certain person who in the world . . . had loved himself in a higher degree, at the mere mention of the Divine, and especially when he heard the Lord mentioned, was excited with such hatred from anger that he burned to murder Him . . . This also is the desire of many of the papal religion when they apperceive in the other life that the Lord has all Power, and they themselves none.

569. Infernal fire or love (also) comes forth from the Sun of Heaven or the Lord; but it is made infernal by those who receive it . . .

577<sup>2</sup>. Unless the Lord protected man he could never be taken out of Hell . . . and the Lord cannot protect man unless man acknowledges the Divine, and unless he lives a life of faith and charity; for otherwise he turns himself away from the Lord . . .

592. Unless the Lord ruled both the Heavens and the Hells there would not be any equilibrium . . .

J. 74°. (A gentile nation which at this day adores the Lord.)

C. J. 11. That before the Last Judgment . . . much of the communication between . . . the Lord and the Church had been intercepted. Gen.art.

28. (At the Last Judgment) the Lord was seen in a bright cloud with Angels, and there was heard a sound thence as of trumpets; which was a sign representative of the protection of the Angels by the Lord, and of the gathering together of the good from every side; for the Lord does not inflict destruction upon anyone, but only protects His own, and withdraws them from communication with the evil, and (then) the evil come into their own concupiscences . . .

64°. If the Lord is not worshipped alone, a division—discriminatio—is made, which takes away the communion, and the happiness of life flowing therefrom. T.824.

W. H. 1°. 'King of kings and Lord of lords' = the Lord as to Divine truth and as to Divine good.

L. Title. Doctrine of the New Jerusalem concerning the Lord.

1. That the universal Holy Scripture is about the Lord; and that the Lord is the Word. Gen.art.

— From these passages it is evident that the Lord is God from eternity, and that that [God] Himself is the Lord who was born into the world.

2. As this (Divine truth) is the Lord Himself, each and all things of the Word have been written concerning Him alone. From Isaiah to Malachi there is not anything which is not about the Lord; or, in the opposite sense, against the Lord. Ex. (These subjects stated seriatim. 3.)

8. That the Lord infilled all things of the Law, is that He infilled all things of the Word. Gen.art.

— It is believed by many that where it is said of the Lord that He infilled the Law, it is meant that He infilled all the precepts of the decalogue . . . But (what is really meant is) that He infilled all the things which had been written concerning Him in the Law and the Prophets . . . Ex. 11,11.

12. That the Lord came into the world in order to subjugate the Hells and glorify the Human; and that the passion of the cross was the last combat through which He fully conquered the Hells, and fully glorified His Human. Gen.art.

15. That by the passion of the cross the Lord did not take away sins, but that He endured them. Gen.art.

18. That the imputation of the Lord's merit is nothing else than the remission of sins after repentance. Gen.art.

19. That the Lord as to the Divine Human is called the Son of God, and that as to the Word He is called the Son of Man. Gen.art.

— Let them know that there is no Son from eternity, but that the Lord is from eternity. When it is known what the Lord is, and what the Son, it is possible to think from the understanding concerning the Triune God, and not before.

21. Many at this day think no otherwise about the Lord than as of a common man like themselves, because they think only of His Human, and not at the same time of His Divine, when yet His Divine and His Human cannot be separated. For the Lord is God and Man; and God and Man in the Lord are not two, but one Person . . . as the soul and the body are one man; according to the . . . doctrine of the Athanasian faith. Lest, therefore, man should hereafter in thought separate the Divine and the Human in the Lord, let him, I pray, read these passages. 111.

29. That the Lord made His Human Divine from the Divine in Himself, and that He thus became one with the Father. Gen.art.

30. That the Lord from eternity is Jehovah. 111.

— From (the following passages) it will be evident, that by 'the Lord,' and also by 'Jehovah,' after His Human was glorified, is meant the Divine and the Human together, as one; and that by 'the Son,' alone, is meant the Divine Human.

31. That the Lord from eternity, or Jehovah, took on the Human to save men. 111.

37. That the Lord is the Very God, from whom and concerning whom is the Word. Gen.art.

— That the Lord had been before His Advent into the world. 111.

38. That the Lord is called 'Jehovah.' 111.

39. That the Lord is called 'the God of Israel,' and 'the God of Jacob.' 111.

40. That the Lord is called 'the Holy One of Israel.' 111.

41. That the Lord is called 'Lord,' and 'God.' 111.

42. That the Lord is called 'King,' and 'Anointed.' 111.

43. That the Lord is called 'David.' 111.

[L.] 45. That God is one, and that the Lord is that God. Gen.art.

46. That the Holy Spirit is the Divine which proceeds from the Lord, and that it is the Lord Himself. Gen.art.

—<sup>6</sup>. That it is the Lord alone who is meant by 'Father, Son, and Holy Spirit' (Matt.xxviii.19), is evident from the things which precede and follow there. In the preceding verse the Lord says, 'All Power is given to Me in Heaven and on earth;' and in the following verse the Lord says, 'Lo I am with you all the days, even to the consummation of the age;' thus [He speaks] of Himself alone; and therefore He said that in order that they might know that the Trinity is in Him.

54. From these things it is now evident that Jehovah, who is the Lord from eternity, spoke through the Prophets; and that where 'the Holy Spirit' is mentioned, it is Himself. Consequently that God is one both in Person and in Essence, and that He is the Lord.

55. That the doctrine of the Athanasian faith agrees with the Truth, provided only that by a Trinity of Persons is meant a Trinity of Person, which is in the Lord. Gen.art.

—<sup>4</sup>. Unless (the early Christians, in addition to the doctrine of three Persons, had also received the doctrine that the Lord is the infinite God, Omnipotent, and Jehovah) it would have been all over with the Church, because the Church is the Church from the Lord; and the eternal life of all is from the Lord, and not from another.

61. It is this Church which is meant by 'the New Jerusalem,' into which no one can enter except him who acknowledges the Lord alone as the God of Heaven and earth. And this I am able to announce—that the Universal Heaven acknowledges the Lord alone, and that he who does not acknowledge it is not admitted into Heaven; for Heaven is Heaven from the Lord. This very acknowledgment from love and faith causes those there to be in the Lord and the Lord in them. Ill.

S. 6. From the Lord proceeds the Celestial, the Spiritual, and the Natural, one after another. Ex.

20<sup>3</sup>. Therefore the Lord, as He spoke from His Divine, spoke by correspondences; for that which is from the Divine, in nature falls into such things as correspond to Divine things . . .

48. That the Word in its glory was represented by the Lord when He was transformed. Ex.

53. For the Lord is present with man, and illustrates him and teaches him the truths of the Church, (in the sense of the letter of the Word) and nowhere else; and the Lord never operates except in what is full . . .

62. That through the sense of the letter of the Word there is conjunction with the Lord . . . Gen.art.

78. Besides, the Lord is present with man and is conjoined with him through the Word, because the Lord is the Word, and in it He as it were speaks to man; and also because the Lord is Divine truth itself . . . From this it is evident that the Lord is present with man, and is at the same time conjoined with him, according to the understanding of the Word . . . But the Lord is present with man through the reading of the Word, and is conjoined with him through the understanding of truth from the Word, and according thereto; and in proportion as the Lord is conjoined with man, in the same proportion the Church is in man.

80. That in each thing of the Word there is the marriage of the Lord and the Church . . . Gen.art.

— . In the spiritual sense, the things which are in the Word relate mostly to the Church, and in the celestial sense mostly to the Lord.

99. By the fact that the Lord became the Word in ultimates also, the state of the Church has been completely changed. (Continued under ADVENT.)

100. How the Lord is the Word. Ex.

114. That unless there were a Word no one would know God . . . and still less the Lord. Gen.art.

Life 18. That in proportion as a man shuns evils as sins, in the same proportion he does goods, not from himself, but from the Lord. Gen.art.

— . Who . . . may not know that it is evils which impede the Lord's entrance to man. For evil is Hell, and the Lord is Heaven; and Hell and Heaven are opposites; and therefore in proportion as a man is in the one he cannot be in the other; for the one acts against the other and destroys it.

38. In proportion as anyone is in good, and from good loves truths, in the same proportion he loves the Lord, because the Lord is good itself and truth itself. Therefore the Lord is with a man in good and in truth. If the latter is loved from the former, then the Lord is loved, and not otherwise. Ill.

66<sup>2</sup>. As he had not acknowledged the Lord as God, the Lord said . . . that he should 'follow Him' (Mark x.21), by which is meant that he should acknowledge the Lord as God. . . For no one can shun evils as sins unless he acknowledges the Lord, and approaches Him . . .

96. It is to be well known that the Lord alone fights in man against evils, and that it only appears to the man as if he fought from himself; and that the Lord wills that it should so appear to the man, because (otherwise) there comes forth no combat, and thus no reformation.

102. The Lord loves man, and wills to dwell with him; [but] He cannot love and dwell with him unless He is received and loved reciprocally . . . As the reception and Reciprocal in man are from the Lord, the Lord says, 'Abide in Me, and I in you . . . He that abideth in Me, and I in him, he beareth much fruit . . . ' That the Lord is in the truths and goods which a man receives . . . He also teaches, — 'If ye shall abide in Me, and My words shall abide in you. If ye shall keep My commandments, ye shall abide in My love. He who hath My precepts and doeth them, he loves Me, and I will love him, and I will dwell with him.' Thus does the Lord dwell in what is His own with a man, and the man in those things which are from the Lord, thus in the Lord.

110. The concupiscences of evil which make the interiors of a man from birth are not removed except by the Lord alone; for the Lord inflows from the Spiritual into the Natural . . .

F. 34. The Christian faith in a universal idea is this:—That the Lord from eternity, who is Jehovah, came into the world in order to subjugate the Hells and glorify His Human; and that without this no mortal could have been saved; and that they are saved who believe in Him. R.67. B.116. T.2.

35. It is a universal of faith that God is one in Person and in Essence, in whom is the Trinity, and that the Lord is that God. It is a universal of faith that no mortal could have been saved unless the Lord had come into the world. It is a universal of faith that He came into the world in order to remove Hell from man . . . It is also a universal of faith that He came into the world in order to glorify the Human which He had taken on in the world . . . These are the universals of the Christian faith concerning the Lord. R.67<sup>2</sup>. B.116<sup>2</sup>. T.2<sup>2</sup>.

36. The universal of the Christian faith on the part of man, is that he believe in the Lord; for by believing in Him there is effected conjunction with Him, by which is salvation. To believe in Him is to have trust that He saves; and as no one can have trust except him who lives well, this also is meant by believing in Him. R.67<sup>3</sup>. B.116<sup>3</sup>. T.2<sup>3</sup>.

W. 4. That God alone, thus the Lord, is love itself, because He is life itself . . . Gen.art.

10. Hence it is that although the Lord is in the Heavens with the Angels everywhere, He still appears on high above them as a Sun . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. It is the same with men, in whom and with whom the Lord is present in the universal world; and this solely for the reason that the Lord is not in space.

13. Hence every nation there has its place in accordance with its idea of God as a Man; for in this idea there is the idea of the Lord, and not in any other.

—<sup>e</sup>. The denial of God makes Hell; and, in Christendom, the denial of the Divinity of the Lord.

97. God is a Man . . . and therefore when the Lord manifests Himself in Person before the Angels, He manifests Himself as a Man; and this sometimes in the Sun, and sometimes outside of the Sun.

103. Most carry with them from the world the idea . . . of the Lord that He is in Heaven among the Angels . . . because they do not think of Him otherwise than as of another man, and some as of an Angel; not knowing that the Lord is the Very and Only God who rules the universe; and who if He were among the Angels in Heaven could not have the universe under His view; and if He did not shine as a Sun before those who are in the Spiritual World the Angels could have no light. 105. 106.

110. For an Angel . . . cannot receive the Lord in the first degree of heat and light, such as is in the Sun; for in that case he would be completely consumed; and therefore the Lord is received by them in the degree of heat and light which corresponds to their love and wisdom.

113. That the Angels are in the Lord, and the Lord in them; and that as the Angels are recipients, the Lord alone is Heaven. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. The distance between the Sun and Heaven is (only) an appearance of distance; and therefore . . . it follows that the Lord Himself is in Heaven; for He is in the love and wisdom of the Angels . . .

114. The reason the Lord is not only in Heaven, but is also Heaven itself, is that love and wisdom make an Angel, and these two are of the Lord with the Angels; whence it follows that the Lord is Heaven . . . Everyone can see . . . that the Lord cannot dwell except in what is His own with the Angels; that is, in His own proprium which is love and wisdom, and not at all in the proprium of the Angels, which is evil. Hence it is that in proportion as evil is removed, in the same proportion the Lord is in them . . . P.53<sup>3</sup>.

115. But how the Lord is in an Angel, and an Angel in the Lord, cannot be comprehended unless the nature of the conjunction is known. The conjunction is of the Lord with the Angel, and of the Angel with the Lord; and therefore the conjunction is reciprocal . . . The Angel perceives no otherwise than that he is in love and wisdom from himself . . . (otherwise) there would be no conjunction; thus the Lord would not be in him, nor he in the Lord. Neither is it possible for the Lord to be in any Angel or man, unless he in whom the Lord is with love and wisdom, perceives and feels it as his own. By this He is not only received, but also when received is retained, and also loved in return. 116, Ex.

124. That the quarters in the Spiritual World are not from the Lord as a Sun; but that they are from the Angels according to the reception. Gen.art. . . For the Lord is not in a greater and less degree of love and wisdom . . . for He is everywhere the same; but He is not received by one in the same degree as by another . . .

125. The Lord is in an Angel, and an Angel in the Lord . . . but as it appears as if the Lord as a Sun were outside of him, it also appears that the Lord sees him from the Sun, and that he sees the Lord in the Sun . . . If therefore we are to speak from this appearance, the case is this—that the Lord sees and looks at everyone face to face; but that on the other hand the Angels do not thus see the Lord. Those who are in love to the Lord from the Lord see Him directly; and therefore they are in the east and west. But those who are more in wisdom see the Lord obliquely to the right; and those who are less in wisdom obliquely to the left; and therefore the latter and the former are in the north and the south. Ex.

128. For the Lord is the same with one as with another . . .

129. That the Angels constantly turn their faces to the Lord as a Sun . . . Gen.art.

130. The reason the Angels constantly turn their faces to the Lord, is that the Angels are in the Lord and the Lord in them; and the Lord interiorly leads their affections and thoughts; hence they cannot do otherwise than look to the east where the Lord appears as a Sun. Hence it is evident that the Angels do not turn themselves to the Lord, but that the Lord turns them to Himself; for when the Angels are thinking interiorly about the Lord, they think of Him no otherwise than as in themselves. P.29<sup>2</sup>, Ex.

[W. 130]<sup>2</sup>. God is everywhere . . . thus He is both within and without an Angel; and hence an Angel can see God—that is, the Lord—both within himself and without himself; within himself when he is thinking from love and wisdom; and without himself when he is thinking about love and wisdom.

131. An Angel can turn himself round and round, and thereby see various things which are around him, but still the Lord as a Sun constantly appears before his face. . . It has been granted me also thus to see the Lord as a Sun. I see Him before my face; and for many years I have so seen Him to whatever quarter of the world I have turned myself.

133. As Heaven is from the Angels . . . it follows that the universal Heaven turns itself to the Lord; and that by this conversion Heaven is ruled by the Lord as one man . . .

135. That all the interiors of both the minds and bodies of the Angels are turned to the Lord as a Sun. Gen.art.

137. It is similar with man, if he has the Lord constantly before his eyes, which is the case if he is in love and wisdom . . .

138. This conversion to the Lord is an actual conversion . . . 139.

151. By the Lord is meant God from eternity or Jehovah, who is called 'Father' and 'Creator,' because He is one with Him . . . and therefore in what follows, where creation is treated of, the Lord is named.

170. The universal end . . . is that there may be an eternal conjunction of the Creator with the created universe; and this is not possible unless there are subjects in whom His Divine can be as in itself . . . (These) must be recipients of His love and wisdom as of themselves . . . Through this conjunction the Lord is present in every work created by Himself.

230. That there are three infinite and uncreate degrees of height in the Lord . . . Gen.art.

— The reason that in the Lord there are three infinite and uncreate degrees of height, is that the Lord is love itself and wisdom itself . . . and as the Lord is love itself and wisdom itself, He is also use itself . . .

233. In the Lord from eternity . . . before the assumption of the Human . . . there were the two prior degrees actually, and the third degree in potency, such as they are with the Angels; but after the assumption of the Human He put on over them the third degree also, which is called natural; and thereby He became a Man like a man in the world, with this difference however, that this degree, like the prior ones, is infinite and uncreate. . . For the Divine which had filled all spaces without space, penetrated to the ultimates of nature. But before the assumption of the Human, the Divine influx into the natural degree was mediate through the angelic Heavens; but after the assumption was immediate from Himself . . . This was the reason why the Sun of . . . Heaven . . . after the assumption of the Human shone forth with a more eminent beam and resplendence. Ill. and Ex.

236. That these three degrees of height are in every man from birth . . . and that as they are opened, the man is in the Lord, and the Lord in him. Gen.art.

240<sup>2</sup>. In these two faculties (of rationality and freedom) the Lord is with every man, both good and evil; they are the Lord's abode in the human race . . . But the abode of the Lord with a man is nearer as the man by means of these faculties opens the higher degrees; for by the opening of these he comes into higher degrees of love and wisdom, thus nearer to the Lord.

282. That the Lord from eternity, who is Jehovah, created the universe and all things of it from Himself, and not from nothing. Gen.art.

285. That the Lord from eternity . . . could not have created the universe and all things of it, unless He had been a man. Gen.art.

290. That the Lord from eternity . . . produced from Himself the Sun of the Spiritual World, and from it created the universe and all things of it. Gen.art.

294. As those things which constitute the Sun of the Spiritual World are from the Lord, and are not the Lord, they are not life in itself . . .

296. That there are three things in the Lord which are the Lord—the Divine of love, the Divine of wisdom, and the Divine of use; and that these three things are presented in appearance outside the Sun . . . the Divine of love by heat, the Divine of wisdom by light, and the Divine of use by the atmosphere, which is the containant. Gen.art.

297<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) these three things . . . are in the Lord, and in essence they are the Lord.

299. As these three things . . . are in the Lord and are the Lord, and as the Lord is everywhere . . . and as the Lord as He is in Himself, and as He is in His Sun, cannot present Himself as present to any Angel or man, He therefore presents Himself by such things as can be received; and He presents Himself as to love by heat, as to wisdom by light, and as to use by the atmosphere. . . The light and heat which proceed from the Divine Sun cannot proceed into nothing . . . but into a containant . . . (which) we call the atmosphere, which surrounds the Sun, takes Him up in its bosom, and carries Him to the Heaven where the Angels are, and then to the world where men are, and thus presents the presence of the Lord everywhere.

314<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) the progression of creation . . . was from its Prime, which is the Lord encompassed with the Sun . . .

326. For such things . . . do not come forth around an Angel man from the Angel, but from the Lord through the Angel. They come forth from the influx of the Divine love and the Divine wisdom of the Lord into the Angel . . . from which they know there that God is a Man . . .

335<sup>2</sup>. Therefore let no one believe that the Lord is with those who only adore Him; but that He is with those who do His commandments; thus uses . . .

339<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) the like things in the natural world have not derived their origin from the Lord . . . but they are from Hell . . . and Hell is not from Him.

358. That from the Lord with man there have been created and formed two receptacles and habitations for Himself, which are called the will and the understanding; the will for His Divine love, and the understanding for His Divine wisdom. Gen.art. 360.

369<sup>a</sup>. Hence it is that he who elevates his mind to the Lord is wholly elevated to the Lord.

431<sup>o</sup>. When anyone does the work which is of his office sincerely, rightly, justly, and faithfully . . . this is to be in the Lord, because everything which inflows from the Lord is use . . .

P. 27<sup>2</sup>. The Lord did not create the universe for His own sake; but for the sake of those with whom He will be in Heaven . . .

28. That Heaven is conjunction with the Lord. Gen. art.

31. (Thus) the Lord is Heaven, not only in general with all there, but also in particular with each one there. . . (Therefore) let no one cherish the error which falls into the first thought with many, that the Lord is in Heaven among the Angels, or that He is with them as a king is in his kingdom. As to aspect He is above them, in the Sun there; but as to the life of their love and wisdom, He is in them.

32. That man from creation is such that he can be more and more nearly conjoined with the Lord. Gen.art.

—<sup>3</sup>. But still an Angel cannot arrive at the first degree of the love and wisdom of the Lord, or touch it; because the Lord is infinite . . .

33. Man is more and more nearly conjoined with the Lord not by knowledge alone, nor by intelligence alone, and not even by wisdom alone; but by life conjoined with these . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Now as the Lord inflows into the life's love of everyone, and through its affections into the perceptions and thoughts; and not the reverse; it follows that He can conjoin Himself closely only in proportion as the love of evil with its affections, which are concupiscences, has been removed . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. And as love and wisdom, which are the Lord Himself, are not in space . . . therefore the Lord appears nearer according to the conjunction through love and wisdom; and, on the other hand, more remote according to the rejection of love and wisdom.

34. That the more nearly a man is conjoined with the Lord, the wiser he becomes. Gen.art.

37. That the more nearly a man is conjoined with the Lord, the more happy he becomes. Gen.art.

42. That the more nearly a man is conjoined with the Lord, the more distinctly he appears to himself as if he were his own, and the more evidently he notices that he is the Lord's. Gen.art.

43. To be led by good is freedom . . . for to be led by good is to be led by the Lord . . . Now as all that a man does from freedom appears as his own . . . it follows that conjunction with the Lord makes a man appear to himself free, and thence his own; and the nearer the conjunction with the Lord is, the more free he appears, and thence the more his own. The reason he appears to himself to be as his own more distinctly, is that the Divine love is such that it wills what is its own to be another's . . . And besides, the Lord never compels anyone . . . Therefore man is led by the Lord continually in freedom . . .

44. The reason why the more distinctly a man appears to himself as his own, the more evidently he notices that he is the Lord's, is that the more nearly he is conjoined with the Lord the wiser he becomes . . . (The Angels of the Third Heaven) also give this reason—that the Lord does not inflow immediately into the things which are of their perception and thought from wisdom, but into the affections of the love of good, and through these into the former . . .

79<sup>4</sup>. Let it be known therefore that these goods are appropriated to man no otherwise than that they are constantly of the Lord with the man; and that in proportion as a man acknowledges this, the Lord grants that good appears to the man as his . . .

87. That by means of these two faculties a man can be reformed and regenerated in proportion as through them he can be brought to acknowledge that all the truth and good which he thinks and does is from the Lord, and not from himself. Gen.art. 90, Ex.

91. That the acknowledgment of the Lord . . . causes a man to be reformed and regenerated . . . shall be (explained). . . In the Spiritual World, where spaces are only an appearance, wisdom effects presence, and love effects conjunction . . . There is an acknowledgment of the Lord from wisdom, and there is an acknowledgment of the Lord from love . . . the latter gives conjunction, the former presence. This is the reason why those who reject doctrine concerning the Lord remove themselves from Him; and as these also reject life they separate themselves from Him; whereas those who do not reject doctrine, but life, are present, but still are separated . . .

92. That the conjunction of the Lord with man, and the reciprocal conjunction of man with the Lord, is effected through these two faculties. Gen.art.

— Conjunction with the Lord, and regeneration, are one thing; for in proportion as anyone is conjoined with the Lord, in the same proportion he is regenerate.

—<sup>2</sup>. There is no conjunction of minds unless it is reciprocal . . . From these things it is evident that if the Lord only loved man, and were not loved by man in return, the Lord would approach and man would recede; thus the Lord would continually will to meet man and to enter into him, and man would turn himself backwards and go away.

93. The nature of the difference between those who believe all good to be from the Lord, and those who believe good to be from themselves, it has been given both to hear and to see in the Spiritual World. They who believe good to be from the Lord turn the face to Him, and receive the delight and bliss of good; whereas they who believe good to be from themselves look to themselves . . . (and therefore) cannot do otherwise than perceive the delight of their own good, which is . . . the delight of evil . . .

94. (The subject of the conjunction of man with the Lord is continued at this and following refs. under CONJOIN.)

[P.] 96<sup>5</sup>. For the Lord resides in these two faculties with every man both evil and good, and by them He conjoins Himself with every man . . . That the Lord resides in these two faculties with every man is from the influx of the will of the Lord, that He wills to be received by man, and to have His abode with him, and give him the happinesses of eternal life . . . It is this will of the Lord which causes that what man thinks, speaks, wills, and does, appears in him as his. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. It is known in Heaven that the Lord operates all things by willing, and that that which he wills is done.

97<sup>e</sup>. Therefore the Lord guards freedom with man, as man guards the pupil of his eye. But still, through freedom, the Lord continually withdraws man from evils . . .

98<sup>3</sup>. Freedom itself and rationality itself cannot be given with those in the Christian world who utterly deny the Divine of the Lord and the holiness of the Word, and who have retained the denial confirmed with them up to the end of life; for this is meant by the sin against the Holy Spirit . . .

114. That the evils in the external man cannot be removed by the Lord except by means of the man. Gen.art.

119. That the Lord then purifies the man from concupiscences in the internal man, and from the evils themselves in the external. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason is also that the Lord acts into the inmost of man, and from the inmost into the consequents even to the ultimates . . . So long therefore as the ultimates are kept closed by the man himself, there cannot be any purification, but only such an operation by the Lord in the interiors as is that of the Lord in Hell . . . That the Lord is continually urgent and insistent that man should open the door to Him. III.

122. But it is to be well known that a man who would perform repentance must look to the Lord alone. If he looks only to God the Father he cannot be purified, nor if to the Father for the sake of the Son, nor if to the Son as a mere man; for there is one God, and the Lord is He . . . In order that everyone who would perform repentance may look to the Lord alone, the Holy Supper has been instituted by Him, which confirms the remissions of sins with those who perform repentance. It confirms it, because in that Supper . . . everyone is kept looking to the Lord alone.

124. That the Lord never acts into any particular thing with a man . . . unless He acts into all things of Him together . . . is because all things of man are in such a connection . . . that they do not act as many things, but as one . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. That the Lord acts from inmosts and from ultimates at the same time, is because thus and no otherwise are each and all things held together in connection . . .

125. From which things it is evident again, that the Lord cannot act from inmosts and ultimates at the same time, except together with the man, for man together with the Lord is in ultimates; and therefore as man acts in the ultimates which are at his determination . . .

so the Lord acts from his inmosts, and in the successives towards the ultimates . . .

131<sup>e</sup>. A miracle infuses faith by an external way . . . and the Lord does not enter with man by any other way than an internal way, which is by the Word, and by doctrine and preachings therefrom.

132<sup>3</sup>. And he who does not acknowledge the Lord cannot receive anything internal of worship.

150<sup>5</sup>. For that which the Lord teaches He also gives man to perceive with reason; and this in two methods; one, that he sees in himself that it is so as soon as he hears it; the other, that he understands it by reasons . . .

154. That it is a law of the Divine Providence that man should be led and taught by the Lord from Heaven through the Word, and through doctrine and preachings therefrom; and this in all appearance as of himself. Gen.art.

155. That man is led and taught by the Lord alone. Gen.art.

156. That man is led and taught by the Lord alone, (means) that he lives from the Lord alone . . .

157. That man lives from the Lord alone. Fully ex.

162. That man is led and taught by the Lord alone through the angelic Heaven and from it. Gen.art.

— That man is led through the angelic Heaven (is said) from the appearance, but that (it is said that he is led) from it, is from the Truth. . . For the Lord appears above that Heaven as a Sun . . . (but) the Lord is in that Heaven as the soul is in a man. For the Lord is omnipresent . . . and therefore the distance is an appearance according to the conjunction with Him . . . And as no one can be conjoined with the Lord as He is in Himself, therefore He appears to the Angels at a distance as a Sun; but still He is in the universal angelic Heaven as the soul is in a man; and in like manner in each Society of Heaven; and in like manner in each Angel there; for the soul of a man is not only the soul of the whole, but is also [the soul] of each part.

—<sup>2</sup>. But as it is from the appearance that the Lord rules the universal Heaven, and through this the world, from the Sun which is from Him, and where He Himself is . . . it is allowable for anyone who is not in wisdom itself to think that the Lord rules each and all things from His Sun, and also that He rules the world through the angelic Heaven . . . The Angels of the higher Heavens do indeed speak from the appearance, but they think from the Truth, which is, that the Lord rules the universe from the angelic Heaven, which is [that He does so] from Himself.

163. How the Lord leads and teaches every man from the angelic Heaven shall be told in a few words . . . The universal angelic Heaven appears before the Lord as one man . . . and Heaven is not Heaven from what is proper to the Angels, but from the reception by the Angels of the Divine love and Divine wisdom from the Lord. From this it may be evident that the Lord rules the universal angelic Heaven as one man; and that that Heaven, being in itself a man, is the very image and the very likeness of the Lord; and that the Lord Himself rules that Heaven as the soul rules its body. And as the universal human race is ruled by the Lord, [it is evident] that it is not ruled through Heaven, but from Heaven by the Lord, consequently from Himself, because He Himself is Heaven.

164. From what has been premised, the things which follow may be comprehended. 1. That all, both men and Angels, are in the Lord and the Lord in them according to the conjunction with Him; or, what is the same, according to the reception of love and wisdom from Him. 2. That everyone is from these allotted a place in the Lord, thus in Heaven, according to the quality of the conjunction, or of the reception of Him. . . . 5. That everyone from infancy is let into that Divine Man whose soul and life is the Lord; and that he is led and taught from His Divine love according to His Divine wisdom in Him and not outside of Him.

165. That man is led by the Lord through influx, and is taught through illustration. Gen.art.

171. That man is taught by the Lord through the Word, and through doctrine and preachings from it; and thus immediately from Himself alone. Gen.art. 172, Ex.

174. That man is led and taught by the Lord in externals in all appearance as of himself. Gen.art.

180<sup>5</sup>. As man is together with the Lord in some external operations, and as the freedom of acting according to reason is not taken away from anyone, it follows that the Lord cannot act otherwise in internals than as He acts together with man in externals.

181<sup>2</sup>. Consequently, as man disposes the externals, the Lord disposes the internals. . . .

197. That the affections of the life's love are known to the Lord alone. Gen.art.

202<sup>3</sup>. So would it be if the Lord did not lead the states of human minds every least moment. This the Lord does according to the laws of His Divine Providence, according to which it is that it appears to man as if he leads himself; but the Lord foresees how he leads himself, and constantly accommodates.

203. It follows that the human race in the whole world is under the Lord's auspices. . . .

219<sup>2</sup>. That in himself man is temporary, and that in Himself the Lord is eternal; and therefore from man there can proceed only what is temporary, and from the Lord only what is eternal. Ex.

— Therefore if from the Lord there proceeds what is finite . . . it does not proceed from the Lord, but from man; and it may be said [to proceed] from the Lord through man, because it so appears. Examp.

— 4. From these things there follows this—that man from his temporary things separates from himself the eternal things of the Lord; but that the Lord conjoins His eternal things with the temporary ones of man; that is, Himself with man, and man with Himself.

220<sup>3</sup>. Therefore all the operation of the Lord is from primes and ultimates together, thus in what is full.

230<sup>6</sup>. By 'the door' is meant the Lord. . . . 'I am the door; by Me if anyone shall enter in, he shall be saved' (John x. 9); from which it is evident that the Lord Himself is to be approached for anyone to be saved; and that he who approaches Him is the shepherd of the sheep; and that he who does not approach Him is a thief and a robber.

231<sup>6</sup>. The sixth kind of profanation is [committed] by those who acknowledge the Word, and still deny the Divine of the Lord. Ex.

— As the Lord is Heaven, and therefore those who are in Heaven are in the Lord, therefore those who deny the Divine of the Lord cannot be admitted into Heaven and be in the Lord.

256<sup>2</sup>. Wonderful to say, where the Word is read holily, and the Lord is worshipped from the Word, there is the Lord with Heaven. The reason is that the Lord is the Word, and the Word is the Divine truth which makes Heaven. . . .

— 3. That the Word is holy, and that the Divine is in the Lord. . . . are essentials of the Church; and therefore those who deny the Divine of the Lord—who are those called Socinians—have been excommunicated from the Church. . . .

257<sup>3</sup>. It is known that without the Lord there is no salvation; and this being the case, it was necessary that the Lord should be preached from the Word, and thereby the Christian Church be instaurated.

258<sup>2</sup>. That such a doctrine (as that of faith alone) has been permitted, is from the Divine Providence, that the Divine of the Lord and the Holy of the Word might not be profaned. The Divine of the Lord is not profaned when salvation is placed in these words—That God the Father may be merciful for the sake of the Son. . . . for thus they do not approach the Divine of the Lord, but the human, which they do not acknowledge as Divine. . . .

259<sup>3</sup>. There are three essentials of the Church—the acknowledgment of the Divine of the Lord, the acknowledgment of the holiness of the Word, and the life which is called charity. . . .

262<sup>7</sup>. As to the Divine Providence, why it has permitted Christians to worship. . . . three Gods, and why they have hitherto not known that God is one in Person and in Essence. . . . and that this God is the Lord; the Lord is not the cause, but man himself. The Lord has taught this manifestly in His Word. . . . and He has also taught it in the doctrine of all the Churches. (Continued under DIVINE HUMAN.)

285. As these two faculties are perpetual, and are continuous from primes to ultimates in each and all things which man thinks and acts, and as they are not in man from himself, but are with man from the Lord, it follows that the Lord's presence, when in them, is also in. . . . the veriest singulars of the man's understanding and thought, and also of his will and affection, and thence in the veriest singulars of his speech and action.

— e. As these faculties are with man from the Lord, and are not appropriated to man as his. . . . and as this Divine with man is in his veriest singulars, it follows that the Lord rules the veriest singulars, both with an evil man and with a good man; and the government of the Lord is what is called the Divine Providence.

292. But that still the Only Fountain of Life, which is the Lord, is not the cause of man's thinking evil and falsity, may be illustrated by these things in the natural world . . .

[P.] 294<sup>5</sup>. That thus it seems that evil is from the Lord. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. That they do not comprehend that the Lord alone can cause all to think in such different ways. Ex.

295. That the Lord is continually leading (the evil) away from evils. Gen.art. —<sup>10</sup>.

299. That the Lord rules Hell by opposites ; and that the evil who are in the world He rules in Hell as to the interiors, and not as to the exteriors. Gen.art. 307, Ex.

316. All who are led by the Divine Providence of the Lord are elevated from proprium, and then they see that all good and truth are from the Lord ; nay, they even see that that which is from the Lord in man is perpetually the Lord's, and never man's.

319<sup>3</sup>. With the good, these (purely organic substances and forms) are spirited forwards . . . and those which are spirited forwards are turned to the Lord, and receive influx from Him . . .

320. That if a man believed . . . that all good and truth are from the Lord . . . he would not appropriate good to himself. . . Gen.art.

321<sup>3</sup>. All influx from the Lord is effected through the illustration of the understanding, and through the affection of truth, and through the latter into the former.

—<sup>4</sup>. That to believe and think . . . that all good and truth are from the Lord . . . appears to be impossible, when yet it is truly human and thence angelic. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. That to believe and think thus is impossible to those who do not acknowledge the Divine of the Lord . . . and that it is possible to those who do acknowledge (it). Ex.

326<sup>4</sup>. From which it is evident that in proportion as anyone Knows the Lord, and from Knowledges thinks about Him, in the same proportion the Lord is present ; and in proportion as anyone acknowledges Him from the affection of love, in the same proportion the Lord is conjoined with him : and, on the other hand, that in proportion as anyone does not Know the Lord, in the same proportion the Lord is absent ; and that in proportion as anyone denies Him, in the same proportion He is disjoined. Conjunction effects that the Lord turns his face to Himself, and then leads him ; and disjunction effects that Hell turns his face to itself and leads him ; and therefore all the Angels of Heaven turn their faces to the Lord as a Sun, and all the Spirits of Hell turn away their faces from the Lord.

330<sup>6</sup>. (It is said) that the Lord is not known to them, and that without the Lord there is no salvation ; but no one has salvation on account of the Lord's being known to him, but because he lives according to His precepts ; and He is known to everyone who acknowledges God ; for the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth . . .

331. That the Lord cannot act against the laws of the Divine Providence, because to act against them would be to act against His Divine love and against His Divine wisdom, thus against Himself. Gen.art.

333<sup>6</sup>. This is effected by the Lord, because all the future is present to Him, and all the present is eternal to Him.

340<sup>6</sup>. That by this faith damnation is imputed to the Lord. Ex.

R. Pref. After the Last Judgment . . . a New Heaven was formed from Christians, but from those alone who could receive [the truth] that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth ; according to His words in Matt. xxviii. 18 . . . From this Heaven descends and will descend a New Church on earth . . . That this Church will acknowledge the Lord alone, is evident from Rev. xx. 9, 10 ; and xix. 7, 9.

—<sup>3</sup>. They who (in the Christian Heaven) have cherished no other idea of the Lord's Human than as the human of another man, have not been able to receive the faith of the New Jerusalem, which is that the Lord is the Only God in whom is the Trinity ; and therefore these have been separated and sent to the corners . . .

1, Pref. That this revelation is effected by the Lord alone ; and that it is received by those who will be in His New Church . . . and who acknowledge the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth. The Lord is also described as to the Word. Tr. (in Rev.i.)

5. In the sight of the Lord, Heaven is as one man whose soul is the Lord Himself ; and therefore the Lord speaks through Heaven with man as a man speaks to another, from his soul, through his body . . .

6. In the Apocalypse, by 'Jesus Christ,' and 'the Lamb,' is meant the Lord as to the Divine Human ; and by 'God' is meant the Lord as to the Divine Itself a quo.

13. (A Divine salutation) from the Lord who is the Eternal and the Infinite, and Jehovah. Sig. and Ex.

32<sup>2</sup>. But we do not read that the disciples called the Lord 'brother.' Ex.

42. The inversion of the state of those who are in the good of life as to the perception of truth in the Word, when they turn themselves to the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

— . The arcanum (in Rev.i. 12) is that before a man turns himself to the Lord and acknowledges Him as the God of Heaven and earth he cannot see the Divine truth in the Word. The reason is that God is one both in Person and in Essence, in whom is the Trinity, and that this God is the Lord ; and therefore those who acknowledge a Trinity of Persons look primarily to the Father, and some to the Holy Spirit, and rarely to the Lord ; and if they do look to the Lord they think of His Human as of a common man. When a man does this he cannot possibly be illustrated in the Word ; for the Lord is the Word ; for it is from Him and about Him. On this account those who do not approach the Lord alone regard Him and His Word as 'behind' them, and not before them.

—<sup>3</sup>. That the Lord alone is the God of Heaven and earth He here teaches with a plain voice ; for He says, 'I am the Alpha and the Omega, the Beginning and the End, saith the Lord, who is, and who was, and who is to come' (ver.8) . . .

44. The Lord as to the Word, from whom is that (New Church). Sig. and Ex.

54. That from such presence of the Lord there is a defect of man's Own life. Sig. and Ex.

— Man's Own life cannot endure the presence of the Lord, such as the Lord is in Himself; nay, such as He is in the inmosts of His Word; for His Divine love is altogether like the sun's [heat]. . . This is meant by that 'no one can see God and live' (Ex. xxxiii. 20; Judg. xiii. 22). This being the case, the Lord appears to the Angels in Heaven as a Sun, distant from them as the sun of the world is from men. The reason is that the Lord in that Sun is in Himself. But still the Lord modifies and tempers His Divine so that man can endure His presence. This is effected by veilings. So was it done when He revealed Himself to many in the Word. Nay, by veilings He is present with everyone who worships Him, as He Himself says in John: 'He that doeth My precepts, I will make My abode with him' (xiv. 21, 23); and that 'He will be in them, and they in Him' (xv. 4, 5). From these things it is evident why John, when he saw the Lord in such glory, fell at His feet as dead; as also when the three disciples saw the Lord in glory they were heavy with sleep, and a cloud veiled them over.

56. Man's Own life is to look from self to the Lord; but life from the Lord is to look from the Lord to the Lord, and still as if from self. When a man is in this life he sees himself to be not anything, but the Lord alone. Ill.

69. The New Church . . . is formed from those who approach the Lord alone, and at the same time perform repentance from evil works. The rest, who do not approach the Lord alone, from the confirmed denial that His Human is Divine, and who do not perform repentance from evil works, are indeed in the Church, but have not anything of the Church in them. Tr. 70.

70. Therefore in the first chapter of the Apocalypse it treats of the Lord alone; and in these two following ones it is He alone who speaks to the Churches, and He alone who will give the happy things of eternal life. Ill. 71, Ill.

74. The Lord from whom through the Word are all truths. Sig. and Ex.

92. The Lord, that He is the Only God. Sig. and Ex.

108. The Lord as to truths of doctrine from the Word, by which evils and falsities are dispersed. Sig. and Ex.

110<sup>c</sup>. They indeed know the Lord, but they do not approach Him . . .

150. That they will have this [power] from the Lord . . . Sig. and Ex.

155. The Lord, from whom are all Truths, and all the Knowledges of good and truth. Sig. and Ex.

160. It is to be known that dead worship . . . effects the presence of the Lord; but not the conjunction . . .

176. The Lord alone is the God of Heaven and earth; and therefore they who do not approach Him directly do not see the way to Heaven. Sig. and Des.

180. That they are in the worship of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

193<sup>d</sup>. In the Word of the New Testament it is not said 'Jehovah God,' but 'the Lord God;' for 'Lord,' like 'Jehovah' = the Divine good, or the Divine love.

196. The worship of the Lord alone, with new things which were not in the former Church. Sig. and Ex.

222. That the Lord and the Father are one, and are Heaven. Sig. and Ex.

224<sup>g</sup>. Then the Angels replied, Read the Word, and believe in the Lord, and you will see the truths which are to be of your faith and life . . . But two of the company said, We have read, but have not understood. The Angels replied, You did not approach the Lord . . .

225. Pref. It treats . . . also of the acknowledgment that the Lord is the only Judge.

230. 'One sitting upon the throne' = the Lord.

247. 'Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty' = that the Word continually teaches the Lord, and that He alone is God, and that therefore He alone is to be worshipped.

248. 'Who is, and Who was, and Who is to come' = the Lord.

249. That the Word ascribes all truth, and all good, and all worship to the Lord who will judge. Sig. and Ex.

251. The humiliation of all in Heaven before the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

252. The acknowledgment that their wisdom is from the Lord alone. Sig. and Ex.

253. The confession that the Kingdom is the Lord's from merit and justice, because He is Divine truth and Divine good. Sig. and Ex.

256. The Lord as to His Divine Itself from eternity, who has omnipotence and omniscience, and who is the Word, and who from Himself knows the states of life of all in the Heavens and on earth, in every particular and in every general. Sig. and Ex. E. 297.

262. For the Lord alone sees the state of everyone from inmosts to outermosts; and also what a man has been from infancy to old age, and what he will be to eternity, and also what place will be allotted to him in Heaven or Hell. This the Lord sees in an instant, and from Himself, because He is the Divine truth itself . . .

265. 'Behold the Lion' = the Lord, that from His Own power He has subjugated the Hells, and has reduced all things into order . . .

269. 'The Lamb slain' = the Lord as to His Human not acknowledged in the Church as Divine.

275. From humiliation the adoration of the Lord from the higher Heavens. Sig. and Ex.

279. 'They sang a new song' = the acknowledgment and glorification of the Lord, that He alone is the Judge, the Redeemer and Saviour, thus the God of Heaven and earth.

286. The confession and glorification of the Lord by the Angels of the lower Heavens. Sig. and Ex.

289. All these things in the Lord, and from Him in them. Sig. and Ex.

290. The confession and glorification of the Lord by the Angels of the lowest Heavens. Sig. and Ex.

[R.]291. That in the Lord from eternity, and thence in His Divine Human, is the all of Heaven and of the Church, Divine good and Divine truth, and Divine power, and from Him in those who are in Heaven and the Church. Sig. and Ex.

339. Confirmations of evil through falsity and of falsity from evil, until they did not acknowledge anything Divine of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

341. The king asked them, Why did you pray to the Lord, and not to God the Father? They said that they had been so instructed below. And he said, Did I not sometimes tell you in the world that the Lord is to be approached?... What did you then reply about the Lord? And it was given them to recollect that they had replied that when the Father is approached the Son also is approached. But the Angels who were around the king said, You mistake; you did not think that; nor is the Lord approached when God the Father is approached; but God the Father is approached when the Lord is approached, because they are one, like soul and body. Who approaches a man's soul and so his body?...

344. 'I saw another Angel ascending from the rising of the sun'=the Lord providing and moderating. Ex.

348. 'The sealed'=all who acknowledge the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth...

366. Hearing the Lord, and doing the things He commands. Sig. and Ex.

368. 'Salvation to our God who sitteth upon the throne, and to the Lamb'=acknowledgment from the heart that the Lord is their Saviour. Ex.

379. That they have purified (their religious things) by truths, and thus have been reformed by the Lord. Sig. and Ex... Because all who in the world have fought against evils, and have believed in the Lord, are taught by the Lord after their departure out of the world...

385. 'God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes'=that they shall no longer be in combats against evils and their falsities... but in goods and truths, and thence in heavenly joys from the Lord.

388. 'When He had opened the seventh seal'=exploration by the Lord of the state of the Church, and thence of the life, of those who are in His Spiritual Kingdom...

390. The universal Spiritual Heaven in the presence of the Lord, hearing and doing the things He commands. Sig. and Ex.

392. 'The golden censer'=the worship of the Lord from spiritual love.

394. 'The smoke of the incense (ascending) before God'=their protection by the Lord. Ex.

415. 'An Angel flying in the midst of heaven'=instruction and prediction by the Lord. By 'an Angel,' in the supreme sense, is meant the Lord; and thence also something from the Lord. Ref.

443. A command by the Lord from the Spiritual Heaven to those who were exploring and manifesting. Sig. and Ex.

464. Pref. (In Rev.x.) it treats of the exploration... of those in the Churches of the Reformed, as to what they believe concerning the Lord as being the God of Heaven and earth... and as to His Human being Divine; and that this is not received there, and that it scarcely can be received so long as the dogma concerning justification by faith alone is seated in their hearts.

464. In this and the following chapter it treats of the Lord, that He is the God of Heaven and earth, and that He is God also as to the Human; consequently that He is Jehovah.

465. 'I saw another mighty Angel descending from Heaven'=the Lord in Divine majesty and power. Ex. That this Angel is the Lord, is evident from the description of Him... The reason He was seen as an Angel, is that when He manifests Himself, He appears in the Heavens and below the Heavens as an Angel; for He infils some Angel with His Divine accommodated to the reception of those to whom He grants to see Him. No Angel can endure His presence itself, such as it is in itself, or in its essence, and still less any man, and therefore He appears above the Heavens as a Sun... There He is in His Divine from eternity, and at the same time in His Divine Human, which are one like soul and body.

469. 'A little book open'=the Word as to this thing of doctrine therein—that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and that His Human is Divine. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The little book is said to be 'open' because this thing stands forth manifestly in the Word, and is evident to everyone who reads, if he pays attention. This is now treated of, because this is the essential itself of the New Church. The reason is, that the salvation of everyone depends upon the Knowledge and acknowledgment of God... Now as the Lord is the Very God of Heaven and earth, (it follows that) if He is not acknowledged, no one is admitted into Heaven, for Heaven is His body; but he stands below and is bitten by serpents, that is, by infernal Spirits, from whom there is no healing except that which there was for the Sons of Israel—that they should look to the brazen serpent, by which is meant the Lord as to His Divine Human, as is evident from John iii.14,15.

470. That the Lord has the universal Church under His auspices and dominion, both those therein who are in its externals, and those therein who are in its internals. Sig. and Ex.

471. The Lord's grievous lamentation that the Church has been taken away from Him. Sig. and Ex.

472. That the Lord will disclose what is in the little book through the universal Heaven. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. For the speech of the Lord fallen down into the lower parts is heard as thunder; and as He speaks simultaneously through the whole Heaven, thus fully, they are called 'the seven thunders.'

473. That these things (concerning the Lord) are indeed manifested, but that they are not received until after those who are meant by the dragon, the beast, and the false-prophet have been cast out of the World of Spirits, because there would be danger if they were received before. Sig. and Ex.

474. Attestation and testification of the Lord by Himself. Sig. and Ex.

476. That there is not any state of the Church, nor any Church, unless one God is acknowledged, and that the Lord is He. Sig. and Ex.

— . That God is one is not denied ; but it is denied that the Lord is He . . . That the Church is from Him who is Saviour and Redeemer is not denied ; but that He is to be approached immediately as the Saviour and Redeemer is denied. Hence it is evident that the Church will expire unless a new one comes forth which acknowledges the Lord alone as the God of Heaven and earth . . .

479. A command from Heaven that he should imitate that doctrine concerning the Lord, but that it would be manifested through John how it would be received in the Church, before those who are meant by the dragon, the beast, and the false-prophet have been removed. Sig. and Ex.

480. A movement of the lower mind with many in the Church to receive the doctrine (concerning the Lord). Sig. and Ex.

481. That reception from the acknowledgment that the Lord is the Saviour and Redeemer is grateful and pleasant ; but that the acknowledgment that He alone is the God of Heaven and earth, and that His Human is Divine, is ungrateful and disagreeable, owing to falsifications. Sig. and Ex.

485. Pref. (In Rev.xi.) it still treats of the state of the Church with the Reformed, as to what quality they who are interiorly in faith alone are in their opposition to the two essentials of the New Church ; which are, that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and that His Human is Divine ; and that we are to live according to the precepts of the decalogue. (Refs. to the subject of these two essentials of the New Church will be found under ESSENCE, at R.490, et seq.)

486. The presence of the Lord, and His command that he should see and Know the state of the New Church in the New Heaven. Sig. and Ex.

490. 'My two witnesses' = those who confess and acknowledge from the heart that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and that His Human is Divine, and who are conjoined with Him by a life according to the precepts of the decalogue. Ex.

504. 'Where our Lord was crucified' (ver.8) = the non-acknowledgment of the Divine Human of the Lord, and thus a state of rejection. It is said in the Church that those crucify the Lord who blaspheme Him ; as also those who, like the Jews, deny that He is the Son of God. They who deny that His Human is Divine are like the Jews, because every man regards the Lord as a Man, and he who regards His Human as on an equality with the human of another man cannot then think of His Divine, however much this is called the Son of God, born from eternity, and equal to the Divine of the Father. When this is said and read, it is indeed heard, but still it is not at the same time in the faith while the Lord is thought of as being a material man like another man, retaining equal properties of the flesh ; and as he then removes His Divine and does not regard it, in that state he is as if he denied it ; for he denies that His Human is the Son of God, as the Jews did, and crucified Him . . . From these things the reason is evident why the men of the Church approach God the Father immediately, and many also the Holy Spirit immediately, and rarely anyone the Lord immediately.

517. 'The rest were terrified, and gave glory to the God of Heaven' = that those who had adjoined some goods of charity to faith, when they saw their destruction, acknowledged the Lord, and were separated. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. As these had acknowledged the Lord from fear, they were separated in order that they might be explored as to the origin from which they had done goods, whether from themselves or from the Lord. All those do goods from themselves who do not shun evils as sins . . . but those do them from the Lord who do shun them as sins.

520. 'The kingdoms of the world have become our Lord's and His Christ's, and He shall reign for ages of ages' (ver.15) = . . . that Heaven and the Church have become the Lord's, as they had been from the beginning, and that now they have also become His Divine Human's ; thus that the Lord as to both will now reign over Heaven and the Church to eternity. Ex.

— . By 'the Lord,' here, is meant the Lord from eternity, who is Jehovah ; and by 'Christ' is meant His Divine Human, which is the Son of God.

—<sup>2</sup>. That the Lord will reign as to His Divine Human also, is manifestly evident from these passages. Ill.

522. 'We give Thee thanks, Lord God Almighty, Who art, and Who wast, and Who art to come' (ver.17) = confession and glorification by the Angels of Heaven that the Lord is He who is, Who lives and has power from Himself, and rules all things, because He alone is eternal and infinite. Ex.

523. 'Because Thou hast taken Thy great power, and hast entered upon the kingdom' (id.) = the New Heaven and the New Church, where they will acknowledge (the Lord) as the only God, as He is, and as He has been.

527. Those who love the things which are the Lord's in a less or in a greater degree. Sig. and Ex.

529. The New Heaven in which the Lord is worshipped in His Divine Human. Sig. and Ex.

548<sup>2</sup>. The ministry in Heaven which is 'Michael' is with those who confirm from the Word that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and that God the Father and He are one as the soul and the body are one . . . But by 'Gabriel' is meant the ministry with those who teach from the Word that Jehovah came into the world, and that the Human which He took on there is the Son of God and Divine . . .

550. That those who are meant by the dragon have been turned away from the Lord to themselves . . . and that by separation from the Lord and Heaven (they have) become devils and satans. Sig. and Ex.

553. The joy of the Angels of Heaven that the Lord alone now reigns in Heaven and in the Church, and that they are saved who believe in Him. Sig. and Ex.

[R.] 555. Victory through the Divine truth of the Word, and thence through the acknowledgment that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth . . . Sig. and Ex.

556. (And) who have not loved themselves more than the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

557. A new state of Heaven, that they are in the Lord, and the Lord in them. Sig. and Ex.

564<sup>2</sup>. (The notion that) the Lord born from eternity is not one and the same with the Lord born in time ; that is, that one Lord is God and not the other.

565. 'The dragon was angry against the woman, and went away to make war with the rest of her seed, who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ'=(their hatred) against those who acknowledge the Lord alone as the God of Heaven and earth . . . assailing novitiates with the design of seducing them. Ex.

566. There arose a debate among Spirits as to whether anyone can see any doctrinal theological truth in the Word, except from the Lord. They all agreed in this—that no one can except from God . . . and therefore it was being debated whether anyone can unless he approaches the Lord immediately. On one side they said that the Lord must be approached directly because He is the Word ; and on the other that doctrinal truth is seen when God the Father also is immediately approached. (It was then shown by experiment that only those saw truths who approached the Lord immediately.)

—<sup>4</sup>. (Some in the abyss said,) Let us pray to the Lord for permission to ascend . . . And as they prayed to the Lord, leave was granted.

—<sup>5</sup>. For the Lord in the Word enjoins on every man who wants to be saved to do good to the neighbour as of himself ; and yet to believe that it is of the Lord.

588. That all of the Church of the Reformed acknowledged this heresy (of faith alone) except those who had believed in the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

603<sup>2</sup>. Those who have imbedded these arcana (of justification by faith alone), and have thence been in the conceit of erudition, are in the Spiritual World so hostile against those who adore the Lord alone . . . that they come into the wrath of anger and fury when they see them, and also when they feel from afar the Divine sphere of the Lord and the sphere of charity around them.

612. The Lord now in the New Heaven collected from those in the Christian Churches who have acknowledged the Lord alone as the God of Heaven and earth . . . Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Heavens [which existed] before the Advent of the Lord are above this one, and are called the ancient Heavens ; in which also all acknowledge the Lord alone as the God of Heaven and earth.

—<sup>4</sup>. That by 'Mount Zion' is signified Heaven and the Church where the Lord alone is worshipped. Ill.

613. The acknowledgment with them from love and faith of the Divine and of the Divine Human of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

614. The Lord speaking through the New Heaven from Divine truths. Sig. and Ex.

615. The Lord speaking through the New Heaven from Divine love. Sig. and Ex.

616. The confession of the Lord from gladness of heart by the spiritual Angels in the lower Heavens. Sig. and Ex.

617. The celebration and glorification of the Lord before Him and before the Angels of the higher Heavens. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. By 'as it were a new song' is signified the celebration and glorification of the Lord in the New Christian Heaven ; here, in special, that He is acknowledged as the God of Heaven and earth, as He is acknowledged in the ancient Heavens. 662.

618. That from Christians no others could understand, and thus from love and faith acknowledge, that the Lord is the only God of Heaven and earth, than those who have been received by the Lord into this New Heaven. Sig. and Ex. 619.

621. That they have been conjoined with the Lord through love and faith in Him, because they have lived according to His precepts. Sig. and Ex.

623. The initiament of the Christian Heaven which acknowledges one God in whom is the Trinity, and that the Lord is He. Sig. and Ex.

625. That they are in truths from good from the Lord. Sig. and Ex. . . For all who are led by the Lord are kept in good by Him, and from this good there proceeds nothing but truth ; and if falsity, it is apparent falsity, and this is regarded by the Lord as similar to truth . . .

629. The acknowledgment and confession that all the truth of the Word, from which the Church is the Church, is from the Lord, according to which every man will be judged. Sig. and Ex.

630. That the Lord alone is to be worshipped, because He alone is the Creator, the Saviour, and the Redeemer, and from Him alone are the angelic Heaven and the Church, and all things of them. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. That Jehovah the Creator is the Lord from eternity, and that the Lord the Saviour and Redeemer is the Lord born in time . . .

638. That the man of the Lord's Church will be explored through temptations from (those who are meant by 'the beast') . . . as to faith in the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

639. 'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord henceforth' (Rev. xiv. 13)=a prediction from the Lord concerning the state of those after death who will be of His New Church ; which is, that those who suffer temptations on account of faith in the Lord and a life according to His precepts have eternal life and happiness. Ex.

640. That those who afflict the soul and crucify the flesh on this account will have peace in the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

645. The supplication of the Angels of Heaven to the Lord that He will . . . perform Judgment . . . Sig. and Ex.

649. The operation of the Lord from the good of His love through the Divine truth of His Word into the works of charity and faith which are with the men of the Christian Church. Sig. and Ex.

656. Pref. The preparation to disclose the last state of the Church, and to open the evils and falsities in which they are ; from whom have been separated those who have confessed the Lord, and have lived according to His precepts. (Tr. in Rev. xv.)

663. 'Great and marvellous are Thy works, Lord God Almighty' (ver.3)=that all things of the world, of Heaven, and of the Church, have been created and made by the Lord from His Divine love through His Divine wisdom. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Lord is called 'Lord' in the Word from the Divine good of the Divine love ; and 'God' from the Divine truth of the Divine wisdom.

665. 'Who shall not fear Thee, O Lord, and glorify Thy name?' (ver.4)=that He alone is to be loved and worshipped.

666. 'For Thou alone art Holy'=that the Lord is the Word, the Truth, and the illustration. Ex.

667. That all who are in the good of love and of charity will acknowledge the Lord alone as God. Sig. and Ex.

668. The Word is now opened, and this testifies that the Lord alone is the God of Heaven and earth. Sig.

669. That there was seen the inmost of Heaven ; where is the Lord in His holiness in the Word, and in the Law which is the decalogue. Sig. and Ex.

670. Preparation by the Lord . . . Sig. . . That by 'the seven Angels' is meant the Lord . . .

672. The Lord always operates from inmosts through ultimates, or in what is full.

675. A paper was seen to be let down from the Lord through Heaven into a Society of Englishmen . . . which contained an exhortation that they should acknowledge the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth. (Continued under ENGLAND.)

676. Influx from the Lord from the inmost of Heaven into the Church of the Reformed . . . to take away from them truths and goods, and to open the falsities and evils in which they are, and thus to separate them from those who believe in the Lord . . . Sig. and Ex.

678<sup>2</sup>. Therefore when a man wants to reject evil by fighting against it, he must look to the Lord ; for the Lord operates from inmosts to ultimates ; for He enters through the soul of the man, and purifies.

680. The influx of truth and good from the Lord with those in the Church of the Reformed who are in its externals . . . Sig. and Ex.

683. The influx from the Lord . . . into the understanding of the Word with them. Sig. and Ex.

686. 'Thou art just, O Lord, Who art, and Who wast, and Holy, because Thou hast judged these things' (Rev.xvi.5)=that this is from the Divine Providence of the Lord, who is and who was the Word and the Divine truth itself, which otherwise would be profaned. Ex. 689.

693. That on this account they cannot receive with any faith that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth even as to the Human, although the Word teaches it. Sig. and Ex.

VOL. IV.

694. The influx from the Lord into their faith. Sig. and Ex.

697. That they could not acknowledge the Lord alone to be the God of Heaven and earth, on account of the resistance from interior falsities and evils . . . Sig. and Ex.

699. The influx from the Lord into their interior reasonings . . . Sig. and Ex.

705. The Advent of the Lord, and Heaven then for those who look to Him, and remain steadfast in a life according to His precepts . . . Sig. and Ex.

708. The influx from the Lord into all things together with the men of the Church of the Reformed. Sig. and Ex.

709. That thus it was manifested by the Lord that all things of the Church have been devastated . . . Sig. and Ex.

716<sup>3</sup>. The king (of England was especially amazed that) the English bishops had so thought about the Lord.

718. Revelation from the Lord from the inmost of Heaven concerning the Roman Catholic religiosity. Sig. and Ex.

— . It is not said the Roman Catholic Church, but the Roman Catholic religiosity, because they do not approach the Lord . . . and the Church is the Church from the Lord . . . and its perfection is according to the acknowledgment of the Lord . . .

738. That all the Divine truths of the Word have been destroyed except this one—that to the Lord has been given all Power in Heaven and on earth ; and except another which has not yet come into question ; and when it does, it will not remain ; and which is that the Human of the Lord is Divine. Sig. and Ex.

743. The combat of the Lord with them concerning the acknowledgment of His Divine Human, because in it the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and also the Word. Sig. and Ex.

— . From the Lord's dominion over all the goods of Heaven and the Church, He is called 'Lord of lords' ; and from His Kingdom over all the truths of Heaven and the Church, He is called 'King of kings.'

—<sup>2</sup>. That the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, He Himself teaches in manifest words. III.

— . Who does not know that the Lord was conceived of God the Father . . .

744. That those who approach and worship the Lord alone are they who come into Heaven ; both those who are in the externals of the Church, and those who are in its internals and inmosts. Sig. and Ex.

749. Judgment with them from the Lord that they should utterly repudiate and hold as accursed the Roman Catholic religiosity . . . Sig. and Ex.

754. A strong influx from the Lord from Heaven through Divine truth, from which His Church was in heavenly light. Sig. and Ex.

756. When they become demons . . . and know that the Lord alone dominates over Heaven and earth, they become hatreds against Him, insomuch that after the lapse of an age they cannot bear to hear Him named.

[R.] 758<sup>2</sup>. And that which is from the Lord remains the Lord's with the recipients; for that which is from the Lord is Divine, which can never become man's Own. The Divine can be with man, but not in what is his Own; for the proprium of man is nothing but evil . . . What is Divine from the Lord is exquisitely separated from the proprium of man, and is elevated above it . . .

760. An exhortation from the Lord to all . . . to beware of conjunction with that religiosity by acknowledgment and affection . . . Sig. and Ex.

761. That the Lord will protect the Heavens from violence thence. Sig. and Ex.

766. 'She shall be burnt in the fire, because strong is the Lord God judging her' (Rev. xviii. 8) = that they will be hatreds against the Lord and against His Heaven and Church, because they will then see that the Lord alone dominates and reigns over all things in the Heavens and on earth . . . Ex.

768. (Thus) it is the confession of the Lord, that He is the Son of the Living God, Who has Power over Heaven and earth, upon which the Lord builds His Church; thus upon Himself, and not upon Peter. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. They were thus convinced, although they did not want to be convinced, that this Power belongs to the Lord alone, and not in the least to any man, because it is Divine Power.

791. That by a strong influx of the Lord from Heaven that religiosity . . . will be cast headlong into Hell . . . Sig. and Ex.

796. That those who are in that religiosity from doctrine and life according to it have not any illustration from the Lord . . . Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The acknowledgment and worship of the Lord, and the reading of the Word, effect the presence of the Lord; and these two things together with a life according to His precepts effect conjunction with Him. In Babylon it is the contrary. There the Lord is acknowledged, but without dominion . . . Instead of the Lord, the pope is there worshipped . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. From these passages it is evident that the Lord is the Light from which is all illustration and the derivative perception of truth . . .

797. 'A bridegroom, in the supreme sense, = the Lord as to Divine good . . .

798. Because with them there is not the marriage of the Lord and the Church . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The Divine operation of the Lord to save men, is from primes through ultimates . . . The ultimates through which the Lord operates are on earth, and in fact with men. On this account, that the Lord Himself might be in ultimates as He is in primes, He came into the world, and put on the Human . . . Hence it is that the Lord is called 'the First and the Last . . . ' Who cannot see . . . that the salvation of man is the continual operation of the Lord with man from the first of his infancy to the last of his life, and that this is purely Divine . . .

800. By their 'sorcery' . . . are signified the wicked arts by which they have deluded and persuaded that they might be worshipped in place of the Lord, and thus as the Lord; and because the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth . . .

802<sup>3</sup>. How can the Divine Power of the Lord be transferred into you? How can the Divinity of the Lord be separated from His soul and body?

803. Pref. A glorification of the Lord by the Angels of Heaven because the Roman Catholic religiosity has been removed in the Spiritual World. Tr. 803.

— . An annunciation concerning the Advent of the Lord. Tr.

804. 'Salvation, and glory, and honour, and power, to the Lord our God' (Rev. xix. 1) = that now there is salvation from the Lord, because there is now reception of Divine truth and Divine good from His Divine Power. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. This also is the reason why not until after the Last Judgment it was revealed . . . that the Lord alone is the God of Heaven and earth . . .

808. The adoration of the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth, and as the Judge of the universe, by the Angels of the higher Heavens; and the confirmation of the thanksgiving, confession, and celebration of Him, made by the Angels of the lower Heavens. Sig. and Ex.

809. Influx from the Lord into Heaven, and thus the unanimity of the Angels, that all who are in the truths of faith and the goods of love should worship the Lord as the only God of Heaven. Sig. and Ex. 810.

— . For as the Lord is above the Heavens, and appears before the Angels as a Sun, He does not speak to the Angels thence, but He inflows; and that which inflows is received in Heaven and uttered . . .

811. The joy of the Angels of the lowest Heavens, of the Angels of the middle Heaven, and of the Angels of the highest Heaven, that the Lord alone reigns in the Church which is now to come. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'For the Lord God omnipotent reigneth' (ver. 6.) = because the Lord alone reigns; for the Lord is called 'the Omnipotent.' Ill.

812. Joy of soul and heart, and a consequent glorification of the Lord, that henceforth there is effected a full marriage of Him with the Church. Sig. and Ex.

817. That this is to be believed because it is from the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

818. That the Angels are not to be adored . . . but, in consociation with them, the Lord alone. Sig. and Ex. 946.

819. 'For the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy' = that the acknowledgment that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and a life according to His precepts together therewith, in the universal sense, is the all of the Word and of doctrine therefrom. Ex.

820. The spiritual sense of the Word revealed by the Lord, and the interior understanding of the Word thereby disclosed, which is the Advent of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

821. The Lord as to the Word, that He is the Divine good and Divine truth itself, from both of which He effects the Judgment, and separates the good from the evil. Sig. and Ex.

822. The Divine wisdom of the Divine love of the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

823. The Divine truths of the Word from the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

824. That no one sees the quality of the Word in its spiritual and celestial senses except the Lord, and he to whom He reveals it. Sig. and Ex.

826. The Angels in the New Christian Heaven who had been conjoined with the Lord in the interior understanding of the Word . . . Sig. and Ex.

827. The dispersion of falsities by the Lord through doctrine thence. Sig. and Ex.

828. That (the Lord) will convince all who are in dead faith by means of the truths of the sense of the letter of the Word, and by means of rational things. Sig. and Ex.

829. That the Lord has endured alone all the evils of the Church, and all the violence offered to the Word, thus to Himself. Sig. and Ex.

830. 'He hath upon His vesture and upon His thigh a name written, King of kings and Lord of lords' (ver. 16)=that the Lord teaches in the Word what His quality is—that He is the Divine truth of the Divine wisdom, and the Divine good of the Divine love; thus that He is the God of the universe. Ex.

831. The Lord from Divine love and thence from Divine zeal, calling and convoking all who are in the spiritual affection of truth, and who think about Heaven, to the New Church, and to conjunction with Himself, and thus to eternal life. Sig. and Ex.

839<sup>6</sup>. (The Angels said,) We in Heaven read the Lord's Prayer daily . . . and we do not then think of God the Father, because He is invisible, but we think of Him in His Divine Human, because in this He is visible; and in this He is called by you Christ, but by us the Lord; and thus to us the Lord is our Father in Heaven. The Lord has also taught that He and the Father are one; that the Father is in Him, and He in the Father; and that he who seeth Him seeth the Father; and also that no one cometh to the Father except through Him; and likewise that it is the will of the Father that they should believe in the Son; and that he who believeth not in the Son does not see life . . . From which it is evident that the Father is approached through Him and in Him; and because it is so, He has also taught that all Power has been given to Him in Heaven and on earth . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. That 'Our Father in the Heavens' is the Lord Jesus Christ. Ill.

—<sup>9</sup>. That 'Hallowed be Thy Name' is to approach the Lord and worship Him. Ill.

—<sup>10</sup>. That 'Thy Kingdom come' is that the Lord reigns. Ill.

840, Pref. Concerning the ascent from the Lower Earth of those who had worshipped the Lord . . . Tr.

840. The operation of the Lord into the lower parts from the Divine Power of shutting and opening, and of binding and loosing. Sig. and Ex.

841<sup>2</sup>. For all who do not approach the Lord immediately, think sensuously about the things of the Church, and cannot think spiritually; for the Lord is the Light itself, and therefore they who do not approach the Lord immediately cannot think from spiritual light . . . but from natural light separated from spiritual light, which is to think sensuously. Hence it is that they are called 'the old serpent.' They who do not approach the Lord immediately, and do not shun evils as sins, remain in sins; and hence it is that the dragon is called 'the devil.' And as the same are in falsities as to doctrine, the dragon is called 'satan.'

843. That the Lord has completely removed those who were in faith alone . . . Sig. and Ex.

846. Those who had been rejected . . . because they had worshipped the Lord, and had lived according to the truths of His Word. Sig. and Ex.

849. Who had already been for some time in conjunction with the Lord and in His Kingdom. Sig. and Ex.

851. That primarily salvation and eternal life is to worship the Lord, and to live according to His precepts in the Word; because through these things is effected conjunction with the Lord, and consociation with the Angels of Heaven. Sig. and Ex.

852. That they who come into Heaven . . . have illustration through conjunction with the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

854. Because they are kept by the Lord in the good of love, and thence in the truths of wisdom. Sig. and Ex.

855. The universal Judgment effected by the Lord upon all the former Heavens . . . Sig. and Ex.

866. All who were . . . now in the World of Spirits . . . gathered together by the Lord to Judgment. Sig. and Ex.

874. That those who had not lived according to the precepts of the Lord in the Word, and had not believed in the Lord, were condemned. Sig. and Ex.

876, Pref. That after the Last Judgment, through the New Heaven, there will come forth a New Church on earth, which will worship the Lord alone. Its conjunction with the Lord. (Tr. in Rev. xxi.)

876. That a New Heaven from Christians has been formed by the Lord . . . where are those who had worshipped the Lord, and had lived according to His precepts in the Word . . . Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. In this New Christian Heaven are all who from the first instigation of the Christian Church have worshipped the Lord . . . In that Heaven are also all the infants of Christians, because they have been educated by the Angels in these two essentials of the Church, which are, the acknowledgment of the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth . . .

877. The Heavens not made by the Lord . . . Sig. and Ex.

879<sup>6</sup>. (The New Church) is said to 'come down from God out of Heaven,' because from the Lord through the New Christian Heaven . . .

881. That Church conjoined with the Lord through the Word. Sig. and Ex.

882. The Lord from love speaking and evangelizing that He will now be present with men in His Divine Human. Sig. and Ex.

[R.] 883. 'He shall dwell with them, and they shall be His people, and He Himself shall be with them, their God'=the conjunction of the Lord, which is such that they are in Him, and He in them. Ex.

— (The above words=) that they are the Lord's, and the Lord is theirs; (thus) that they will be in the Lord, and the Lord in them . . .

—<sup>c</sup>. It is to be known that conjunction with the Lord is one thing, and His presence is another: conjunction with the Lord is given to none except those who approach Him immediately; His presence to the rest.

884. That the Lord will take away from them all grief of mind, fear of damnation, of evils and falsities from Hell, and of temptations from them. Sig. and Ex.

886. The Lord speaking concerning the Last Judgment to those who should come into the World of Spirits . . . from the time when He was in the world until now, [and saying] these things . . . and that they may know these things for certain, and remember them, because the Lord Himself has testified and said it. Sig. and Ex. 942.

—<sup>2</sup>. By 'Him who sat upon the throne' is meant the Lord. Ref.

887. What the Lord says the third time is what must be believed, because it is Divine truth. Sig.

888. 'I am the Alpha and the Omega, the Beginning and the End' (ver.6)=that they may know that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and that all things in Heaven and on earth have been made by Him, and are ruled through His Divine Providence, and take place according to it. Ex. 950.

889. That to those who long for truths from any spiritual use the Lord will give from Himself through the Word all which conduce to that use. Sig. and Ex.

— By 'the Fountain of the water of life' is signified the Lord, and the Word.

— 'To give gratis'=from the Lord . . .

890. 'He that overcometh shall possess all things, and I will be to him a God, and he shall be to Me a son'=that those who conquer the evils with themselves . . . and who do not yield when tempted by the Babylonians and dragonists, will come into Heaven, and will there live in the Lord, and the Lord in them. Ex.

895. Influx and manifestation from the Lord from the inmost of Heaven concerning the New Church, which will be conjoined with the Lord through the Word. Sig. and Ex.

900. Guards lest anyone should enter into the New Church unless he is in these Knowledges from the Lord. Sig. and Ex. —<sup>2</sup>.

903. All things of doctrine from the Word concerning the Lord, and concerning a life according to His precepts. Sig. and Ex.

914. This light, which illustrates the mind, inflows from no other source than out of Heaven from the Lord; and as those who will be of the New Jerusalem will approach the Lord directly, this light inflows by the way of order, which is through the love of the will into the perception of the understanding. 912, Sig. and Ex.

915. All things of that doctrine from the sense of the letter of the Word in their order with those who approach the Lord immediately . . . Sig. and Ex.

916. That the acknowledgment and Knowledge of the Lord conjoin into one all the Knowledges of truth and good which are from the Word, and introduce into the Church. Sig. and Ex.

— It is called one Knowledge, although there are many which make up this one Knowledge; for the Knowledge of the Lord is the universal of all things of doctrine and thence of all things of the Church . . . for the Lord is the all in all things of Heaven and the Church, and thence in all things of worship.

—<sup>c</sup>. That the Lord is the gate itself through which men enter into the Church, and thence into Heaven, He Himself teaches in John x.9. And that the acknowledgment and Knowledge of Him are the pearl itself . . . in Matt.xiii.45,46.

918. 'I saw no temple in it, because the Lord God Almighty is the Temple of it, and the Lamb' (ver.19)=that in this Church there will not be any external separated from what is internal, because the Lord Himself in His Divine Human, from which is everything of the Church, is alone approached, worshipped, and adored.

919. That the men of that Church will not be in the love of self and in Own intelligence . . . but in spiritual light from the Divine truth of the Word from the Lord alone. Sig. and Ex.

920. That all who are in the good of life, and believe in the Lord, will there live according to Divine truths, and will see them within themselves . . . Sig. and Ex.

921. That all who are in truths of wisdom from spiritual good will there confess the Lord, and will ascribe to Him all the truth and all the good which are with them. Sig. and Ex.

922. That there will be constantly received into the New Jerusalem those who are in truths from the good of love from the Lord . . . Sig. and Ex.

923. That those who enter will bring with them the confession, acknowledgment, and faith, that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and that every truth of the Church, and all the good of religion, are from Him. Sig. and Ex.

925. That no others are received into the New Church . . . than those who believe in the Lord, and live according to His precepts in the Word. Sig. and Ex.

926<sup>2</sup>. I prayed to the Lord, and the interiors of my mind were suddenly opened . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. It was (then) given them to open the Third Heaven . . . and then . . . the whole of that temple vanished, and in place of it was seen the Lord alone standing upon the foundation stone, which was the Word, in a like form to that in which He was seen by John (Rev.i.).

932, Pref. (In Rev.xxii.) that Church is still described as to intelligence from Divine truths from the Lord. That the Apocalypse has been manifested by the Lord. . . Concerning the Advent of the Lord, and His conjunction with those who believe in Him, and live according to His precepts. 932.

933. That in the inmosts of the Truths of doctrine and thence of life in the Church is the Lord in His Divine love, from whom flow forth all the goods which man does apparently as from himself. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. This takes place with those who approach the Lord immediately, and shun evils because they are sins; thus who will be in the Lord's New Church . . . For those who do not approach the Lord immediately cannot be conjoined with Him, thus neither with the Father, and thence cannot be in love which is from the Divine; for looking conjoins, not intellectual looking alone, but intellectual looking from the affection of the will . . .

935. That the Lord produces goods with man according to every state of truth with him. Sig. and Ex.

937. That in the Church which is the New Jerusalem there will not be any separated from the Lord, because the Lord Himself will reign there; and they who are in truths from Him through the Word, and do His commandments, will be with Him, because conjoined. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. This state of all derives its origin from the fact that the Lord is present with everyone according to faith, and is conjoined according to love. Faith and the consequent presence of the Lord are given through the Knowledges of truth from the Word, especially those concerning the Lord Himself there; but love and the consequent conjunction are given through a life according to His precepts. (Continued under CONJOIN.)

938. That they will turn themselves to the Lord, and that the Lord will turn Himself to them, because they are conjoined by love. Sig. and Ex.

—'. 'To see the face of God and the Lamb,' or of the Lord, does not mean to see His face, because no one can see His face as He is in His Divine love and in His Divine wisdom, and live; for He is the Sun of Heaven . . . and to see His face, as He is in Himself, would be as if one should enter into the sun . . . But the Lord sometimes presents Himself to view outside of His Sun; but He then veils Himself over and presents Himself to their sight, which is done through an Angel; as He had also done in the world before Abraham, etc. . .

939. That to 'see the face of the Lord' does not mean to see His face; but to Know and acknowledge Him as He is with respect to His Divine attributes. II.

940. 'There shall be no night there, and they have no need of a lamp and of the light of the sun, because the Lord illustrates them' (ver. 5.)=that in the New Jerusalem there will not be any falsity of faith, and that men will not be in Knowledges concerning God from natural lumen which is from Own intelligence, and from glory originating from conceit; but that they will be in spiritual light from the Word from the Lord alone. Ex.

943. 'The Lord God of the holy prophets hath sent His Angel to show to His servants the things which must quickly be done' (ver. 6.)=that the Lord, from whom is the Word of both Covenants, has revealed through Heaven to those who are in truths from Him the things which will certainly be.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason 'the Angel,' here,=Heaven, is that the Lord spoke to John through Heaven . . . and speaks through Heaven to everyone to whom He does speak. The reason is that the angelic Heaven in general is like one man, whose soul and life is the Lord; and therefore everything which the Lord speaks He speaks through Heaven, as the soul and mind of a man does through his body.

—<sup>3</sup>. But I will declare this mystery. The Lord speaks through Heaven, but still the Angels there do speak, and do not even know what the Lord is speaking, unless there are with the man some of them through whom the Lord is speaking openly from Heaven, as with John and some of the prophets. For there is an influx of the Lord through Heaven, as there is an influx of the soul through the body. The body does indeed speak and act, and also feels something of the influx; but still the body does not act anything from itself . . . That such is the speech, nay, that such is all the influx, of the Lord through Heaven with men, it has been given to know from much experience.

949. That the Lord will certainly come, and that He is Heaven and happiness of eternal life to everyone according to his faith in Him, and his life according to His precepts. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. These are solely from the Lord, and the things which are from the Lord are not only from Him, but are also Himself; for the Lord cannot send forth anything from Himself unless it is Himself; for He is omnipresent with every man according to the conjunction; and the conjunction is according to the reception; and the reception is according to the . . . charity and faith; and the charity and faith are according to the life; and the life is according to the aversion to evil and falsity; and the aversion to evil and falsity is according to the Knowledge of what evil and falsity are, and then according to repentance and the simultaneous looking to the Lord. That the reward is not only from the Lord, but is also the Lord Himself, is evident from the passages in the Word where it is said that those who are conjoined with Him are in Him, and He in them; and also where it is said that the Holy Spirit is in them; and the Holy Spirit is the Lord, for it is His Divine presence . . . For the Lord is love itself and wisdom itself; and these two are not in place, but are where they are received . . . In the Works on the Divine Providence, and on the Divine Love and Wisdom, it has been demonstrated that the Lord is in men according to the reception, and not any Divine separated from Him. In this idea are the Angels, when they are in the idea of the Divine omnipresence, and I doubt not that some Christians can be in the like.

951. That those have eternal life who live according to the Lord's precepts for the sake of the end that they may be in the Lord and the Lord in them through love, and in His New Church through Knowledges concerning Him. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. That they who are in the Lord and the Lord in them are in all Power, so that whatever they will they can do, the Lord Himself says in John xv. 5, 7; and in like manner concerning Power in Matt. vii. 7; Mark xi. 24; Luke xi. 9, 10. Nay, in Matthew, Jesus said, 'If ye shall have faith, if ye shall say to this mountain, Remove, cast thyself into the sea, it shall be done. Yea, all things which ye shall ask believing ye shall receive'

(xxi.21,22). By these words is described the Power of those who are in the Lord. These do not want anything, and so do not ask anything, except from the Lord; and whatever they want and ask from the Lord is done; for the Lord says, 'Without Me ye cannot do anything: abide in Me and I in you.'

[R.] 953. A testification by the Lord before the whole Christian world, that it is true that the Lord alone has manifested the things which are described in this Book, as also the things which have now been opened.

— The reason the Lord here names Himself 'Jesus,' is that all in the Christian world may know that the Lord Himself, who was in the world, has (done this).

954. That He is the very Lord who was born in the world . . . and who will come with new light which will arise before His New Church . . . Sig. and Ex.

957. That they who read and know the truths of doctrine of this Book now opened by the Lord, and still acknowledge any other God than the Lord, and any other faith than in Him . . . cannot do otherwise than perish . . . Sig. and Ex. 958, Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. There are two things in this prophetic Book to which all things of it relate: the first is that no other God is to be acknowledged than the Lord; and the second is that no other faith is to be acknowledged than faith in the Lord.

958<sup>2</sup>. Therefore they who do not approach the Lord immediately cannot see any truth from the Word.

960<sup>o</sup>. Here, at the end of the Book, the Lord speaks and the Church speaks, as the Bridegroom and the bride . . .

961<sup>7</sup>. The Angels requested me to say from their mouth that if anyone does not approach the God Himself of Heaven and earth, he cannot come into Heaven, because Heaven is Heaven from that One Only God; and that this God is Jesus Christ, who is Jehovah the Lord, the Creator from eternity, the Saviour in time, and the Reformer to eternity; thus who is at once the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

962<sup>2</sup>. (A Council of the clergy there seen deliberating about the Lord. The discussion fully stated.) B.120. T.188.

M. 1. For it has pleased the Lord to manifest Himself to me . . .

21<sup>2</sup>. (On the wedding-day) the bridegroom represents the Lord.

—<sup>2</sup>. There are two things which make the marriage of the Lord and the Church—love, and wisdom; and the Lord is love, and the Church is wisdom.

29<sup>2</sup>. It has been provided by the Lord, who is Jehovah from eternity, and the Creator of the universe . . .

70. That no others can come into (love truly conjugal) . . . than those who approach the Lord . . . Gen.art.

82<sup>2</sup>. He asked, How can you demonstrate the first (doctrinal of the Church meant by the New Jerusalem)—that there is one God, in whom is the Divine Trinity, and that He is the Lord Jesus Christ? I said, I demonstrate it thus. Is not God one and indivisible? Is there not a Trinity? If God is one and indivisible, is He not one Person? If He is one Person, is not the Trinity in that Person? That He is the Lord Jesus Christ is evident from these things—that He was conceived from God the Father (Luke i.34,35), and thus that as to His soul He is God; and thence, as He Himself says, that the Father and He are one (John x.30); that He is in the Father, and the Father in Him (John xiv.10,11); that He who seeth Him and knoweth Him, seeth and knoweth the Father (John xiv.7,9); that no one seeth and knoweth the Father but He who is in the bosom of the Father (John i.18); that all things of the Father are His (John iii.35; xvi.15); that He is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, and that no one cometh to the Father but through Him (John xiv.6); thus from Him, because He is in Him; and, according to Paul, that all the fulness of the Divinity dwelleth bodily in Him (Col.ii.9); and besides, that He has Power over all flesh (John xvii.2); and that He has all Power in Heaven and on earth (Matt.xxviii.18); from all of which it follows that He is the God of Heaven and earth.

116. On the marriage of the Lord and the Church, and its correspondence. Chapter.

117. That in the Word the Lord is called the 'Bridegroom,' and 'Husband' . . . III.

118. Also that the Lord is called 'Father,' and the Church 'mother.' III.

129. That the Church is from the Lord, and is with those who approach Him, and live according to His precepts. Gen.art.

135<sup>3</sup>. The Lord alone, when He was in the world, was wise from Himself, and did good from Himself, because the Divine Itself was in Him and of Him from birth; and therefore also from His Own power He became the Redeemer and Saviour.

208<sup>4</sup>. (Husbands) grow cold to their wives when they think vain things against the Lord and the Church.

262<sup>o</sup>. For the love of uses is from the Lord, and is the Lord Himself.

266<sup>5</sup>. Everyone who believes in the Lord, and shuns evils as sins, does uses from the Lord; whereas everyone who does not believe in the Lord . . . does uses from himself . . .

267<sup>2</sup>. For everyone is withheld from the concupiscence of evil, and is kept in intelligence, according to his looking to the Lord, and at the same time his conjunction with Him. Without this, man is nothing but concupiscence.

336. That all these things (that is, celestial blessednesses, spiritual happinesses, and natural delights) are impossible, except from the Lord alone; and that they are given to no others than those who approach Him and live according to His precepts. Ex.

337<sup>2</sup>. The reason love truly conjugal is so rare in the Christian world, is that few there approach the Lord . . .

342. That no others are elevated into the higher Mohammedan Heaven than those who . . . acknowledge our Lord as equal to God the Father . . . Gen.art. T.832.

343. I have heard that it is impossible for them to think of our Lord as one with God the Father . . . T.832.

349. That polygamy is not sin with those who are in ignorance about the Lord. Gen.art.

— The reason is that love truly conjugal is from the Lord alone, and this can be given by the Lord to no others than those who know Him, acknowledge Him, believe in Him, and live the life which is from Him.

356<sup>2</sup>. The Angel replied, Shun adulteries as infernal, and approach the Lord, and you will have it (perpetual vigour). They said, We will so shun them, and we will approach the Lord. But the Angel replied, You cannot shun adulteries as infernal evils, unless in like manner you shun all other evils, because adulteries are the complex of all; and unless you do shun them, you cannot approach the Lord; for the Lord receives no others.

389. Hence it is that whatever proceeds from the Lord is in an instant from primes in ultimates.

397. Everything which proceeds from the Lord in an instant pervades the universe.

466<sup>3</sup>. In proportion as (a Christian) loves a concubine . . . he at heart acknowledges the Lord to be only a natural man, and the Son of Mary.

B. 63. This light and the derivative perception inflow solely with those who acknowledge the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth, and approach Him alone . . .

98. The reason the Christian world has fallen into this faith, which has separated from it all the truths and goods of Heaven and the Church . . . is solely because they have distinguished God into three, and have not believed the Lord God the Saviour to be one with God the Father, and thus have not approached Him immediately; when yet He alone as to His Human is the Divine truth itself which is 'the Word that was God with God,' and 'the true Light which illuminates every man,' which 'was made flesh.'

—<sup>e</sup>. From all experience, and the consequent testimony from Heaven, I am able to declare for certain that it is impossible to obtain a single theological truth which is genuine, from any other source than the Lord alone . . .

101. That the Church is the Lord's. Ill.

114<sup>3</sup>. (The Lord God the Saviour used instead of Jesus Christ in the parallel passage in R.531.)

116<sup>2</sup>. That the Lord God the Saviour Jesus Christ is that God. T.2.

T.4. Some months ago, the Lord called together His twelve disciples, now Angels, and sent them forth into the universal Spiritual World, with the command that they should there preach the Gospel anew . . .

81. On the Lord the Redeemer. Chapter.

— By the Lord the Redeemer we mean Jehovah in the Human . . .

— The reason it is said Lord, and not Jehovah, is that 'Jehovah,' in the Old Testament, is called 'Lord' in the New. Ill. . . Moreover, the Lord commanded His disciples to call Him 'Lord,' and therefore He was so called by the Apostles in their Epistles, and afterwards by the Apostolic Church, as is evident from its creed

. . . Moreover, by 'Jehovah' is meant the Divine Esse which was from eternity; and the Human, which He assumed in time, was not that Esse. . . For this reason, here and in what follows, by The Lord, we mean Jehovah in His Human.

—<sup>2</sup>. Now as the Knowledge of the Lord surpasses in excellence all Knowledges, the disposition [of the subject] shall be so ordered that this Knowledge may come into the light. Fully ex.

94<sup>o</sup>. (The effect upon the Church of regarding the Lord as the Son of Mary. Des.)

95. That through acts of redemption the Lord made Himself justice. Gen.art.

— It is believed in Christian Churches that the Lord alone has merit and justice . . . But it has been supposed that the passion of the cross was the act of redemption itself; when yet . . . the acts of redemption by which the Lord made Himself justice were that He executed the Last Judgment . . . and of the worthy He founded a New Heaven, and of the unworthy a Hell, and successively reduced into order all things in both; and established a New Church besides.

96. When a man lives according to order, he procures for himself . . . not the justice of the Lord's redemption, but the Lord Himself as justice.

97. That by the same acts the Lord united Himself to the Father, and the Father [united] Himself to Him. Gen.art.

100<sup>e</sup>. This conjunction (with the Lord) is effected by man approaching the Lord, and the Lord Him; for it is a fixed and immutable law, that in proportion as a man approaches the Lord, in the same proportion the Lord approaches the man.

101<sup>2</sup>. Besides, Jehovah God calls both Himself and Him 'Lord;' for we read: 'The Lord said unto My Lord, Sit at My right hand' (Ps.cx.1).

102. It is believed that the Lord as to the Human not only has been, but also is, the Son of Mary; but in this the Christian world is deluded. That He was the Son of Mary is true; but that He is so still is not true; for by the acts of redemption He put off the human from the mother, and put on a Human from the Father . . . Ill. 103<sup>e</sup>.

104. That when the Lord was in the world He had two states, which are called those of exinanition and glorification, has been known in the Church. Ill.

105. The reason the Lord had these two states . . . was that no other progression to union is possible . . . The Divine order is, that man disposes himself for the reception of God . . . This man must do of himself . . . In like manner the Lord, in order that He might make His natural human Divine. Hence it is that He prayed to the Father; that He did His will; that all things which He operated and said He attributed to Him; and that upon the cross He said, My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken me? for in this state God appears to be absent. But after this state there comes the other, which is a state of conjunction with God. In this the man acts in like manner, but now from God; nor has he now need . . . to attribute to God all the good which he wills and does . . . because this is inscribed on his heart . . . In like manner did the Lord unite Himself to the Father, and the Father Himself to Him . . . 110<sup>4</sup>.

[T.] 107. That hereafter no one from Christians comes into Heaven, except him who believes in the Lord God the Saviour, and approaches Him alone. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. That we are to believe in the Lord God the Saviour, is evident from these passages in the Word. III.

—<sup>3</sup>. As to those who do not know anything about the Lord, as is the case with most in . . . Asia and Africa . . . if they believe in one God, and live according to the precepts of their religion, they are saved by means of their faith and life . . .

108. To confirm this further, I will relate . . . that there is being at this day founded by the Lord a New Angelic Heaven . . . of those who believe in the Lord God the Saviour, and approach Him immediately; and that all others are rejected; and therefore if hereafter anyone from the Christian world comes into the Spiritual World . . . and does not believe in the Lord, and approach Him alone, and is then not able to receive this, because he has lived evilly, or has confirmed himself in falsities, at his first step to Heaven he is repelled, and his face is turned away from it, and is turned to the Lower Earth, whither he also goes, and conjoins himself with those there who are meant by 'the dragon' and 'the false-prophet.' Moreover, every man in Christian lands who does not believe in the Lord, is hereafter not listened to; in Heaven his prayers are like evil-smelling odours, and like eruptions from ulcerated lungs . . . nor do they ascend to Heaven otherwise than as the smoke of a conflagration which is driven back into his eyes by a descending hurricane . . . So is it henceforth with all the piety which is determined to a discrete Trinity, and not to a conjoined one. To show that the Divine Trinity is conjoined in the Lord is the principal purpose of this Work. I will here add this new thing—that some months ago, the twelve Apostles were called together by the Lord, and were sent forth into the universal Spiritual World, as before they had been sent forth into the natural world, with the command that they should preach this Gospel; and to each Apostle there was then assigned his own region; which command they are also executing with all zeal and pains.

109. Since His Advent into the world, the Lord is present with the men of the Church immediately; for in the world He put on the Divine Natural, in which He is present with men. The glorification of the Lord is the glorification of His Human which He assumed in the world; and the glorified Human of the Lord is the Divine Natural. That it is so, is evident from the fact that the Lord rose from the sepulchre with His whole Body which He had in the world; nor did He leave behind anything therein; consequently that He took thence with Him the natural Human itself from its primes to its ultimates; and therefore after His resurrection He said to His disciples who believed that they saw a Spirit: 'See My hands and My feet, that it is I Myself; feel Me and see; for a Spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see Me have.' From which things it is evident that His natural Body was made Divine by glorification. And therefore Paul says that in Christ dwelleth all the fulness of the Divinity bodily; and John, that the Son of God, Jesus Christ, is the True God (1 Epistle v.20). From these things the Angels know that in the universal Spiritual World the Lord alone is a full Man.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Lord Himself was indeed seen with the Ancients; for He said to the Jews, 'Your father Abraham exulted to see My day, and he saw, and rejoiced. I say unto you, Before Abraham was, I was' (John viii. 56, 58). But as the Lord was then only represented, which was done by means of Angels, therefore all things of the Church with them became representative; whereas after He had come into the world those representations vanished; the interior reason of which was, that in the world the Lord put on the Divine Natural; and from this He illustrates not only the internal spiritual man, but also the external natural man; and unless these two are illustrated simultaneously, the man is as it were in shade . . . —<sup>e</sup>.

110<sup>3</sup>. I replied . . . Do you not know that the Lord when in the world had a soul like every other man? Whence had He this soul except from God the Father?

110<sup>4</sup>. While He was an infant, was not the Lord like an infant? and while a boy, like a boy? Do we not read that 'He advanced in wisdom and grace?' and afterwards, that He asked the Father to 'glorify His name,' that is, His Human? . . . Hence it is evident, that in His state of exinanition—which was His state of progression to union—the Lord prayed to the Father.

—<sup>5</sup>. To prepare one's self for the reception of God, and for conjunction, is to live according to Divine order; and the laws of order are all the precepts of God. These the Lord infilled to every point, and thus made Himself a receptacle of the Divinity in all fulness. Therefore Paul says that in Jesus Christ dwelleth all the fulness of the Divinity bodily; and the Lord Himself, that 'all things of the Father are His.'

—<sup>6</sup>. It is to be held, further, that the Lord is the sole Active with man, and that man from himself is merely passive; but that by means of the influx of life from the Lord he is also active. From this perpetual influx from the Lord, it appears to man as if he were active from himself; and (hence) he has free will; and this is given him in order that he may prepare himself to receive the Lord; and thus for conjunction, which is impossible unless it is reciprocal; and it becomes reciprocal when man acts from his freedom, and yet from faith attributes all the Active to the Lord.

—<sup>7</sup>. What else is then concluded by the mind . . . concerning the Lord than that His soul was either from the mother or from Joseph?

116<sup>3</sup>. As the Lord alone conquered the Hells, without the aid of any Angel, He is called 'Hero,' etc. III.

119. The Lord Himself is the soul and life of this (Grand) Man . . .

121. That the Lord thus redeemed not only men, but also the Angels. Gen.art.

—<sup>3</sup>. The second reason why the Lord redeemed the Angels, is that . . . every Angel is withheld from evil, and is held in good, by the Lord . . .

123<sup>2</sup>. How the Lord afterwards reduced into order all things in both Heaven and Hell, has not yet been described by me, because (it) is still going on . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. The combat of the Lord with Hell may also be compared to a combat with the wild beasts of the whole world . . . until none of them dares to . . . make an assault on any man who is in the Lord. (Other comparisons used.)

—<sup>6</sup>. From the like Divine power, the Lord at this day fights against Hell with every man who is being regenerated; for Hell assaults all such with diabolical fury; and unless the Lord resisted and mastered it, man could not but yield . . .

124. It is to be known that the combat of the Lord with the Hells was not an oral combat . . . but it was a spiritual combat, which is that of Divine truth from Divine good, which was the very Vital of the Lord: the influx of this by means of sight no one in the Hells can resist . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The nature of the Lord's power, which He has from Divine good, when He performed the Last Judgment in 1757. Des.

126. That the passion of the cross was the last temptation which the Lord as the Greatest Prophet endured, and that it was the means of the glorification of His Human . . . Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. That in the passion of the cross the Lord was left to Himself, is evident from His cry then . . .

— From these things it may now be evident that the Lord did not suffer as to the Divine, but as to the human; and that there was then effected an inmost and thus a plenary union . . . This may be illustrated by this—that when a man is suffering as to the body, his soul is not suffering, but is only grieving; and that after the victory God takes this grief away . . .

129. The reason why the Lord willed to be tempted even to the passion of the cross, was that He was The Prophet . . . (and) as the Lord was the Word Itself, He as The Prophet represented the Jewish Church by the passion of the cross. An additional reason is this—that thus He might be acknowledged in the Heavens as the Saviour of both worlds; for all things of His passion signified such things as belong to the profanation of the Word; and the Angels understand them spiritually, while the men of the Church are understanding them naturally. That the Lord was the Prophet. Ill.

130<sup>3</sup>. That the Lord as The Prophet represented the state of the Jewish Church as to the Word, is evident from each particular of His passion. (Ex. seriatim.)

133. The ways to Heaven, which are the ways to the Lord God the Saviour, have been beset with thieves and robbers . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. (In the case of a tripersonate) what is easier for the devil than . . . to cast down from His throne the Lord God the Saviour, who has all Power in Heaven and on earth . . .

135<sup>3</sup>. Then, by command of the Lord, three Angels descended from Heaven, and were associated with me, in order that I might speak from interior perception with those who had the idea of three Gods . . .

135<sup>6</sup>. I observed . . . that those (of the Spirits) who were thinking of one God, in whom is the Divine Trinity, and that this Trinity is in the Lord God the Saviour, looked towards Heaven; and there appeared to them the Sun of Heaven, in which is Jehovah in His Human.

137<sup>5</sup>. But our faith (in Heaven) is, was, and to eternity will be, in the Lord God the Saviour, whose Human is Divine, and whose Divine is Human, thus accommodated to reception; and by means of which the Divine Spiritual is united to the Natural of man . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. I continued . . . Whence was the soul of our Lord the Saviour? If you reply that it was from the mother, you are insane; if from Joseph, you profane the Word; but if from the Holy Spirit, you say rightly; provided that by the Holy Spirit you mean the Divine which proceeds and operates, so that He is the Son of Jehovah God.

139. That the Holy Spirit is the Divine Truth, and also the Divine virtue and operation proceeding from the One God, in whom is the Divine Trinity, thus from the Lord God the Saviour. Gen.art.

—<sup>4</sup>. That by 'the Comforter,' or 'Holy Spirit,' the Lord meant Himself, is evident from these words of the Lord—that 'the world did not as yet know Him, but ye know Him. I will not leave you orphans, I will come to you; ye shall see Me.' And elsewhere: 'Lo I am with you all the days, even to the consummation of the age.' And also from these words: 'He shall not speak from Himself, but shall receive of Mine.'

142. For the Word is the one only medium through which man approaches the Lord, and into which the Lord enters; for . . . the Lord is the Divine truth itself; and whatever proceeds from Him is that . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. By means of Divine truth from good . . . man is reformed and regenerated, and also renovated, vivified, sanctified, justified . . . But all these operations of the Lord cannot be expounded here . . . It is to be known that the Lord is continually operating these salvations—salutes—with every man . . . for the Lord wills the salvation of all; and therefore the salvation of all is His end; and he who wills the end, wills the means. His Advent, redemption, and passion of the cross, were for the sake of the salvation of men; and as the salvation of men was and to eternity is His end, it follows that the above-mentioned operations are mediate ends, and that Salvation is the ultimate end. 143.

145. Now as the Lord is Divine truth itself from Divine good, and as this is His very essence, and as everyone acts from His essence that which he does act, it is evident that the Lord continually wills . . . to implant truth and good . . . in every man. (Shown by exams.)

147<sup>2</sup>. The minds of all men who deny . . . the Divinity of the Lord, think in the lowest region. 148<sup>2</sup>. Des.

149. That the Lord operates these virtues in those who believe in Him. Gen.art.

150. The reason those who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ will receive these spiritual virtues, is that He is the salvation—salus—and eternal life . . . And as He is the salvation and eternal life, it follows that He is also all that through which salvation and eternal life are obtained; consequently, that He is everything of reformation, of regeneration, of renovation, of vivification, of sanctification, of justification, of purification from evils, and finally is Salvation—salvatio. The Lord operates these with every man, that is, He endeavours to introduce them; and when a man accommodates and disposes himself for reception, He does introduce them. The Active itself of the accommodation and disposition is also from the Lord; but if the man does not receive them with a spontaneous spirit, then in spite of the endeavour which constantly continues, He cannot introduce them.

[T.] 151. To believe in the Lord is not only to acknowledge Him, but also to do His precepts. Ex.

152. It has been shown that the salvation and eternal life of men are the Lord's first and last end; and as the first and the last ends contain in them the mediate ends, it follows that the above-mentioned spiritual virtues are in the Lord simultaneously, and are also from the Lord in man simultaneously; but still they come forth—prodeunt—successively . . .

153. That the Lord operates from Himself from the Father, and not reversely. Gen.art.

— This shall first be confirmed from the Word. . . 'When the Comforter is come, whom I will send from the Father' . . . 'If I go away, I will send Him unto you' . . . 'The Comforter . . . shall receive of Mine . . . all things whatsoever that the Father hath are Mine; therefore said I that He shall receive of Mine, and shall announce to you' (John xv. and xvi.) 'The Holy Spirit was not yet, because Jesus was not yet glorified' (vii. 39). 'Jesus breathed into His disciples, and said, Receive ye the Holy Spirit' (xx. 22). 'Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in My name, I will do it' (xiv. 13, 14). From these passages it is manifestly evident that the Lord sends the Holy Spirit, that is, operates those things which are at this day ascribed to the Holy Spirit as a God by Himself; for He said that He 'will send Him from the Father,' etc. . . That God the Father does not operate those virtues from Himself through the Son, but that the Son operates them from Himself from the Father, is evident from these words: 'No one hath ever seen God; the Only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath displayed' (John i. 18). And elsewhere: 'Ye have never heard the voice of the Father, nor seen His shape' (v. 37). From these things therefore it follows, that God the Father operates in the Son, and into the Son, but not through the Son; but that the Lord operates from Himself from His Father; for He says, 'All things of the Father are Mine' (John xvi. 15); that 'the Father hath given all things into the hand of the Son' (iii. 35); and also that, 'As the Father hath life in Himself, so hath He given to the Son to have life in Himself' (v. 26); and also, 'The words which I speak are spirit and life' (vi. 63). The reason why the Lord says that the Spirit of Truth goes out from the Father' (John xv. 26), is that it does go out from the Father into the Son, and out of the Son from the Father; and therefore He also says: 'In that day ye shall know that the Father is in Me, and I in the Father; and ye in Me, and I in you' (xiv. 11, 20) . . . (Thus) the error in the Christian world is very evident, that God the Father sends the Holy Spirit to men; and the error of the Greek Church, that God the Father sends it immediately. This—that the Lord sends it out of Himself from God the Father, and not the reverse—is from Heaven; and the Angels call it an arcanum, because it has not yet been disclosed in the world. 154. Fully ex. 188<sup>10</sup>.

154<sup>5</sup>. The Lord from Himself, or from the Word, acts in man and into him, but not through him; because a man acts and speaks freely from the Lord when he does so from the Word.

—<sup>6</sup>. The soul acts in the body and into the body, but not through the body; but the body acts from itself from the soul . . . Like this is it with the Divine and the Human of the Lord; for the Divine of the Father is the soul of His Human; and the Human is His body; and the Human does not ask its Divine to tell it what to speak and operate; and therefore the Lord says: 'In that day ye shall ask in My name; and I say not unto you that I will ask the Father for you; for the Father Himself loveth you, because ye have loved Me' (John xvi. 26, 27). 'In that day,' is after the glorification . . . This arcanum is from the Lord Himself, for those who will be of His New Church.

159<sup>2</sup>. The Angels said, Let us pray to the Lord that we may be allowed to descend . . . and it was granted.

165. There is nothing else for it than for man to approach the Lord God the Saviour, and read the Word under His auspices, for He is the God of the Word; and then he will be illustrated, and will see Truths which reason also will acknowledge. But if you do not approach the Lord, although you read the Word a thousand times, and see the Divine Trinity therein, and also the Divine Unity, you will never understand anything else than that there are three Divine Persons, each of whom is by Himself God; and thus that there are three Gods.

—<sup>2</sup>. Such a paralytic birth has been born from the fact that they did not read the Word under the Lord's auspices; for everyone who does not read the Word under His auspices, reads it under the auspices of his Own intelligence, and this is like an owl . . . In short, to read the Word under the auspices of Own intelligence—which is done by all who do not acknowledge the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth, and who therefore do not approach and worship Him alone—may be likened to children playing, who tie a handkerchief over their eyes, and try to walk in a straight line . . . (Other comparisons used.)

167. Everyone should acknowledge that in the Lord God the Saviour there have been and there are these three essentials; namely, the soul, the body, and the operation. That His soul was from the Father, can be denied only by Antichrist, for in the Word of both Testaments He is called the Son of Jehovah, the Son of the Most High God, the Only-begotten . . . That the Son whom Mary bore is the body of that Divine soul, follows thence; for nothing else is prepared in the womb of the mother than a body conceived and derived from the soul . . . The reason the Operations make the third essential, is that they proceed from the soul and body together; and the things which proceed are of the same essence with those which produce them. That the three essentials—which are the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit—are one in the Lord, as the soul, body, and operation are in man, is manifestly evident from the Lord's words, that the Father and He are one; and that the Father is in Him, and He in the Father; in like manner that He and the Holy Spirit [are one], because the Holy Spirit is the Divine which proceeds from the Lord from the Father.

176. What trust is to be placed in councils when they do not approach immediately the God of the Church? Is not the Church the Lord's body, and He its head? What is a body without a head? . . .

177<sup>3</sup>. If the faith is true . . . the God of the Word, who is the Lord God the Saviour, pours light upon it, breathes upon it His Divine assent, and makes the man wise.

190. The Lord the Saviour, who is the same as Jehovah, spoke the Word with the Evangelists, much of it from His own mouth, and the rest from the spirit of His mouth, which is the Holy Spirit, through His twelve apostles.

294. The spiritual sense of the (first) commandment, is that no other God is to be worshipped than the Lord Jesus Christ, because He is Jehovah who came into the world, and wrought the redemption without which no man and no Angel could be saved. That there is no God besides Him, is evident from these passages in the Word. Fully ill.

—<sup>6</sup>. From these passages it is clearly evident that the Lord our Saviour is Jehovah Himself, who is at once the Creator, Redeemer, and Regenerator.

295. The celestial sense of this commandment, is that Jehovah the Lord is Infinite, immeasurable, and Eternal; that He is Omnipotent, Omniscient, and Omnipresent; that He is the First and the Last, the Beginning and the End, who Was, Is, and Will be; that He is love itself and wisdom itself, or good itself and truth itself, consequently, life itself; thus the Only One from whom all things are.

296. All who acknowledge and worship any other God than the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who is Jehovah God Himself in a human form, sin against this first commandment . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The human mind is like a house of three stories, in the lowest of which are they who have confirmed themselves in favour of three Gods from eternity; and in the second and third are they who acknowledge and believe in one God under a visible human form, and that the Lord God the Saviour is He.

301. With the Sons of Israel, the Sabbath was the sanctity of sanctities, because it represented the Lord . . . But when the Lord came into the world, and the representations of Him therefore ceased, that day was made a day of instruction in Divine things . . .

307. In the celestial sense, by 'Father' (in the fourth commandment) is meant our Lord Jesus Christ . . . That the Lord is 'Father,' is evident from these passages. Fully ill.

308. It is to be kept in mind that there continually proceeds from the Lord a Divine celestial sphere of love towards all who embrace the doctrine of His Church, and who obey Him as little children in the world obey their father and mother, who apply themselves to Him, and want to be . . . instructed by Him. (Continued under SPHERE.)

311. In the celestial sense, by 'to kill' (in the fifth commandment) is meant to be rashly angry with the Lord, to bear hatred against Him, and to want to blot out His name. These are they of whom it is said that they crucify Him, which they also would do . . . if He were to come into the world as before. Ill.

312. The quality of man's internal, unless reformed by the Lord, has been evident to me from the devils and satans in Hell; for they bear constantly in mind to kill the Lord; and as they cannot do this, they are in the endeavour to kill those who are devoted to the Lord. Des.

319. In the celestial sense, by 'thieves' are meant those who take away Divine Power from the Lord; and also those who claim for themselves His merit and justice.

323. In the celestial sense, by 'to bear false witness,' is meant to blaspheme the Lord and the Word . . .

337. That saving faith is [faith] in the Lord God the Saviour Jesus Christ. Gen.art. The reason saving faith is faith in God the Saviour, is that He is God and Man, and that He is in the Father and the Father in Him, and thus that they are one; and therefore they who approach Him approach the Father at the same time, and thus approach the one and Only God; and there is no saving faith in any other. That faith is to be had in the Son of God, the Redeemer and Saviour, conceived of Jehovah and born of the Virgin Mary, named Jesus Christ, is evident from the commands frequently reiterated by Him, and afterwards by the apostles. Fully ill.

338. That the faith of the apostles was no other than faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Fully ill.

339<sup>3</sup>. Very different is faith in the Lord God the Saviour; for as He is God and Man, and is capable of being approached and seen in thought, the faith is not untermiated, but has its terminus from which and to which; and when once received, it remains; as when anyone has seen an emperor or a king, his image returns whenever he remembers him. The sight of this faith is as of one who sees a bright cloud, and in the midst of it an Angel, who invites the man to him, in order that he may be elevated into Heaven. So does the Lord appear to those who have faith in Him; and He draws near to each one in proportion as he knows and acknowledges Him, which takes place in so far as he knows and does His precepts, which are, to shun evils and to do goods; and at last He comes into the man's house, and together with the Father who is in Him, makes His abode with him. Ill. These things have been written in the presence of the twelve apostles of the Lord, who were sent to me by the Lord while I was writing them.

[T.] 342. It has been shown that saving faith is faith in the Lord God the Saviour Jesus Christ. But the question arises, What is the first of faith in Him? And the answer is, the acknowledgment that He is the Son of God. This was the first of faith which the Lord revealed and announced when He came into the world. For unless men had first acknowledged that He was the Son of God, and thus God from God, in vain would He and the apostles have preached faith in Him. Now as it is somewhat the same at this day . . . it is necessary that this first of faith be confirmed and established from the Word. Fully ill.

343. That man receives faith by approaching the Lord . . . Gen.art. 347, Ex. 348.

344. The esse of the faith of the New Church is—I. Confidence in the Lord God the Saviour Jesus Christ.

345<sup>b</sup>. Squinting faith . . . with Christians, (is faith) in any but the Lord God the Saviour. 346<sup>b</sup>.

348<sup>e</sup>. Faith in the Lord, devoid of Truths, may be compared to a new star appearing in the expanse of heaven, which in time grows dark; but faith in the Lord, together with Truths, may be compared to a fixed star which lasts for ever.

349. Who cannot approach the Lord if he will? . . . The Lord, who is the Light itself, inflows with every man; and in him in whom there are Truths from the Word, He causes them to shine, and thus to become of faith; and this is what the Lord says in John—that they should abide in the Lord, and His words in them (xv.7).

354. The truths of faith are various . . . but still they make one in the Lord, and with man from the Lord. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. That the Lord is the Word, and thus all the truth of Heaven and the Church. Ill. That the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth. Ill. That the Lord is the God of all flesh. Ill. That the Lord is the God of . . . the Church. Ill. That the Lord is the God of faith. Ill. That the Lord is the Light itself. Ill. That the Lord is the Truth itself. Ill. That the Lord is eternal life. Ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. To these things it is to be added that on account of his business in the world, man can procure for himself only a few Truths of faith; but still, if he approaches the Lord, and worships Him alone, he comes into the power of Knowing all Truths; and therefore every true worshipper of the Lord instantly sees, acknowledges, and receives any Truth of faith which he had not known before, as soon as he hears it. The reason is that the Lord is in him, and he in the Lord; consequently the light of Truth is in him, and he is in the light of Truth. This may be confirmed by the following experience. There was a Spirit seen by me who in the company of others had appeared simple, because he had acknowledged the Lord alone as the God of Heaven and earth, and had established this his faith by some Truths from the Word. He was taken up into Heaven among the wiser Angels, and I was told that there he was equally as wise as they, and that he had even spoken Truths in abundance, quite as from himself, of which he had before known nothing. There will be a like state with those who will come into the Lord's New Church. Ill.

355. That . . . neither (charity nor faith) is alive, except from the Lord. Gen.art.

356. Moreover, all the apostles preached faith, and that in the Lord God the Saviour Jesus Christ.

357<sup>e</sup>. This power (to procure charity for himself) is wanting to no man . . . because the Lord gives it to everyone; and He gives it as a kind of property . . .

358. Man can also procure for himself the life of faith and charity . . . for he acquires it for himself when he approaches the Lord who is Life itself; and approach to Him is not blocked to any man; for he continually invites every man to come to Him. Ill. . . The reason why man is allotted life by approaching the Lord, is that the Lord is Life itself; not only the Life of faith, but also the Life of charity. Fully ill.

359. That nevertheless nothing of faith, and nothing of charity, and nothing of the life of either, is from man; but from the Lord alone. Gen.art.

— Of himself, man can procure for himself only natural faith . . . and natural charity . . . but still by both of these he prepares himself to be a receptacle of the Lord; and as he prepares himself, so the Lord enters, and causes his natural faith to become spiritual, and in like manner his charity; and these things are done when the man approaches the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth. . . Hence follows this conclusion—that as a man prepares himself naturally to receive the Lord, so the Lord enters, and makes all things with him spiritual within, and thus alive. But, on the other hand, in proportion as a man does not prepare himself, in the same proportion he removes the Lord from himself, and does all things from himself; and that which a man does from himself has not anything of life in it.

360<sup>2</sup>. As spiritual light (and heat are) within natural light (and heat), so are spiritual faith (and charity) within natural faith (and charity); and this is effected in the degree in which the man progresses from the natural world into the Spiritual World; and he (does this) in proportion as he believes in the Lord, who is the Light itself, the Way, the Truth, and the Life. 361.

362. That the Lord, charity, and faith, make one, as do the life, the will, and the understanding in man; and that if they are divided, each of them perishes, like a pearl reduced to powder. Gen.art.

364. That the Lord with all His Divine love, with all His Divine wisdom, and thus with all His Divine life, inflows with every man. Gen.art.

—<sup>3</sup>. Moreover, the Lord is omnipresent; and where He is present, there He is with His whole essence; and it is impossible for Him to withdraw something from it, and thus to give a part to one and a part to another; but He gives the whole, and gives man the opportunity to take little or much. He also says that He has His abode with those who keep His precepts; and also that the faithful are in Him, and He in them. In a word, all things are full of God; and everyone receives his portion from that fulness.

365. Consequently, that the Lord with all the essence of faith and of charity inflows with every man. Gen.art.

366. That those things which inflow from the Lord are received by a man according to his form. Gen.art.

367. But that the man who divides the Lord, charity, and faith, is not a receiving form, but a destroying form. Gen.art.

— For he who separates the Lord from charity and faith, separates life from them . . . (and) he who acknowledges the Lord, and separates charity, acknowledges Him only with the lips; whereas he who does charity, and does not acknowledge that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, one with the Father . . . does no other charity than what is merely natural . . .

368. That the Lord is charity and faith in man, and that man is charity and faith in the Lord. Gen.art.

— That the man of the Church is in the Lord, and the Lord in him. Ill. . . But man himself cannot be in the Lord; but the charity and faith which are with him from the Lord. Fully ex.

370. That conjunction with God the Father is not possible; but with the Lord; and through Him with God the Father. Gen.art.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason is that the Lord our Saviour is Jehovah the Father Himself in a human form; for Jehovah descended and became a Man . . .

371. That conjunction with the Lord is reciprocal; which is, that the Lord is in man, and man in the Lord. Gen.art. (See CONJOIN, here.)

—<sup>6</sup>. For the Lord acts, and man receives the action from the Lord, and operates as of himself; nay, from himself, from the Lord. This operation of man from the Lord is imputed to him as his, because he is constantly kept in free Will by the Lord . . .

372. That this reciprocal conjunction of the Lord and man is through charity and faith. Gen.art.

379. That true faith is one only; and that it is faith in the Lord God the Saviour Jesus Christ; and that it is with those who believe Him to be the Son of God, the God of Heaven and earth, and one with the Father. Gen.art.

— The soul and life of this body . . . is the Lord God the Saviour. Hence it is that the Church has been called by Paul the body of Christ.

—<sup>4</sup>. For not all those who approach the Lord are in faith in Him; for true faith is internal and at the same time external.

380. That spurious faith . . . is with those who regard the Lord not as God, but only as a man. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. I fear that these abominations (the Arian and Socinian heresies) lie concealed at this day in the general spirit of the men of the Church. It is a wonderful thing that the more anyone believes himself to be more excellent than others in learning and judgment, the more prone he is to seize and appropriate to himself ideas about the Lord that He is a man and not God; and that because He is a man He cannot be God; and he who appropriates to himself these ideas introduces himself into companionship with the Arians and Socinians, who in the Spiritual World are in Hell. The reason that such is the general spirit of the men of the Church at this day, is that with every man there is a consociate spirit . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Such do all those become after death who in heart and faith deny the Divinity of the Lord . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. All those who honour the Lord as the Redeemer and Saviour solely with the mouth and lips, but in heart and spirit look upon Him as a mere man, when speaking and teaching these things, have their mouth like a bag of honey, but their heart like a bag of gall. (Other comparisons used.)

—<sup>6</sup>. If those who honour the Lord solely with the mouth and lips, but in heart and spirit look upon Him as a mere man, open their thoughts and persuade others, they are spiritual murderers, and the worst of them are spiritual cannibals; for a man has life from love and faith in the Lord; but if this essential of faith and love—that the Lord is God Man and Man God—is removed, his life becomes death . . .

384. That all those in Christendom have no faith who reject the Lord and the Word, although they live morally, and speak, teach, and write rationally, even about faith. Gen.art.

— Hence it follows, that they who reject the Word, reject the Lord also; for they cohere as one; and also that those who reject either the one or the other, reject the Church also, because the Church is from the Lord through the Word . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That those alone have faith who believe in the Lord. Ill.

390<sup>e</sup>. It was of the Divine auspices of the Lord that I came to that house . . . and that all took place as described.

391. The Angels who are sometimes sent by the Lord to visit the Christian Societies . . .

409<sup>e</sup>. When He said to Peter that he should forgive unto seventy times seven, what will not the Lord do? 539<sup>2</sup>.

412. When the Lord . . . looks down into the earth, He sees an entire Society as one man; and the form of it from their qualities.

423<sup>e</sup>. Therefore only he who worships the Lord, and who acts from Him . . . obtains spiritual charity . . .

434<sup>2</sup>. As yet there are no social gatherings of charity . . . The reason is that the Church has not yet acknowledged the Lord God the Saviour as the God of Heaven and earth, and has not immediately approached Him from whom alone proceeds genuine charity.

439. That in the exercises of charity a man does not place merit in works while he believes that all good is from the Lord. Gen.art.

457. With those who (from confirmation deny the Divinity of the Lord) there is no conjunction with God, and thence no salvation; and their charity is . . . spurious . . .

459<sup>11</sup>. (He said,) The brotherhood . . . off aith in any other God than the Lord God the Saviour is not brotherhood; because the charity which makes brotherhood is not in this faith.

—<sup>13</sup>. I said, It is my opinion that charity is to act from the love of justice with judgment in every work and office; but from love from no other source than the Lord God the Saviour. Ex.

461<sup>8</sup>. As they understood these things, I plucked some twigs from a certain vine, and handed them to them, and said, Do you believe that this is from me, or from the Lord? And they said that it was from me from the Lord. And behold the twigs put forth grapes in their hands.

[T.] 485. That without free Will in spiritual things, there would not be anything of man by which he in his turn could conjoin himself with the Lord . . . Gen.art.

494. Spiritual things climb up into the highest region of the mind, and there form themselves. The reason is that the entrance of the Lord into man with Divine goods and truths is there; and it is as a temple in which He is.

495. All the freedom which is from the Lord is freedom itself . . .

497<sup>1</sup>. These two, the will and the understanding, are the two receptacles of the Lord; the will is the receptacle of love and charity, and the understanding of wisdom and faith; and the Lord operates all of these things in the full freedom of the man, in order that there may be a mutual and reciprocal conjunction, through which is Salvation.

498. It is this freedom of man through which, in which, and with which, the Lord is present in man, and unceasingly urges the reception of Himself; but He never removes and takes away the freedom . . .

500. That if men had not free Will in spiritual things, all in the universal world could be brought to believe in the Lord in a single day . . . Gen.art.

504<sup>3</sup>. The Lord Christ said . . .

505<sup>3</sup>. Believe, my friend, that as to faith and charity, man operates from himself from the Lord . . .

508<sup>e</sup>. (There was written on the paper sent from the Third Heaven) Enter into the mysteries of the Word . . . for all its Truths are so many mirrors of the Lord.

522. No evil can be removed except by the Lord . . . The reason it is said that man must remove evils, is that the Lord does not do it without the co-operation of the man.

528. That actual repentance is to . . . make supplication to the Lord . . . Gen.art.

533<sup>e</sup>. The spiritual will through which the Lord reforms and regenerates the natural one.

536. All who do what is good from religion . . . are accepted by the Lord . . . To this I will add this new thing. All those who do what is good from religion, after death . . . turn themselves to the Lord God the Saviour . . . But all others . . . regard the Lord as only the son of Mary born from her marriage with Joseph.

537. They who, from religion, do the good works of charity . . . before they have received the doctrine of the New Church concerning the Lord, may be likened to trees which bear good fruit, although but little . . .

538. That confession ought to be made before the Lord God the Saviour, and then supplication for aid and power to resist evils. Gen.art.

— The reason the Lord God the Saviour is to be approached, is that He is the God of Heaven and earth, the Redeemer and Saviour . . .

539<sup>2</sup>. That supplication ought not to be made before the Lord in respect to the remission of sins. Ex.

— The second reason is, that the Lord, being mercy itself, remits their sins to all, and does not impute one to anyone; for He says, They know not what they do . . .

576. That the new birth . . . is effected by the Lord alone through charity and faith as the two means, man co-operating. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. As to charity and faith (in respect to the co-operation of man with the Lord) the Lord acts, and man acts from the Lord; for there is the Active of the Lord in the Passive of man; and therefore the power to act well is from the Lord, and the derivative will to act is as of the man, because he is in free Will, from which he is able to act together with the Lord, and thus to conjoin himself; and he is also able to act from the power of Hell, which is without, and thus to separate himself. The action of man, concordant with the action of the Lord, is what is here meant by co-operation. 577, Ex.

577. From these things it follows . . . that the Lord is continually in the act of regenerating man, because He is continually in the act of saving him . . .

580<sup>e</sup>. Consequently the Lord is not to blame if a man is not saved . . .

597<sup>2</sup>. No one is in truths except him who approaches the Lord immediately . . .

618. There are three things through which man is regenerated—the Lord, faith, and charity. Ex.

619<sup>2</sup>. One (of the three spheres in the Spiritual World which flow forth from modern Christendom) is in respect to the Lord. This breathes forth from the southern quarter, where are the learned . . . and wherever it goes, it enters the ideas secretly, and with many it takes away faith in the Divinity of the Human of the Lord; with many it weakens it; and with many it infatuates it. The reason is that it at the same time introduces into the faith of three Gods, and so there is confusion. . . . This sphere cannot be dissipated so long as the dragon is on the earth . . . It invades minds and puts force upon them.

621. The three Angels said, The Lord Jesus Christ has heard your prayers, and has sent us to you.

636. (The Council of Nice) was of the Divine Providence, because if the Divinity of the Lord is denied, the Christian Church dies.

637. In that primitive time, all in what was then the Christian world acknowledged that the Lord Jesus Christ was God, to whom had been given all Power in Heaven and on earth; and they believed in Him, according to His commandment from God the Father. Ill. and Ex.

650. That the Lord imputes good to every man . . . Gen.art.

677<sup>5</sup>. As soon as infants have been baptized, Angels are set over them, by whom they are kept in a state of receiving faith in the Lord . . .

681. That the second use of baptism is that the Christian may know and acknowledge the Lord Jesus Christ the Redeemer and Saviour, and may follow Him. Gen.art.

682. By 'the name of the Lord Jesus Christ' . . . is meant the acknowledgment of Him, and a life according to His precepts. Ill.

684<sup>e</sup>. The reason the Lord Himself was baptized. Ex.

685<sup>2</sup>. Therefore, let a Christian know that he who does not believe in the Lord cannot be regenerated, although he has been baptized; and that baptizing without faith in the Lord effects nothing whatever . . .

691<sup>2</sup>. When the Lord presents Himself as more present in Heaven, the wicked who are beneath Heaven begin to . . . be tortured and . . . flee . . . The Lord Himself does not descend, but an Angel with a sphere of love from the Lord around him. I have sometimes seen the wicked terrified by that descent . . .

711. It has been shown . . . that the Lord Himself is in the Holy Supper . . .

716. That in the Holy Supper is the whole of the Lord, and the whole of His redemption. Gen.art.

719. That the Lord is present and opens Heaven to those who approach the Holy Supper worthily; and He is also present with those who approach it unworthily, but does not open Heaven to these . . . Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore with those who only understand what truth and good are, the presence of the Lord is universal or external; whereas with those who also will and do what is true and good, the presence of the Lord is both universal and singular, or both internal and external.

720. It is not to be believed that the Lord closes Heaven against those who approach unworthily; this He does to no man even to the end of his life in the world; but . . . the man closes it against himself . . .

722. That those approach the Holy Supper worthily who are in faith in the Lord . . . Gen.art.

725. That those who approach the Holy Supper worthily are in the Lord, and the Lord in them; consequently that through the Holy Supper there is effected conjunction with the Lord. Gen.art.

—<sup>e</sup>. What else is conjunction with the Lord than to be among those who are in His Body?

726<sup>e</sup>. There are many who confess the Lord . . . but if they do not do this . . . from faith in the Lord, they are not regenerate . . . for they confess the Lord solely with the mouth and lips . . .

728. When a man is being regenerated, the Lord is indeed present, and through His Divine operation He is preparing the man for Heaven; but in order that he may actually enter, the man must actually present himself to the Lord: and as the Lord actually presents Himself to the man, the man will actually receive Him; not, however, as He hung on the cross, but as He is in His glorified Human, in which He is present; and the body of this is Divine good, and the blood is Divine truth. These are given to the man, and through these is the man being regenerated, and is in the Lord, and the Lord in him. . . From these things, when rightly perceived, it is evident that the Holy Supper is as a signature and seal that those who worthily approach it are sons of God.

731<sup>2</sup>. The Lord will prepare for them a house to meet in.

744. They uttered in a low tone a prayer of praise to the Lord.

767. Every Angel looks at the Lord before himself (however) he may turn his body or face . . . This aspect of the Lord . . . derives its origin from the fact that all truth . . . and all good . . . are from the Lord, and are the Lord's with him; and hence every truth is like a mirror in which is the Lord, and every good of love is an image of the Lord.

—<sup>2</sup>. But an evil Spirit perpetually turns himself away from the Lord, and constantly looks to his own love . . .

771<sup>e</sup>. It has been enjoined upon me by the Lord . . .

774. The presence of the Lord is perpetual with every man both evil and good; for without His presence no man lives; but His Advent is solely with those who receive Him, who are they who believe in Him and do His commandments. The perpetual presence of the Lord causes man to become rational, and to have the ability to become spiritual: this is done by the light proceeding from the Lord as a Sun in the Spiritual World, which the man receives in the understanding. But the Advent of the Lord is with him who conjoins heat with that light; that is, love to Truth . . . The mere presence of the Lord, and the consequent illustration of the understanding, may be compared to the presence of the solar light in the world, which, unless conjoined with heat [cannot save] all things upon the Earth from desolation. But the Advent of the Lord may be compared to the advent of heat in the spring-time . . .

773. That this second Advent of the Lord is not in person, but that it is in the Word, which is from Him, and is Himself. Gen.art.

777<sup>2</sup>. From these things it is evident that now also the Lord will appear in the Word. The reason that He will not appear in person, is that since His ascent into Heaven He is in His glorified Human; and He cannot appear to any man in this unless He first opens the eyes of his spirit; and this cannot be done with anyone who is in evils and the derivative falsities. . . Therefore when He manifested Himself to His disciples, He first opened their eyes. Ill. . . That before the resurrection of the Lord the apostles did not see the glorified Human of the Lord with the eyes of the body, but in the spirit . . . is evident from His transfiguration . . . It is therefore in vain to believe that the Lord will appear in person in a cloud of Heaven; but He is to appear in the Word . . .

778. Every man is his own love and his own intelligence . . . In like manner . . . the Lord is Divine love and Divine wisdom . . . the human form is their containant. From these things it can be thought how the Lord is the Word.

779. That this second Advent of the Lord is being effected by means of a man, before whom He has manifested Himself in Person, and whom He has filled with His own Spirit, to teach the doctrines of the New Church from Him by means of the Word. Gen.art.

—<sup>e</sup>. As the Lord cannot manifest Himself in person . . . and yet has foretold that He will come, and found a New Church which is the New Jerusalem, it follows that He will do this by means of a man, who is able not only to receive the doctrines of this Church in the understanding, but also to publish them by the press. That the Lord has manifested Himself before me His servant, and has sent me to this office, and that after doing so He has opened the sight of my spirit, and thus has intromitted me into the Spiritual World . . . I testify in Truth ; likewise, that from the first day of that call, I have not received anything which concerns the doctrines of that Church from any Angel, but from the Lord alone, while I have read the Word.

[T.] 780. For the sake of the end that the Lord might be constantly present, He has unfolded to me the spiritual sense of His Word, in which is Divine truth in its own light, and in this He is continually present. For His presence in the Word is from no other source than by means of the spiritual sense . . .

791. After this Work was finished, the Lord called together His twelve disciples who had followed Him in the world, and the next day He sent them all out into the universal Spiritual World, to preach the Gospel that the Lord Jesus Christ reigns, whose Kingdom shall be for ages of ages . . . This was done on the 19th day of the month of June, in the year 1770.

795<sup>2</sup>. After this time, all who acknowledge the Lord Jesus Christ as God the Redeemer and Saviour, are in Heaven ; and they who do not acknowledge Him are beneath Heaven, and are there instructed ; and those who receive are elevated into Heaven, and those who do not receive are cast down into Hell . . .

892. There is a certain interior perception . . . in those who are led by the Lord in the things which are to be done with them. Ex.

897. Spirits cannot possibly perceive that a man can perceive and be persuaded from the Lord as to what is to be thought, spoken, and done . . .

900. When I told them that . . . I had not done the least thing from myself, but the Lord [had done it], they marvelled still more.

979<sup>o</sup>. It is the Lord who is love [who] thus acts, from inmosts.

985. The Lord Himself is in all things ; nor has He need of mediations when it so pleases Him.

1113. That the Lord rules the universe. Ex.

— . There came a moment of doubt as to whether our Lord is their One Only Lord . . .

1176. I heard a soft sound, angelic and sweet . . . and I was told that so does the Lord rule things . . . inordinate . . . for He acts from what is peaceful ; and therefore the things which are . . . in the circumferences are necessarily reduced into order . . .

1313. That the Lord God alone lives. Ex.

1368. The Lord's having commanded that they should be baptized into the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, involves Himself ; because in Him is the Father, in Him is the Holy Spirit . . .

1440. Seeds (of faith) are innumerable . . . but the universal and one only seed in which all the rest are ordained and subordinated is that the Lord alone rules the universe, and that He is the all in all things of truth and good . . .

1453. Those from the other side of the Earth Venus are worshippers of the Lord. Some came thence and said . . . that they acknowledge and have acknowledged our Lord only ; and that He has appeared to them, and that they believe Him to be with them, and that He walks among them . . . and that they see Him as it were walking among them . . .

1458. (In Mercury) they acknowledge the Lord . . .

1514. (The Spirits of Saturn) say . . . What is more insane . . . than to ask what God they worship, and thus to manifest ignorance of the One Only Lord . . . and that there is no other Lord besides the One Only. They say that the Lord Himself is in company with them . . .

1534. Good Spirits feel as it were outside of themselves that the Lord is, so that faith in Him is circumfused around . . .

1535. In the interior Heaven they acknowledge the Lord in almost a similar manner . . .

1536. In the more interior Heaven there is a certain sense, by which sense they know that the Lord is their God . . .

1537. In the inmost Heaven there is a certain thought, thus more interior, that the Lord rules the universe . . .

1538. Thus proceed from the Lord the operations of faith in Him . . .

1542. (In Mars) they adore our Lord alone, because He is good itself.

1558. It is wonderful that so few (Christians) seek the Lord there, while . . . the worshippers of men and even of devils seek those whom they had worshipped . . . This is a very manifest sign that the Lord is the God who rules the universe. 4593<sup>2</sup>.

1601. I said to them . . . that it is sufficient to know that which the Lord has taught ; namely, that He is one, and that he who sees the Son sees the Father, etc.

1608. It follows that the Lord alone must be in all and in each thing of man. Ex.

1628. They ought to know that all their endeavour must be of the Lord, (otherwise) it is nothing but sin. (See ENDEAVOUR, here.)

1647. That the things which I have learned in representations, visions, and from speech with Spirits and Angels, are from the Lord alone. Ex.

— . Thus have I been instructed, consequently by no Spirit, nor Angel, but by the Lord alone, from whom is all truth and good . . .

bodies from the Lord through the Grand Man. How the Lord's life is infused into the evil also. Ex.

1712. Whatever inflows from the Lord, inflows into the universal Grand Man, with variety according to the functions . . .

1758. That the Lord knows and disposes all things in the universal Heaven, and in all the earth, and the most singular things. Ex.

1966. That evil Spirits cannot be with those who believe in the Lord. Ex.

2012a. That evil is attributed to the Lord. Ex.

2062. That each and all things are so ruled by the Lord that there may be indefinite things in each idea and affection. Ex.

2099. That a man and a Spirit must necessarily think and speak the things which the Lord permits and concedes. Ex.

2115. That it can never be denied that the harmonies of the interior Heaven come from . . . the Lord. Ex.

2161. That there is nothing good except from the Lord.—Spirits torture themselves . . . how to understand that no one can do anything good except from the Lord . . .

—e. The Lord gives both the thought of good and the will of good . . .

2163. That the Lord provides, sees, perceives, and rules each and all things which come forth in Heaven and on earth. Ex.

2267<sup>2</sup>. Hence anyone may conclude that the Lord knows the most singular things in the universal Heaven, and also in the human race . . .

2296. That the permission, leave, good-pleasure, and will of the Lord are in all things which take place; but in application to the subjects. Ex.

2303. That ideas, when separated, are associated by the Lord with many other ideas which serve for man's happiness. Ex.

2306a. That a man or a Spirit is led into good by the Lord in the same proportion as he receives from the Lord. Ex.

2321. That the Lord rules the universe. Ex. 3054, Ex.

2322. Such a state was induced by the Lord that there was a certain perception as it were of innumerable persons endeavouring and acting, which lasted more than an hour . . . and meanwhile it was manifestly perceived how the most minute things proceeded in their order, so that among so many . . . not one could have opened his mouth or done the least thing, except in that series, and in that order, in which it was pleasing to the Lord, so distinct were all things, and so distinctly did they proceed; a most manifest sign that the Lord rules the universe, and a more manifest one I have not yet perceived.

2325. That neither man, Spirit, nor Angel, thinks, wills, or does anything from himself . . . and yet that the Lord is not the cause of evil. Ex.

2329. As there is no life except one, to wit, that of the Lord . . . it may come into doubt as to whence come the objects of the thoughts . . . and therefore it is replied that it is the Lord who loves the preservation of all and of each who are in the Heavens and on earth, and who pities them . . .

2474. Margin. These things have been this day confirmed in general from Heaven, the Lord being as it were seen.

2563. That with him who has faith in the Lord, the Lord is present, and consults for him in each and all things. Ex.

2591. That the Lord has led the human race since the creation of the first man. Ex.

—, I received the reply by a spiritual idea . . . that (before the Grand Man had been formed) the first man, and those first born, were led by no other than the Lord alone. For the Lord is the all in all things, nor is there any endeavour in each thing in Heaven and the Spiritual World except from the Lord, before man was born, as after he was born . . .

2592. That the Lord preserves man from every evil. Ex.

2663. There was such simplicity in his speech that I knew he could speak with the Lord . . .

2688. That he who lives in faith in the Lord, thus in the Lord, cannot possibly receive violence from the evil, because he lives in the order of natural, spiritual, and celestial things. Ex.

2713. That the universe is not ruled by the Lord according to the fallacies and phantasies of men . . . Ex.

2714. That this is the Truth—that the Lord rules the universe by an infinite Providence . . .

2990. That the Lord appears to many in the other life, in a form suitable to them.—It has sometimes happened to me that I supposed no otherwise than that the Lord Himself was present and had spoken . . . But the case is this. It is the Lord who then appears here, through others, who are then not themselves; and the same suppose in like manner that they are the Lord; which thought inflows into the thought of him with whom he is, he being nothing, and the Lord then appears through him, in his form; for his form still remains; as I could manifestly apperceive this day; for the Lord does not will to completely change the form or nature of another, and so to appear through him. Thus, also, does the Lord speak through another.

3049. (The Spirits of Jupiter) did not want me to write that the Lord is Man and at the same time God, because they do not know what God is, but what the Highest is; and it is sufficient when they believe Him to be the Highest. They greatly love . . . to hear that the One Only Lord is the only Man; and that all others have it from Him that they are men.

3114. The evil cast the blame on the Lord . . .

3136. On a Spirit who tried to find another Lord, and another Heaven.

3177. That the Lord rules the human race in the most singular things. Ex.

3239<sup>e</sup>. They who are in humiliation have now confessed, with some weeping, that the Lord is their only Lord . . .

3314a. I spoke with (the Most Ancients) about the Lord. They said that they cannot speak about the Lord. For their ideas were celestial, and in the word Lord there is a spiritual idea. I also [spoke] about other ideas by which the Lord is expressed, as 'Jesus' and 'Christ'; and they could not perceive this either, because the ideas had been covered with natural things, because they are names. But when He was represented as the Mediator and Regenerator . . . they acknowledged, because then there were celestial ideas . . . They said that they had expected the Lord to come who would save the universal human race; but these were only those who had lived when the Most Ancient Church had begun to decline . . .

3355. (This offspring of the Most Ancient Church) represented the Lord to themselves . . . as an old man with a gray beard . . .

3358. (The cruelties exercised by the Antediluvians against the Lord.) This is what is said about the temptations of the Lord in the wilderness—that He fought with wild beasts . . . 3366.

3435. (A preacher who thought) that the Lord alone is filthy, because He took away all the filthiness from the human race . . .

3476. On those who are insane from the fact that (they inquire) what the Lord was doing from eternity, before the creation of the world; and who thence infer an origin of the Lord also. (See T.31<sup>3</sup>. D.4204.)

3568. That those who are not in faith cannot even name the Lord.—They tried, but could not . . . for they desired [to do it] from proprium. But when such reflection is not given, they are allowed to do it, as is every man. For to name the Lord from proprium is to take His name in vain . . .

3569. Certain Spirits were thinking that it is a wonderful thing that in the other life they do not at once come into a state of faith in the Lord, seeing that there they know and believe that the Lord rules the universe. Ex.

3628. The Lord alone makes provision that man may not come into such open insanities: and to prevent him from falling into such things the Lord has commanded that he should have no care for the morrow . . . They who are in and who incline to such things can never be withdrawn thence except through faith in the Lord. They who are in faith are delivered by the Lord, however they may be infested by such things.

3657<sup>e</sup>. They are not permitted to name the Lord, but Christ.

3681. Hence it is evident how the Lord sees all their machinations, and renders aid in a moment; and also how He guards man while asleep.

3739. How truths and goods are excited by the Lord.

3775. (The Quakers) do not care for the Lord . . . As also the Catholics acknowledge the Lord and preach Him, whereas in the other life they are very hostile to Him; so also the Quakers; and therefore in the other life they know nothing about the Lord, and are rebels against the Lord, vaunting themselves as the Holy Spirit. 3793.

3958. On the Lord.—I said to Spirits that no idea can be perceived about the Lord, nor are any words applicable except the Eternal and the Infinite . . .

4095. Concerning the influx of life from the Lord, and His Providence in the most singular things. Ex.

4095a. (The infinity of the Lord shown from the indefinite things there are in human and angelic ideas.)

4125<sup>a</sup>. Therefore the Lord alone knows what a man has thought and done before he became a Spirit.

4131<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is evident that all good and truth are from the Lord. 4241.

4132. Thus the Lord alone (is in a state of wakefulness).

4137. In proportion [as anyone acts] from the Lord, what is good and true [is produced].

4138. It was perceived that no misfortunes . . . can happen to a man who is with the Lord; for the evil Spirits [who] were present when any horse threatened evil, were suddenly cast down.

4205. On the hatred of the evil against the Lord.—Those who in the world had not had hatred against the Lord, but had lived in the love of self and of the world, that is, in hatred against the neighbour, and who had not even thought about the Lord; in the other life have deadly hatred against the Lord. A cause of the hatred is, also, that they notice there that Heaven is the Lord's, and that the Kingdom is the Lord's; and as such cannot be admitted into Heaven . . . they attribute this to the Lord . . .

—°. (What is meant by to be constantly thinking about the Lord.) Ex.

4338. That the Lord is the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. Ex.

4432. Nothing is more common with Spirits than to think that all the fault, nay, the penalty, and thus evil, is from the Lord, because He permits it. I spoke to them about it—that . . .

4441. On a simple idea about the Lord.—There were some who were in a simple idea about the Lord—that the Lord rules each and all things. The simplicity of the idea cannot be described . . . The simplicity consisted also in this—that the Lord was as the Lord to them, without thought about the Divine, the Human, or the Holy, but solely of one. From this idea also flowed this—[that] He rules all things, and each thing, and the least things of the thoughts; and that they were in bliss when they were being ruled by Him, and thus were in safety. They were many . . . The reason (of their bliss) was that they had previously heard so many disputes and ratiocinations about various things with the Lord, and about faith in Him, so that this was to them as a sweet rest . . .

4442. On a sublime idea about the Lord.—There were . . . angelic ones who were in a sublime idea, because they had thought, apperceived, and heard so many things about the Divine, the Human, and the Holy of the Lord; and therefore I was let into a sublime idea that these three were one, which idea cannot be described, because it is possible solely in the other life . . . The Divine was for the celestial; the Human for the rest who were beneath—and also the Divine, but as applicable to them—; and the proceeding Holy was all the sphere thence, because there is nothing in the Lord except the Divine Holy. These things were represented by an angelic idea, and thus as a one applicable to the whole Heaven, in which idea they had their bliss.

4443. From the former idea, and from this one, it was perceived how blessed it is to have faith of the heart that the Lord rules the universe; and that this is the principal of faith.

4449. (Sirens) carry with them the persuasion as if the Lord were there.

4529°. They preached the power of the Lord.

4549. That from the Lord there is nothing but what is good. Ex.

4551. On the Council at which the distinction was made between the Divine and the Human of the Lord.—They said that they . . . had concluded this principally for the reason that the papal chair would not have subsisted if they had acknowledged the Lord as one with the Father . . . They said that they knew otherwise from the Scripture, but that for this reason they could not accept it; and they said further that in their hearts they had not believed in the Lord, but that they had not dared to publish this . . . That in this way they could dominate in the Heavens and on earth, they had from the Word, in that to the Lord has been given all Power in the Heavens and on earth . . .

4588. That all things inflow; goods and truths from the Lord. . . I was always in the sphere that all good and truth are from the Lord; and the opposite sphere, which assailed, could not effect a whit. In such a sphere are those Spirits kept who are being initiated and confirmed in this truth . . .

4605. Besides, the externals of man, in like manner as his internals, are continually directed by the Lord. The direction of the Lord is in primes and in ultimates; thence flow mediates in their order . . .

4629°. The universal Heaven in general, and the Lord in particular, inflow into every Angel. Hence he has the human form . . .

4712. From these things it may be evident how the case is with faith in the Lord. With those who believe in the Lord according to the truths of faith, the Lord is in presence; that is, He is at hand, and has His abode with them. Whereas with those who do not believe, the Lord is absent; because He cannot be seen in thought, nor Known in affection. Concerning these, the Lord says that He does not Know them, because they do not Know Him.

4715. Whenever I touched the iron tongs . . . it was apperceived . . . that they wanted to strike the Lord therewith. Ex.

4724. Hence it was evident how the case is with faith in the Lord—that the Lord appears to those who believe and affirm, and is conjoined with them through love or charity; for there is no faith, thus no appearance of the Lord, unless there is love or charity, because this receives the faith . . .

4725. The Lord can indeed appear even to those who are not in love, thus who are in persuasive faith; but it is an imaginative, and not a real, appearance.

4763°. (Charles XII.) decided to blot out the name of the Lord . . .

4772°. Those within the Church . . . do not acknowledge the Lord as God, because He was a man; when yet those who were in the most ancient times . . . worshipped Jehovah under a human form . . . and in like manner do the Angels who are the wisest . . . and moreover the Lord appears to them under that form . . . This has been inscribed from Heaven on the nature of the nations outside of Europe, and also on some within Europe . . . As soon as these hear about the Lord, they run to the place, believe, and seize upon the doctrine about Him . . .

4774. (On the New Church.) Then one of the Angels from the Lord . . . instructed them about the Lord, saying that there is one God, and He the Lord . . . 4775-

4775°. (These gentiles) marvelled that in the tract where the Church is, few of the learned want to acknowledge the Lord as God, for the sole reason that He was a man . . .

[D.] 4779. I was afterwards brought back to the region where were those who were in knowledges . . . and it was apperceived that all there could not possibly apprehend that the Lord can be the One Only God, for the sole reason that He was a man . . .

4781. Why the Lord was born (on our Earth). Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. Besides, when the heavenly doctrine concerning the Lord is known in one Earth, the rest can know it when they become Spirits and Angels.

4792. For that which receives the Lord is the Divine itself, or the holy of the Lord, with man, thus good from the Lord; and the Lord can be conjoined with a man no otherwise . . . than in what is His own received by the man . . .

4817. That the Lord can be honoured and acknowledged by the worst devils, if Power is promised them. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it was evident that the love and honour of the Lord with the Moravians was from the love of self . . .

4824. Therefore Paul was not permitted to take one . . . doctrine from the Lord . . . but he took all things from himself.

4829. How the case would have been if the Lord had not come into the world.—There was one who was thinking . . . that all things would still have flowed according to order if the Lord had not assumed the Human . . . and therefore the Angels under whose auspices were those who are being led by the Lord removed themselves a little, and thus there was no influx of the Lord to him, but he was then in a like order to that in which he would be if not protected by the Lord . . . He then began to rage like one insane, with a sword in his hand, thrusting . . . and in like manner did some others who were in his company, and who after these furies fell down as if they were dead, and when resuscitated raged again in like manner. By this it was shown what would be the state of things if the Lord did not protect them all through His Divine Human.

4831. I was brought to the region where are the Mohammedans . . . and was kept in the idea concerning the Lord that the Father is in Him, and the Holy Spirit from Him, thus that there is one God; and then all who were there were in the same idea, and completely acknowledged it; and this through the whole tract . . .

4845<sup>2</sup>. All things of the whole body . . . are organic forms completely [adapted] to the reception of the life of faith from love; and in proportion to the Divine love in a man . . . his organics are receptions of life, consequently are lives. This was most perfectly the case in the Lord, because the Divine love itself, which was the esse of His life, formed the body after its own likeness, thus for the reception of it, insomuch that all things were forms of the Divine love; and as it was made Divine, they are the Divine love . . .

4847<sup>4</sup>. Those from the Christian world who from principles received and confirmed in the world deny the Lord, have scarcely any life. They are quite silly.

4850. On turning to the Lord, and on turning from the Lord. Ex.

4876. For they make the Lord a mere man . . . In their prayers and preachings . . . they pass by the Lord and speak to the Father; when yet they know that no one can come to the Father except through the Lord; and that the Lord is the Way, and the Mediator; and that the Father hears no one except mediately through the Lord . . . and also that without the Lord there is no salvation. They know that the Lord has all Power in the Heavens and on earth; and also that the Father is in Him, and one with Him; but they explain these things in a different way. 5378.

4914. They pour forth from themselves a sphere as if it were from the Lord; for they had believed themselves to be His vicars.

4918. They were told that they have the sphere of the Lord around them, and that they are within that sphere, together with their pride, hatreds, revenges, and the like; but that the Angels have the sphere of the Lord in themselves . . . 4955.

4972. They said . . . that the Lord has no Power in the Heavens, because He has given it to the successors of Peter . . . 5630. 5650. 5790b.

5080. They associate a certain devil . . . whom they say is the Lord . . .

5513a<sup>2</sup>. (A Spirit of that Earth in the universe) asked me what God I worshipped. I said that I worshipped the Lord. They replied that they also worship the Lord . . .

5568. (The Babylonians said) that the Lord inflows through them, because in this way He is omnipresent . . . It was found that they were most inveterate enemies of the Lord, and that they persecute all those who adore the Lord if they do not give them everything they have . . . With them the worship of the Lord is a means to such wickedness.

5618<sup>e</sup>. Instead of 'Moses,' 'Aaron,' and 'David' (in the Word there) there was 'the Lord.'

5669a<sup>e</sup>. When thinking about the Lord (the Re-formed) think of Him no otherwise than as of a common man . . . From which they saw that good Mohammedans in their hearts think better about the Lord than Christians do. 5742. 5744.

5743. Therefore the Lord was seen to descend from the Sun as in a bright cloud. (Continued under LAST JUDGMENT.)

—<sup>e</sup>. It was said that the Lord underwent temptations from His first adolescence even to the last of His life . . .

5747. For they who do not acknowledge the Divine of the Lord . . . at heart make nothing of spiritual things . . . They speak about God, but they do not care for Him; and they recede at any saying of any evil person, especially at the first temptation.

5765c. (The Babylonians) considered the Lord no otherwise than as a common man . . .

5766. Their hostility to the Lord.

5778<sup>e</sup>. It was observed that in proportion as a man acts from proprium—that is, without a living faith that all good is from the Lord—nothing can inflow from the Lord . . .

5786. When (the Babylonians) look at anyone who worships the Lord, they become as if insane, and endeavour to destroy him . . . They cannot endure his sphere . . .

5793. (In order to live as a Christian) two things are requisite:—1. To believe in the Lord; that is, to believe that all good and truth are from Him.

5798. That stone (which the evil did not see and fell over) signified the Lord and His Divine Human.

5807. That the Lord has betaken Himself to the gentiles. Ex.

5814. (Those in external holiness) were explored as to what they had thought about the Lord; and it was found that they had never thought about His Divine, but solely about the Human, as if He were only a man like another; and that His Divine consisted in the fact that He was loved by the Father.

5819. All those are preserved in Heaven who in the world had acknowledged the Divine of the Lord, and had lived well; most especially those who had acknowledged the Divine Human; but the rest, who had not acknowledged the Divine of the Lord, and many who had thought no otherwise about the Lord than as of a common man, were . . . cast down. Many have wanted to acknowledge the Divine of the Lord in the other life who had not acknowledged it in the world, but in vain; they did so in the mouth and not in the heart.

5840. (The ideas of the Babylonians about the Lord refuted from the Athanasian Creed, which they acknowledge.) 5852. 5924.

5881. It was perceived that a man in the Christian world cannot possibly be in the life of charity unless when he is thinking about the Lord he thinks about His Divine. To think about His Divine only when one is in what is doctrinal, and not when he is thinking outside of it, is not to think about the Divine of the Lord. Nor does he think about the Divine of the Lord when he is praying to the Father for the sake of the Son; he then does not have the Lord in the idea of the Divine. It was also perceived that everyone who when thinking about the Lord thinks about His Divine, is in the life of charity; for the Lord leads him.

5898. On the sphere of the Divine of the Lord.—There were . . . many who had made a confederacy to destroy those who are protected by the Lord . . . But it was then apperceived that those whom the Lord protects were encompassed with the sphere of the Divine of the Lord. This sphere evolved itself towards those who had made the attack, and some of them ventured to enter it, but they were suddenly smitten with such anxiety of heart that they . . . threw themselves down on the earth and writhed like serpents. I heard them crying that they would never do such things.

5927. On the Lord.—I spoke to the Angels about the Lord—that the Divine was His from eternity . . . whence it follows that He was not conceived from the Father, but that He was conceived from His own Divine; and thus that in the world He could not be called the Son of God, but His own Son.

5933. No one can become spiritual unless he acknowledges the Divine of the Lord. Everyone must acknowledge his God in order that he may be able to be conjoined with Heaven; for the Divine of the Lord is what makes Heaven; and therefore this is the first of the Church—to acknowledge the Divine of the Lord, and that without Him there is no salvation.

5934. That the Lord alone does all things in the Heavens and on earth . . . There were some who had attributed to men the power of the Lord in ultimates, to those who were in faith in Him . . . But it was shown that the Lord alone does it, and man nothing whatever. Moreover, He has infilled . . . many who are in evil and in contrary faith with His Divine in ultimates, and these did in like manner . . . From which they believed that all can be saved, even those who are in Hell; but it was said that they cannot, because they were then not in freedom to think, will, and act; thus not in their own life. It was shown that the Divine power of the Lord in ultimates could infl those who were in knowledge about the Lord, even if they were in a contrary faith; but those who are not in knowledge cannot receive. Hence it was evident that the omnipotence of the Lord alone is what does it; and that it is His Divine in ultimates, because He made the whole of His Human Divine, even to the ultimates.

5941a. That they who acknowledge the Father alone, and pass by the Lord, are determined to the loves of the body and of the world. Ex.

— Some look to a certain one above themselves in . . . the zenith, as it were a man, whom they say is the Father; but these also are in like manner devoid of determination; and therefore those who have acted well are turned a little to the Lord as a Sun, or as a Moon . . . They who are turned to the Lord are sometimes remitted into the idea of God as over head, and then they are not in intelligence . . .

5946. They said that in this great tract (of Africa) all worship the Lord, and that they are being instructed by many who communicate with the Angels . . . by interior perception . . .

5976. That all the evil are against the Lord according to the degree of the evil; but not against the Father. Ex.

5978. Concerning the Lord—that He has been completely rejected in the Christian world.—It was seen that they inquired with fury where the Lord was; and, supposing that He was here, or there, they rushed thither, and dragged forth some Spirit whom they believed to be the Lord, and endeavoured to treat him miserably, and strove to murder him. This they did with fury, and for long. And afterwards they inquired where there was anyone who acknowledged the Lord, and him who said that he did they wanted to murder; and so they went on from one to another. Thus was it shown that Christians are at this day worse than the Jews.

5983. How much the love of exercising command is against the Lord. Des.

6021. On the Lord with the Mohammedans. Ex.

6025. On those who deny the Divine of the Lord. Ex.

[D.] 6049. All those who have not believed in the Lord by acknowledging His Divine . . . in the other life think in what is material, and thus cannot think spiritually, that is, abstractedly from space, time, and persons . . .

6055<sup>1</sup>. No one can be in conjugal love . . . unless he acknowledges the Lord; for its highest cause is from the marriage of the Lord with . . . the Church.

6080. On the influx of the Lord into the honours and gains of man. The Lord is always present with man, and is urgent for good and truth to be received; but with those who have not shunned evils, this influx is turned into their Own loves . . . and thus the Lord leads the men of the world through their Own affections.

6082<sup>e</sup>. The Lord was born 605 (years after the Captivity).

6101<sup>2</sup>. It is not my work, but that of the Lord, who has willed to reveal the nature of Heaven and Hell, and the nature of the life of man after death, and concerning the Last Judgment, and also that theological things do not transcend [the human understanding].

D.Min. 4682<sup>e</sup>. Such a fury of insanity . . . against the Lord . . .

4692. The Lord foresees the form in which man from freedom wants (to dispose his life); but He determines it . . .

4702. The Lord is especially present (at the resurrection of the dead).

4744. That all life is from the Lord. Ex.

4831. The Lord was seen by me in a dream with the face and form in which He was when in the world. It was such that it was full interiorly; and was so that He could rule the whole Heaven within. There was a certain person not far from Him at whom He looked; and He then raised His eyes a little, and thus knew whom and of what quality he was. And He often as it were slept with His eyes when He was inwardly in Himself. When I awaked I also saw Him obscurely, and it was said that such had been His appearance. In a word, He was full of Heaven and the Divine.

E. 10. For he who acknowledges the Lord, and does not at the same time acknowledge the Divine in His Human, does not acknowledge the Lord . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The acknowledgment of the Lord is the life or soul itself of all the doctrine in the Church.

16<sup>2</sup>. For the Lord is nearer to an Angel, Spirit, or man, in the proportion that they interiorly love Him. Ex.

19. 'John' = the Lord as to doctrine. 45.

— . All these (Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, David, Elijah, Elisha, John the Baptist, Peter, and the rest of the apostles), in the supreme sense, = the Lord.

25<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is evident how the Lord is in man.

30. 'The Lord' (in Heaven) = Divine truth united to Divine good.

32. By 'God and the Father' is meant the Lord alone.

33. That Divine good and Divine truth are from the Lord to eternity. Sig. and Ex.

50. They were brought to places which were signifi-cative . . . and the Lord Himself went to like places for the same reason; as into Galilee, to Tyre and Sidon, to Jerusalem, upon the Mount of Olives there, and . . . when an infant, into Egypt.

52. The Christian Church does indeed acknowledge the Divine of the Lord, but not the Divine Human . . .

78<sup>3</sup>. When they saw Jehovah, they were encompassed with a column of Spirits . . . So also has the Lord been sometimes seen by me.

80. The Lord is present with all in the universe, but more nearly or remotely according to the reception of good through truths with them from Him; for it is good in which the Lord is present with an Angel, Spirit, or man . . .

83. (For) the Lord is called 'dead' when there are no longer faith and love to Him; for the Lord lives with those who are in love and faith in Him; but He does not live with those who are not in love and faith . . .

86. In proportion as the Lord is received in faith and love, in the same proportion He is in the man; and in proportion as He is in a man, in the same proportion He removes evils, and thus the Hells and eternal death . . . —<sup>2</sup>, Ex.

102<sup>2</sup>. In the Spiritual World . . . the name 'Lord,' and the name 'Jesus Christ,' are not uttered as on earth; but instead of these names there is a name formed from the idea of all things which are known and believed about Him, which idea is from all things of love and faith in Him. The reason is that these things in the complex are the Lord with them; for the Lord is with everyone in the goods of love and of faith which are from Him. As this is so, the quality of everyone there as to love and faith in the Lord is at once Known, provided he utters in a spiritual name 'the Lord,' or 'Jesus Christ.' And hence also it is that those who are not in any love or in any faith in Him, cannot name Him; that is, form any spiritual name about Him.

105<sup>e</sup>. But it is necessary for those who are within the Church to believe in the Lord; and, when they are thinking about Him, to think about His Divine in the Human . . .

110<sup>3</sup>. The good of love to the Lord is the Lord Himself, because the Lord is in the good of His love with man, Spirit, and Angel . . . Hence it may be evident that all things which the Church teaches from the Word, regard the Lord and love to Him as the end ad quem.

112<sup>3</sup>. Without (Knowledges), the Lord cannot dwell with and lead a man. Ex.

114. The Lord is said to be rejected when He is not approached and worshipped; and also when He is approached and worshipped solely as to His Human . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Hence it may be evident that the Lord has been rejected by those within the Church who approach the Father immediately . . . for these cannot but think of the Human of the Lord as of the human of another man . . .

114<sup>7</sup>. Hence it may be evident how it is to be understood that the Lord has been at this day rejected by those who are within the Church. Ex.

— . To think in this way about the Lord is to reject Him . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. I once spoke to Spirits who . . . in the world had been of the Papal religion; and I asked them whether when they were in the world they had ever thought about the Divine of the Lord. They said that they had sometimes thought of it when they were in doctrine with their sight, and that they had then acknowledged His Divine to be equal to the Divine of the Father; but that when they were outside of doctrine, they had thought solely of His Human . . .

119<sup>2</sup>. For no others are saved than those who believe in the Lord; and he who believes in the Lord in the world believes in Him after death.

131. The Lord who alone fights in temptations. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. That all approach to acknowledge the Lord alone is closed against him who does not live a life of love. Sig.

137<sup>3</sup>. In the other life all these blaze with such hatred against those who approach the Lord alone, that it cannot be described . . . The reason is that all who are in the Hells are against the Lord; and all who are in the Heavens are with the Lord; and those who are of the Church, and do not acknowledge the Divine of the Lord in His Human, act as one with the Hells . . . Ill.

—<sup>4</sup>. That all these would be hated for the Lord's sake, the Lord Himself has foretold. Ill.

151<sup>2</sup>. After death . . . all men are turned to their own loves, and therefore those who have worshipped the Divine under a human form are turned to the Lord . . . But those who have not (done so) are turned to the loves of their natural man . . . thus backwards from the Lord . . .

183. The Lord from whom are all the truths of Heaven and the Church. Sig. and Ex.

196. For the Lord is in His own truths with a man . . .

200<sup>5</sup>. If it be assumed and acknowledged as a doctrine that the Lord is one with the Father, and that His Human is Divine from the Divine in Himself, light will be seen in each thing of the Word . . . But, on the other hand, if it be assumed and acknowledged as a doctrine that the Divine of the Father is different from the Divine of the Lord, nothing in the Word will be seen in light. Ex.

209<sup>2</sup>. For the Lord inflows into the love with a man, and through it into the truths . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. All the power which Angels and men have is from the Lord; and in proportion as they receive the Lord, in the same proportion they have power . . . Therefore in proportion as a man has been conjoined with the Lord through love, in the same proportion he has power.

213. The Lord is present in the affection or love of a man . . .

220. The Lord is above the Heavens . . .

242<sup>8</sup>. Man cannot be withdrawn from his proprium, unless, as to the things which are of life, he looks to the Lord. Through this sight he is conjoined with Heaven . . .

248. 'I stand at the door and knock' = the perpetual presence of the Lord . . . and His perpetual will to conjoin Himself with man, and to communicate to him the happinesses of Heaven. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. There are two things which are in the freedom of man from the perpetual presence of the Lord, and from His perpetual will to conjoin Himself with him. The First . . . is that man has the opportunity and the faculty to think well about Him and the neighbour . . . To think well about the Lord and the neighbour is not from man . . . but is from the Lord . . . whereas to think evilly about the Lord and the neighbour is from man himself . . . The Second thing . . . is that he can abstain from evils; and in proportion as he does abstain, the Lord opens the door and enters . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. It matters not that in the beginning man does not know that it is from the Lord, because he does not perceive the influx, provided he afterwards believes from the Word that all the good of love and truth of faith are from the Lord; for the Lord operates these things although the man knows it not; and this from His perpetual presence . . . In a word, the Lord wills that man should abstain from evils and do goods from himself, provided he believes that the faculty of so doing is not from man but from the Lord; for the Lord wills that there be reception with man; and reception is not given in any other way than by man's doing as from himself, although it is from the Lord; for there is thus given with man what is reciprocal, which is his new will.

250<sup>9</sup>. The Lord is always present with good and truth with man, and endeavours to open his spiritual mind—which is 'the door' which the Lord wills to open—and to gift him with celestial love and faith; for He says, 'I stand at the door and knock.' But this endeavour or this perpetual will of the Lord is not apperceived by man; for man supposes that he does what is good from himself, and that this endeavour or this will is in him; and it is sufficient then that he acknowledge from the doctrine of the Church that all good is from God . . .

251. The reason the Lord is conjoined with those who receive Him in heart and life, is that the Lord enters or inflows into the life. He enters or inflows solely with those who are in the life of spiritual love . . . When this love makes the life of a man, then the Lord enters or inflows through it into the truths of faith, and causes the man to see or know them. Hence man has the spiritual affection of truth. It is a very great mistake that the Lord enters or inflows . . . into faith separated from charity with a man . . . Hence it is evident through what way is admitted the Divine which proceeds from the Lord; namely, by the way of the heart, that is, of love.

254<sup>2</sup>. The reason a comparison is made between the men of the Church and the Lord Himself. Ex. and Ill.

— . The Lord spoke of His conjunction with man as of His conjunction with the Father . . . because the Lord is not conjoined with the proprium of man, but with His own with him. The Lord removes the proprium of man, and gives from His own, and dwells therein.

—<sup>3</sup>. The Lord Himself is not in Heaven, but is above the Heavens, and appears to those in the Heavens as a Sun . . .

[E.] 267. The Lord as to the Last Judgment. Sig. and Ex.

272<sup>3</sup>. After the last temptation on the cross, the Lord put on the Divine good of the Divine love, and thus united the Divine Human to the Divine Itself which was in Him.

286<sup>2</sup>. 'The Lord'=the Divine good of the Divine love; and 'God,' the Divine truth of the Divine wisdom.

290. Acknowledgment . . . that from the Lord are all things of Heaven and the Church. Sig. and Ex.

291. Humiliation and the acknowledgment then that eternal life is from the Lord. Sig. and Ex. 460.

292. And that all good is from the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

293. 'Thou art worthy O Lord'=the merit and justice which belong to the Divine Human of the Lord. Ex.

294<sup>16</sup>. The presence of the Lord with everyone with His Divine truth, from which are life and light. Sig.

297. The Lord as to omnipotence and as to omniscience. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For when the Judgment is being thus effected, the Lord is present with all, and from Divine love wills to save all, and also turns and brings all to Himself . . .

299<sup>2</sup>. It treats in this chapter of the fact that the Lord alone knows the states of life of all in general and of each in particular, and that no one does so besides Him.

306. This One is the Lord alone . . .

309. That the Lord did these things from His Own power, is known from the Word; but as few know it, I will say something about it. The Lord did this from the Divine which was in Him from conception, which was to Him as the soul is to a man from his father; and the soul of everyone operates through the body . . . The Divine which was in Him from conception was His own Divine . . . Ill.

313<sup>3</sup>. The Church of the Lord is diffused through the whole world, but the inmost of it is where the Lord is known . . .

315. The Lord Himself is indeed acknowledged in the Church, and also His Divine; but as to the Human as a mere man . . .

324<sup>2</sup>. Celestial good . . . is the good of love to the Lord from the Lord . . . for this good is immediately from the Lord; and the Lord is in this good as in what is His own with the Angels, insomuch that whether you say that the Lord is in them and they in the Lord, or that the Lord is with them in this good, and that they are in the Lord when in this good, it is the same thing.

328. When the Lord is denied, He is as it were killed with them, and they are thereby separated from the Divine; for they who deny the Lord—that is, His Divine—completely separate themselves from the Divine; for He is the God of the universe; and He is one with the Father; and the Father is in Him and He in the Father; and no one comes to the Father except through Him . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. Hence evils can no longer rise up with those who acknowledge the Lord, and receive Him—that is, the Divine truth proceeding from Him—in faith and life; and who thus are conjoined with the Lord.

—<sup>6</sup>. I will say . . . how conjunction is effected through these things. The primary thing is to acknowledge the Lord, His Divine in the Human, and His omnipotence in saving the human race; for through this acknowledgment man is conjoined with the Divine, because the Divine is nowhere else; for the Father is there; for the Father is in Him and He in the Father . . . and therefore those who look to another Divine beside Him or at His side—as those are wont to do who pray to the Father to have mercy for the sake of the Son—turn aside from the way, and adore the Divine elsewhere than in Him; and besides they then do not think at all about the Divine of the Lord, but solely about the Human, which however cannot be separated . . .

331<sup>9</sup>. 'Dominion' is said of good, and 'kingdom' of truth; and therefore the Lord is called 'Lord' from Divine good, and 'King' from Divine truth. 336<sup>5</sup>. 340<sup>4</sup>.

349. Humiliation and acknowledgment from the heart of all who are in truths from good, that the Lord alone lives, and that from Him alone is eternal life. Sig. and Ex. —<sup>7</sup>, Ill.

375<sup>16</sup>. For when the Lord was in the world, He was Divine truth itself as to the Human, and He was the Divine good itself of the Divine love as to the very esse of His life, which with man is called the soul from the father; for He was conceived from Jehovah.

376<sup>3</sup>. Hence also it is that even after this no one will ever be admitted into the spiritual sense of the Word unless he is in genuine truths from good; and no one can be in genuine truths from good unless at heart he acknowledges the Lord alone as the God of Heaven and earth; for all good and the derivative truth are from Him.

382. The Lord appears to everyone according to his quality . . . 539<sup>4</sup>.

392<sup>4</sup>. The reason 'the Testimony'=the Lord, is that the Lord testifies concerning Himself with all who receive the testification, who are they who live a life of love to the Lord and a life of charity towards the neighbour . . . The reason is that (this) life opens the interior mind by the influx of light from Heaven . . . for the Lord loves everyone . . . and therefore where that life is received, there the Lord is present, and is conjoined with him . . .

394. 'How long O Lord'=sighs to the Lord.

—<sup>2</sup>. In the Spiritual World all those who are interiorly evil . . . cannot at all endure anyone who adores the Lord . . . I have often wondered that it is so, because in the world the same people had endured preachings about the Lord . . . and had also spoken doctrinally on the subject, and yet when they become Spirits they cannot endure it. But the reason is that this is implanted in the evil in which they are, for in their evil there is enmity, nay, hatred, against the Lord, and also against those who are led by the Lord . . . but this enmity and hatred lie concealed in their spirit, and therefore when they become Spirits, this antipathy or opposition comes forth—prodit. Examp.

401<sup>3</sup>. As the Lord (at His transfiguration) was seen in

His Divine, His face appeared as the sun, and His vestments as the light . . . Similarly does the Lord appear in Heaven before the Angels when He presents Himself as present with them, but He then appears outside the Sun; and therefore He was similarly seen by John when he was in the spirit (Rev. i.) . . . In like manner when the Lord was seen by John as 'an Angel' (Rev. x. i.).

—<sup>10</sup>. It is to be known that when the Last Judgment is being executed, the Lord appears in the Heavens in much greater radiance and resplendence than at other times, for the reason that the Angels are then to be more strongly protected. Sig.

405<sup>14</sup>. When the good of love is being treated of, the Lord is called in the Word 'the Lord.'

—<sup>24</sup>. The reason the Lord when in the world was in representatives and significatives, was in order that He might be in the ultimates of Heaven and the Church, and at the same time in their primes, and that He might thus rule and dispose ultimates from primes, and all the intermediates from primes through ultimates. Representatives and significatives are in ultimates.

409<sup>2</sup>. The Lord is called 'blind and deaf,' because He is as if He does not see and perceive the sins of men; for He leads men gently; for He bends and does not break; in this way withdrawing from evils and leading to good; and therefore He does not chastise and punish like one who sees and perceives.

412<sup>16</sup>. It is to be known that not any man, and not even any Angel, can see the face of the Lord, because it is Divine love, and no one can endure the Divine love such as it is in itself . . . and therefore the Lord appears to those in the interior Heavens as a Sun, and that Sun is encompassed with many radiant circles, which are coverings one after another . . . but to the Angels of the lower Heavens He only appears as light; and to the rest as a Moon. But still the Lord does appear in Heaven to the Angels, but then under an angelic form; for He infils an Angel with His sight and thus with His presence from afar, and this in various places, but everywhere in accommodation to the good of love and of faith with those where He appears. Thus was the Lord seen by Gideon, etc.

422<sup>3</sup>. For all distance from the Lord in the Spiritual World is according to the reception of good and truth from Him.

433<sup>2</sup>. Besides, no one is admitted into Heaven except by the Lord; for the universal Heaven is His, and therefore no one is there or comes thither except those who acknowledge Him and love Him.

438. The conjunction of all these with the Lord, is signified by the last three tribes . . .

448<sup>16</sup>. The Lord is described by Joseph . . .

449<sup>3</sup>. By 'Bethlehem' is signified truth conjoined with good in the natural man . . . and therefore the Lord also was born at Bethlehem, because He was born a King, and with Him from birth truth was conjoined with good . . . With the Lord alone (when born) the Natural was eager for good and longed for truth, because the reigning affection . . . is from the father . . .

464. The Lord as to Divine truth from Divine good. Sig. and Ex.

— . For Divine truth united to Divine good is the Lord in the Heavens . . .

476<sup>e</sup>. Nor is any Angel allowed to think of the Lord's passion; but of His glorification, and of the reception of the Divine from Him.

479<sup>2</sup>. That the influx of the Lord is into the good with man . . . Refs.

514<sup>22</sup>. In this (natural) state the Lord appears as if absent; and this apparent absence is signified by the Lord's 'sleeping.'

517<sup>3</sup>. There are two states of the thoughts of man—one when he is in thought about truths from the Lord, and the other when from himself . . .

529. The Lord illustrating all in the Heavens concerning the state of the Church at its end. Sig. and Ex.

581<sup>e</sup>. For everyone looks at the Lord according to the elevation of his understanding; the spiritual man to the Divine Rational; and so on.

593. The Lord as to the Word; here, as to its ultimate sense. Sig. and Ex.

601<sup>8</sup>. The Lord is called 'the Lord Jehovih' when good is treated of.

617<sup>20</sup>. For it is the proceeding Divine . . . which gives eternal life to man, and causes the Lord to abide in man and man in the Lord; because the Lord in man is in His own Divine, and not in what is proper to man . . .

628. The Lord's will and command. Sig. and Ex.

631. Therefore when a man is in a spiritual idea, he must think of the Lord alone as Father and Master; but otherwise when he is in a natural idea . . .

635<sup>3</sup>. As all acknowledgment and confession of the Lord, and principally the acknowledgment and confession of the Divine in His Human, is from the Lord Himself . . .

638<sup>4</sup>. For Angels and men cannot from themselves testify concerning the Lord; but the good and truth which are with them from the Lord; that is, the Lord Himself from His own good and truth with them.

639<sup>2</sup>. As (the Divine truth) extends itself on every side around the Lord as a Sun, it is what is properly said to 'stand before Him;' for from every quarter and from every boundary this regards the Lord as its common centre; and in its essence this is the Lord in Heaven, because it is the proceeding Divine; and that which proceeds . . . is Himself . . . Therefore all the Angels . . . turn themselves to the Lord, and thence are continually in His presence . . .

646<sup>3</sup>. It is to be known that in proportion as a man acknowledges the Lord, and lives according to His precepts, in the same proportion he is elevated above his proprium.

649<sup>3</sup>. At the end of the Church the Lord is indeed preached, and from doctrine a Divine is ascribed to Him like the Divine of the Father; but yet scarcely anyone thinks about His Divine, for the reason that they place it above or outside of His Human; and therefore when they are looking to His Divine, they do not look to the Lord, but to the Father as another; when yet the Divine which is called the Father is in the Lord . . .

Hence it is that man thinks no otherwise about the Lord than as of a common man; and from this thought flows his faith, however much he may say with the mouth that he believes in His Divine. If he can, let everyone explore the idea of his thought about the Lord as to whether it is of this character; and, being such, he cannot be conjoined with Him in faith and love . . . Hence it is that at the end of the Church there is not any acknowledgment of the Lord; that is, of the Divine in the Lord, and from the Lord . . . That such is the case may be evident from Christians in the other life, where the thoughts of the heart are manifested. When it is conceded to them to speak from doctrine . . . they ascribe the Divine to the Lord . . . but when their interior thought and faith are explored, they then have no other idea about the Lord than as of a common man . . . (from which) it is evident that there is not any acknowledgment of the Divine in the Lord and from the Lord in the Christian world at the end of the Church. In a word, there is indeed an external acknowledgment of the Divine of the Lord, but no internal acknowledgment . . . Tr.

[E.] 650<sup>2</sup>. Therefore in proportion as a man is in the love of self, in the same proportion he is against the Lord . . . Hence it is that the Hells where the love of self reigns . . . are diametrically against the Lord, and thence constantly attack the goods of love and of faith, because these are from the Lord alone, and the Lord is these with man and Angel. That these Hells are more direful than the rest may be evident from the fact that they continually breathe the murder of those who confess the Divine of the Lord . . .

654<sup>19</sup>. By these words is signified the first instruction of the Lord . . .

— The representatives were the ultimates of Heaven and the Church . . . and therefore, through them, the Lord was in ultimates . . . Hence it was that the whole life of the Lord in the world was representative . . .

659<sup>7</sup>. (In His temptations) the Lord seemed to Himself as if in Hell among the damned . . . Sig.

667<sup>o</sup>. In the Spiritual World there is a communication of affections; and spiritual affection, which is of love and faith in the Lord, which is now beginning with some, strikes such an anxiety into the evil. Sig.

678. That they acknowledged and worshipped the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

683. 'The kingdoms of the world have become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ' = all things in the Heavens and on earth subject to the Lord, when the evil have been separated from the good . . . 'The Lord and His Christ' = the Lord as to the Divine good of the Divine love, and as to the Divine truth proceeding from this love. Ex.

684. The Lord does not reign in externals separated from internals . . . but in internals; and, from them, in externals . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. By 'the Lord' is here meant the same as by 'Jehovah' in the Old Testament, and by 'the Father' in the New, namely, the Lord as to the Divine Itself, and also as to the Divine good . . .

—<sup>38</sup>. 'Messiah shall be cut off' = that they will recede from the Lord, which was done especially by the Babylonians by the transference of the Divine power of the Lord into the popes, and by the non-acknowledgment of the Divine in His Human. Sig.

687<sup>8</sup>. 'The Lord said to my Lord' = the Divine Itself which is called 'the Father,' to the Divine Human which is called 'the Son.'

689. 'Lord God' = the Lord as to the Divine good, and as to the Divine truth . . .

691<sup>2</sup>. That then the Lord will have the power and the kingdom, may be illustrated by . . .

693. The enmity and hatred of the evil against the Lord and against the Divine things which are from Him. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. It is to be known that in all evil there is anger against the Lord . . .

696. (Heaven) for all who worship the Lord from every religion whatever. Sig. and Ex.

— For in proportion as a man knows the truths of faith and lives according to them, he worships the Lord.

—<sup>5</sup>. It is said that by 'to fear Thy name' is signified to worship the Lord, and yet by 'those who fear Him' are here meant all who are outside the Church, to whom the Lord is unknown . . . But still all from these are accepted by the Lord who have an idea of what is Human concerning God; for God under a human form is the Lord. (Continued under God.)

—<sup>3</sup>. That the Lord has infinite power from Himself through His Divine truth. Ex.

—<sup>7</sup>. But now the Lord is in His fulness, and thus in His omnipotence . . .

746<sup>10</sup>. Therefore no man is allowed to call the Lord brother; for He is God even as to the Human; and God is not brother, but Father . . .

778<sup>1</sup>. If the Lord and His Divine is denied, as was done by the Pharisees, who said that the Lord did miracles from Beelzebub . . . because they thus denied Him and His Divine, He said that such was the sin and blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, because against the Word . . . Hence also it is that the Socinians and Arians, who although they do not deny the Lord, still deny His Divine, are outside of Heaven . . .

799<sup>2</sup>. As these Most Ancients . . . adored God under a human form, and as God under a human form is the Lord, hence they worshipped Him.

803<sup>2</sup>. In order that a man may be in illustration . . . he must learn especially . . . that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth . . .

iv. In proportion as a man detests these things hecause they are contrary to the Word . . . in the same proportion communication with the Lord is given him . . . For the Lord enters, and with the Lord Heaven, as sins are removed.

805<sup>4</sup>. Add to this, that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, as He Himself teaches . . . and thus that He is to be approached. III. It is also to be known, that unless He is approached, the man cannot think with the Angels; because all the angelic thought concerning God is concerning God Man . . .

—<sup>10</sup>. For he who supplicates the Father to have mercy for the Son's sake, approaches the Father, and does not approach the Lord; when yet the Lord is to be approached, for He is the God of Heaven and earth; and the Word teaches that the Father cannot be approached except by the Lord and in the Lord. III.

—<sup>11</sup>. Add to this, that he who supplicates the Father to have mercy for the Son's sake, has no other idea about the Lord than as of a common man; for he looks at Him below the Father, thus as a man from the mother Mary . . . and hence separates His Divine from His Human; when yet the doctrine of the Nicene Council . . . teaches that the Divine and the Human of the Lord are not two, but one Person, and that they are like the soul and body in man.

—<sup>12</sup>. But they who look to the Father, although they acknowledge the Divine of the Lord, still do not approach it; for they place it near the Father above the Lord's Human, and thus see His Human apart from His Divine . . . Hence it is that most people at this day confess the Divine of the Lord with the mouth, but few acknowledge it at heart; and he who does not acknowledge the Divine of the Lord in His Human, and who does not look to it when he is making supplication, cannot have conjunction with Heaven given him. From these things it follows that in this faith—that the Father will have mercy for the Son's sake—there is not any faith in the Lord. . . This, moreover, is what the Lord foretold to Peter—that at the end of the Church He would be acknowledged no longer.

806<sup>3</sup>. The Lord thus acquired the power to save the men who have faith and love to Him from Him. This could not have been presented in effect unless the Lord had assumed the Human. The reason is that God performs such effects from primes through ultimates. Ex.

807<sup>2</sup>. The reason the Lord is not acknowledged when His Divine is not acknowledged in His Human, is that then the Lord is not regarded as God, but solely as a man, who cannot save. But as it is believed from the Athanasian Confession that the Lord is the Son of God born from eternity, and that His Divine is equal to the Divine of the Father, and as they nevertheless separate His Human from His Divine, they distinguish the Lord into two quasi persons, which they call natures, so that the Lord is one [person] as the Son of God born from eternity, and another as the Son of Mary; and as they thus distinguish the Lord, no one can approach Him, unless He wants to approach Him as one [person], as God, and as another as a man. Such an idea of the Lord has existed from the first instauration of the Church, as may be evident from the writings of the fathers . . . The reason the Lord has been thus divided in the Church from its beginning, is that they have not understood the Word; for where 'the Father' is mentioned by the Lord, it has been believed that it was the Divine distinct from His Human; when yet it is manifestly evident in Matthew and Luke that the Lord was conceived from the Divine Itself which is called 'the Father;' and thus that that Divine Itself is in His Human as the soul is in its body; and the soul and body are one person. And, what is wonderful, the Athanasian Confession teaches this in clear words . . . and yet scarcely anyone in this Confession attends to it . . . 802<sup>5</sup>.

808<sup>2</sup>. Saving faith is to believe that the Lord is the Saviour of the world, and that He is the God of Heaven and the God of earth; and that by His Advent into the world He put Himself into the power to save all who receive truths from Him through the Word, and live according to them. Ex.

815<sup>3</sup>. The reason the Lord healed (them) according to their faith, was that the first and primary thing of the Church to be established was that they should believe the Lord to be the Omnipotent God; for without this faith not any Church could be instaurated . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. The reason the Lord called the disciples men 'of little faith' . . . was that the disciples did indeed believe the Lord to be the Messiah or Christ, and also the Son of God, and the Prophet of whom it had been written in the Word; but still had not as yet believed Him to be the Omnipotent God Himself, and that Jehovah the Father was in Him; and yet in so far as they believed Him a man, and not at the same time God, He could not present His Divine—to which belongs omnipotence—as present with his disciples through faith; for faith presents the Lord as present . . . which also is the reason why those cannot be saved who in the world at this day look to His Human, and not at the same time to His Divine, as is the case with the Socinians and Arians.

—<sup>8</sup>. It was from a like cause that the Lord could not do miracles in His own country, because they had seen Him there from His infancy like another man, and therefore they could not add to this idea the idea of Divinity; and when this is not present, the Lord is indeed present, but not with Divine omnipotence in the man; for faith presents the Lord present in a man according to the quality of the perception of Him . . . for in order that the Lord may operate anything with man through faith, the Divine of the Lord must be present in the man, and not outside of Him.

—<sup>9</sup>. For the first thing of all to be believed is that the Lord is the God of Heaven and earth, and that He is omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, infinite, and one with the Father. These things are to be known, and in so far as they are only known, they are historical things; and historical faith presents the Lord present; for this faith is a view of the Lord from the quality of His Divinity . . .

—<sup>13</sup>. That the Lord is to be approached, and that He and not the Father is to be worshipped according to the quality of the faith and love which is prescribed in the Word, the Lord Himself teaches, saying that no one has ever seen the Father, but that the Son sets Him forth; also that no one comes to the Father except through Him; and also because the Father and He are one; and therefore to approach the Father, and not Him, is to make two out of one, and thus to worship that Divine outside of the Lord which is in Him; by which also there perishes in the man the idea of Divinity in relation to the Lord . . .

[E. 815]<sup>14</sup>. That to believe in the Lord is to believe in the Father, the Lord Himself also teaches, in John: 'He that believeth in Me, believeth not in Me, but in Him that sent Me; and He that seeth Me, seeth Him that sent Me' (xii.44,45). By these words is meant that he who believes in the Lord, does not believe in Him separated from the Father, but also in the Father; and therefore it is added, 'He that seeth Me, seeth Him that sent Me.'

820<sup>1</sup>. These things (concerning the keys) were said to Peter when he had acknowledged the Lord as the Messiah or Christ, and as the Son of the Living God . . .

825<sup>3</sup>. Good works are all things which a man does, writes preaches—nay, which he speaks—not from himself, but from the Lord; and he acts, writes, preaches, and speaks from the Lord, when he lives according to the laws of his own religion . . . In proportion as a man lives religion, in the same proportion he is led by the Lord; and in proportion as he is led by the Lord, his works are good; for he is then led to do goods and to speak truths, for the sake of goods and truths, and not for the sake of self and the world. Uses are delights to him, and truths are deliciousnesses to him. Moreover he is daily taught by the Lord what is to be done and spoken, and also what is to be preached, or what is to be written; for when evils have been removed, he is continually under the auspices of the Lord and in illustration; but he is led and taught, not immediately by any dictate, nor by any perceptible inspiration; but by an influx into his spiritual delight, whence he has perception according to the truths from which is his understanding; and when he acts from this it appears as if he is acting from himself; and yet he knows at heart that it is from the Lord.

826<sup>6</sup>. Those become Angels of the Third Heaven who draw the laws of life from the Word and live according to them, and who worship the Lord.

850<sup>13</sup>. That the Lord is where He is reigning by His Divine truth. Sig.

852. For the Lord turns to Himself all who acknowledge His Divine, and looks at them in the forehead; and they in their turn look at the Lord with their eyes. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Lord alone is meant by ('God and the Lamb,' and here by 'the Lamb and the Father') in like manner as in the Word of the Old Testament, where it is said 'Jehovah,' 'Lord Jehovah,' 'Jehovah Zebaoth,' 'Lord,' 'Jehovah God,' 'God' in both the plural and the singular, 'the God of Israel,' 'the Holy One of Israel,' 'the King of Israel,' 'the Creator,' 'the Saviour,' 'the Redeemer,' 'Shaddai,' 'the Rock,' and so on; and yet by all these names a number are not meant, but One; for the Lord is thus variously named according to His Divine attributes. It is the same with the Word of the New Testament, where 'the Father,' 'the Son,' and 'the Holy Spirit' are named as three; when yet by these three names there is meant One; for by 'the Father' is meant the Lord as to the Divine Itself—which was to Him a soul from the Father—by 'the Son' is meant the Divine Human; and by 'the Holy Spirit' is meant the proceeding Divine. (Continued at full length under FATHER.)

—<sup>3</sup>. From this it is evident that the Lord is Jehovah God from conception; and to be Jehovah God from conception, is to be so as to the life itself which is called the soul from the Father, and from which the body has life; from which it is also manifestly evident that the Human of the Lord is what is called 'the Son of God.' Ill.

857. 'They sang as it were a new song'—concerning the acknowledgment and confession of the Lord . . . Where 'a new song' is mentioned (in the Word), there is signified the confession and glorification of the Lord; for this song is called 'new' because in the Churches before the Advent of the Lord, Jehovah was celebrated by means of songs, whereas after the Lord had come into the world, and had manifested Himself, the Lord also was celebrated by means of songs, whereas in the Church . . . which is meant by 'the New Jerusalem,' the Lord alone will be celebrated; and as it was the same Lord in the Ancient Churches—but celebrated under the name of Jehovah—who is called the Lord now; and as, regarded in itself, the song about Him is not in itself new, it is therefore said 'as it were a new song' . . . 936.

859. 'And no one could learn the song except those 144,000'—that the acknowledgment and confession of the Lord alone has been possible (and is possible) solely with those who are in faith from charity, or who are in truths from good. Ex. —<sup>2</sup>.

—<sup>2</sup>. For the Lord inflows with everyone into his life; and the life of Heaven is from love, or charity; thus from good; and love or charity is such as it is formed through truths . . . Hence it is evident . . . why these alone could learn this song; that is, at heart acknowledge and confess the Lord; to wit, Him as the Only God, and the Trinity in Him.

860. It is to be known that no others can acknowledge and confess the Lord in the other life than those who have acknowledged and confessed Him in the world. Ex.

863. By 'the one precious pearl' is signified the acknowledgment of the Lord.

864. Those who are adjointed to the Lord by the acknowledgment of His Divine Human, and by a life according to His precepts. Sig. and Ex.

— For no one can follow the Lord of himself, but from the Lord Himself; for the Lord draws the man after Him who wills from freedom to follow; but He cannot draw anyone who does not want to follow Him; for the Lord operates this with him,—as if man were following Him of himself . . . for unless it appeared to man that he was following the Lord as of himself . . . there would be no appropriation and conjunction. Ex. . . . The reason it is so, is also because man does not perceive the operation of the Lord into his will and derivative thought . . .

Lord, and to do His precepts, is 'to follow Him,' is because no others can be conjoined with the Lord. That everyone is conjoined with the Lord according to the acknowledgment and confession of Him from the heart, and according to the life, may be evident from the fact that all the Angels of Heaven acknowledge no other Divine than the Divine of the Lord, and that all the Angels of the Heavens live according to the laws of order, which are His precepts; that is, they live in the Divine which proceeds from the Lord, which is called the Divine truth . . . III.

—<sup>6</sup>. From these things it may be evident that 'to follow the Lord' is to be led by Him, and not by self. Ex.

865. Those who receive instruction from the Word, especially concerning the Lord, and live according to it. Sig. and Ex.

— . Therefore, unless the affections and the derivative thoughts are spiritual—and these are formed solely from the acknowledgment of the Lord, and from a life according to His precepts—they cannot be admitted into any Society of Heaven; for they are repugnant. Hence it is that they who do not acknowledge the Divine Human of the Lord, and do not live according to His precepts in the Word, cannot be consociated with the Angels of Heaven. That such is the case, has been evident to me from much experience. There were some who had thought of the Lord no otherwise than as of another man, and who had lived the modern faith . . . These were admitted into a certain Society, but (were stupefied and tortured).

—<sup>3</sup>. The spiritual mind is not opened with any man except through the acknowledgment of the Divine of the Lord, and through a life according to His precepts; and before this mind has been opened, there is not produced any good and derivative truth . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. With these and no others is the spiritual mind opened; and therefore no others are led by the Lord, or 'follow Him whithersoever He goeth.'

866. That there are no such things with those who are led by the Lord . . . is signified by, 'in their mouth was found no deceit;' for the Lord is Divine truth united to Divine good; and in (these two) are all who are being led by the Lord; who are they who acknowledge His Divine Human, and do His precepts . . .

893<sup>4</sup>. The good which is good in itself . . . is solely from the Lord; and therefore unless the Lord is acknowledged, and that all good is from Him, the man cannot be saved. But before anyone can act from the Lord, he must undergo temptations. Ex.

897. Consolation by the Lord after temptations. Sig. and Ex.

— . Hence it is evident that the universal angelic Heaven, as to intelligence and wisdom, and as to the affections of good and truth, is the Lord.

899. 'The dead in the Lord'—those who rise again into eternal life.

—<sup>14</sup>. As men rise again after death, the Lord willed to undergo death, and to rise again on the third day; but for the reason that He might put off all the human which He had from the mother, and put on the Divine Human . . .

906<sup>2</sup>. In these passages there is meant the manifestation of the Lord in the Word . . .

907<sup>3</sup>. The reason the Lord Himself does not judge, is that He is Divine love, and is Divine good united to Divine truth, and the latter cannot be separated from the former . . . and the Divine good does not judge anyone, but saves them . . .

918<sup>11</sup>. The Lord's first state was . . . a sensuous one. Rep.

— . Such power had the Lord when He was a boy, with which He subjugated the most direful Hells, where all are sensuous.

— . From the Sensuous and Natural the Lord then entered into the Divine Spiritual and Celestial. (See NAZARITE, here.)

—<sup>9</sup>. It is to be known that the Lord, when He was in the world, from His infancy to His last day there, successively progressed to union with the Divine Itself, which was in Him from conception.

926<sup>4</sup>. For Heaven is the Lord. There are indeed Angels, from whom is Heaven; but still the Angels are not Heaven, but the Lord is; for it is the Divine which proceeds from the Lord . . . from which the Angels have all their love and all their wisdom; and the Angels are Angels from love and from wisdom . . . and as the love and wisdom in them are from the Lord, they are the Lord; and consequently they are the Lord with them. III.

933<sup>9</sup>. The works which are done by the Lord with a man, in the external form appear like those which are done by the man himself . . . For the works which are done by the Lord with a man are done by the man also as by himself; and unless they are done as it were by him, they do not conjoin him with the Lord . . .

934<sup>2</sup>. In order that works may be done by the Lord, and not by man, two things are necessary. First, that the Divine of the Lord be acknowledged; and also that He is the God of Heaven and earth, even as to the Human; and that from Him is all the good which is good. Secondly, that the man live according to the precepts of the decalogue . . .

935. A Glorification of the Lord from spiritual affection. Sig. and Ex.

936<sup>6</sup>. From these things it is evident that whoever believes in the Lord, shuns evils as sins; and, contrariwise, that whoever shuns evils as sins, believes . . .

939. 'Lord God Almighty'—because Divine good is Himself . . . for 'Lord' is said from Divine good . . . 979. 1073. 1217<sup>2</sup>.

956<sup>2</sup>. But they who have not been purified from evils, and are therefore not in the light of Heaven, in their spirit do not see the Lord as the God of Heaven and earth, but another in His place; some a certain one whom they believe to be God the Father; some a certain one whom they call God because he prevails in power; some a certain devil whom they fear because he is able to do them harm; some nature, as in the world; and some no God. It is said in their spirit, because they are such after death when they become Spirits . . . But all in Heaven, without exception, acknowledge the Lord alone; for the universal Heaven is from the Divine which proceeds from Him, and relates to Him as a Man; and therefore no one can enter Heaven unless he is in the Lord; for he enters into Him when he enters into Heaven. If others enter, they become impotent in mind, and fall backwards.

[E.] 957<sup>4</sup>. All in the Heavens are allotted places according to the fulness and clearness of idea concerning the Lord. They are also in corresponding wisdom, and in corresponding happiness. All who have not the idea of what is Divine concerning the Lord . . . are beneath the Heavens, and are unhappy. (Continued under God.)

959<sup>4</sup>. Hence it is, that in Hell, as no Divine quality of the Lord is acknowledged there, it is not possible to name the Lord; and that His names cannot be uttered by anyone in the Spiritual World otherwise than accordingly as His Divine is acknowledged. For all there speak from the heart . . .

960<sup>15</sup>. There are two things through which Heaven is closed to the men of the Church; one is the denial of the Divine of the Lord . . . The reason is, that the Divine of the Lord is everything of Heaven . . .

973<sup>2</sup>. For to love the Lord is not to love a Person, but to love the things which proceed from the Lord; for these things are the Lord with man . . . And as these things are the Lord, therefore in proportion as a man loves them, and thence acts from them, in the same proportion he acts from the Lord . . .

979<sup>6</sup>. Desist from asking yourself, What are the good works I must do . . . Only abstain from evils as sins, and look to the Lord; and the Lord will teach and lead.

995<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that no one can be in love truly conjugal . . . except him who acknowledges the Lord alone: that is, the Trine in Him . . .

1013<sup>4</sup>. It has been found out that this delight . . . is from hatred against the Lord Himself . . .

1025<sup>3</sup>. The (first) commandment, in the Divine celestial sense, involves that the Lord alone is to be acknowledged and worshipped, and the Trine in Him . . .

1029<sup>2</sup>. As (the Babylonians) knew that the Lord alone had all Power, they put on a seeming zeal for Him . . . Thus that the Lord should serve them . . . It has even been apperceived that they would have . . . rejected the Lord, if He had not given them the Power to do all things at their pleasure . . . (Continued under DOMINION.)

1032<sup>2</sup>. Man is elevated from his proprium, and thinks in elevation, when he is elevated by the Lord; and this is effected when he acknowledges the Lord, and His Divine Power over Heaven and earth. By this confession and faith of the heart there is effected for him conjunction with the Lord, and (then) the interiors of his mind . . . are kept by the Lord in the view of Him . . . (and then) he thinks truth from the Lord, and does good from Him.

1051<sup>2</sup>. This kind of profanation exists especially with those who acknowledge the Lord and His Divine . . . Ex.

1069. By 'the ten horns of the beast' (are signified) the Divine truths which the Babylonish nation has profaned; the chief of which are, that the Lord has Power over Heaven and earth; and that the Word is the only Divine Holy; for these two things make the Church itself of the Lord on earth . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason the Lord is the Word, because He is the Divine truth, and that this latter proceeds from His Divine Esse, which is the Divine love, is that when He was in the world, the Divine love was in Him as the soul is in the body; and as from the Divine love there proceeds the Divine truth, as light does from the sun . . . therefore the Human of the Lord in the world was the Divine truth proceeding from the Divine love which was in Him. That the Divine Itself . . . which is the Divine love, was in the Lord from conception. III.

1073<sup>2</sup>. As the Divine truth is the Lord in the Heavens, therefore the Lord Himself is present in each and all things of His Word as in His Heavens . . .

1097<sup>3</sup>. Therefore the mere thought about the Lord, that He is the God of the universe, opens Heaven; for the Lord says, 'the Father hath given all things into the hand of the Son' (John iii. 35); 'the Father hath given to the Son the Power of all flesh' (xvii. 2); 'all things are delivered to Me of the Father' (Matt. xi. 27); 'all Power has been given to Me in Heaven and on earth' (Matt. xxviii. 16).

—<sup>4</sup>. From these things it is evident that a man who is without the idea of God such as there is in Heaven cannot be saved. The idea of God in Heaven is the Lord; for the Angels of Heaven are in the Lord, and the Lord in them; and therefore to think about any other God than the Lord is to them impossible. See John xiv. 20, 21.

1104<sup>3</sup>. As a clear idea prevails over an obscure one, therefore most of both the simple and the learned think of the Lord as of a common man like themselves . . .

— In a word, they who separate the Divine from His Human, and do not think that the Divine is in His Human as the soul is in the body, and that they are one Person, are liable to fall into enormous ideas about the Lord, even into the idea as of a man separated from a soul. Therefore beware lest you think about the Lord as of a man like yourself; but think about the Lord as of a Man who is God. Hear, my reader! (Continued under DIVINE HUMAN.)

1106<sup>4</sup>. The unity in which is the Trinity, or the One God in whom is the Trine, is not possible in the Divine which is called 'the Father,' nor in the Divine which is called 'the Holy Spirit;' but in the Lord alone. In the Lord is the Trine; namely, the Divine which is called 'the Father,' the Divine Human which is called 'the Son,' and the proceeding Divine which is called 'the Holy Spirit;' and this Trine is One, because it belongs to One Person, and may be called the Trine.

1115<sup>5</sup>. The Angels of all the Heavens acknowledge the Lord alone. They acknowledge His Divine which is called 'the Father'; they see His Divine Human; and they are in His proceeding Divine; for the universal angelic Heaven is the proceeding Divine of the Lord... Add to this, that the universal angelic Heaven is... a Grand Man; and therefore the Angels in Heaven are in a Man which is the proceeding Divine of the Lord... and as their thoughts go according to the form of Heaven, therefore, when thinking about God, they cannot do otherwise than think about the Lord.

1119<sup>2</sup>. In the Heavens, all things which proceed from the Lord, in the greatest and in the least, either are in the human form, or have relation to the human form... From these things it may be evident that the Lord is the only Man; and that everyone is a man according to the reception of the Divine good and Divine truth from Him. 1120<sup>3</sup>, Ex.

1138<sup>6</sup>. Thus when a man, by acknowledgment and by faith from love, as of himself ascribes to the Lord all things of his life, the Lord on the other hand ascribes to man the good of his life, which is [attended with] all happiness and bliss... The perception is then reciprocal, being grateful to the Lord, in that He is in the man, and the man in Him; and happy for the man, in that he is in the Lord, and the Lord in him. Such is the union of the Lord with man, and of man with the Lord, through love.

1139<sup>6</sup>. But the light of life and the heat of life affect and infl the recipients exactly according to the quality of the acknowledgment that they are not theirs, but the Lord's; and the quality of the acknowledgment is exactly according to the quality of the love in doing the precepts, which are uses.

1155<sup>4</sup>. Therefore it is a holy law of the Divine Providence that internal freedom should not be in the least violated; for through it the Lord enters to man even in Hell, where he is; and through it leads him there...

1165. For it is the Lord who resists the evils with man, and who causes man to feel and perceive as if he does this from himself. Those therefore who in the world have acknowledged the Lord, and that all good and truth are from Him, and nothing from man; and thus that they prevail against evils from the Lord, and not from themselves—these resist evils as of themselves: whereas those who have not acknowledged these things in the world, cannot resist evils as of themselves. Ex... From these things it is evident that to resist evils is not from man, but from the Lord with those who acknowledge Him; and that the Lord grants that it appears as if it were done by them. 1166<sup>6</sup>, Ex.

1166<sup>3</sup>. The Lord operates these things with man immediately from Himself; and also mediately through Heaven; but still so that no Angel knows anything about it; for Heaven in the whole complex is the Lord, because it is His proceeding Divine; and therefore when Heaven operates, it is also from Himself; but it is said mediately, because the Divine operation flows through the Heavens, but still takes nothing from the proprium of any Angel there, but from what is His own with them...

1183<sup>2</sup>. It has been given me to see (the light of Heaven), and from it to perceive distinctly what comes from the Lord, and what from the Angels. That which [came] from the Lord has been written; and that which [came] from the Angels has not been written.

1193<sup>4</sup>. The reason 'all things will then be added,' is that when use is in the first place, the Lord, from whom is all good, is in the first place, and dominates, and gives whatever conduces to eternal life and happiness...

1225<sup>2</sup>. That from the omnipresence and omniscience of the Lord then perceived, it falls into the understanding, how the Lord is the all and in all things of Heaven and the Church; and that we are in the Lord, and the Lord in us. Gen.art.

—<sup>3</sup>. All the Angels of Heaven and all the men of the Church are in the Lord, and the Lord in them, when they are in that Heavenly Man...

1226<sup>6</sup>. The life of the love of use is the life of public love, and also of the love of the neighbour; and is also the life of the love of the Lord, for the Lord performs uses to man through man. Hence the life of the love of use is Divine spiritual life; and therefore everyone who loves good use, and from his love does it, is loved by the Lord...

Ath. 6. If we think about the Divine of the Lord in His Human, and not about another Divine which they call the Father, the idea of the thought... does not fall to the left of the Lord, and thus outside the Lord, but into the Lord; and, with the idea, the perception, that no one cometh to the Father except by Him; thus by His Divine Human...

162. In the sepulchre the Lord rejected all the human from the mother, and dissipated it . . . and thus assumed a Human from the Father; and thus the Lord rose again with the Human thoroughly and clearly glorified.

173. The Advent of the Lord is revealed at the end of the Church. At the end of the Jewish Church He came in the flesh, and then revealed Himself as being God or Jehovah who was to come . . . Hitherto He has been almost neglected, because in thought and in idea He has been as a common man . . . Hence His new Advent.

178. For that which proceeds from the Lord proceeds from each thing of His body, whether interior or exterior. Hence it is that the proceeding Divine is the Lord in the Heavens, and is called 'the Son of Man,' and also 'the Comforter,' and 'the Holy Spirit.' Hence it is evident what is His omnipresence.

192. The Lord . . . made His Body correspondent with the Divine itself in Him; and thus above Heaven. But the evil with man cannot be expelled, but is removed . . . But the Lord, from the Divine in Himself, expelled the evil from the mother, and therefore rose again with the whole Body. He retained the Infirmary while He was in the world, because otherwise He could not have been tempted, still less on the cross; there all the Maternal was expelled. (See HUMAN, here.)

201. That the Lord is God who alone is to be worshipped, is manifestly evident from the fact that the Hells are in the most bitter hatred against the Lord. Not so against the Father . . . But all the Hells are against the Lord. They are neither willing nor able to name Him; and . . . their delight is extreme in torturing those who adore the Lord. . . A sphere against the Lord exhales from all the Hells, and a sphere in favour of the Lord from all the Heavens: hence an equilibrium.

De Verbo 8<sup>3</sup>. The reason the celestial Angels can apply all things to the Lord which the spiritual Angels apply to the Church, is that the Lord is everything of the Church.

13<sup>2</sup>. In this Earth . . . the Lord Himself teaches everyone by the Word . . .

14<sup>3</sup>. In (the Word in the Celestial Kingdom) instead of 'Jehovah' there is read 'the Lord;' and instead of 'Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob,' and instead of 'David,' 'Moses,' 'Elijah' and the rest of the prophets, 'the Lord' is named; and His Divine as meant by those men is distinguished by peculiar signatures. By the names of the tribes of Israel . . . and also by the names of the apostles, something of the Lord as to the Church is read; and so in all other things. From this it is evident to me that in its inmost sense the universal Sacred Scripture treats of the Lord alone.

D. Love ii. That the Lord alone is Love itself, because Life itself . . . Gen.art.

iii. The Lord is indeed in the Sun . . . but still love together with wisdom are also Himself outside of the Sun . . .

— . This is the reason of the appearance of distance between the Lord as a Sun, and Heaven. But still the Lord Himself is present in Heaven . . . The presence of the Lord is not like the presence of a man, who infills space; but it is presence apart from space; which is, that He is in the greatest and the least things . . .

iv. That the Lord is actually He who is with Angels in the Heavens, and with men on earth, and in them . . . although He is infinite and uncreate . . . cannot be comprehended by the natural man . . .

vi. In the view of the Lord, the universal human race is as one man; and all of one kingdom are also as one man; in like manner all of one province; and also all of one city; and of one house. It is not the men themselves who appear thus together, but it is the uses with them. Those appear together as a perfect and beautiful man who are good uses; that is, those who do them from the Lord . . . But they who do uses solely for the sake of self or the world also appear before the Lord . . . but as an imperfect and ugly man. From these things it may be evident that the Lord looks at the men of the world, one by one from use, and compositely—concretim—from uses conjoined into the form of a man.

xiii. By to be in the Lord is meant to be of use; and by to be man is meant to do uses to the neighbour from the Lord for the sake of the Lord.

—<sup>3</sup>. That in proportion as a man is in the love of use, in the same proportion he is in the Lord. Ex.

xiv. Whereas with those who love uses from the love of them, the Lord is the head . . .

D. Wis. iii. 1. That the Lord conjoins Himself with man in the womb of the mother from the first conception, and forms him. Gen.art.

— . By the Lord is here meant, as elsewhere, the Divine which proceeds from Him as the Sun of Heaven from which and through which all things in the universal world have been created . . .

4. That the receptacles have been distinguished with man into three degrees . . . and that the two higher ones are habitations of the Lord, but not the lowest one. Gen.art.

vii. 2<sup>3</sup>. Those have the most easy and gentle respiration who have the idea of God as a man; and, from the Christian world, who have the idea of the Lord that He is the God of Heaven. But those have a difficult and rough respiration who deny His Divinity, as do the Socinians and Arians.

viii<sup>5</sup>. As the first of man is spiritual . . . being receptive of the Divine love and Divine wisdom when it is separated from the body . . . it cannot but return to the Lord, from whom it has life.

xi. 1<sup>2</sup>. It is from the law of causes that the end is everything in the cause, and thence everything in the effect . . . So in like manner is the Lord—because He is the end—everything in the love of uses, or in the charity, with man; and thence everything in the uses from him, that is, in the uses through him . . .

2. That the Lord is a quo; and that the neighbour is ad quem. Ex.

3. Hence it is evident that love to the Lord comes forth in charity, because in use; and also that . . . the conjunction of the Lord with man is in use . . . for the Lord is in use as in the good which is from Him, and the man who is in the love of use is in use as of himself, but still acknowledges that it is not from him but from the Lord . . .

3a. That on the one side the truths of faith regard the Lord, and on the other the neighbour. Ex.

4a. That truths teach how the Lord is to be approached, and afterwards how the Lord effects uses through man. Ex.

7a. The Lord conjoins Himself with man in charity, and from this in faith . . .

xii<sup>3</sup>. That from this Sun there is the presence of the Lord everywhere. Gen.art.

4. The Life itself which is the life of all things is the Divine love and the Divine wisdom . . . and the latter united to the other reciprocally is the Lord . . .

VOL. IV.

13<sup>o</sup>. Hence it is that the Lord is God as to the flesh also. 15.

22. That man cannot find out one single Divine truth unless he approaches the Lord immediately, is because the Lord alone is the Word, and is the Light and the Truth itself; and man does not become spiritual except from the Lord alone; but remains natural, and the natural man sees everything in spiritual things invertedly . . .

23. The Holy Spirit is (nothing but) the Divine which proceeds from the Lord; and the Lord is perpetually present with every man, both evil and good. Without His presence no one can live; and the Lord is continually acting, urging, and endeavouring that He may be received; and therefore the presence of the Holy Spirit is perpetual . . . This has been testified in the case of a certain devil . . . in that the presence of the Lord was taken away from him; and the devil lay dead . . . Thousands of Spirits and of the clergy saw this, and were made astonished. It is from the perpetual presence of the Lord that man has the faculty of thinking, of understanding, and of willing . . . Melancthon and Luther were present, and could not open their mouths against it. 50. 57.

24. The Word having been buried by the Roman Catholics . . . the Lord could not be known, but the pope was worshipped as God in the Lord's place. But when the Word had been drawn forth from its sepulchre, the Lord could be made known.

28. For the Lord inspires men; and, when He is present, He is present by means of the Heavens, as the soul is by means of its body.

38. The reason that after the time of the apostles the Church fell into so many heresies, and that at this day there are nothing but falsities, is that they did not approach the Lord; when yet the Lord is the Word, and is the Light itself which illuminates the whole world . . . 40.

—<sup>o</sup>. The Lord cannot illustrate anyone with His lumen, unless He is immediately approached, and is acknowledged as the God of Heaven.

41<sup>2</sup>. From these things it is now evident that no one has the Lord present with him unless he knows His quality. This is made known by the Truths of the Word; for so many as are the Truths of the Word, so many are the mirrors, and so many are the ideas concerning the Lord; for He is the Word, and He is the Truth, as He teaches. The qualities are of two kinds,—one kind is that of the Knowledge about Him, that He is the God of Heaven and earth, the Son of God the Father, one with the Father, that all things of the Father are in Him—in a word, that He is the Human of God the Father; and the other kind is that of the Knowledges which proceed from Him—and the things which proceed from Him are Himself—as what He teaches about charity, free will, repentance, regeneration, the sacraments, and very many other things. These things also make the idea of the Lord, because they are from Him.

42. It is an arcanum from the Spiritual World that he who does not approach directly and immediately with the idea of the Lord, is not presented present . . .

[Inv.] 43. The manifestation of the Lord in Person . . . surpasses all miracles . . .

44. The Lord Himself is in (the spiritual sense of the Word) with His Divine; and in the natural sense with His Human.

56. The Lord made the natural man in Himself Divine, to the end that He might be the First and the Last, and could thus enter with men even into their natural man, and teach it from the Word, and lead it. 2357<sup>2</sup>. Because so long as they are in evil they cannot be in good. No one can serve two lords at the same time.

4242. 'Thus shall ye say to my lord Esau' (Gen. xxxii.4)=the first acknowledgment of good, that it was in a higher place. Ex. 4245.

4267<sup>e</sup>. Good is called 'lord,' and truth 'servant,' before they have been conjoined.

4726. 'Behold that lord of dreams cometh' (Gen. xxxvii.19)=that they were vain things. Ex.

—<sup>7</sup>. Good is called 'lord' relatively to a servant, and 'father' relatively to a son. Ill.

4974. 'His lord saw that Jehovah was with him' (ver.3)=that it was perceived in natural good that the Divine was in it. . . (For) 'lord'=good; here, natural good, because it is an Egyptian who is here 'the lord.'

4992. 'Behold my lord knoweth not what is with me in the house' (ver.8)=that natural good did not even wish for appropriation; (for) 'his lord'=natural good.

5023. 'Until his lord should come to his house' (ver. 16)=in order that it might communicate with natural good; (for) 'lord'=natural good not spiritual. . . He is called 'his lord,' because the Natural which is not spiritual considers the Spiritual as a servant.

5079. 'To their lord the king of Egypt' (Gen.xl.1)=that they were against the new state of the natural man. Ex.

5510. 'The man the lord of the land spake' (Gen. xlii.30)=the Celestial of the Spiritual reigning in the Natural. . . 'Man-vir' is predicated of the Spiritual, and 'lord' of the Celestial; for, in the internal sense, 'man'=truth; and 'lord,' good.

5732<sup>3</sup>. In Heaven . . . no one wants to be lord, and thus to regard another as a servant; but everyone wants to minister to and serve another. Ill.

5903. '(God hath set me) for a lord to everything of (Pharaoh's) house' (Gen.xlv.8)=that from it is everything in the Natural . . . 'A lord,' in the Word, is predicated of good.

8979. 'If the lord of the woman' (Ex.xxi.3)=truth conjoined with good. 'The lord'=truth . . . because it here means a servant.

8981. 'If his lord has given him a woman' (ver.4)=good adjoined to truth by the Spiritual when in combat: 'lord,' here, = the Spiritual; for by 'lord' here is meant one of the Sons of Israel . . . 8983.

8986. 'I love my lord . . .' (ver.5). . . 'Lord'=spiritual good a quo. 8990<sup>4</sup>.

8995. 'If she is evil in the eyes of her lord' (ver.8)=if the affection of truth from natural delight does not agree with spiritual truth. . . (for) 'lord'=spiritual truth.

9046. 'The lord,' namely, of the woman, or 'a man,' =truth . . . for 'a lord' or 'man' of a woman, in the Word=truth; and 'the woman,' good; because by the marriage of a man with a woman is represented the marriage of truth and good.

9069. 'The lord of the ox is guiltless' (ver.28)=no evil from the internal man, because from the Voluntary and not from the Intellectual. . . 'The lord of the ox' =the internal or spiritual man; for by 'the ox' is signified the affection of evil in the natural or external man . . . and the internal man is lord of the external. 9075. 9082.

9087. 'The lord of the pit shall repay' (ver.34)=that he with whom is falsity shall make amends.

9093<sup>2</sup>. This division (of truth from good) is meant by the Lord's words in Luke: 'No one can serve two lords: either he will hate the one and love the other; or he will prefer the one and despise the other: ye cannot serve God and mammon' (xvi.13); that is, by faith to serve the Lord, and by love the world; thus to acknowledge truth, and do evil. He who does this has a divided mind. Hence his destruction.

9167. 'The lord thereof shall take' (ver.11)=conjunction under good. . . 'The lord'=good . . . because with the spiritual man good is in the first place . . . and that which is in the first place is here 'the lord.' According to the quality of good also are all truths disposed with man, as a house by its lord. Hence it is that by 'the Lord,' in the Word, is meant the Lord as to Divine good.

9170. 'He shall repay to the lord thereof' (ver.12)=restitution (to the good of truth) for that (which has been taken away). . . 'The lord'=good.

9176. 'The lord thereof not with it' (ver. 14)=if the good of that truth is not together with it in the General. 'The lord'=good.

9178. 'If the lord is with it, he shall not repay' (ver. 15)=if the good of truth is together with it, there shall be no restitution.

10471. 'Let not anger wax hot, my lord' (Ex.xxxii. 22)=that the Internal should not avert itself. . . Moses is here called by Aaron 'my lord,' because the Internal is lord, and the External is relatively a servant. Ex.

10702<sup>e</sup>. Then the things of the internal man are closed, lest the man should serve two lords.

D. 3339. A dog Knows his master among a thousand . . .

E. 275<sup>2</sup>. 'A hard lord' (Is.xix.4)=the evil of the love of self. (=the evil of falsity. 654<sup>49</sup>.)

335<sup>24</sup>. 'Lords,' and 'dominators'=goods.

409<sup>f</sup>. From which it may be evident that it is impossible to serve two lords.

—<sup>8</sup>. Then the internal man is master and lord . . .

473. 'I said to him, Lord, thou knowest' (Rev.vii.14) =that the Lord alone has known this.

1073. 'Because He is Lord of lords and King of kings' (Rev.xvii.14)=because the Lord is good itself and truth itself.

— . Therefore the Third Heaven is called the Lord's 'dominion' . . . and hence the Angels (there) are called sons of the Lord, thus also 'lords;' and the Angels in the Second Heaven are called . . . 'kings.' The former and latter Angels are meant by 'lords' and 'kings,' when the Lord is called 'Lord of lords and King of kings.'

E. 54. 'On the Lord's day'=when the Lord instructs man, thus when He inflows. Infants were sent to me in choirs, and it was granted to read the Lord's Prayer before them; and at the same time it was given to perceive how the Angels in whose company they were insinuated into their tender and novitiate ideas the meaning of the things which are in the Lord's Prayer * . . .

2291. When I was praying the Lord's Prayer, and the infants inflowed from their own Intellectual into the ideas of my thought, it was so tender that they had scarcely anything except the sense of the words; but still their ideas . . . were openable even to the Lord . . . H. 336.

4047<sup>2</sup>. That they were such was shown me by the influx of their perception into the Lord's Prayer when I was reading it; for the quality of all Spirits and Angels whatever could be known from the Lord's Prayer; and this by the influx of their ideas of thought and of their affections into the contents of the Prayer. 6476. Whenever I have read the Lord's Prayer, I have manifestly perceived an elevation towards the Lord, which was like an attraction; and then the ideas were open, and a consequent communication was effected with some Societies in Heaven; and I apperceived that there was an influx from the Lord into each thing of the Prayer; thus into each of the ideas of my thought which were from the sense of the things in the Prayer. The influx took place with unspeakable variety, so that at one time it was not the same as at another. From this it was also evident what infinite things there are in each thing of it; and that the Lord is present in each thing.

6619. That there are innumerable things in the ideas of thought; and that the things which are in them are in them in order from the interiors, has been evident to me when I have read the Lord's Prayer morning and evening. Whenever I did this, the ideas of my thought were opened towards Heaven, and innumerable things inflowed, so that I clearly noticed that the ideas of thought which were taken from the contents of the Prayer were infilled from Heaven: and such things were also infused as cannot be uttered, and as could not be comprehended by me. I only felt the general affection thence resulting. And, wonderful to say, the things which inflowed were varied every day. Hence it has been given to know that there are more things in the contents of that Prayer than the universal Heaven is capable of comprehending; and that with man there are more things in it in proportion as his thought is more open towards Heaven; and, on the other hand, that there are fewer in proportion as his thought is more closed ; for with those with whom the thought is closed, nothing more appears therein than the sense of the letter, or the proximate sense of the words.

[A.] 8864*. That the things which precede must reign in the things which follow, and thus [be] in a series . . . is evident from each of the things which the Lord has spoken ; especially from His Prayer, which is called the Lord's Prayer. In this Prayer all things follow in such a series that they constitute as it were a column increasing from its top to its bottom, in the interiors of which are the things which precede in the series. Ad. 3/3537, et seq. On the Lord's Prayer.

3/4297. (The whole of order is in His Prayer.)

D. 20. Index. (When I was praying the Lord's Prayer.) 81. 210<sup>2</sup>. 1639.

258. Whenever I was praying our Lord's Prayer, morning and evening, I have almost always been taken up into a more interior sphere, with variety ; and in fact with so perceptible a change that nothing could be more perceptible ; and this for more than two years. Explications of the Prayer were then insinuated with very great variety of the more interior things. But when the Prayer was finished, I was let back into the ordinary sphere.

732. What I have very greatly marvelled at, is that when I was reading the Lord's Prayer,* such a robber was present with me, and read with me, which happened very frequently . . .

1790. On the Lord's Prayer.*—When the Lord's Prayer, which comprehends in it all celestial and spiritual things, is being read, there can be infused into each thing of it so many things, that Heaven is not capable of comprehending them ; and this, too, according to the capacity and use of each one. Ex. . . Hence it was given to know from the Lord's Prayer what kind of souls they had been in the life of the body, as to the doctrine of their faith . . .

1826. It is wonderful that the ideas are much more infilled by the Lord when the man does not attend so much . . . Thus the ideas of infants, when they are praying the Lord's Prayer, are much more infilled than those of adults ; for an adult is disturbed in his ideas . . . by [the interference of] what is his Own.

1878. These things have been given to me in the Lord's Prayer, while I prayed it to-day.

1896. While the Lord's Prayer * is being prayed, then in each of the ideas which are understood by man simply, and sometimes according to the words and thus according to the human idea, the Angels understand these things more interiorly, still more interiorly, and inmosty.

1987a. How (those who at this day are as if of the Ancient Church) pray in the life of the body, has been shown me, as usual, in the Lord's Prayer, in which their understanding was communicated to me, which was simple, scarcely going beyond the sense of the words ; but still such as not to be closed, as with others ; but still soft, openable, and thus intelligible to the Angels ; and as if each idea, although a sensuous one of the words, could serve as a vessel.

2039. From the Lord's Prayer, * which he prayed with me, I perceived that he had had no more than the literal sense ; so had he prayed in simplicity and in faith ; and that still his interiors could be at once opened in the other life.

2207. On the angelic idea in the Lord's Prayer.—It has been observed that when the Lord's Prayer is being prayed ; and it is prayed 'Lead us not into temptation, and deliver us from evil,' then by a certain idea temptation and evil are rejected . . . and what remains is angelic, namely, the good of the Lord ; concerning which there are formed innumerable ideas,—how good comes to man through affliction, which however comes from man, his evil, in which there is the penalty, and yet the good is the Lord's . . .

2435. Sometimes when I was attending less to the things which are in the Lord's Prayer, then the Angels . . . perceived more fully ; as also when I was reading in the Word of the Lord ; because the way is open. This has seemed wonderful to me, yet still it has been given to learn by experience that it is true.

2679<sup>9</sup>. When at another time I supplicated the Lord's Prayer, it was given to perceive that these (who live securely) have been more ardent than others.

3000. When I supplicated the Lord's Prayer, some attracted all the sense from me to themselves, so that I could not be in the sense, and thus not in the perception of the things which belong to the Prayer, as at other times ; and therefore I had to desist at the beginning or in the middle of the Prayer . . . (Whereas) whenever good Spirits prayed in society with me, I perceived an attraction to the Lord, as from the Lord.

3531<sup>9</sup>. I heard those (of the common people) who were at the side ; for they were reading the Lord's Prayer so simply that there was scarcely the sense of the letter ; but still it was such that the interiors could be opened.

3543. Two, three, or four times (the infants) have prayed the Lord's Prayer ; but so tenderly that they had scarcely any literal sense ; but as they grow up they are endowed by the Lord with more. Thus are they initiated into ideas . . .

5668. On the education of infants.—They read the Lord's Prayer, and learn prayers from their nurses by influx from Heaven.

D. Min. 4737<sup>9</sup>. When 'bread' is said in the Lord's Prayer, the Angels perceive the good of love, when a man is reading it holily.

E. 48<sup>2</sup>. From these things it is evident what is meant by 'the Kingdom' in the Lord's Prayer * :—Thy Kingdom come, and Thy will be done, as in Heaven, also on earth. Thine is the Kingdom, the power, and the glory.' 'Thy Kingdom come'=that truth is being received. 'Thy will be done'=that it is received by those who do the will of God. 'Thine is the Kingdom, the power, and the glory'=Divine truth from the Lord alone . . .

102<sup>5</sup>. Hence it is evident what is meant in the Lord's Prayer* by 'Hallowed be Thy name;' namely, that the Divine Human of the Lord is to be held holily, and is to be worshipped.

683<sup>4</sup>. That this is the Kingdom of the Lord which proceeds from Him and is received, may be evident from the passages in the Word where 'the Kingdom of God' is mentioned; as in the Lord's Prayer:—'Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done, as in Heaven so also on earth.' That here by 'Kingdom' is meant the reception of the Divine good and the Divine truth which proceed from the Lord, and in which is the Lord with the Angels of Heaven and the men of the Church, is evident; for it follows—'Thy will be done, as in Heaven so also on earth.' The will of God is done when these things are received in heart and soul; that is, in love and faith.

Inv. 37. The whole of the Lord's Prayer,* from beginning to end, regards this time, to wit, that God the Father be worshipped in a Human Form. This appears if that Prayer is justly explicated.

Lot. Loth.

A. 1359. 'These are the nativities of Terah; Terah begat . . . Haran; and Haran begat Lot' (Gen.xi.27)=the origins and derivations of the idolatries from which was the representative Church. . . From Lot also there were two nations which were idolaters. 1363. 1364.

1428. 'And Lot went with him' (Gen.xii.4)=the Sensuous. By 'Lot' is represented the Lord as to His sensuous and corporeal man; as may be evident from the representation of Lot in what follows . . . in that he was separated from Abram, and in that he was saved by means of Angels. But afterwards, when Lot had been separated, he put on another representation. . . The Lord's Sensuous and Corporeal itself is represented by Lot—or, what is the same, His sensuous and corporeal man—as it was in His state of childhood, and not as it was made when united to the Divine. . .

1434. 'And Lot his brother's son' (ver.5)=sensuous truth, thus the first which was insinuated into the Lord when a child. 'Lot'=the Sensuous; and 'son'=truth.

1535. In (Gen.xiii.) it treats of the external man with the Lord which was being conjoined with His internal. The external man is the Human essence . . . This is here represented by Lot.

1547. 'And Lot with him' (ver.1)=the Sensuous. . . As it here treats in special of Lot, it is to be known what he represents with the Lord . . . Lot represents the sensuous things, by which is meant the external man and his pleasures which are of sensuous things, thus which are most external, and which are wont to captivate a man in his childhood, and draw him away from goods. . . It is these pleasures, and not those (which agree with celestial things), which are treated of in this chapter, by 'Lot,' in that he separated himself from Abram; and here, that such were present, which is signified by 'Lot with him.' In general, however, by 'Lot' is signified the external man, as will be evident from what follows. 1542<sup>0</sup>.

[A.] 1563. 'And Lot also in going with Abram, had flock and herd, and tents' (ver.5)=the external man in the Lord, and the things with which the external man abounds. 'Lot'=the sensuous man; or, what is the same, the external man.

—<sup>2</sup>. It must needs be that scientifics and Knowledge then insinuate themselves with the external man, which cannot agree with spiritual truths; and that pleasures and delights insinuate themselves which cannot agree with celestial goods . . . and therefore unless such things are first dispelled, the internal man cannot agree with the external . . . That with the Lord these things were removed or separated, is represented . . . by the separation of Lot from Abram.

1564. For by Lot is represented the Lord's external man. 1566.

1568. Lot represents (the Lord's external) man; here, the things which were to be separated from His external man.

1571. 'There was a dispute between the shepherds of Abram's cattle, and the shepherds of Lot's cattle' (ver. 7)=that the internal and external man were not in agreement. Ex.

1572. 'The shepherds of Lot's cattle'=the sensuous things which are in worship, and which are of the external man.

1576. 'Abram said to Lot' (ver.8)=that thus said the internal man to the external. . . 'Lot'=the external man which was to be separated. . . In the external man there are things which are in agreement, and things which are in disagreement. The latter, here, are 'Lot.'

1584. 'Lot lifted up his eyes' (ver.10)=that the external man was illuminated by the internal. . . When the external man perceives what is the quality of the external man when conjoined with the internal . . . then it is illuminated by the internal, and is then in Divine vision . . . Nor can it be doubted that when the Lord was a child, He was many times as to the external man in such Divine sight; because He alone was conjoining the external man with the internal. 1590.

1592. 'Lot chose for himself all the plain of Jordan' (ver.11)=the external man that it was such.

1593. 'And Lot journeyed from the east' (id.)=those things with the external man which recede from celestial love.

1597. 'And Lot dwelt in the cities of the plain' (ver. 12)=that the external man was in scientifics.

1603. 'After Lot had been separated from him' (ver. 14)=when the cupidities of the external man had been removed, so that they were not a hindrance. Ex.

1698. 'They took Lot and his acquisition, the son of Abram's brother, and went away' (Gen.xiv.12)=that apparent goods and truths, which in themselves are not goods and truths, took possession of the external man, and of all things which were there. 'Lot'=the sensuous or external man with the Lord . . . and in fact here the external man as to apparent goods and truths, which are 'the acquisition of Lot.' Ex.

1707. 'And Abram heard that his brother had been made captive'=that the interior man perceived in what state was the external man. . . 'Lot'=the external man; and his being 'made captive'= . . . that apparent goods and truths had taken possession of it. Ex.

1718. 'He brought back Lot his brother and his acquisition' (ver.16)=(that He reduced into a suitable state) the external man, and all things which belong to it.

2312. In (Gen.xix.) by 'Lot' is described the state of the Spiritual Church, which is in the good of charity, but in external worship—how in process of time it decreases.

2313. The first state of that Church is that they are in the good of charity, and acknowledge the Lord; and that they are confirmed in good by Him (ver.1-3); and are saved (ver.12). The second state, that with them evils begin to act against goods; but that they are powerfully withheld from evils, and are kept in goods, by the Lord (ver.14-16). Their weakness is described (ver.17). That they are saved (ver.19). The third state, that they no longer think and act from the affection of good, but from the affection of truth (ver.18-20). And that they are saved (ver.23). The fourth state, that the affection of truth perishes, which is Lot's wife made a statue of salt (ver.26). The fifth state, that impure good, or the good of falsity, succeeds, which is Lot in the cave of the mountain (ver.30). The sixth state, that even this good is still more adulterated and falsified (ver.31-33). In like manner the truth (ver.34,35). That thence is conceived and born a certain resemblance of a Church, whose good so called is 'Moah,' and whose truth so called is 'the son of Ammon' (ver.36-38).

2318<sup>a</sup>. There now follows the Salvation of those who are in some good and truth, (who) in this chapter are represented by Lot.

2323<sup>2</sup>. In this chapter it treats of both states of the Church; namely, of the rise of a new Church, which is represented by Lot; and of the destruction of an old one, which is signified by Sodom and Gomorrah.

2324. 'Lot sitting in the gate of Sodom' (ver.1.)=those who are in the good of charity, but in external worship; who, here, are 'Lot,' who was among the evil, but separated from them, which is 'to sit in the gate of Sodom.'

— When Lot was with Abraham, he represented the Lord's Sensuous, thus His External . . . but now, when separated from Abraham, he no longer retains the representation of the Lord; but the representation of those who are with the Lord, namely, the external man of the Church, who are those who are in the good of charity, but in external worship. Nay, in this chapter, Lot not only represents the external man of the Church—or, what is the same, the External Church—such as it is in the beginning, but also such as it is in its progress, and also at its end. 418<sup>g</sup>.

2325. 'And Lot saw' (id.)=the conscience, namely, of those who are in the good of charity, but in external worship.

2326. 'And he rose up to meet them' (id.)=acknowledgment, and also the affection—affectum—of charity; as may be evident from the fact that when they came Lot at once acknowledged that they were Angels . . . That the same words involve the affection of charity, may be evident from the fact that Lot—by whom are represented those who are in the good of charity; nay, by whom is signified the good of charity itself—invited them into his house.

2329. 'And he said, Behold, I pray, my lords' (ver. 2)=the interior acknowledgment and confession of the Divine Human and proceeding Holy of the Lord. Ex.

2334<sup>2</sup>. As here by 'Lot' it treats of the first state of the Church which is in the good of charity, but in external worship; and as before man comes into this state he must be reformed, which is effected by a certain species of temptation; but as those who are in external worship undergo only a light temptation—therefore these things are said which involve somewhat of temptation; namely, that the Angels first said that they would pass the night in the street; and that Lot urged them, and that so they turned aside to him, and came into his house.

2343<sup>3</sup>. In these words is presented to view the entire process of the reformation and regeneration of those who are becoming men of the Church, [and] are here represented by Lot; namely, that at first they perceive something of temptation; but when they persist and overcome, the Lord has His abode with them, and confirms them in good, and introduces them to Himself in His Kingdom, and dwells with them, and purifies and perfects them there, and at the same time appropriates to them good and happy things, and this through His Divine Human and proceeding Holy.

2351. 'They cried to Lot' (ver. 5)=falsity from evil being angry against good. . . It has been shown that Lot represents the men of the Church who are in good; thus good itself.

2356. 'Lot went out to them at the door' (ver. 6)=that it applied itself prudently. Ex.

2367. With him who is in external worship, who is here represented by Lot.

2370. 'Lot'=the good of charity. 2375.

2373. Lot represents those who are in the good of charity.

2379. 'They introduced Lot to themselves into the house' (ver. 10)=that the Lord protects those who are in the good of charity.

2399. 'Lot went out' (ver. 14)=those who are in the good of charity; and also the good of charity itself.

2400<sup>2</sup>. For there are three kinds of men within the Church:—First, those who are in the good of charity. These are represented by Lot. . .

2410. 'And he delayed' (ver. 16)=repugnance from the nature of evil. For the evil which is in man continually reacts against the good which is from the Lord. . . and this more in this state in which is the man of the Church whom Lot now represents, than in the former state. This state is that he begins to think and act not so much from good as from truth; thus at a certain distance from good.

2411. 'The men took hold of his hand, and of the hand of his wife, and of the hand of his two daughters' (id.)=that the Lord powerfully withheld from evils, and thus strengthened, the goods and truths signified by Lot, his wife, and his daughters. . . 'Lot'=the good of charity.

2422. 'Lot said to them, I pray not, my lords' (ver. 18)=weakness in that it is not able. It now treats of the third state of the Church which is represented in this chapter by Lot; which is that they no longer think and act from the affection of good, but from the affection of truth; which state succeeds when the affection of good begins to be diminished, and as it were to recede. Good is indeed present, but it has withdrawn itself more towards the interiors. It is consequently in obscurity, but manifests itself in a certain affection which is called the affection of truth.

2425. 'I shall not be able to escape into the mountain' (ver. 19)=doubt that he could have the good of charity; that is, think and act from that good. Ex.

2438. That first those are to be saved who are in the affection of truth, who are here represented by Lot; which also is meant by Lot's coming to Zoar. Ex.

2442. 'And Lot came to Zoar' (ver. 23)=that those in the affection of truth were saved. . . From this it may be evident that those also are saved who are in faith, provided that in their faith there is good; that is, that they are affected with the truths of faith for the sake of good, which is to be affected from good.

2454. 'And his wife looked behind him' (ver. 26)=that truth averted itself from good, and looked to doctrinal things. Ex.

2455<sup>o</sup>. This, then, is the fourth state of the Church represented by Lot; which is, that all truth has been vastated as to good. Sig. and Ex.

2456<sup>o</sup>. 'He sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow' (ver. 29)=the Salvation of those who are in good, and of those who are in truth in which is good; all of whom, here, are 'Lot.'

2457. (If it had not been for) the union of the Lord's Divine essence with His human essence. . . all those who are here represented by Lot would have perished together with (those who were in falsities from evils). Sig. and Ex.

2459. 'Lot went up out of Zoar' (ver. 30)=when they were no longer in the affection of truth. Here now is described the fifth state of the Church which is represented by Lot; which is, that after there is no longer the affection of truth, a certain impure good, or good of falsity, infuses itself.

2460. 'And he dwelt in the mountain' (id.)=that they then betook themselves to a certain good. Ex.

2466<sup>12</sup>. As 'wine' and 'drunkenness'=these things, it is said of the daughters of Lot that 'they made their father drink wine.' Ex. E. 376<sup>96</sup>.

E. 410<sup>11</sup>. Hence it is that Lot is then said to have then stayed in a cave; for such wickedness is there signified by the cave of the mountain.

Lottery. Lotterium.

D. 4008. It is evident that the Providence of the Lord is in . . . lotteries.

Louis XIV. Ludovicus XIV.

C. J. 60. It has been granted to speak with Louis XIV., grandfather of the now reigning king of the French; and who, when he was in the world, worshipped the Lord, read the Word, and acknowledged the pope only as the highest of the Church; and therefore he is in much dignity in the Spiritual World, and rules the best Society of the French nation. I once saw him as it were descending by stairs; and after he had descended, I heard him saying that he seemed to himself as if he were at Versailles; and then there was silence for about two hours, after which he said that he had spoken to his grandson the king of France about the Bull Unigenitus, telling him to desist from his former purpose, and not to accept it, because it is injurious to the French nation. He said that he had insinuated this deeply into his thought. This took place in the year 1759, on the 13th day of December, at about eight o'clock in the evening. (Further particulars given. D.5980. J.(Post.) 104.).

Louis XV. Lud. XV.

D. 6027. Afterwards king Louis XV. was in a state of innocence, and he seemed to others as a child of from five to six years of age; and he went into a fox, which fled away; and into a lion, and sat down there . . .

Louse. Pediculus.

A. 1514<sup>o</sup>. There is a stench of house lice from those who persecute the innocent. 4628<sup>o</sup>.

7378<sup>o</sup>. The fourth degree of vastation is that they were in evils which were destroying all good with them . . . These are signified by 'lice from the dust of the earth.'

7392<sup>o</sup>. By the evil of the lice are signified evils which are delightful to them because they are evils.

7419. 'And it shall be for lice' (Ex.viii.16)=that thence evils will rise up. 'Lice'=evils; but what evils, and from what origin, may be evident from the correspondence of evils with such things, in that they are especially the evils which are in the Sensuous, or in the completely external man. The correspondence is from this—that the lice are in the outermost skin, and are inside of the dirt there and under a scab. The Sensuous of those who have been in the knowledge of faith, but in a life of evil, is also such . . . The infestations by the evils are signified by their biting. That 'lice'=these things cannot be confirmed from other places in the Word; for they are only mentioned in Ps.cv.31.

7424. 'And there was louse in man and in beast' (ver.17)=the derivative interior and exterior evils of cupidities. Ex.

W. 342. Upon herbs and in them are lice and caterpillars which are in agreement with them.

D. 377<sup>o</sup>. From avarice breaks forth . . . the stench of lice; for they are formed according to the quality of the avarice . . .

654. The penalty of those who want to counterfeit holy things . . . is lice, etc., according to the profanation.

1150. The persecution of the innocent produces a stench of wall lice. Ex.

1915. An insect with many feet represented, not unlike a louse in figure . . . which struck horror . . .

3424. On lice.—Lice, especially house lice, which have an evil odour, are those who clandestinely attack the things which are of faith, and also clandestinely pervert those who are not able to know better things.

3719. They are the things called cavernulae in the outermost skin of the head, where is the abode of lice, and where they are born and grow . . .

3720. Such possess the excrementitious lacunae of the sweat . . . which also are the lurking-places of lice . . .

4035. When these mucuses inflowed . . . there was perceived at the hinder part of the neck a biting as of lice.

4570. On house lice.—They are those who have been theologians, and have believed that religion is nothing, except as a matter of policy in the world . . .

4759. Certain of such in the other life stink like house lice.

A. 10. The fourth state (of regeneration) is when he is affected with love . . .

12. The sixth state is when from faith and the derivative love he speaks truths and does goods. 48.

—e. From which there is combat, until love reigns, and the man becomes celestial.

30<sup>o</sup>. Therefore love and the derivative faith are now for the first time treated of. These are called 'luminaries.' Love is 'the great luminary' which 'dominates by day' . . .

—3. Love and faith in the internal man are circumstanced as are heat and light in the corporeal external . . .

—e. It is the mercy of the Lord alone which affects the will with love, and the understanding with Truth or faith.

31. That 'the great luminaries'=love and faith. Ill. 32, Ex.

—3. As 'luminaries'=love and faith in the Lord . . .

32. Now is the consummation of the age, and love is almost null, and so consequently is faith. Sig. By 'the sun,' here, is meant love, which is 'darkened' . . .

—2. The Most Ancient Church acknowledged no other faith than love itself: and so the celestial Angels do not know what faith is, except that which is of love. The universal Heaven is of love, for in the Heavens there is no other life than the life of love. Hence is all the happiness . . . They who are in love, love the Lord from the heart; but know, say, and perceive that all love, thus all life . . . and thus all happiness, come solely from the Lord . . . That the Lord is the source of all love, was represented by the great luminary, or 'sun,' when He was transfigured. Ex.

33. It may be very well known to everyone that there is never any life without some love; and that there is never any joy except that which flows forth from love. But such as is the love, such is the life, and such the joy. If you were to remove loves—or, what is the same, cupidities, because these are of love—thought would at once cease, and you would be like a dead man, which has been shown me to the life. The loves of self and of the world present something like life, and something like joy ; but as they are completely contrary to true love—which is to love the Lord above all things, and the neighbour as one's self—it may be evident that they are not loves, but hatreds ; for in proportion as anyone loves himself and the world, in the same proportion he hates the neighbour, and thus the Lord. Therefore true love is love to the Lord ; and true life is the life of love from Him ; and true joy is the joy of this life. There can only be one true love . . .

[A.] 34. Love and faith can never be separated, because they constitute one and the same thing . . . I may relate marvellous things about this. The celestial Angels, being from the Lord in such love, are, from love, in all the Knowledges of faith, and from love are in such light and life of intelligence that scarcely anything can be described. Spirits, on the other hand, who are in the knowledge of the doctrinal things of faith, without love, are in so frigid a life and obscure a faith that they cannot approach even the first threshold of the court of the Heavens . . . Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. From this it is evident that they who are in love are also in faith, and thus in heavenly life ; but not they who say that they are in faith, and are not in the life of love. The life of faith without love is circumstanced as is the light of the sun without heat, as in winter . . . But faith from love is circumstanced as is the light of the sun in the time of spring, when all things grow and blossom . . .

36. They who have separated faith from love do not even know what faith is . . . The primary thing which faith teaches those who obey it is the love of the Lord and the love of the neighbour . . . Sig.

39<sup>e</sup>. Now, when he has been vivified by love and faith . . .

43. 'To fructify,' in the Word, is predicated of the things which are of love . . .

52. But when the man becomes celestial, and does what is good from love, the dominion proceeds from the internal man to the external . . . Sig. and Ex.

53. Faith, which is of the understanding, is called 'His image ;' but love, which is of the will, 'the image of God ;' which in the spiritual man follows, but in the celestial man precedes.

60. Here it is said 'very good' . . . because now the things which are of faith make one with those which are of love. Thus is effected a marriage between spiritual and celestial things. 63.

63. Nor does the Lord rest until love acts as principal. Then combat ceases . . .

77. Love (is treated of) by 'the tree of lives ;' faith, by 'the tree of knowledge.'

95<sup>e</sup>. The life of faith prepares the external man ; the life of love causes him to be man.

98. By 'Eden' is signified love. 100, III.

111<sup>e</sup>. The universal Heaven is most distinctly ordained by the Lord according to the differences of love and faith, which are innumerable.

310<sup>2</sup>. (Whereas) with the Postdiluvians, and with those who live at this day, there is no love, thus no will of good ; but still faith is possible . . . and from faith they may be brought to a certain charity . . .

352. All love is of the Lord, and not a whit of love is of man . . .

398<sup>2</sup>. With the men of the Most Ancient Church . . . no distinction was made between love, which is of the will, and faith, which is of the understanding ; because love was everything, and faith was of love. But after faith was separated from love, as with those who were called 'Cain,' the will did not reign any longer . . . Sig.

430. By 'sucklings, infants, and little children' are signified the three degrees of love ; which are, tender love, like that of a suckling towards its mother or nurse ; love like that of an infant towards its parents ; and charity like that of little children towards their instructor. 523<sup>62</sup>.

620<sup>e</sup>. As love is the containant of faith.

636. 'Land,' in a wide sense, = love ; thus the celestial things of the Church ; here, as no love . . . remained, it = the love of self.

668. Faith is only the form of love . . .

709. Jehovah is in love and charity ; but not in faith, unless it is the faith of love or charity.

714<sup>2</sup>. For example : love towards companions, if it loves them solely for the sake of self, has in it nothing either heavenly or Divine . . .

724. A man may know many truths from the Word, and thus speak them from the memory ; but unless it is love or charity which produces them, what is holy can never be predicated of them. But if there are love and charity, he then acknowledges and believes, thus from the heart . . . It is love and charity which sanctify faith. The Lord is in love and charity . . .

1013<sup>2</sup>. The essence of love and charity is that from two, it as it were makes one. When one loves the other as himself, and more than himself, then the one sees the other in himself, and himself in the other ; as may be known to everyone, provided he pays attention to love, or to those who mutually love each other, in that the will of the one is that of the other : they are as it were interiorly conjoined . . . love to the Lord makes a man one with the Lord ; that is, a 'likeness :' charity also does so, or love towards the neighbour, but an 'image.'

1025<sup>5</sup>. Circumcision was a representative of regeneration through love. Sig.

1055. No other covenant is eternal except love to the Lord, and love towards the neighbour . . . The universal Heaven is founded on love ; nay, universal nature ; for there is not anything in nature—where there are any union and conjunction—which does not derive its origin from love, whether animate or inanimate ; for all the Natural comes forth from the Spiritual, and the Spiritual from the Celestial . . . hence love has been implanted in each and all things, or a resemblance of love. With men alone there is not love, but the contrary ; because man has destroyed in himself the order of nature. But when he can be regenerated . . . and receive mutual love, then there is 'a covenant' or conjunction through charity ; which is the subject here treated of.

1119. The Most Ancients said that this breathing with them was varied according to their state of love and faith in the Lord. . . When anything contrary to love and faith in the Lord occurs, the Angels have a straitened breathing; but when they are in the happiness of love and faith, they have a free and ample breathing. There is something like it with every man; but according to his corporeal and worldly loves . . . 1120.

1120°. At last, when there was no love and faith . . . internal breathing ceased.

1153. Adoration is circumstanced according to the love to the Lord, and the love towards the neighbour; for the Lord is present in love, thus in worship . . .

1317<sup>2</sup>. The end is nothing else than the love; for a man can have nothing else for an end than that which he loves. He who thinks differently from what he does, still has for an end that which he loves. In the simulation or deceit itself is the end, which is the love of self, or the love of the world, and the derivative delight of his life. From these things everyone may conclude that the life of a man is such as is his love.

1419<sup>2</sup>. The Celestial of love is such as not to want to be its own, but of all; so that it wants to give all things which are its own to others. The essence of celestial love consists in this. The Lord, being love itself, or the essence and life of the love of all in the Heavens, wills to give all things which are His to the human race. Sig.

1437°. For the celestial things of love are what are solely in the Lord's Kingdom; and are what constitute it.

1448. The first worship of His Father from the Celestial of love. Sig.

1450. The order was that first of all the Lord was imbued from His infancy with the celestial things of love. The celestial things of love are love towards Jehovah, and love towards the neighbour . . .

1577<sup>4</sup>. It is only love and charity which unite the internal man to the external; and there is never any love and charity—that is, any good—except from the Lord.

1679<sup>2</sup>. It is the very life of man which desires, that is, which loves . . .

1690<sup>3</sup>. All temptation is effected against the love in which the man is. In such a degree as is the love, in such is effected the temptation. If it is not against the love, there is no temptation. To destroy the love of anyone is to destroy his life itself; for the love is the life. The life of the Lord was love towards the universal human race . . . being nothing but pure love. Continual temptations were admitted against this His life . . . The love which was the Lord's veriest life, is signified by that 'He hungered . . .'

1728. 'He was a priest' = the Holy of love. Ex.

1735. 'The Highest,' or Inmost = the Celestial of love, or love itself. Jehovah, or the Internal of the Lord, was the Celestial itself of love; that is, love itself, to which no attributes are applicable except those which are of pure love . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. This love itself is Jehovah. Of no other thing can be predicated I am or Is than of love. From this love, because in love, or of love itself, is the Esse of all life; that is, life itself . . .

1738. For without a state of love and charity . . . man is not man; but is worse than any wild beast.

1789. The Lord fought from love towards the universal human race. He who fights from this love asks for no reward for himself; because this love is such that it wills to give and transfer to others all things which are its own, and to have nothing for itself.

1798. That there is no internal of the Church . . . that is, love and faith. Sig. and Ex.

1802<sup>2</sup>. The Internal is love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour. In proportion, therefore, as they have of love and charity, in the same proportion they are sons or heirs; for in the same proportion they have of the Lord's life.

1803<sup>3</sup>. 'Viscera,' in the Word, = love, or mercy. Ex.

1809. The fructification of love, and the multiplication of faith. Sig.

1812. What anyone's faith is, is known from the love from which he fights. He who fights from any other love than love towards the neighbour, and towards the Lord's Kingdom, does not fight from faith; that is, does not believe in Jehovah, but in that which he loves; for the love itself for which he fights is his faith. Examp.

1820<sup>2</sup>. Evil Spirits never fight against any other things than those which the man loves; and the more ardently he loves, the more sharply they fight. It is evil Genii who fight against the things which are of the affection of good, and evil Spirits against those which are of the affection of truth. As soon as they notice the least thing which a man loves . . . they at once attack and endeavour to destroy it, thus the whole man, because his life consists in his loves . . . They who are malignant and deceitful insinuate themselves into the loves themselves, by flattering them, and so they introduce the man; and presently . . . they try to destroy the loves, and thus to murder the man . . . —<sup>3</sup>.

1834<sup>2</sup>. The Church . . . in the beginning is guiltless; and then the one loves the other as a brother. 2910.

1865<sup>3</sup>. Parental love increases as it descends . . .

1873°. As all love from the Lord is the Lord Himself . . .

1894. The Celestial which makes man is that he loves the Lord, and that he loves the neighbour . . .

1904<sup>2</sup>. Regarded in themselves, good and truth are of no life; but they derive life from love or from affection. They are only instrumental things of life; and therefore such as is the love which affects the good and truth, such is the life . . .

1933. For love does not sleep.

2023. The Divine with those who have faith in Him is love and charity. By love is meant love to the Lord; and by charity, love towards the neighbour. Love to the Lord can never be separated from love towards the neighbour; for the love of the Lord is love towards the universal human race . . . and therefore he who has love to the Lord, has the love of the Lord, and thus cannot do otherwise than love the neighbour. But those who are in love towards the neighbour are not on that account all in love to the Lord. Ex.

2034<sup>2</sup>. Love is conjunction itself.

[A.] 2039. There are three kinds of loves which constitute the celestial things of the Lord's Kingdom; namely, conjugal love, love towards infants, and the love of society or mutual love. Conjugal love is the principal one of all, for in it is the end of the greatest use, namely, the propagation of the human race, and thence of the Lord's Kingdom . . . Love towards infants succeeds next, being derived thence; and then the love of society or mutual love. Whatever covers up, hinders, and defiles these loves, is signified by the prepuce, which made . . . circumcision representative . . .

2041<sup>2</sup>. There are two loves so called, and their cupidities, which impede the influx of celestial love from the Lord. Ex.

2042. Circumcision was a representative of purification from filthy loves.

2045. For whatever favours any love . . . is believed to be good.

2049<sup>2</sup>. They are purified when they reject filthy loves . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. They who are in the life of love and charity are in the Lord's life. No one can be conjoined with Him by any other . . .

2146. From love. Sig. and Ex.

— That 'heat'=love, may be evident from the fact that love is called spiritual heat . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. It is further to be known that holiness is never predicated except from love and charity . . .

2177<sup>4</sup>. The fire which was constantly kindled upon the altar, represented the perpetual and eternal love, that is, mercy, of the Lord.

2187<sup>3</sup>. To eat the Lord is to be gifted with love and charity . . .

2190. All good is called holy from the fact that it is of love and charity, which are solely from the Lord.

2228<sup>e</sup>. The soul after the death of the body is such as is its love.

2231<sup>4</sup>. Love and charity are celestial flame; and faith is the spiritual light thence . . . And Angels and Spirits are affected as to their interiors with (spiritual heat and light), according to the life of love and charity with them.

2250. The Lord's grief from love towards the human race. Sig. and Ex.

2304<sup>e</sup>. One who had died when an infant spoke to his brother who had deceased in adult age, and this from so much brotherly mutual love, that his brother could not possibly resist weeping, saying that he had perceived nothing else than that it was love itself which was speaking.

2342<sup>3</sup>. The conjunction of the Lord with the human race is effected through love and charity and the derivative faith. Rep.

2343<sup>7</sup>. When love or charity was merely named, there was perceived from (those who had come from the Christian world) as it were a kind of darkness, and at the same time what was grimy, from a certain filthy love, which was of such a nature as to extinguish, suffocate, and pervert all the Perceptive of love to the Lord, and of charity towards the neighbour. Such is the faith at this day, which is said to save without the goods of charity.

—<sup>e</sup>. For the Divine Human of the Lord is pure love; and the Holy is of love alone . . .

2454<sup>4</sup>. 'The abomination of desolation'=the state of the Church when there is no love, and no charity.

2500<sup>3</sup>. An arcana which as yet is known to scarcely anyone, is that in love itself there are wisdom and intelligence; but these are such as is the love. (The reason is) that all influx takes place into the love; or, what is the same, into good; thus into the life itself of the man . . .

2572<sup>3</sup>. As the Angels are in love to the Lord and in mutual love, they are also in all truth; thus in all wisdom and intelligence, not only of celestial and spiritual things, but also of rational and natural things; for from love, because from the Lord, they are in the very beginnings or springs of things; that is, in ends and causes . . .

2715<sup>e</sup>. The spiritual man . . . does not know . . . what love and charity in their essence are.

2718<sup>4</sup>. For example: that all delight, bliss, and happiness are solely from love; and that such as is the love, such are the delight, bliss, and happiness . . .

2739. From the marriage of good and truth in the Heavens descend all loves, which are circumstanced as are the love of parents towards their children, the love of brothers towards each other, and love towards relatives, and so on according to the degrees in their order. According to these loves, which are solely from good and truth, that is, from love and faith in the Lord, are formed all the heavenly Societies . . .

2744. All freedom is from love: thus the greatest freedom is from conjugal love . . .

2826<sup>9</sup>. 'The fear of Jehovah is clean'=love.

2871<sup>2</sup>. Therefore these loves with their cupidities were taken away from him—which is effected there by means of dissociation—and he was then seen like an infant swimming with his hands . . .

2873<sup>e</sup>. Hence all in the other life are distinguished according to freedoms; or, what is the same, according to loves and affections . . .

3001. Those men who are in love and charity are in correspondence. Ex. 3484.

3063. For love is the very esse of life.

3066<sup>e</sup>. For love is the end and use with all things . . .

3104<sup>3</sup>. 'Mountains and hills'=the celestial things of love.

3120. The perception of the influx of love. Sig. and Ex.

3122. For the celestial never thought about the things of faith or truth ; but about those which are of love or good.

3138. Illustration and apperception are not possible unless there is affection or love, which is spiritual heat, and gives life to the things which are illustrated by the light.

3222. Loves and their affections are represented (there) by flames ; and this with inexpressible variation.

3300<sup>2</sup>. 'Red' = the good of life, because all good is of love ; and love itself is celestial and spiritual fire . . . Moreover, love is compared to the blood . . .

3310<sup>3</sup>. But when they have been regenerated, they do not do good from doctrinal things ; but from love and charity . . .

3325<sup>9</sup>. See LEVI, here.

3539<sup>4</sup>. That love and charity are essential with man. Ex.

3596<sup>2</sup>. 'Food,' in general, = the things which are of love and charity . . .

3643. In proportion as the Angels are in love, charity, and the derivative faith, in the same proportion they are in an aura of vernal light and heat.

3690<sup>5</sup>. The Lord is worshipped when He is loved.

3701<sup>4</sup>. (The first idea) that all love begins from self.

3748. All things which are of any life—that is, which are of love and affection—follow him . . .

3798<sup>2</sup>. From the love in which he is, everyone sees the things which are of that love, and the things which he sees he calls truths, because they are consentaneous thereto. In everyone's love is the light of his life ; for love is like a flame from which is light. Such, therefore, as is the love or flame, such is the light of truth which he has . . .

3800. 'Jacob kissed Rachel' = love towards interior truths ; for 'to kiss' = union and conjunction from affection, consequently love ; because, regarded in itself, love is union and conjunction from affection.

3801. The ardour of love. Sig.

3827. 'They were in his eyes as a few days in his loving her' (Gen.xxix.20) = a state of love ; namely, that it is devoid of weariness. Ex.

3858<sup>11</sup>. (The blossoming of Levi's rod) = that love is the essential and principal of all things in the Lord's Kingdom ; and that all fructification is thence.

3862<sup>2</sup>. When the order begins from love, then everything which follows thence in genuine order appears flaming . . .

3863<sup>12</sup>. For faith is the eye of love, for the Lord is seen by love through faith ; love is the life of faith. Sig.

3865. 'Now my man will love me' (Gen.xxix.32) = that thence is the good of truth. 'Will love' = the derivative good ; for all good is of love.

3875. See CLEAVE, here.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'To love' (Matt.vi.24) = the Celestial of love ; and 'to cleave' = the Spiritual of love.

3887<sup>2</sup>. Hence the cardiac motions with those (in the Spiritual World) are according to the states of love . . .

3938<sup>9</sup>. Affection is the Continuous of love. (Fully ex. under AFFECTION, here.)

—<sup>6</sup>. Love is the will of man, and derivatively is his thought, and thus is his action.

3941. Faith as to its state of love and charity. Sig. and Ex.

—, 'Wheat' = love and charity ; hence 'wheat harvest' = the advancing state of love and charity. Ill.

3986<sup>4</sup>. Although goods and truths in the Spiritual World are various . . . still they make one from the Divine through love and charity ; for love and charity are spiritual conjunction.

3994<sup>5</sup>. As faith is not faith except from charity towards the neighbour, and thus from love to the Lord . . . hence the Lord first asks Peter whether he 'loves' Him ; that is, whether love is in faith . . .

4099<sup>6</sup>. Those things have the dominion which are loved more.

4128. See TENT, here.

4154<sup>6</sup>. Truth is called holy from the affection, that is, from the love, which inflows from the Lord, and causes the man to be affected with truth.

4175. The reason 'the heat' = too much love, is that spiritual fire and heat are love ; and, on the other hand, spiritual cold is no love ; for the life itself of man is nothing but love ; for without love man has no life whatever . . . But 'cold' does not signify the privation of all love, but the privation of spiritual and celestial love . . . When a man is deprived of this love, there is kindled the love of self and of the world. This love is relatively cold, and also becomes cold . . .

4180<sup>2</sup>. They who are in evil do not receive Divine good ; for they are in no love and charity ; for all good is of love and charity.

4191<sup>6</sup>. All conjunction is through love and charity ; as may be known to everyone ; for spiritual conjunction is nothing else than love and charity . . .

4211. Feasts with the Ancients signified appropriation and conjunction through love and charity.

—, As there is no good which is good except that which is of love and charity, therefore 'bread' = love and charity.

4274<sup>2</sup>. That the first of combat is as to truth, is because the man loves it principally. That which is the object of anyone's love is what is attacked by evil Spirits. But after he loves good more than truth . . . he is tempted as to good.

4286<sup>2</sup>. (The spiritual Angels love others more than themselves ; but the natural Angels do not love others more than themselves, but as themselves.)

—<sup>5</sup>. For that which a man loves, he easily drinks in and apprehends ; but with difficulty that which he does not love.

4307. The presence of Spirits with man is circumscribed according to his loves ; good Spirits and Angels are present with those who are in spiritual and celestial love ; and evil Spirits with those who are solely in corporeal and worldly love ; and this is so much the case, that everyone may know what kind of Spirits are with him provided he will observe the quality of his loves; or, what is the same, the quality of his ends; for every one has as an end that which he loves. 431<sup>r</sup>2.

[A.] 4320. That love appropriates to another that which is its own, is known; for it presents itself in the other, and makes itself present in him. How much more the Divine love!

4351. 'He embraced him'=the first conjunction of love. Ex.

4352. For the good which inflows through the Internal is of love; for there is not any spiritual and celestial good which is not of love... Hence it is called good with man. The love itself which is in good and with good, is that which conjoins. Unless love were present there could never be any conjunction; for love is nothing else than spiritual conjunction, because it is effected through love. This love is from no other source than the Lord; for He is the Fountain and origin of all celestial and spiritual love, consequently of all the good thence. This love is twofold, celestial and spiritual; celestial love is love to the Lord, and spiritual love is love towards the neighbour, which is called charity. It is these loves from which is all celestial and spiritual good, and which conjoin themselves with the truths of faith; for the truths of faith regarded without love are only words without life; but through love, thus through conjunction with the good of love, they receive life. Hence it may be evident that there never is anything of faith except with those who are in the good of love; and that the faith is according to the love.

—<sup>3</sup>. The trust or confidence which is called of faith with any others than those who are in love and charity is either spurious or...

4434<sup>3</sup>. 'To love the daughter of a strange god' (Mal. ii. 11)=to conjoin one's self with falsity.

4435. 'He loved the girl, and spoke upon her heart' (Gen. xxxiv. 3)=love.

4459<sup>e</sup>. The use itself which a man loves determines his life... for in the love is the life of everyone.

4464<sup>3</sup>. The spheres which are perceived in the other life all arise from the loves and the derivative affections in which they had been; consequently from the life, for the loves and derivative affections make the life itself...

4675. 'Israel loved Joseph more than all his sons' (Gen. xxxvii. 3)=the conjunction of the Divine Spiritual of the Rational with the Divine Spiritual of the Natural. 'To love'=to be conjoined; for love is spiritual conjunction.

4727<sup>2</sup>. For love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour make man new and sanctify him; but the Divine love itself made the Lord Divine; for love is the very esse of man, and hence is his life; it forms the man according to its own image...

4735<sup>2</sup>. When the Angels appear... they appear as forms of love and charity under the human shape; and this from the Lord. Ex.

4776<sup>4</sup>. It is to be known that all things are in the loves; for the loves are what make the life; consequently the Lord's life inflows into nothing else than the loves. Such, therefore, as are the loves, such are the lives, because such are the receptions of life. Love towards the neighbour receives the life of Heaven, and the love of self receives the life of Hell. Thus in love towards the neighbour there is everything of Heaven, and in the love of self there is everything of Hell. That all things are in the loves, may be illustrated by many things in nature. All animals... are borne along according to their loves; and into their loves inflow all things which conduce to their life. Enum. ... All these things are effected by an influx into their loves. It is on y the forms of their affections which vary the effects of life. All these things are in their loves. How much more would there be in celestial love if man were in it! Would there not be all the wisdom and intelligence which are in Heaven? Hence, too, it is, that they who have lived in charity, and no others, are received into Heaven; and that from charity they are in the power to receive and imbue all truths... The contrary happens to those who are in... some truths, and not in charity. Their loves receive such things as are in agreement with them; to wit, the loves of self and of the world receive things which are contrary to truths, such as there are in the Hells.

4797<sup>2</sup>. Into innocence as into a plane inflow love and charity from the Lord.

4804. The Societies of friendship are constituted of those who... had loved those with whom they had associated; caring nothing as to whether they were good or evil, provided they were agreeable people...

4812. The sons from Tamar=the two essentials of the Church,—faith and love... Their birth represents that love is actually the first-born of the Church...

4837<sup>3</sup>. For love conjoins all; and when the love of good and truth is in each one, there is a General from the Lord, thus the Lord, which conjoins all. The love of good and truth is that which is called love towards the neighbour...

4844<sup>17</sup>. For the doctrinals of the Ancient Church were doctrinals of love and charity, which contained innumerable things which at this day are completely obliterated...

4985<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that the Angels of Heaven are of ineffable beauty; for they are as it were loves and charities in form...

5002. As Heaven makes one through love from the Lord, and reciprocal love to Him by reception, and by mutual love, it is called a marriage... So would it be with the Church, if with it love and charity were its esse.

5034. (What is against the love causes anger.)

5042. The Divine Esse itself is love... incomprehensible.

5071<sup>2</sup>. All the vital fire is from the loves with man; heavenly fire is from the love of good and truth; and infernal fire is from the love of falsity and evil...

5130<sup>2</sup>. He who is in any love, whatever it may be, is continually thinking about the things which are of that love; and this although he is in thought, speech, or action in other things. This is manifestly evident in the other life from the spiritual spheres which are around everyone . . . For that which universally reigns with anyone produces that sphere, and manifests his life before others.

—<sup>e</sup>. For that which a man loves, reigns . . .

5145<sup>3</sup>. Hence it is that after death, if a man has lived a life of love and charity, he can be translated even into the Third Heaven . . .

5199<sup>2</sup>. For such as is the love or affection which shines forth from the form of the face, such is the beauty . . .

5280<sup>8</sup>. (Impure loves which first introduce truths.) In order that these loves may be removed, the man is let into a state of temptation; which takes place in this way:—these loves are excited by the infernal crew; for that crew wants to live in them; and then the affections of truth and good are excited by the Angels . . .

5459<sup>2</sup>. 'To fear,' in the supreme sense . . . =love. Ex.

5530. The truths which are most in agreement with the loves are in the middle . . . and therefore the things which are in the middle are called consanguineous; for love makes consanguinity . . .

5691. Mercy from love. Sig. and Ex.

5807. 'His father loves him' (Gep. xlv. 20) = that it has conjunction with spiritual good from the Natural. 'To love' = conjunction.

—<sup>2</sup>. It is to be known that love is spiritual conjunction because it is a conjunction of the minds—or of the thought and will—of two. Hence it is evident that regarded in itself love is what is purely spiritual, and that its Natural is the delight of consociation and conjunction. As regards its essence, love is what is harmonic resulting from the changes of state and the variations in the forms or substances of which the human mind consists. If this Harmonic is from the heavenly form, it is heavenly love. Hence it may be evident that love cannot derive its origin from any other source than the Divine love itself, which is from the Lord; and thus that love is the Divine which inflows into forms, and disposes them so that the changes of state, and the variations, are in the harmony of Heaven. But the opposite loves—namely, the loves of self and of the world—are not conjunctions, but disjunctions. They indeed appear as conjunctions; but this takes place because the one regards the other as one with himself so long as he acts as one with him . . . But as soon as the one does not favour the other, there is disjunction. It is otherwise with heavenly love. This is utterly averse to doing well to anyone for the sake of self; but it does it for the sake of the good which is with the other and which he receives from the Lord; consequently for the sake of the Lord Himself, from whom is the good.

5881<sup>2</sup>. Scientifics and truths are ordained into these fascicular forms only by the man's loves; into infernal forms by the loves of self and of the world; but into heavenly forms by love towards the neighbour and by love to God.

thinking, but solely for what he loves; whereas Spirits care nothing for what the man loves, but for what he thinks.

6073. For to love anyone and not to do good to him when one is able, is not to love. But to do good to him when one is able, and this from the heart, is to love him . . .

6135<sup>3</sup>. When the Angels are presented present, love pours forth (from their whole bodies), so that you would believe them to be nothing but love. Their bodies also appear resplendent and lucid from the light thence derived; for the good of love is like a flame, which emits from itself light, which is the derivative truth of faith . . . How much more must this be the case with the Lord, from whom is all the love with the Angels, and whose Divine love appears as a Sun, from which the universal Heaven has its light; and all there have their heavenly heat, that is, love; thus life. The Divine Human of the Lord is what thus appears . . .

6195<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) man is conjoined with Heaven, or with Hell, by loves; by the loves of self and of the world with Hell; and by the loves of the neighbour and of God with Heaven.

—<sup>e</sup>. I was loosed from those (who had been attached to me only by slight affections) solely by means of intermediate loves; by which they were by degrees conjoined with others.

6196. That Spirits are associated with man according to his loves, has been made known to me by manifold experience. As soon as I have begun to love anything very much, Spirits were present who were in such love; and they were not removed until the love had ceased.

6262. The influx of love from the Internal. Tr. For the External cannot be in love towards the Internal, except through influx and elevation from the Internal. The love itself which is felt in the External is of the Internal.

6323<sup>2</sup>. Brute animals are acted upon no otherwise than by the loves and the affections of these into which they have been created . . . Each animal is carried whither its affections and love draws it; and as this is so, they are also in all the scientifics which ever are of that love . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. If man were in the order in which he was created; namely, in love towards the neighbour, and in love to the Lord—for these loves are proper to man—he above all animals would be born not only into scientifics, but also into all spiritual truths and celestial goods . . .

6377<sup>7</sup>. 'He poured in oil and wine' = that he performed the works of love and charity.

6396. As these do not act from love, but from obedience . . . they are in the First Heaven. Sig.

6495<sup>2</sup>. He is held in bonds by his loves themselves.

6564. Good gives life and its heat, which is love.

6566. 'Joseph wept' = reception from love.

6632. The whole Sacred Scripture is nothing else than the doctrine of love and charity. Ill.

6709. It is love which determines the degree in which each is the neighbour . . . 6710, Ex.

6711. They who do not love themselves more than others . . . derive the origin of the neighbour from Him whom they must love above all things . . . and they hold everyone as the neighbour according to the quality of their love for Him. Therefore, they who love others as themselves, and still more they who, like the Angels, love others more than themselves, all derive the origin of the neighbour from the Lord. Ex.

[A.] 6812°. For the things which are for delectation and love inflow as it were of their own accord, and remain. All other things do not enter, but only touch the surface . . .

6821. He who lovea his country . . . in the other life loves the Lord's Kingdom . . . and he who lovea the Lord's Kingdom, lovea the Lord.

6832°. The reason 'flame'=Divine love, is that love in its first origin is nothing else than the fire and flame from the Lord as a Sun . . . Ill.

6849. The Divine Itself is pure love, and pure love is as a fire more ardent than that of the sun . . .

6866°. It is the love which makes similitude and dissimilitude.

—3. That a man is completely as is his love, is a constant Truth. This is evident from the Angels in the other life, who when seen appear as forms of love. Love itself not only shines, but also exhales, from them; so that you would say that they are wholly nothing but lovea. The reason is that all the interiors of an Angel—as also of a man—are nothing but forms recipient of life; and as they are forms recipient of life, they are forms recipient of lovea; for loves make the life of man. As, therefore, the influent love [and the recipient form accord, it follows that the Angel or man is such as is his love; and this not only in his organic principles, which are in the brain; but also in the whole body . . .

6960. 'Bosom'=love; for the things which are of the breast correspond to love; because the heart is therein, which corresponds to celestial love, and the lungs, which correspond to spiritual love. As 'the bosom' corresponds to love, by it is also signified the proprium; for that of man is proper to him which is of his love.

7045. The removal of filthy lovea. Sig. and Ex.

—2. If the most external loves—which are called corporeal and earthly loves—are without internal loves—which are called spiritual and celestial loves—they are filthy.

7081. The very life of man is his love; and such as his love is, such is his life; nay, such is the whole man. But the dominant or reigning love—that is, the love of the thing which he has as an end—is the love which makes the man. This love has subordinated to itself many particular and singular loves, which are derivations, and appear under a different shape; but still the dominant love is in every one of them, and directs them; and, through them, as through mediate ends, looks to and aims at its end . . . N.54.

7082. There are two things in the natural world, which make the life there; namely, heat and light: and there are two things in the Spiritual World which make the life there; namely, love and faith. The heat in the natural world corresponds to the love in the Spiritual World . . . Hence it is that when spiritual heat or fire is mentioned, love is meant . . . Moreover, love is actually the vital heat of man; for it is known that man grows warm from love . . .

7083. Spiritual heat and light, or love and faith, come forth from the Sun of Heaven . . .

7084. From this correspondence it may be known how the case is with faith and with love. Faith without love is like light without heat . . . and faith with love is like light with heat . . .

7085. As then love is the source of man's life, and as the whole man is such as is his love, and also as love is spiritual conjunction, it follows that all in the other life are consociated according to loves; for his life—that is, his love—follows everyone. They who are in love towards the neighbour, and in love to God, are consociated in Heaven; whereas they who are in the love of self and the love of the world, are consociated in Hell; for the love of self is opposite to love to God, and the love of the world is opposite to love towards the neighbour.

7324°. That lovea are vital fires, may be evident to him who considers.

7326. 'Blood'=the Holy of love; thus charity and faith.

7371. Everything which is done according to love is delightful; and therefore the quality of the love may be known from the delight.

7437°. They who are in evils cannot but think to falsities . . . for what a man wills he lovea; and what he lovea he confirms and defends . . .

7501. When evil Spirits are attacking anyone, they know to insinuate themselves into his delights . . . and pleasantnesses . . . thus into the things which are of his love; and so long as they are in such insinuation they hold down him whom they are infesting as with a bond . . . for love and insinuation into the delight of love conjoin . . . This is evident from the like thing in the world: he who insinuates himself into the delight of another which is of his love, holds him bound, and also leads him.

7693°. To look to Heaven is not to think about the things of Heaven; but to have them as an end, that is, to love them above all other things; for wherever the love turns itself, thither the interiors of the man turn themselves; and consequently the thought.

7743°. The bird's being turned into stone=the life of Knowledges without love . . .

7750. Here therefore we may show that only those have spiritual life who are in heavenly love, and thence in Knowledges ; and that love contains in itself all the Knowledge which is of that love. For example, animals . . . have this knowledge of all things which belong to their love. Their loves are, to nourish themselves, to dwell in safety, to propagate offspring, to feed their young ; and therefore they have all the requisite knowledges ; for this is in these loves, and inflows into them as into its own receptacles . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. If man were in his love—which is love to God and towards the neighbour ; for this love is proper to man and is that by which he is distinguished from beasts—he would not only be in all requisite knowledge, but also in all intelligence and wisdom ; and he would have no need to learn these things ; for they would inflow into these loves from Heaven, that is, through Heaven from the Divine. But as man is not in these loves, but in the contrary ones, namely, in the love of self and the love of the world, he cannot but be born into all ignorance and want of knowledge. But by Divine means he is brought to something of intelligence and wisdom ; but still not actually into any, unless he removes the loves of self and of the world ; and thus opens the way for love to the Lord and towards the neighbour. (Continued under LOVE TO THE LORD.)

7788<sup>2</sup>. Where there is love there is respect (that is, looking that way) ; but where there is not love there is not respect, except that which is from fear.

7818. By to look above or below one's self is meant to have as the end, or to love above all things. Thus by to look above one's self is meant . . . to love above all things those things which are of the Lord and Heaven ; and by to look below one's self is meant . . . to love above all things those things which are of self and the world. The interiors of man also actually turn themselves whither the love turns itself.

7819<sup>2</sup>. When therefore the means is loved for the sake of the end, it is not the means which is loved, but the end.

7856. Be not without love. Sig. and Ex.

7984<sup>2</sup>. In the other life this measure is filled with everyone . . . This measure is acquired in the world through the affections which are of love. The more anyone has loved evil and the derivative falsity, the greater is the measure he has acquired for himself ; and the more anyone has loved good and the derivative truth, the greater is that measure. (Continued under MEASURE.)

8672<sup>2</sup>. For all joy is of love.

8682<sup>2</sup>. The reason the flesh of the sacrifices was to be eaten, was that there might be represented . . . consociation through love ; for the flesh of the sacrifices . . . signified the good of love.

8702<sup>2</sup>. That which the will wills and loves, the understanding thinks and confirms . . .

8762. Those are of the Internal Church who do good to the neighbour, and worship the Lord, from love.

8814<sup>2</sup>. The Divine in the other life appears to everyone according to the quality of his faith and love.

8853. Every man has a proprium which he loves above all things. Ex. 8854, Examps.

8855. Every man has as the end that which he loves above all things. He regards it in each and all things. It is in his will like the hidden current of a river which draws and carries him along ; and also when he is doing anything ; for it is that which animates him. Such is that which one man explores in another . . . and according to it either leads him, or acts with him.

8869. To have the voluntary or the intellectual proprium for a god, is to love above all things that which proceeds from one's self. Sig.

8885<sup>2</sup>. For the will is the inmost of man, because it is formed from his love ; for whatever a man loves, he wills ; and that which he loves above all things, he wills inmost. (Continued under WILL.)

8897. 'Honour thy father and thy mother'=love for good and truth ; in the supreme sense for the Lord and His Kingdom. 'To honour'=to love ; for, in the spiritual sense, honour is love . . .

8910. For that which an evil love breathes is called concupiscence ; but that which a good love breathes is called longing. Love itself pertains to . . . the will ; for whatever a man loves he wills ; but concupiscence pertains to both the will and the understanding . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. For faith without love is not faith, and love without faith is not love ; for love has its quality from faith, and faith has its life from love. Hence faith without love is dead, and faith with love is alive . . .

9079<sup>2</sup>. In the angelic Societies they love each other . . . according to the similitudes and proximities of goods . . .

9174<sup>4</sup>. 'To love enemies . . . ' = the affection of charity ; but enemies are loved . . . when they are instructed, and also amended by suitable means.

9213. A state of shade from the delights of external loves. Sig. and Ex.

9219. Love is called mercy when it is towards those who are in miseries . . .

9265. When what is heavenly and Divine is loved more than what is worldly and earthly . . .

9279<sup>2</sup>. The things which relate to good are called loves and affections.

9310. It is proper to love to will that all which is its own should be out of itself in others.

9312. Compliance from faith and love. Sig. and Ex.

9383. All the heat of life is love.

9394. The internal sight . . . sees nothing else in the fields or gardens of the things of the memory than those which are in agreement with the loves in which the man is . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. The things which thoroughly enter into the loves, and become spontaneous and as it were natural, vanish from the external memory, but remain inscribed on the internal memory . . .

9434<sup>2</sup>. There are two loves completely opposite to each other—heavenly love and infernal love. Heavenly love is love to the Lord, and love towards the neighbour ; and infernal love is the love of self, and the love of the world. They with whom infernal loves reign, are in Hell ; and they with whom heavenly loves reign, are in Heaven. For love is the Vital itself of man ; for without love there is no life whatever ; for from love everyone has the heat and fire of life . . . Hence it follows, that such as is the love, such is the life ; consequently, that such as is the love, such is the man : and therefore everyone can know from his loves themselves, whether Heaven is in him, or Hell. Love is like a fire or flame with man, and also is the vital fire or flame . . . and faith is as the light (therefrom).

9460. That all things should be from love, thus from freedom. Sig. and Ex.

9585. See FREE, here.

9613<sup>3</sup>. (The law that) love is spiritual conjunction, whence is heavenly harmony.

9723. The understanding looks into the external memory . . . and chooses such things there as are in agreement with its love . . . For the things which a man loves he sees in light ; but the things which he does not love he sees in shade. The latter he rejects, but the former he chooses. 10067<sup>2</sup>.

9841. The interior memory which is from the truths of faith which are from love. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. The truths of faith from love are those which love dictates, and which thus derive their esse from love. These truths are alive, because the things which are from love are alive. Hence the truths of faith from love are those which treat of love to the Lord and of charity towards the neighbour . . . The whole Word is the doctrine of such truths . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. For whether you say the Lord, or love from Him and thence to Him, it is the same ; for love is spiritual conjunction, and causes Him to be where love is ; for love presents as present in itself him who is loved.

9846<sup>2</sup>. This may be evident from the fact that man acknowledges as truths the things which he loves, and that thus he apprehends and acknowledges truths according to his love. Hence it is that truths constitute the form of good . . .

9857<sup>7</sup>. 'To pass by the love of God' (Luke xi. 42) = to pass by Divine good, and life therefrom.

9936<sup>3</sup>. To be in safety from the infestation of evils from Hell, because they are in the Lord through love. Sig.

9937<sup>6</sup>. For in temptations the Hells assault the love itself of him against whom they are fighting ; for the love of everyone is the inmost of his life . . .

10035. Thus to . . . the will pertain the things which are of love ; for the things which are of love are perceived as goods . . . Moreover . . . evils are of love . . .

10038<sup>2</sup>. That everyone's love is the fire of his life, may be known to every one who reflects ; for without love there is no life ; and such as the love is, such is the life ; and hence the love of self produces evils of every kind . . .

10067<sup>10</sup>. Whether you say love, or good, it is the same ; for all good is of love, and that which is of love is called good. And also whether you say love or the will it is the same ; for that which a man loves, he wills.

10076<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) the second state of the man who is being regenerated is to think and act from good ; or, what is the same, from love ; or, what is also the same, from the will ; for that which a man wills, he loves ; and that which he loves he calls good. But a man is in the second state for the first time when the whole of him from head to heel is such as is his love ; thus such as is his will and the derivative understanding. Ex.

10130<sup>2</sup>. In the other life all act from the heart, that is, from the will or love . . . There it is evident how the interiors communicate themselves to another . . . by the touch, and how the other receives them according to his love. The will or love of everyone constitutes the whole man there, and the derivative sphere of life flows forth from him like an exhalation . . . 10188<sup>4</sup>.

—<sup>3</sup>. Hence many wonderful things come forth there which are unknown to man in the world ; as, First, That all presence is according to the similitudes of the loves ; and all absence is according to their dissimilitudes. Secondly, That all are consociated according to the loves : those who are in love to the Lord from the Lord are consociated in the Inmost Heaven ; those who are in love to the neighbour from the Lord are consociated in the Middle Heaven ; those who are in the obedience of faith . . . are consociated in the Ultimate Heaven ; but those who are in the love of self and of the world . . . are consociated in Hell. Thirdly, That all turn their eyes to those whom they love: they who love the Lord turn their eyes to the Lord as a Sun; they who love the neighbour from the Lord turn their eyes to the Lord as a Moon . . . and, wonderful to say, wherever they turn themselves . . . they still look to the Lord before them. It is the contrary with those who are in Hell; the more they are in the love of self and in the love of the world, the more they turn themselves from the Lord . . .

10134. The removal of evils through the good of innocence by the Lord in a state of love and derivative light in the internal man. Sig. and Ex.

10135. The like in a state of light and love in the external man. Sig. and Ex.

10143<sup>5</sup>. To do according to the Lord's precepts is truly the worship of Him; nay, is truly love and truly faith . . .

10153<sup>2</sup>. By good is meant love; for all that which is loved is called good. That his love or good makes a man, is known to everyone who explores another; for when he has explored him, he leads him by his love wherever he wants, inasmuch that when he is kept in his own love he is no longer his own master; and the reasons which are contrary to the love are of no avail, whereas those which are in agreement with the love avail for everything. That this is the case is manifestly evident in the other life; there all Spirits are known from their loves; and when they are kept in them, they cannot do anything contrary to them; for to act contrary to them is to act against themselves. Therefore they are forms of their own loves; those who are in the Heavens are forms of charity and celestial love . . . and those who are in the Hells are forms of their loves, which are those of self and of the world . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. As, therefore, the whole man is such as is his love, it is evident that the Lord cannot be present in evil love, but in good love with man . . .

10175a. By the preparation of the oil of anointing is signified the quality of love in worship.

10177. A representative of the grateful hearing and reception by the Lord of all things of worship [which are] from love and charity. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. The reason that only is grateful . . . to the Lord which is from love and charity, is that love makes the whole man; for a man is such as is his love. Hence it is that the Angels in the Heavens are loves and charities in form. The very form which they have thence is the human form; because the Lord who is in them, and forms them, as to the Divine Human, is Divine love itself . . .

10189<sup>2</sup>. For an Angel and a Spirit is his own love; and where it is thither he turns himself . . .

10198. The elevation by the Lord of the worship [which is] from love and charity. Sig. and Ex.

10200. When the state of love is in clearness. Sig. and Ex.

10201<sup>2</sup>. For the light of truth with a man is entirely according to the state of his love. In proportion as the love is kindled, in the same proportion truth shines . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Whereas when there are strange loves, as with those who have turned from the Lord and the neighbour to self and the world, then these loves lead him; but from truths into falsities . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. These things have been said in order that it may be known that the faith of everyone is as is his love . . .

10202. Elevation also in an obscure state of love, when truth also is in its shade. Sig. and Ex.

10295<sup>6</sup>. Truths with (the celestial) are inscribed on their love; and therefore when they do the precepts from love, they do them at the same time from truths, without any thought about them from what is doctrinal . . .

10300<sup>5</sup>. Hence it is said that he 'shall dwell in parched places, and in a salty land;' that is, in filthy loves and their desires, which have destroyed the good and truth of the Church.

10362. To be led by self and their own loves. Sig. and Ex.

10364. He who turns himself to corporeal and worldly loves from heavenly loves. Sig.

10402. The extraction from the sense of the letter of the Word of such things as favour external loves, and the derivative principles. Sig. and Ex.

10413. Excitation by their loves. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. The difference between an elevation to a state of the loves with the good, and with the evil, is that the good then ascend, and the evil descend; for the loves with the good are heavenly loves, which elevate them, and increase according to the ascent to heaven; whereas the loves with the evil are infernal loves which depress them, and increase according to the descent to Hell.

10414. The worship of their own loves; thus of their delights and the derivative falsities. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. It is said the worship of the loves, because that is worshipped which is loved, and love worships.

10420<sup>3</sup>. Spirits turn themselves according to their loves . . . In the Spiritual World the quarter is determined by each one's love, which turns him . . .

10422<sup>2</sup>. For all truth leads to its own love; for that is called truth which confirms that which is loved.

10483<sup>2</sup>. For every man has with him Spirits from Hell and Angels from Heaven. The Spirits from Hell are in his corporeal and worldly loves; and the Angels from Heaven are in his celestial and spiritual loves.

10580<sup>6</sup>. Those who are in faith there dwell upon rocks; but those who are in love dwell upon mountains.

10596. The life of a man after death is the life of his love and the life of his faith . . .

10645. That the Lord alone is to be worshipped from faith and love. Sig. and Ex.

— Those who are in His Celestial Kingdom worship Him from love.

10661<sup>9</sup>. The truth with a man becomes good when he loves it; for everything which is loved is good. To love is to will and to do; for that which a man loves, he wills and does.

10683<sup>4</sup>. They who love to do truth for the sake of truth, love the Lord . . .

— For in "proportion as a man wills truth, he loves it.

10694<sup>2</sup>. For when heavenly love, which is love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour, inflows into earthly loves, which are the loves of self and of the world, it induces anguish as of death.

10702<sup>2</sup>. The interiors of man actually turn themselves according to his loves. With those who love the Lord, the interiors turn themselves to the Lord or Heaven; thus inwards; but with those who love themselves, they turn themselves to the world; thus outwards.

10709<sup>2</sup>. When anyone binds another down by such things as are of his love, they say . . .

10714. There are two things which make the life of man—love and faith. Love makes the life of his will . . .

10715. The love of good and the derivative faith of truth make the life of Heaven; and the love of evil and the derivative faith of falsity make the life of Hell.

10717. With all who receive love and faith from the Lord there is Heaven . . .

10731. Spiritual death for those who are led by themselves and their own loves. Sig. and Ex.

10740. That which anyone does from love remains inscribed on his heart; for love is the fire of the life, thus is the life, of everyone. Hence such as the love is, such is the life; and such as the life is—thus such as the love is—such is the whole man as to the soul and as to the body.

10814. All these dominate from love, like that of a father towards his children . . .

H. 1<sup>3</sup>. That at the end of the Church, when there is no longer any love, and thence no faith, the Lord will reveal the Word as to its internal sense . . . Sig.

14. The reason the Divine in Heaven, which makes it, is love, is that love is spiritual conjunction; it conjoins the Angels with the Lord, and it conjoins them one with another; and so conjoins them, that in the Lord's sight all are as one. Besides, love is the esse itself of everyone's life . . . But it is to be known that everyone's life is such as is his love. 17. 18.

145. The forehead corresponds to love . . .

155. The Angels are not always in the same state as to love . . . Ex. 159<sup>9</sup>.

218. (Thus) the governors are those who are pre-eminently in love and wisdom . . .

232. All power is in truths from good, and there is none in truths without good . . . It is the like with faith and love . . . for whether you say good or love, it is the same thing . . .

253<sup>9</sup>. They are elevated . . . by a conversion of the love.

272<sup>2</sup>. In the Spiritual World it is the love which turns the interiors of everyone to itself . . .

289. Therefore when the Angels are in a state of love, they are in a state of peace.

294<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is . . . that man is conjoined with that Society . . . in which he is as to his love.

349<sup>9</sup>. For love receives everything which is in agreement with itself . . .

368<sup>2</sup>. There is a like difference between faith and love (as between man and woman).

383. At the first view they inmostly love each other.

390. Spiritual love, esteem, and honour are nothing else than the love, esteem, and honour of the use in the person . . .

396. All delights flow forth from love . . .

424<sup>9</sup>. Then faith and love conjoin themselves . . .

455<sup>2</sup>. But when turned to the love of their will, they comprehended nothing . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. To love and to will are the same thing. Ex. 473.

479. That a man after death is his own love, or his own will. Gen.art.

— Everyone is carried to the Society where his love is; and when he comes there he is as it were at home . . . and when he goes away from it . . . there is constantly some resistance . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That after death a man is his own love, may be evident from this—that the things which do not make one with his reigning love are then removed . . . and he is thus let into his own love . . . When this has been done, he constantly turns his face to his own love, which he has continually before his eyes, however he turns himself round. (Continued under RULING LOVE.)

—<sup>4</sup>. In proportion as anyone acts and speaks according to the love of another, he appears wholly . . . But in proportion as anyone acts and speaks against his love, his face begins to be changed, to be obscured, and not to appear . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. Every love is like spongy and porous wood, which imbibes such liquors as conduce to its vegetation, and repels all others . . . For every love wants to be nourished by its own things; an evil love by falsities, and a good love by truths. Shown from experience.

481<sup>2</sup>. As the loves thus determine the life of everyone, all, as soon as they come into the World of Spirits, are explored . . . and are attached to those who are in the like love . . . For everyone becomes his own love, not only as to the interiors which are of his mind, but also as to the exteriors which are of the face, body, and speech; for everyone becomes the effigy of his own love, even in externals. They who are corporeal loves appear gross, obscure, black, and ugly; and they who are heavenly loves appear lively, lucid, bright, and beautiful. They are also utterly unlike in minds and thoughts; they who are heavenly loves are intelligent and wise; and they who are corporeal loves are stupid and as it were idiotic.

—<sup>3</sup>. When it is granted to look into the interiors and exteriors of thought and affection of those who are in heavenly love, their interiors appear like light, those of some like flaming light, and their exteriors appear of various beautiful colours like rainbows. But the interiors of those who are in corporeal love appear as if they were black, because they are closed, and those of some as if they were dimly fiery . . . and their exteriors appear of a hideous colour, sad to look at . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. They who are in corporeal love see nothing in the light of Heaven . . . but the light of Hell . . . is to them as clear light . . . On the other hand, they who are in heavenly love, the more interiorly they come into the light of Heaven, the more clearly they see all things, and the more beautiful all things are, and the more intelligently and wisely they perceive truths.

—<sup>5</sup>. They who are in corporeal love cannot possibly live in the heat of Heaven, for the heat of Heaven is heavenly love; but they can live in the heat of Hell, which is the love of fiercely treating those who do not favour them. Contempt for others, enmities, hatreds, revenges, are the delights of this love; and when they are in these, they are in their life . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. They who are in corporeal love cannot breathe in Heaven . . . But those who are in heavenly love, breathe the more freely, and live the more fully, the more interiorly they are in Heaven.

—<sup>7</sup>. From these things it may be evident that celestial and spiritual love is Heaven with man, because on this love are inscribed all things of Heaven; and that corporeal and worldly love without celestial and spiritual love is Hell with man, because on these loves are inscribed all things of Hell.

482. That faith does not remain with a man if it is not from heavenly love. Gen.art.

483. That love in act is that which remains; thus that it is the life of a man. Ex.

487. But those who are in heavenly love receive instruction, and see their evils.

—<sup>8</sup>. These things have been said to the end that a man may explore himself, and from his delights may know his love . . .

489. But the delights of life of those who in the world have lived in heavenly love, are turned into things corresponding . . .

527. When the life of their love was taken away, they lay as if dead . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. For every Spirit is from head to heel such as is his love . . .

532. The love of a man is that which makes the intention, and which determines the sight of the internal man . . . to its objects; thus the love of self to self and its own things; the love of the world to worldly things; and the love of Heaven to heavenly things; from which—when a man's love is known—it may be known in what state are his interiors . . .

565. It is the end or use from which the love has its quality . . .

598. Nothing is appropriated to man except that which he does from the affection which is of love. All other things can indeed enter; but no further than into the thought . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that the freedom of man, and the affection which is of his love or will, are one . . . In a word, whatever does not enter in freedom with a man does not remain, because it is not of his love or will; and the things which are not of the love or will of a man are not of his spirit; for the esse of the spirit of man is the love or will. It is said the love or will, because that which a man loves, he wills.

603. For whatever is loved enters with light into the idea of the mind; especially when truth is loved, because all truth is in light.

N. 41. The interiors . . . with everyone are turned to that which he loves above all things; and the exteriors . . . are turned to where the interiors are turned.

54. On love in general. Gen.art. T.399.

55. That which a man loves above all things is constantly present in his thought, and also in his will, and it makes his veriest life. Examp.

59. There are two loves from which are all goods and truths—love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour . . . And there are two loves from which are all evils and falsities—the love of self and the love of the world. The latter two loves are completely opposite to the former two loves.

113. Man is able to know, think, and understand many things; but when he is left to himself he rejects those things which are not in agreement with his love; and he also rejects them after the life of the body, when he is in his spirit; for that only remains in the spirit of a man which has entered into his love . . .

J. 30. In the Spiritual World, everyone is the effigy of his own love, not only as to the face and body, but also as to the speech and actions.

32. But still the spirit is actually where its love is; that is, in the Society where are those who are in the like love.

36. Whether you say will or love it is the same; because everyone loves that which he wills, and wills that which he loves; and the will is the receptacle of love . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. Charity or love is to will and to do.

C.J. 21. All the ordination of the Societies in that World is an ordination according to the differences of love. The reason is that love is the life of man; and the Lord who is Divine love ordnates them according to the receptions thereof; and the differences of loves are innumerable, being known to the Lord alone. He conjoins . . . the Societies of the Heavens so that they lead one life of celestial and spiritual love; and the Societies of the Hells so that they lead one life of diabolical and infernal love. He conjoins the Heavens and the Hells by oppositions.

—<sup>8</sup>. Hence it is that in Heaven are those who are in spiritual love, and that in Hell are those who are solely in natural love. Spiritual love is implanted only by a life of charity; and natural love remains natural if a life of charity is omitted; and natural love, if not subject to spiritual love, is opposite to it.

L. 1. For wisdom is in love, and love is in wisdom. Sig.

Life 1. The life of man is his love; and that which a man loves he not only does freely, but he also thinks freely.

15. Hence it is that the Truth and love do not make one with a man unless he is spiritual. Ex.

32<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is evident that good conjoined with truth makes love and wisdom with Angels and with man . . .

48. But the thought of the understanding derives its existence from the love of the will . . .

102. To love anyone and to be conjoined with him with whom there is no Reciprocal is impossible.

F. 13. From these things it is evident, how love—which is the affection of good—produces faith . . . and through this produces charity, which is the same thing as the act of love through faith.

20<sup>e</sup>. For who loves a man solely as to his person. He loves him from that which is in him . . . thus from his quality . . . This quality which is loved is use . . .

W. 1. That love is the life of man. Gen.art. Man knows that there is such a thing as love, but he does not know what love is. He knows that there is such a thing as love from common speech . . . But although love is so universally in speech, scarcely anyone knows what love is. While meditating about it, being unable to form any idea of thought about it, he says either that it is not anything, or that it is only something inflowing from sight, hearing, touch, and intercourse, and thus moving us. He is utterly unaware that it is his very life; not only the general life of his whole body, and the general life of all his thoughts, but also the life of all the singulars thereof. This a wise man can perceive from this—If you remove the affection which is of love can you think anything? or can you do anything? Do not thought, speech, and action grow cold in proportion as the affection which is of love grows cold? And do they not grow warm in proportion as the affection grows warm? But a wise man perceives this, not from the Knowledge that love is the life of man, but from experience that so it happens.

2. No one knows what the life of man is, unless he knows that it is love . . .

3. Some idea of love, as being the life of man, can be had from the heat of the sun . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. Therefore also love is warm.

4. That God alone, thus the Lord, is love itself, because He is life itself . . . Gen.art.

14. Esse and existence . . . are distinctly one, like love and wisdom; for love is esse, and wisdom is existence; for love is impossible except in wisdom, and wisdom is impossible except from love; and therefore when love is in wisdom, then it comes forth. These two things are such a one, that they can indeed be distinguished in thought, but not in act; and (therefore) they are said to be distinctly one.

28. That the Divine essence itself is love and wisdom. Gen.art. . . For these two things are the essentials of all things of the life of man; everything civil, everything moral, and everything spiritual belonging to man, depend upon these two things, and without these two are not anything. The same is the case with all things of the life of a composite man, which is a society greater or less . . . Take away love and wisdom from them . . . and you will find that without them, as being from them, they are nothing.

29. That in God is love and at the same time wisdom in their very essence, can be denied by no one; for He loves all from love in Himself, and He leads all from wisdom in Himself.

30. It is from the fact that the Divine essence itself is love and wisdom that man has two faculties of life . . .

31. It is from the fact that the Divine essence itself is love and wisdom that all things in the universe have relation to good and to truth . . .

32. It is from the fact that the Divine essence itself is love and wisdom that the universe and all things in it, both living and not living, subsist from heat and light . . .

34. They are said to be distinctly one, because love and wisdom are two distinct things, but are so united that love is of wisdom and wisdom is of love; for love is in wisdom, and wisdom comes forth in love . . .

39. In man, love and wisdom appear to be two separate things; but still in themselves they are distinctly one; because with man the wisdom is such as is the love, and the love is such as is the wisdom. The wisdom which does not make one with its love, appears as if it were wisdom, and yet is not; and the love which does not make one with its wisdom, appears as if it were the love of wisdom, although it is not; for the one derives its essence and its life reciprocally from the other. The reason the wisdom and love with man appear to be two separate things, is that the faculty of understanding with him is capable of being elevated into the light of Heaven, but not the faculty of loving, except in so far as a man does as he understands. Whatever, therefore, of the apparent wisdom does not make one with the love of wisdom, relapses into the love which does make one; which may be a love not of wisdom; nay, a love of insanity . . .

40. The idea of men in general about love and wisdom is as of something volatile and fluent in the subtle air or ether; or as of an exhalation from something of the kind; and scarcely anyone thinks that they are really and actually a substance and a form. They who see that they are a substance and a form, still perceive the love and wisdom outside the subject as things flowing forth from it . . . not knowing that love and wisdom are the subject itself . . .

42. It is the same with love and wisdom (as with the five senses and their organs, in that the five senses are not any volatile thing flowing forth from their organs, but are the organs regarded in their substance and form), with the sole difference that the substances and forms which are love and wisdom do not stand forth before the eyes . . . But still no one can deny that those things of wisdom and love which are called thoughts, perceptions, and affections, are substances and forms. Ex.

47. The very essence—ipsum—of love, is not to love itself, but to love others, and to be conjoined with them by love. The very essence of love is also to be loved by others, for thus it is conjoined. The essence—essentia—of all love consists in conjunction; nay, its life, which is called delight, pleasantness, deliciousness, sweetness, bliss, happiness, and felicity. Love consists in this, that its own is another's, and that it feels his delight as delight in itself. This is to love. Whereas to feel its own delight in another, and not his delight in itself, is not to love; for this is to love self; but the former is to love the neighbour. These two kinds of love are diametrically opposite to each other. Both do indeed conjoin; and it does not appear that to love its own—that is, itself in the other—disjoins; when yet it so disjoins, that in the proportion that anyone has thus loved another, in the same proportion he afterwards hates him.

48. Who that can look into the essence of love cannot see this? For what is it to love self alone, and not some one outside of self by whom one may be loved in return—redametur? This is dissolution rather than conjunction. The conjunction of love is from what is reciprocal . . .

49. With respect to God, to love and to be loved reciprocally is not possible in others in whom there is anything of what is infinite . . . for if there were anything of what is infinite . . . in them, He would not be loved by others, but would love Himself. . . (Thus) He would be the love of self, of which not one whit is possible in God . . . Therefore the love must be possible in others in whom there is nothing of what is Divine in itself . . .

57°. From the freedom of thinking and willing according to reason . . . (The Angels) have a reception of Divine good and Divine truth as of themselves, and thereby is the reciprocal of love . . .

87. The reason that Snn appears before the eyes of the Angels as fiery, is that love and fire correspond to each other; for they cannot see love with their eyes, but instead of love they see that which corresponds to it.

102°. For the equal reception of love and wisdom is the Angelic itself; and therefore an Angel is an Angel of Heaven according to the union of love and wisdom with him . . . 114, Ex.

115. An Angel does not perceive otherwise than that he is in love and wisdom from himself, in like manner as a man, and thence that love and wisdom are his, or his own. Unless he did so perceive there would not be any conjunction . . . Nor is it possible for the Lord to be in any Angel or man, unless he in whom He is with love and wisdom perceives and feels them as his own. Ex. 116, Ex.

116°. But still in proportion as an Angel believes that love and wisdom are in him . . . in the same proportion the Angelic is not in him, and therefore in the same proportion there is no conjunction of him with the Lord.

117. Some suppose that Adam . . . was able to love God and be wise from himself . . . But he who is a recipient of life cannot love and be wise from anything of his own; and therefore Adam, when he wanted to love and be wise from what was his own, fell from wisdom and love, and was cast out of Paradise.

121. For (Angels and Spirits) dwell according to the receptions of love and wisdom from the Lord. Enum. 124°. 125.

125°. The reason the latter are in oblique aspect, is that love and wisdom proceed as one from the Lord, but are not received as one by the Angels . . . and the wisdom which abounds over love does indeed appear as wisdom, but still is not . . .

126. That the various reception of love and wisdom makes the quarter in the Spiritual World, may be evident from the fact that an Angel changes his quarter according to the increase and decrease of love with him.

127°. These pairs (of organs, etc.) are in Angel and man, in order that love and wisdom may act as one, and as one look to the Lord.

129. If a man is in love and wisdom, he is an Angel.

130°. Therefore an Angel can see . . . the Lord . . . within himself when he is thinking from love and wisdom, and outside himself when he is thinking about love and wisdom.

138. When the interiors are opened, love and wisdom inflow into the interiors of the mind, and the heat and light of Heaven into the interiors of the body . . . And love and wisdom with their heat and light are the Lord with a man.

—<sup>2</sup>. It is the contrary with those who are not in love and wisdom . . .

139. This actual conversion to the Lord is from love and at the same time from wisdom; not from love alone, nor from wisdom alone; for love alone is like esse without its existere, for love comes forth in wisdom; and wisdom without love is like existere without its esse, for wisdom comes forth from love. Love is indeed possible without wisdom, but this love is of man and not of the Lord; and wisdom is also possible without love, but although this wisdom is from the Lord, it has not the Lord in it . . .

141. Something shall be said about loves, because the subject treated of is the conversion of Angels and Spirits from their loves to their loves. The universal Heaven is distinguished into Societies according to all the differences of loves; in like manner Hell; and in like manner the World of Spirits. But Heaven is distinguished into Societies according to the differences of heavenly loves; Hell according to the differences of infernal loves; and the World of Spirits according to the differences of both heavenly and infernal loves. There are two loves which are the heads of all the rest, or to which all other loves have relation. The love which is the head, or to which all heavenly loves have relation, is love to the Lord; and the love which is the head, or to which all infernal loves have relation, is the love of dominating from the love of self. These two loves are diametrically opposite to each other. 142, Ex. 143. 144.

144°. They may turn themselves round and round, but all the things which they see around them appear similar to their love.

145°. Every Spirit enters the way which leads to the Society of his own love . . .

171°. Man is then elevated by the reception of love and wisdom from the Lord; and all means have been provided in order for him to receive love and wisdom.

[W.] 179. That there are degrees of love and wisdom, and thence degrees of heat and light . . . Gen.art.

— The Angels of the Third Heaven so far excel the Angels of the Second Heaven in love and wisdom, and these the Angels of the Ultimate Heaven, that they cannot be together. The degrees of love and wisdom distinguish and separate them . . . For each Angel is his own love and his own wisdom; and love together with wisdom in its form is a man . . .

— The Angels of the Third Heaven are invisible to those of the Ultimate Heaven, because their love and wisdom are imperceptible to them; and it is the love and wisdom which cause an Angel to appear as a man.

180. That there are degrees of love and wisdom, is still more manifestly evident from the love and wisdom of the Angels relatively to the love and wisdom of men; (the former) being ineffable . . .

191. For the atmospheres are receptacles of heat and light; and heat and light are receptacles of love and wisdom. Therefore, as there are degrees of atmospheres, there are like degrees of heat and light, and like degrees of love and wisdom; (the second degree being formed by composition from the first, and the third from the second. See 190.)

192. Therefore also the degrees of love and wisdom are homogeneous.

197. (The first degree of love and wisdom is the all in all things of the following degrees.)

200. Perfection of life is perfection of love and wisdom . . .

205. In the like successive order are the states of love and wisdom with the Angels.

209. Love and wisdom are not abstract things, but are a substance . . . Love and wisdom are impossible outside of subjects, which are substances; but are states of the subjects or substances. They are changes of these, which present variations.

213. As to love and wisdom (in relation to the law that the ultimate degree is the complex, the containant, and the basis of the prior degrees), love is the end, wisdom is the cause per quam, and use is the effect; and use is the complex, the containant, and the basis of wisdom and love . . . But it is to be well known that all things of love and wisdom which are homogeneous and concordant, are in use.

223. As spiritual heat and light are receptacles of love and wisdom, there is not the least of the latter in which there are not degrees of both kinds.

224. The reason why not the least of love and wisdom . . . is possible without degrees of both kinds, is that love and wisdom are a substance and a form . . . And as no form is possible in which there are not these degrees . . . it follows that there are like degrees in these. For to separate love and wisdom . . . from substance in form is to annihilate them; because they are not possible outside of their subjects; for they are states of these perceived by man in variation; which states present them.

230. The reason there are three infinite and uncreate degrees of height in the Lord, is that the Lord is love itself and wisdom itself . . . and as the Lord is love itself and wisdom itself, therefore He is also use itself; for love has use as the end, which it produces by means of wisdom. For love and wisdom without use have no terminus or end . . . and therefore it cannot be said that they are and come forth unless there is a use in which they are. These three constitute the three degrees of height in the subjects of life. These three are as the first end, the middle end which is called the cause, and the ultimate end which is called the effect. 235.

232. With the Angels the celestial degree is the degree of love, the spiritual degree is the degree of wisdom, and the natural degree is the degree of uses . . . The Angels of whom the Celestial Kingdom consists are in love; those of whom the Spiritual Kingdom consists are in wisdom; and men in the world are in uses: and therefore these three Kingdoms are conjoined.

236. So long as only continuous degrees are known, it may be believed that the love and wisdom with man increase only by continuity.

239. As in the world he had applied to life the precepts of the Word, and had worshipped the Lord, he was elevated by the Lord into the third degree of love and wisdom.

241. A few words shall be said here about love as being the end, about wisdom as being the cause, and about use as being the effect. Ex.

— But the love with one man is not the same as with another; thus neither are wisdom . . . and use. And as these three are homogeneous . . . it follows that such as is the love with a man, such is the wisdom with him, and such is the use.

242. Here now it is to be demonstrated . . . that man can receive wisdom even to the third degree; but not love, unless he shuns evils as sins, and looks to the Lord.

244. From which it follows . . . that wisdom does not produce love, but that it only teaches and shows the way . . . It also follows . . . that the love which is of the will calls that wisdom in the understanding which is in agreement with it.

245. The forms which are the receptacles of the . . . love and wisdom with man, and which . . . are in three-fold order, or are of three degrees, are transparent from birth, and transmit spiritual light as crystalline glass transmits natural light. Hence it is that as to wisdom man can be elevated even into the third degree. But still these forms are not opened until . . . love conjoins itself with wisdom . . .

252. The natural man with whom the spiritual degree has been opened does not know that his spiritual mind is infilled by the Lord with thousands of arcana of wisdom, and with thousands of delights of love; and that he comes into these after death . . .

253. Love alone . . . does not open the spiritual degree, nor wisdom alone . . . but both in conjunction.

258. The reason man does not become rational to the highest point possible, is that the love which is of the will cannot be elevated in the same way as the wisdom which is of the understanding. The love which is of the will is elevated solely by shunning evils as sins, and then by the goods of charity, which are uses, which the man afterwards performs from the Lord. Therefore if the love which is of the will is not elevated at the same time, the wisdom of the understanding, however it may have ascended, still relapses to its love.

269. That those things which have been made of the love and the derivative life are ingenerated in the offspring. Gen.art.

— The seed . . . is the form of the father's love; and the love of everyone is like itself in the greatest and the least things; and there is in it an endeavour to be in the human form . . .

273<sup>3</sup>. There is another love also, called 'satan,' which is subordinate to the first named love called 'the devil,' and is the love of possessing the goods of others . . .

276. When the loves are opposites, then all things which are of perception become opposites; for from the love, which makes the very life of man, all other things flow as streams from their fountain. The things which are not from it separate themselves in the natural mind from those which are. The things which are from his reigning love are in the middle, and the rest are at the sides . . .

278<sup>2</sup>. For example: the love of the will, which is the first degree of the mind, is not known in the wisdom of the understanding, which is the second degree, except by a certain delight in the thought of a thing . . .

287. That love and wisdom are man, may also be evident from the Angels . . . who, in proportion as they are in love and derivative wisdom from the Lord, in the same proportion are men in their beauty.

297. Everyone who thinks in any illustration can see that love has and intends use as the end, and that it produces use through wisdom; for love cannot produce any use from itself, but [it does so] by the means of wisdom. What is indeed is love, unless there is something which is loved? This something is use; and as use is that which is loved, and it is produced by means of wisdom, it follows that use is the containant of wisdom and love. That these three—love, wisdom, and use—follow in order according to the degrees of height . . . see above. From these things it may be evident that these three—the Divine of love, the Divine of wisdom, and the Divine of use—are in the Lord, and that they are the Lord in essence.

304<sup>2</sup>. (The progression of love and of wisdom and of all things of them from primes to ultimates, where they cease and subsist.)

316<sup>2</sup>. (The progression of love through wisdom to use, and then by the delights of uses to love again.)

358<sup>e</sup>. For love is the esse of life, and wisdom is the existere of life therefrom.

363. That love and wisdom, and the derivative will and understanding, make the very life of man. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup> There are many things of love which have obtained other names, because they are derivations; as affections, desires, appetites, and their pleasures and delights . . . and there are many common to both love and wisdom, as consent, conclusion, and determination to act . . .

368. Such as is the love, such is the wisdom, and thence such is the man. Gen.art.

— Love is manifold; so manifold, that its varieties are indefinite; as may be evident from the human race on earth and in the Heavens . . . It is the love which distinguishes one man or Angel from another; for each is his own love. It is supposed that the wisdom distinguishes them; but the wisdom is from the love, being its form; for love is the esse of life, and wisdom is the existere of life from that esse.

—<sup>3</sup> As love makes the life of man, and thus the man himself, all the Societies of Heaven, and all the Angels in the Societies, are ordained according to the affections which are of love; and no Society, and no Angel in a Society, is ordained according to anything of the understanding separated from the love. In like manner in the Hells and their Societies, but according to loves which are opposite to heavenly loves.

369. It is indeed acknowledged that a man is such as is his reigning love; but only as to the mind, and not as to the body . . . But it has been made known to me by much experience in the Spiritual World, that from head to heel, or from the primes in the head to the ultimates in the body, a man is such as is his love. For in that world all are forms of their own love; the Angels are forms of heavenly love, and the devils are forms of infernal love . . . And, when their love is attacked, their faces are changed; and if it is attacked much, they wholly disappear. Ex.

380. In the Spiritual World the colour red corresponds to love . . .

389. (The human form) is the form of love and wisdom; which, regarded in itself, is Divine. All the determinations of love and wisdom are in it . . .

394. That from the correspondence of the heart with the will, and of the understanding with the lungs, all things may be known which can be known about the will and understanding, or about love and wisdom. Gen.art.

399. That love or the will is the very life of man. Gen.art.

400. That love or the will is continually striving to be in the human form, and in all things which are of the human form. Gen.art.

401. That love or the will, without marriage with wisdom or the understanding, cannot effect anything by its human form. Gen.art.

402. That love or the will prepares a house or chamber for its future consort, which is wisdom or the understanding. Gen.art.

403. That love or the will prepares all things in its human form, to enable it to act conjointly with wisdom or the understanding. Gen.art.

406. That through these three conjunctions, love or the will is in its sensitive life, and in its active life. Gen.art.

— The reason love without understanding . . . cannot feel anything in the body, or act, is that love without understanding is as it were blind . . . for the understanding is the light from which the love sees . . . 407, Ex.

[W.] 408. That love or the will introduces wisdom or the understanding into all things of its house. Gen.art.

409. That love or the will does nothing except in conjunction with wisdom or the understanding. Gen. art. P.3.

410. That love or the will conjoins itself with wisdom or the understanding, and causes (the latter) to be reciprocally conjoined. Gen.art.

—<sup>4</sup>. Thoughts, perceptions, and the derivative knowledges do indeed inflow from the Spiritual World, but still they are not received by the understanding, but by the love according to its affections in the understanding. It appears as if the understanding receives them, and not love or the will; but this is a fallacy. It also appears as if the understanding conjoins itself with love or the will; but this also is a fallacy. Love or the will conjoins itself with the understanding, and causes it to be reciprocally conjoined. Its being reciprocally conjoined is from the marriage of love with it. Hence does the conjunction become as it were reciprocal from the life and derivative power of love.

—<sup>6</sup>. Hence it is that every man, Spirit, and Angel is regarded by the Lord according to his love or good, and no one according to his understanding or truth separated from love or good. For the life of a man is his love . . . and his life is as he has exalted his affections by means of truths . . . for the affections of love are exalted and perfected by means of truths; thus by means of wisdom. And then the love acts conjointly with the wisdom, as if from it; but it acts from itself through it, as through its form; which derives nothing whatever from the understanding, but everything from some determination of the love, which is called an affection.

411. Love calls all those things its goods which favour it; and it calls all those things its truths which as means conduce to the goods; and as they are means, they are loved . . . and thus become affections in form. Therefore truth is nothing else than the form of the affection which is of love. The human form is nothing else than the form of all the affections of love . . .

413<sup>3</sup>. This somewhat (of honour, glory, or gain) adheres to every love as a surface, from which the love is lucent on the surface only; but with the wise it is translucent.

414. That love or the will can be elevated, and can receive those things which are of heat from Heaven, if it loves its consort wisdom in that degree. Gen.art.

— But love or the will cannot be elevated through anything of honour, glory, or gain as the end; but through the love of use . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The love or will is elevated into the heat of Heaven, but the understanding into the light of Heaven; and if both are elevated, a marriage of them is effected there, which is called the heavenly marriage, because it is the marriage of heavenly love and wisdom . . .

415. This conjunction or disjunction of wisdom and love may be seen as it were effigied in the conjunction of the lungs with the heart . . .

416. That otherwise love or the will drags back wisdom or the understanding from its elevation, in order to act as one with it. Gen.art.

— There is natural love and there is spiritual love. The man who is in natural love and at the same time in spiritual love, is a rational man; whereas he who is in natural love alone can think rationally . . . but still is not a rational man; for he elevates his understanding . . . to wisdom, but still the things which are of wisdom . . . are not of his love. His love does indeed effect it, but from the affection of honour, glory, and gain . . .

419. That love or the will is purified in the understanding, if they are elevated together. Gen.art.

421. That love or the will is defiled in the understanding, and by it, if they are not elevated together. Gen.art.

422. That love purified by wisdom in the understanding becomes spiritual and celestial. Gen.art.

— The understanding does not become spiritual and celestial, but the love does; and when the love becomes so, it makes its consort the understanding spiritual and celestial. Love becomes spiritual and celestial by a life according to the truths of wisdom . . . The love imbibes these truths through its understanding, and not of itself; for love cannot elevate itself unless it knows truths . . . and then in proportion as it loves truths by doing them, in the same proportion it is elevated. Ex.

424. That love defiled in the understanding, and by it, becomes natural, sensuous, and corporeal. Gen.art.

P. 8<sup>o</sup>. Love and wisdom in Heaven and the Church in general, and in an Angel of Heaven and a man of the Church, are one, when the will and the understanding . . . make one . . .

13. It has been said that love makes the life of man; but it is not meant love separated from wisdom . . . because love separated . . . is not anything; and therefore the love which makes the inmost life of man . . . is love and wisdom together; and also the love which makes the life of man in so far as he is a recipient. Nor is love separated in the cause, but in the effect; for love cannot be understood without its quality, and its quality is wisdom; and the quality, or wisdom, is not possible except from its-esse, which is love. Hence it is that they are one. Now, as truth is from good—as wisdom is from love—therefore both taken together are called love, or good; for love in its own form is wisdom . . .

27<sup>2</sup>. For spiritual love is such that it wants to give what is its own to another; and in so far as it can do this, it is in its esse, in its peace, and in its bliss. Spiritual love derives this from the Divine love of the Lord.

28<sup>2</sup>. The Lord inflows into the life's love of the Angels, and the Angels receive the Lord in wisdom, and through this in turn conjoin themselves with the Lord. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. How love conjoins itself with wisdom. Ex.

29<sup>2</sup>. There is such a circle of love to the thoughts, and from the thoughts to the love from the love, in all things of the human mind; which circle may be called the circle of life.

33. The life of man is his love; and love is manifold. In general, there is the love of evil, and the love of good. The love of evil is the love of committing adultery, revenge, fraud, blasphemy, and of depriving others of their goods. In thinking and in doing these things, the love of evil feels pleasure and delight. The derivations, which are the affections of this love, are as many as are the evils into which it has determined itself; and the perceptions and thoughts of this love are as many as are the falsities which favour those evils and confirm them . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Now as the Lord inflows into the life's love of everyone, and through his affections into his perceptions and thoughts, and not reversely . . . it follows that He cannot conjoin Himself more nearly than in so far as the love of evil with its affections, which are concupiscences, has been removed . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. As the influx of the Lord is into the love of good and its affections, and through these into the perceptions and thoughts . . . so the influx of Hell is into the love of evil and its affections, which are concupiscences, and through these into the perceptions and thoughts . . .

34. Hence it is that wisdom appears to man, but not so the affection of love which produces it.

35. (Necessity of wisdom's being conjoined with love.)

53. He who loves another, regards him from his own love in himself . . . and therefore he conjoins himself with him in proportion as the other loves him as he loves the other.

60°. There are ways there for every love; and the love opens the way . . . No one sees other ways than the one of his love; from which it is evident that the Angels are nothing but heavenly loves.

73°. All freedom is of love, inasmuch that love and freedom are one thing. Ex.

92°. If anyone loves another and is not loved in return, then as the one accedes the other recedes; whereas if he loves in return, then as the one accedes so the other accedes, and conjunction is effected; for love wants to be loved; this is implanted in it; and in proportion as it is loved back, in the same proportion it is in itself and in its delight . . .

95°. When man turns his face to the Lord, love and wisdom are given him. These enter man through the face, and not by the back of the neck.

105. The internal of thought is from the life's love and its affections and the derivative perceptions . . .

— (At first) from the life's love which is born with him from his parents there transpires something of concupiscence . . . But afterwards his life's love is according as he lives . . . And from the life's love comes the love of the means; the delights of which, and the derivative excited knowledges from the memory, make the external of his thought. 109. 110°.

106. Loves are manifold, but two of them are as lords and kings—heavenly love, (which is) love to the Lord and towards the neighbour, and infernal love (which is) the love of self and of the world. These loves are opposite to each other . . . These two loves are the loves of man's life, but with much variety . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. But no one's life's love can be without derivations, which are called affections . . . Love dwells in its affections . . . as a king in his kingdom . . . The life's love rules the whole man through its affections and derivative perceptions, and through its delights and derivative thoughts . . . 107, Ex.

107. Heavenly love with its affections, etc., may be compared to a beautiful tree with its branches, leaves, and fruits. The life's love is the tree . . . But infernal love with its concupiscences, etc., may be compared to a spider and its web. The love itself is the spider . . .

108. The conjunction of all things of the mind with the life's love. Ex. . . The life's love is the end . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. As the end conjoins itself with the cause, and through the cause with the effect, so the life's love conjoins itself with the internal of thought, and through this with its external.

140°. Without the fear of offending, love is insipid and cutaneous; of the thought alone . . .

146°. He who has subjugated the love of dominating from the love of self, easily subjugates all the other evil loves, because this is their head.

168°. Love is the life of faith . . .

— Thus to love is to do.

183. The Divine Providence never acts together with the love of man's will, but continually acts against it . . .

193. That all the thoughts of man are from the affections of his life's love . . . Gen.art.

—<sup>3</sup>. As the soul of the will is love, and the soul of the understanding wisdom, both from the Lord, it follows that love is the life of everyone; and that the love is such life as is determined by its conjunction with wisdom . . .

199°. The soul of man is nothing else than the love of his will and the derivative love of his understanding. Such as this love is, such is the whole man . . .

222. That a man can be let into the wisdom of spiritual things, and also into the love of them, and still not be reformed. Gen.art.

— Such is the love, such as is the wisdom . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. For man can let himself into natural love; but the Lord alone [can let him] into spiritual love.

281°. Every man is from birth in evils of many kinds. These evils are in his will; and the things which are in the will are loved; for that which a man wills from within he loves; and that which he loves he wills; and the love of the will inflows into the understanding, and there causes its delight to be felt . . . and therefore unless man were permitted to think according to the love of his will . . . that love would remain shut in, and would never come into his sight; and the love of evil which does not appear is like an enemy in ambush . . .

319. The reason everything confirmed . . . remains to eternity, is that everyone is his own love . . . (and) as man is his own love, he is also the form of his own love, and may be called the organ of his life's love.

[P.319]<sup>4</sup>. An evil and a good man are turned in contrary directions; and as when the turning is once fixed it cannot be reversed, it is evident that such a man is when he dies, such he remains to eternity. It is the love belonging to man's will which effects this turning . . . for every man is his own love. Hence it is that after death everyone goes in the way of his love; to Heaven, he who is in good love, and to Hell he who is in evil love; nor does he rest until he is in that Society where his reigning love is; and, wonderful to say, everyone knows the way . . .

326<sup>2</sup>. As thought from some Knowledge causes the presence of another, so love from some affection effects the conjunction of another; from which it happens that they walk and talk together in a friendly way; dwell in one house, or in one Society; and often meet, and render services to each other. The contrary takes place (with) one who does not love another . . . he neither sees nor meets him, but is distant from him in the degree in which he does not love him . . .

326<sup>12</sup>. 'The haemorrhoids' = natural loves, which when separated from spiritual love, are unclean. . . 'The haemorrhoids of gold' = natural loves purified and made good.

R. 19. 'To Him who loveth us . . .' (Rev. i. 5) = Him who from love and mercy . . .

215. 'As many as I love I rebuke and chasten' (Rev. iii. 19) = that those of them who do so are loved by the Lord, and then cannot but be let into temptations, so as to fight against themselves.

351. For love is impossible without its consort, which is knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom.

403. The appearance of infernal love with (such). Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. Where there is not charity . . . which is spiritual love, there is infernal love. There is no middle love, except with the lukewarm.

422<sup>2</sup>. In the Spiritual World, all love, when excited, appears at a distance like fire . . .

413. That on account of evils from falsities and of falsities from evils they do not know what love is . . . Sig. and Ex.

493. 'The two olive-trees and the two candlesticks . . .' = love and intelligence, or charity and faith, both from the Lord with them. Ex.

527. There is no genuine love without this fear . . .

690. An influx into the love (of the solidifians). Sig. and Ex.

706. Lest their infernal loves should appear. Sig. and Ex.

832<sup>2</sup>. Love and charity cannot be formed except by means of truths from the Word.

875. In the eastern Heaven are those who are in love from the Lord; and in the southern Heaven are those who are in wisdom from the Lord. T. 386.

—<sup>3</sup>. (A discussion as to) whether Heaven in its essence is love, or wisdom.

— The Angel from the Heaven of wisdom asked the (Angel from the Heaven of love) what love is; and he replied that love, originating from the Lord as a Sun, is the heat of life of Angels and men, thus their life; and that the derivations of love are called affections, and that through these are produced perceptions, and thus thoughts; from which it follows that wisdom from its origin is love; consequently that thought in its origin is the affection of that love; and . . . thought is nothing but the form of affection. Ex. . . Hence then it is evident that love is the all of wisdom; consequently, that the essence of the Heavens is love, and their coming forth—existentia—wisdom . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. I related to the Angelic Spirit what I had heard from the two Angels concerning love and wisdom. . . He said, Did they not speak also of a third thing? What third thing? I said. He replied, It is use. Love and wisdom without use are not anything. They are only ideal entities; nor do they become real until they are in use; for love, wisdom, and use are three things which cannot be separated. If they are separated, neither of them is anything. Love is not anything without wisdom; but in wisdom it is formed for something. This something for which it is formed is use. Therefore, when love through wisdom is in use, then it is something; nay, it then for the first time comes forth—existit. They are exactly like end, cause, and effect . . .

908. (How it is that the Church has attributed all things to faith, and not to love.)

937<sup>2</sup>. In the Spiritual World . . . if anyone loves another whom he Knows, he dwells with him in one Society; and if he loves him inmost, in one house. This is the state of all in the Spiritual World, (which) originates from the fact that the Lord is present with everyone according to faith, and is conjoined with him according to love . . . Love and the derivative conjunction are given by a life according to His precepts . . .

M. 5<sup>3</sup>. The delight of use derives its essence from love, and its coming forth from wisdom . . .

8<sup>5</sup>. The deliciousness of the soul is from love and wisdom from the Lord; and as love is the efficient, and is efficient through wisdom, therefore both have their seat in the effect; and the effect is use.

10<sup>6</sup>. Everyone who becomes an Angel carries his Heaven within him, because he carries within him the love of his Heaven . . .

18<sup>3</sup>. Every love has its own delight; for love lives by means of that; and the delight of the love of uses is heavenly delight . . .

21<sup>2</sup>. The wise one replied, There are two things which make the marriage of the Lord and the Church: love and wisdom; and the Lord is love, and the Church is wisdom; and wisdom is at the right hand of love; for a man of the Church is wise as of himself; and in proportion as he is wise he receives love from the Lord. Moreover, the right hand signifies power; and love has power through wisdom.

— But after the wedding the husband represents wisdom, and the wife the love of his wisdom; but this love is not the prior love, but is a secondary love, which the wife has from the Lord through the wisdom of the husband. The love of the Lord, which is the prior love, is the love of being wise with the husband . . .

32. The difference (between the sexes) consists essentially in this—that the inmost in the male is love, and the covering of it is wisdom; or, what is the same, it is love covered over with wisdom; and that the inmost in the female is that wisdom of the male, and the covering of it is the derivative love; but this love is feminine love, and is given to the wife by the Lord through the wisdom of the husband; whereas the former love is masculine love, and is the love of being wise, and is given to the husband by the Lord according to the reception of wisdom. It is from this, that the male is the wisdom of love, and that the female is the love of that wisdom; and therefore in both of them there is implanted from creation the love of conjunction into one. 42<sup>d</sup>, Des.

34. That his own love remains with everyone after death. Gen.art.

37<sup>d</sup>. Regarded in itself love is nothing else than a longing and thence a striving after conjunction . . .

44<sup>e</sup>. For love goes to meet love . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. Love and wisdom are the offspring which are born from the marriage of good and truth.

46. Every love follows the man after death, because it is the esse of his life; and the reigning love, which is the head of all the rest, remains with the man to eternity, and the subordinate loves together with it. The reason they remain, is that love is properly the spirit of man, and is of the body from the spirit; and after death man becomes a Spirit, and thus carries his love with him. And as love is the esse of man's life, it is evident that such as has been the life of a man in the world, such becomes his lot after death.

47a<sup>e</sup>. For women have an interior perception of love; but men only an exterior one.

49. For the conjunctions which take place on earth rarely take place from any internal perception of love, but from an external one, which hides the internal perception. The external perception of love derives its cause and origin from such things as are of the love of the world and of the body . . .

50. For all who are in the Heavens are consociated according to the affinities and relationships of love, and have their dwelling-places according to these. For . . . the appearances of spaces there are according to their states of life, (which are) according to their states of love; and therefore no one can stay anywhere except in his own house, which is provided and designated for him according to the quality of his love . . .

51. That consorts there . . . have spiritual procreation, which is that of love and wisdom. Gen.art.

55<sup>a</sup>. Those standing at the south said, There is the love of a man and a man, and also of a woman and a woman; and there is the love of a man for a woman, and the love of a woman for a man; and these three pairs of loves are quite different from each other. The love of a man and a man is like the love of understanding and understanding . . . The love of a woman and a woman is like the love of an affection and an affection of the understanding of the men . . . These loves . . . do not enter deeply into bosoms, but stand out of doors, and only touch each other; thus they do not conjoin two interiorly . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. But the love of a man and a woman is the love of an understanding and its affection, and this enters deeply, and conjoins . . .

— They do not admit the influx of love from the body of any other woman than that of their wife.

65. That conjugal love is the fundamental love of all celestial, spiritual, and the derivative natural loves. Gen.art.

— From the marriage of good and truth proceed all the loves which make Heaven and the Church with man. The good of this marriage makes love, and its truth makes wisdom; and when love accedes to wisdom . . . then love becomes love; and when wisdom accedes to love . . . wisdom becomes wisdom. Love truly conjugal is nothing else than the conjunction of love and wisdom . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore if the conjugal love is celestial and spiritual, all the loves proceeding from it are celestial and spiritual; for conjugal love is like a parent, and the rest of the loves are like the offspring . . .

66. The male was created to become wisdom from the love of being wise; and the female was created to become the love of the male from his wisdom, thus according to it; from which it is evident that two consorts are the very forms and effigies of the marriage of love and wisdom . . .

67. As natural loves flow forth from spiritual loves, and spiritual ones from celestial ones, it is said that conjugal love is the fundamental one of all celestial and spiritual loves and the derivative natural ones. Natural loves relate to the loves of self and of the world; spiritual loves relate to love towards the neighbour; and celestial loves relate to love to the Lord. And as such are the relations of loves, it is evident . . . that when they are in this order, natural loves live from spiritual ones; and these from celestial ones; and all in this order from the Lord, from whom they are.

75<sup>d</sup>. She is the love of my wisdom, and I am the wisdom of her love; and therefore her love from without veils over my wisdom; and my wisdom from within is in her love.

88. Wisdom cannot come forth with man except through the love of being wise. If this love is taken away, the man cannot be wise at all. Wisdom from this love is meant by the truth of good . . . But when from this love a man has acquired wisdom, and loves it in himself, or himself on account of it, he then forms a love which is the love of wisdom, and is meant by the good of truth . . . There are therefore two loves with the man, one of which, which is the prior one, is the love of being wise; and the other of which, which is the posterior one, is the love of wisdom. But if this latter love remains with the man, it is an evil love, and is called the conceit or love of his Own intelligence. That this love has been taken out of the man, lest it should destroy him, and has been transcribed into the woman, in order to become conjugal love . . . will be confirmed in what follows.

[M.] 90<sup>2</sup>. But as the male cannot become intellectual except from love, the Lord adjoins this to him according to the reception ; that is, according to his mind to be wise.

134<sup>3</sup>. For where there is no knowledge, there is no love. Knowledge and love are inseparable companions, and can no more be separated than will and understanding . . . and therefore as a man takes knowledge from others, so love adjoins itself to it as its companion. The universal love which adjoins itself, is the love of knowing, understanding, and being wise. This love is peculiar to man . . . and inflows from God. We agree with our comrades from the west, that man is not born into any love, and thence not into any knowledge ; but that he is born solely into the inclination to love, and thence into the faculty to receive knowledges, not from himself, but from others . . . To this we will add that beasts are born into natural loves, and thence into the knowledges corresponding thereto . . . and they are carried along by means of these by their loves . . . like sleepwalkers . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. (Thus) man is born into no love in order that he may come into all love, by means of the applications of knowledges from intelligence ; and into love to the Lord by means of love towards the neighbour . . .

137<sup>4</sup>. As heat is delicatized with light, and light with heat ; so love is delicatized with wisdom, and wisdom with love.

145. The first love, by which is meant the love before the wedding and just after the wedding, derives something from the love of the sex ; thus from the ardour proper to the body not as yet mitigated by the love of the spirit. (Its purification etc.)

155a<sup>3</sup>. I replied, This Angel whispered to me that wives are the receptacles and sensories of the deliciousnesses of conjugal love, because they are born loves, and all deliciousnesses are of love. . . Then the husbands said, Wives know all the states of our minds . . . because they are most tender loves . . . The wisdom implanted in their love is so full of prudence that . . . they cannot say that they love, but that they are loved. Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. (The wives said) This sixth sense of our sex comes forth . . . and is exalted in the degree in which our husbands love us from wisdom and judgment, and in which we in return love them from the same things in them. This sense of our sex is called in the Heavens the sport of wisdom with its love, and of love with its wisdom.

160. The inclination to unite the man to herself is constant and perpetual with the wife . . . because love cannot do otherwise than love, and unite itself, in order that it may be loved back again ; its essence and life are nothing else ; and women are born loves ; whereas men . . . are receptions. Besides, love is continually efficient. It is like heat, flame, and fire, which if prevented from being efficient, perish . . . The reason there is not a like inclination with the man, is that the man is not love, but only a recipient of love . . .

161. That conjunction is inspired into the man by his wife according to his love, and is received by the man according to his wisdom. Gen.art.

— . That love . . . is inspired into the man by his wife, is at this day hidden from the men . . . for wives persuade that the men only love, and that they receive ; or that the men are loves, and they obediences ; they also rejoice at heart when the men believe so. Ex.

168. The Feminine is to perceive from love . . . and love does not go beyond that which it feels ; when it does so, it derives it from conjunction with the understanding of a man ; for the understanding is of light, and love is of heat ; and the things which are of light are seen clearly, and those which are of heat are felt.

171<sup>e</sup>. The sphere of love going forth from a wife who is tenderly loved, is perceived in Heaven as what is sweetly fragrant . . .

183<sup>3</sup>. The Angels replied, that love and wisdom without use are only abstract ideas of thought, which after some stay in the mind pass away like the wind ; but in use these two are collected together, and there become a one, which is called a real thing. Love cannot rest unless it is doing ; for love is the very Active of life ; nor can wisdom come forth and subsist except when it is doing from love and with it ; and doing is use. . . As these three, love, wisdom, and use, inflow into the souls of men, it may be evident whence it is that it is said that all good is from God ; for all that which is done from love through wisdom is called good, and use is something done. What is love without wisdom but something fatuous ? and what is love with wisdom without use but a state of mind ? Whereas love and wisdom with use not only make man, but also are man ; nay . . . they propagate man . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. (Thus) all fructification, propagation, and proliferation are originally from the influx of love, wisdom, and use from the Lord . . .

187<sup>2</sup>. The young men in Heaven know no otherwise than that they affect the virgins with love.

198. (The wife then feels) deliciousness from the fact that she wants to be the love of her husband's wisdom. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. Thus the love of the wife forms itself by means of the wisdom of the man ; as good forms itself by means of truth.

200<sup>e</sup>. For a chaste wife is rarely if ever wanting in love for her husband . . .

208<sup>3</sup>. Besides, love changes its essence, and does not become conjugal love, if it is compelled.

245<sup>e</sup>. I will add the arcanum, that between the disjoined souls of two . . . conjunction is effected in a middle love ; and that otherwise conceptions would not take place . . .

261<sup>3</sup>. The universals of Hell are these three loves : the love of dominating from the love of self, the love of possessing the goods of others from the love of the world, and scortatory love. The universals of Heaven opposite to these three loves, are the love of dominating from the love of use, the love of possessing the goods of the world from the love of doing uses by their means, and love truly conjugal. T.661.

269<sup>2</sup>. There are three universal loves of which every man is constituted from creation : the love of the neighbour, which is also the love of doing uses ; the love of the world, which is also the love of possessing wealth ; and the love of self, which is also the love of exercising command over others. The love of the neighbour . . . is spiritual love; the love of the world . . . is material love; and the love of self . . . is corporeal love. Man is man when the love of the neighbour . . . makes the head, the love of the world the body, and the love of self the feet. But if the love of the world makes the head, man is not man otherwise than is a hunchback; but when the love of self makes the head, he is not a man who stands on his feet but on his palms, with his head downwards . . . When the love of the neighbour makes the head, and the other two loves make the body and feet, the man appears from Heaven with an angelic face, having a beautiful rainbow round his head; but if the love of the world makes the head, he appears from Heaven with a face pale like that of a dead man, with a yellow circle round the head; and if the love of self makes the head, he appears from Heaven with a dusky face, with a white circle round the head. Ex. T. 507.

—<sup>5</sup>. The bystanders made this conclusion: that a man is such as is his love; and not such as is his understanding; because the love easily carries away the understanding to its side.

271. On the causes of apparent love, etc. in marriages. Chapter.

281. Hence it is that inward love is not possible between a spiritual and a natural consort; but love emulous of inward love is possible on the part of the spiritual consort; whereas between two natural consorts inward love is not possible . . .

284. The love of infants and children with the mother and father conjoin themselves as do the heart and the lungs in the breast; the love of them with the mother is as the heart there, and the love towards them with the father is as the lungs there; (for) the heart corresponds to love, and the lungs to understanding; and love from the will is with the mother, and love from the understanding is with the father.

293<sup>5</sup>. (The seven wives) said, In all conjunction by love there must be action, reception, and reaction. The delicious state of our love is acting or action; the state of wisdom of husbands is receiving or reception, and is also reacting or reaction according to the reception . . .

294<sup>5</sup>. She is well aware that love cannot be forced; but that it is insinuated in freedom.

299. (The love of young girls; its quality.)

330<sup>5</sup>. The wives said, The beauty of a woman dwells in soft tenderness, and thence in exquisite sensation. Hence is the love of a woman for a man; and the love of a man for a woman.

331<sup>2</sup>. The wives replied, (A man has honour from his wife) from love, because love honours. Honour cannot be separated from love; but love can from honour.

—<sup>3</sup>. The wives made this third conclusion: You seem as if you love your wives; and you do not see that you are loved by your wives, and thus that you love back; and that your intelligence is the receptacle. If therefore you love your intelligence in yourselves, it becomes the receptacle of your own love; and the love of the proprium never becomes conjugal, because it cannot endure an equal; but so far as it prevails it remains scortatory.

358. For all love is such that it breaks forth into indignation and anger . . . when it is robbed of its delights . . . from which it may be seen, that zeal is not the highest degree of love, but that it is love blazing up.

—<sup>2</sup>. The love of one and the corresponding love of another are like two confederates; but when the love of one rises up against the love of the other, they become like enemies. The reason is that love is the esse of man's life; and therefore he who assaults the love, assaults the life itself; and there then takes place a state of wrath against the assaulter . . . Every love has such wrath, even the most pacific, as is manifestly seen from hens, geese, and birds of every kind . . .

360. How love is kindled into zeal . . . by an assault upon it, shall be told. Love resides in the will of man; but is not kindled in the will itself, but in the understanding; for in the will it is like fire, and in the understanding like flame. Love in the will knows nothing about itself, because it feels nothing of itself there, and does not act anything of itself there; but it does this in the understanding and its thought; and therefore when the love is assaulted, it exacerbates itself in the understanding, which it effects by means of various reasonings. These reasonings are like pieces of wood which are kindled by fire and consequently blaze up . . .

361. The reason itself why a man is kindled by an assault upon his love shall be opened. In its inmosts, the human form is from creation a form of love and wisdom. In man are all the affections of love and all the derivative perceptions of wisdom compounded in most perfect order, so that together they make . . . a one. They are substantiated; for substances are their subjects. (This being the case) it is evident that if the love is assaulted, this universal form with each and all things there is simultaneously assaulted; and as in all living things there has been implanted from creation the will to remain permanently in their own form . . . when the love is assaulted, it defends itself by its understanding; and the understanding [defends it] by means of rational and imaginative things, by which it represents to itself the event . . . Hence then it is that in order to resist assaults, the love hardens the substances of its form, and erects them as it were into crests . . . Such is the exacerbation of love which is called zeal; and therefore if there is no opportunity to make resistance, anxiety and grief arise, because it foresees the extinction of the interior life with its delights. But, on the other hand, if the love is favoured and caressed, that form unbends, softens, and dilates itself; and the substances of the form become soft, bland, gentle, and alluring.

371. In all love there are fear and grief; fear lest it should perish, and grief if it does perish.

380<sup>5</sup>. For love and wisdom are life. And if you elevate your faculty of understanding a little higher, you will see that love and wisdom are impossible unless they have an origin somewhere . . .

444<sup>6</sup>. The cerebellum is assigned to love and its goods, and the cerebrum to wisdom and its truths; and therefore he who looks with his face to the Lord receives from Him wisdom, and through this love; whereas he who looks backwards from the Lord receives love and not wisdom; and love without wisdom is love from man and not from the Lord; and as this love conjoins itself with falsities, he does not acknowledge God, but he acknowledges himself as God . . . and therefore this love is the origin of evil.

I. 5. That the Sun of the Spiritual World is pure love from Jehovah God who is in the midst of it. Gen.art.

6<sup>3</sup>. For love and wisdom are indivisible, like esse and existere; for love comes forth through wisdom, and according to it.

10. Love, regarded in itself, is alive.

13. That the reception of this influx (of life from God) is according to the state of love and wisdom with man. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. Love itself and wisdom itself are not life, but are the esse of life; but the delights of love and the pleasantnesses of wisdom, which are affections, make life . . .

14. These two, wisdom and love, proceed from the Lord as a Sun, and inflow into Heaven universally and singularly, whence the Angels have wisdom and love; and they also inflow into this world universally and singularly, whence men have wisdom and love. But these two proceed unitedly from the Lord, and in like manner inflow unitedly into the souls of Angels and men, but are not received unitedly in their minds: there is first received there the light which makes the understanding, and gradually the love which makes the will . . .

17<sup>4</sup>. There are loves of three kinds—the love of Heaven, the love of the world, and the love of self. The love of Heaven is spiritual; the love of the world is material; and the love of self is corporeal. When the love is spiritual all the things which follow from it, as forms from their essence, derive the quality of being spiritual. In like manner if the principal love is the love of the world or of wealth, and thus material, all the things which follow from it, as principiates from their principal, derive the quality of being material. And so again, if the principal love is the love of self, or of pre-eminence, and thus corporeal, all the things which follow from it derive the quality of being corporeal . . . Therefore, he who knows the reigning love of anyone, and is at the same time acquainted with the progression of ends to causes, and of causes to effects . . . knows the whole man. In this way the Angels know everyone to whom they speak. They perceive his love from the sound of his voice . . .

T. 31<sup>2</sup>. By the immeasurableness of God the Angels perceive the Divinity as to love; and by His eternity, the Divinity as to wisdom.

37<sup>3</sup>. That love as a bridegroom and husband produces or begets all forms, but by means of wisdom as the bride and wife, may be proved by innumerable things in both worlds.

38. Therefore love is the complex of all goodnesses; and wisdom is the complex of all Truths . . .

39. There are two things in fire—causticity and resplendence . . . In like manner there are two things in love, one to which corresponds the causticity of fire, and which is a something most interiorly affecting the will of man; and the other to which corresponds the resplendence of fire, and which is a something most interiorly affecting the understanding of man. Hence man has love and intelligence . . .

40. Wisdom is not creatable . . . nor love . . . 472.

41<sup>2</sup>. It is to be known that God is continually operating the conjunction of love and wisdom with man; but that man, unless he looks to God, and believes in Him, is continually operating their division . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. When spiritual heat, which is love, separates itself from spiritual light, which is wisdom . . . the man becomes like sour or putrescent ground, in which worms are born . . . In a word, to divide love and wisdom . . . is comparatively like bereaving the face of its redness . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. For love or charity is as the husband, and wisdom or faith is as the wife; and when these two are separated, spiritual harlotry and scortation ensue . . .

42. It is further to be known that there are three degrees of love and wisdom . . .

43. That the essence of love is to love others outside of itself, to want to be one with them, and to bless them from itself. Gen.art.

—<sup>3</sup>. Regarded in itself, love is nothing else than a striving after conjunction . . .

50. No one has as yet known what love is in its essence, and what wisdom is in its essence; and still less has anyone known about the influx of the one into the other, which is that love with each and all things of itself inflows into wisdom, and resides in it like a king in his kingdom . . . and relinquishes all the government of justice to its judgment; and as justice is of love, and judgment is of wisdom, it relinquishes all the government of love to its wisdom.

67<sup>2</sup>. It is similar with love, wisdom, and use . . .

99<sup>2</sup>. For love wants to love, and wants to be loved.

293. That not anything except what proceeds from God is to be loved above all things. Sig.

329<sup>2</sup>. There are two loves which are opposite to each other—the love of willing and doing good, and the love of willing and doing evil . . .

335<sup>6</sup>. Every beast, bird, fish, reptile, and insect has its own sensuous and corporeal natural love, which dwells in its head, and in the brains therein. Through these the Spiritual World inflows immediately into the senses of their bodies, and through these determines the acts . . .

394. That there are three universal loves : the love of Heaven, the love of the world, and the love of self. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason charity has something in common with each of these three loves, is that regarded in itself charity is the love of uses . . .

395. That these three loves are in every man from creation and thence from birth ; and that when rightly subordinated they perfect man ; and when not rightly, pervert him, will be demonstrated in the following article. . . They are rightly subordinated when the love of Heaven makes the head, the love of the world the breast and belly, and the love of self the feet and soles. 403.

—<sup>3</sup>. In the man in whom these three loves are rightly subordinated, they are also co-ordinated so that the highest love, which is the love of Heaven, is within the second, which is the love of the world, and through this is in the third or lowest, which is the love of self ; and the love which is within directs at its beck that which is without ; and therefore if the love of Heaven is within the love of the world, and through this in the love of self, the man does uses in each from the God of Heaven. In operating, these three loves are like will, understanding, and action . . .

403. That when these three loves are rightly subordinated they perfect man ; but when not rightly subordinated they pervert and invert him. Gen.art.

412<sup>2</sup>. Has the general love.

446. On the friendship of love. See FRIEND, here.

447<sup>2</sup>. Preparation is made by rejections of the loves which are not in agreement with his principal one . . .

472<sup>2</sup>. The whole man is nothing else than a form organized for the reception of (light and heat from the natural world, and wisdom and love from the Spiritual World). If it were denied that man is a form receptive of love and wisdom from God, influx would also be denied . . .

484. My friend, shun evil and do good, and believe in the Lord . . . and the Lord will love you, and will give the love to do, and the faith to believe ; and then you will do what is good from love . . .

533. There are two loves which have long been inrooted in the human race—the love of dominating over all, and the love of possessing the goods of all . . . To these two loves are subordinated all other evil loves, which are armies. But to explore these two loves is very difficult . . . It is to be well known that these two loves are able to reign more with the small than with the great . . .

569. Every love with man breathes forth delight, by which it makes itself felt . . .

— Hence it is that all in the Spiritual World are consociated according to their loves . . .

571. There are two states through which man must pass . . . Reformation and Regeneration . . . The second state is a state of love from the will . . . The love of the will then inflows into the understanding, and acts upon it, and leads it to think . . . in agreement with its love.

593<sup>o</sup>. From a gesture the Angels perceive the love of a man's will.

718. With every sound man . . . there is a faculty of receiving love ; that is, of fructifying goods.

727<sup>e</sup>. All conjunction is effected by love ; and love is not love without trust.

754. The cause of truth and good being consummated (at the end of the Church) is especially the two natural loves, which are diametrically opposite to the two spiritual loves . . .

778. Every man is his own love and his own intelligence, and whatever proceeds from him derives its essence from these two essentials of his life . . . Therefore the Angels . . . Know a man's love from the sound of his voice . . .

801. The reason the Dutch are in these quarters of the Christian Middle, is that trade is their final love, and money is a mediate love . . . and this love is spiritual. But where money is the final love, and trade is a mediate love . . . this love is natural . . . When trade is the end, it is the final love, and everyone is regarded in Heaven according to the final love. For the final love is like the lord of a kingdom . . . and all the other loves are like his subjects . . . The final love resides in the highest or inmost things of the mind ; and the mediate loves are below and outside of it, and serve it at its beck. The Dutch are in this spiritual love above others ; whereas the Jews are in an inverted love, and therefore their love of trading is merely natural.

159<sup>2</sup>. Every man is such as is his love . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The centre of gravity in the Spiritual World is determined for a man from the love in which he is.

193<sup>3</sup>. There is with a man either the love of evil and of the derivative falsity, or the love of good and the derivative truth . . . He who is in one cannot be in the other . . .

204<sup>2</sup>. No one loves another on account of his person, but on account of that which is with him . . . From which it follows that to love men from the truth, sincerity, and justice which are with them, is spiritual love. Ex.

— Hence it follows, that such as is the love with a man, such are the truths with him . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Love forms the spirit of man. Ex.

209<sup>2</sup>. For the Lord inflows into the love with a man, and through it into the truths . . .

213. The Lord is present in the affection or love of man; thus in the life of his spirit . . .

244. Lest filthy loves appear. Sig. and Ex.

— For man is born into two loves, which are the love of self and the love of the world . . . These loves are filthy loves, because all evils flow from them . . . These loves with their evils cannot be removed except by two loves, which are love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour . . . These two loves are pure loves, because they are from Heaven . . . and all goods flow from them. In proportion, therefore, as a man is in these, in the same proportion those filthy loves are removed . . . and they are removed by means of truths from the Lord.

256<sup>e</sup>. Love makes Heaven; and (therefore) it makes the Church . . .

292<sup>e</sup>. For to love is to do . . .

313<sup>14</sup>. The inmost of man is his love and the derivative faith; and such as are his love and the derivative faith, such he is wholly.

325<sup>e</sup>. For that which is of the love is constantly in the thought.

409<sup>7</sup>. There must be a predominance of either the one love or the other. Sig. and Ex.

506<sup>3</sup>. Unless the corporeal loves into which man is born are ruled by spiritual loves . . . they extinguish all the perception and the derivative Knowledge of truths and goods . . . Tr.

537<sup>2</sup>. A Spirit or a man cannot be anywhere else than where is the love of his life; for that which a man loves he wills, he thinks, and he breathes.

644<sup>23</sup>. 'Love your enemies' . . . 'To love,' here, = charity.

660. In a word, all the joy of man proceeds from his love; and all sadness and grief of the lower mind, from an attack on the love.

670. For the love draws the interiors of the mind . . . to its own side . . .

735. Combat between those who are for the life of love and charity . . . and those who are for faith alone. Sig. and Ex.

786<sup>6</sup>. 'To love,' in the Word, means the same as 'to do;' for he who loves, does. Ex.

789<sup>4</sup>. That the love and will of man enter into all things of his faith and thought; but that the faith and thought cannot enter into his love and will; for that which a man loves he also loves to do, he loves to know, he loves to think, he loves to speak, and he loves to understand; thus he also loves to have for his faith . . .

797<sup>4</sup>. For love in its essence is to will, and in its coming forth—existentia—is to do; for that which a man loves, he wills; and that which he wills from love, he does.

798<sup>4</sup>. For all Angels and Spirits are . . . loves and the derivative intelligences; and there are two universal loves which are fundamental ones of all; namely, love to the Lord, and love towards the neighbour . . .

803<sup>5</sup>. (Thus) faith and love are with man when his Internal has been purified from evils . . .

817<sup>5</sup>. For all faith necessarily conjoins itself with some love . . .

822<sup>3</sup>. For everyone is his own love . . .

832<sup>3</sup>. All love is made spiritual by means of truths from the Word. Ex. —<sup>5</sup>.

—<sup>6</sup>. It follows that there are as many degrees of love as there are of life. The love in which are the Angels of the Third Heaven is called celestial love; the love in which are the Angels of the Second Heaven is called spiritual love; and the love in which are the Angels of the First Heaven is called spiritual natural love, and also celestial natural love. As are their loves, so are their wisdom and intelligence. (Continued under DEGREE.)

837. Every man after death becomes his own love ; and the spirit of a man is nothing but the affection which is of his love. And therefore when a man becomes a Spirit, he thinks and consequently speaks from his affection, and he also wills and consequently acts from his affection ; and then he longs for and imbibes the things which are of his affection or love, and is averse to and rejects those which are not of his affection or love. Nay, his face successively becomes the face of his affection or love ; from which he is afterwards Known, and also from his speech, the sound of which is the sound of his affection. In a word, a man after death becomes his own love or affection in form ; and therefore when anyone speaks against the affection which is of his love, or attacks it, his face is changed, and he himself goes away, or suddenly vanishes . . . —<sup>2</sup>.

—<sup>2</sup>. Inquiry has been made as to whether the corporeal form of an Angel or Spirit with all its members is also the affection which is of love ; and it has been found that each and all things of them are so. The reason is, that the universal Heaven . . . which is formed into Societies according to all the distinctions and varieties of affections, relates to one man, and all Angels and Spirits are human forms therefrom ; and therefore as Heaven is the complex of all affections, so also is an Angel and a Spirit . . . Hence became evident to me the following arcanum . . . that each and all things of man, both of his mind and of his body, are forms of love in a marvellous series ; and that the organs of the brain and face, and also the members and viscera of the body, are perpetual contextures corresponding to the affections of Heaven in which are its Societies. Hence became evident to me the further arcanum, that the affections and derivative thoughts of the mind extend themselves into all things of the body . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Man's love and life are exactly as are the works of his will ; and (these) are as the truths which are applied to life.

839. That man's faith is such as is his love or life. Ex.

842. That love, life, and works with every man make a one. Ex.

855. From the Celestial Kingdom there are not heard words of speech, but sounds. The reason is that all who are in that Kingdom speak from love . . .

864<sup>e</sup>. (As) every man is his own love, and man as to his spirit which lives after death is nothing but the affection which is of his love, and as all evil is from his love, thus is of his love, it follows that the love or affection of man can be reformed in no other way than by the spiritual shunning of evils . . .

867<sup>2</sup>. As the Angels perceive nothing else with a man than his love . . .

874<sup>2</sup>. He then lives his own love . . .

894. Hence it may be evident how little the followers of faith alone know what love is . . .

950<sup>3</sup>. For that which is loved above all things is (the man's) god. There are two loves which are completely opposite to each other,—the love of self, and love to God ; and also the love of the world, and the love of Heaven. (Continued under LOVE OF SELF.)

970<sup>2</sup>. This the Lord effects by means of spiritual love, which is the love of truth and good. Man is at this time set in the midst between two loves, between the love of evil and the love of good. When the love of evil recedes, the love of good succeeds in its place ; and the love of evil recedes slowly through a life according to the precepts of the decalogue . . .

982<sup>3</sup>. For in proportion as heavenly affections and loves inflow with the evil, in the same proportion the evil are kindled with burning heat to do evil and speak falsity. Ex.

983<sup>3</sup>. All love descends into the body from an affection of the mind . . .

993<sup>3</sup>. The love of adultery is the fundamental love of all infernal loves, which in themselves are not loves, but hatreds . . .

1000<sup>6</sup>. (The married pair) then have a life of love, which can only be described as being the life of joy itself.

1017. When a man abstains from hatred . . . there inflows love . . .

1076<sup>3</sup>. Every Angel and man is his own love, and every man and Angel is encompassed with a sphere, flowing forth from his love. This sphere consists of the good of his love, and of the truth of his love ; for love produces both, as fire produces heat and light . . .

1082<sup>3</sup>. The producer is love, and the product thence is of love from good through truth. The ultimate products . . . are as many as are the subjects in the three kingdoms of nature.

1093<sup>3</sup>. Man's love is like fire, and his thoughts are like the rays of light thence. If the love is good, the thoughts . . . are Truths ; but if the love is evil, the thoughts . . . are Falsities . . .

1096<sup>3</sup>. There is the thought of light, and there is the thought of love . . .

1138<sup>e</sup>. Such is the union of the Lord with man, and of man with the Lord, through love.

1146<sup>e</sup>. By the state in man we mean his love ; and by the changes of state, the affections of love.

1150<sup>3</sup>. The reason is that love is the life of man . . .

1151. There are two loves of Heaven, and thence two loves of the Church, from which the Lord is worshipped,—celestial love which is love to the Lord, and spiritual love which is love towards the neighbour. Sig.

1153<sup>6</sup>. Therefore the operation of the Lord is into the love of man, and from that into his understanding, and not the reverse. The love with its affections, which are innumerable, is not perceived by man except with a very general sense . . . and yet man is to be led from one affection of his loves into another according to the connection in which they are from order . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. In the same proportion the Lord by means of love introduces him into wisdom and the love of wisdom, and conjoins wisdom with love . . .

1168<sup>2</sup>. Hence, such as is the love, such is the good . . .

1170<sup>6</sup>. Hence . . . such as is the love, such is the wisdom . . .

[E.] 1171<sup>4</sup>. The love of the will gives intelligence according to its quality. Natural love from spiritual gives intelligence in civil and moral things; spiritual love in natural gives intelligence in spiritual things; but merely natural love . . . does not give any intelligence in spiritual things, but it gives the faculty of confirming whatever one pleases . . . But still this love does not take away the faculty of understanding truths in their light. It takes it away when it is present; but it does not take it away when it is absent.

1175<sup>3</sup>. Love as the fountain is in the will of man; the affections which are its streams flow by continuity into the understanding . . .

1228<sup>2</sup>. The love and wisdom proceeding from the Lord as a Sun appear as two distinct things . . .

Ath. 178. All things have been so created that . . . the love . . . clothes itself with what is human in the several degrees . . .

J. (Post.) 233. On love. Gen.art.

— (It is found that the Spirits who come from the world) have so gross an idea about love that it may be called filthy. They think from the delight of the love of adultery. Some have no idea of love, because they had not known what love is . . . In a word, all have an idea of love from the idea of lasciviousness.

234. When man has been prepared, his love is then the head of all the rest; it leads him; and he then changes his companions, and turns his face to the Society where is his reigning love . . .

235. That the Knowledges of truth are inscribed on the affection or love . . .

333. The love of knowing and understanding is a love of natural light; the love of knowing and understanding truths is a love of spiritual light, which love is with those especially who are in the love of good, but is also with those who are in the love of glory . . .

D. Love i. That what love is, is but little comprehended in the world, when yet it is the very life of man. Gen.art.

ii. That the Lord alone is Love itself, because He is Life itself . . . Gen.art.

iv. For the form of love is the form of use, because the subjects of love are uses; for love wills to do goods . . .

ix. From which it is evident that affection is love in its essence, and that use is love in its form.

xviii. The receptacle of love is spoken of, because love is impossible with man except in a recipient form, which is substantial . . .

xix. That 'to love,' in the Word, is to do uses. Gen.art.

xx. The reason love produces heat, is that love is the very life, and is the living force of all things in the universal world. Gen.art.

xxi. All these forms, both perfect and imperfect, are forms of love . . .

D. Wis. iii. 2. That the Lord conjoins Himself [with man] in these two receptacles; in the one by means of love; in the other by means of wisdom. Gen.art.

3. That love and wisdom simultaneously and unambiguously form each and all things; but still they distinguish themselves in them. Gen.art.

— The union of love and wisdom is reciprocal; love unites itself to wisdom, and wisdom reunites itself to love. Hence love acts and wisdom reacts. Every effect comes forth by means of this Reciprocal.

—<sup>3</sup>. As there are two things, love and wisdom, which form the embryo in the womb . . . there are (pairs) of things everywhere in the body . . . The right side is the receptacle of love . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Therefore the initiations of life with beasts are not receptacles of the love and wisdom of the Lord; but of natural affection and knowledge . . .

ix. Love does, and wisdom teaches; and that which love does is good, and that which wisdom teaches is truth . . . What is love without good in effect? . . . Thus love comes forth in use . . .

x. That there is a reciprocal conjunction of love and wisdom . . . Gen.art.

7. That love, which is the life of the will, makes the whole life of man. Gen.art.

—<sup>3</sup>. For the blood corresponds to love.

Can. God. v. l. Love and wisdom are the two essentials and universals of life; love is the esse of life; and wisdom is the existere of life from this esse.

10. Love and wisdom are inseparable and indivisible.

vi. 4. Love, by means of wisdom, comes forth and subsists in use.

vii. 2. First ends are of love, or are relations to love; middle ends are of wisdom . . . and ultimate ends are of use . . .

Inv. 11. In the Spiritual World, presence is according to love.

14. The celestial degree . . . is, in special, of love . . . The spiritual degree . . . is, in special, of wisdom from love . . .

A. 1003<sup>8</sup>. The worst kind of the love of self is the love of dominating for the sake of self; that is, solely for the sake of honour and gain. They who are in this love can indeed profess faith and charity, but they do it with the mouth and not with the heart; nay, the worst of them have the things of faith and charity . . . as means to their ends.

C. J. 61. (Hereditary evil) consists in the love of commanding. (In the parallel passage in T.822, this is love of dominating.) This love is such that in proportion as the reins are given to it, it bursts forth until it blazes with the desire to exercise command over all, and at last so that it wants to be invoked and worshipped as God. This love is 'the serpent' which deceived Eve and Adam; for it said to the woman: 'God knoweth that in the day in which ye shall eat of the fruit of the tree, your eyes will be opened, and then you will be as God.' In proportion, therefore, as a man gives the reins to this love and rushes into it, in the same proportion he averts himself from God, and turns to himself, and becomes an atheist; and then Divine truths . . . may serve as means. But, as the end is dominion, the means are no more of the heart than in so far as they serve for dominion. This is the reason why all those who are in the middle and in the ultimate degree of the love of commanding are in Hell; for this love is the devil there . . . 62. 63.

F. 49. That religiosity which adulterates the goods of the Church, derives its origin from the love of commanding.

W. 141<sup>6</sup>. The love which is the head, or that to which all internal loves relate, is the love of dominating from the love of self.

142. As these two loves—love to the Lord, and the love of dominating from the love of self, are completely opposite to each other; and as all who are in love to the Lord turn themselves to the Lord as a Sun . . . it may be evident that all who are in the love of dominating from the love of self turn themselves backwards from the Lord. The reason they turn in opposite directions is that those who are in love to the Lord love nothing more than to be led by the Lord, and will that the Lord alone shall dominate; whereas those who are in the love of dominating from the love of self, love nothing more than to be led by themselves, and will that they themselves alone may dominate. It is said the love of dominating from the love of self, because there is a love of dominating from the love of doing uses; which love, because it makes one with love towards the neighbour, is a spiritual love. But this love cannot be called the love of dominating, but the love of doing uses.

[W.] 144. As the love of dominating from the love of self is completely opposite to love to the Lord, therefore the Spirits who are in that love of dominating turn their faces back from the Lord, and therefore look with the eyes to the west of that World.

254<sup>2</sup>. The spiritual degree is contracted . . . especially with those who from the love of self are in the love of dominating, because this love is opposite to love to the Lord . . . The reason why these loves close the spiritual degree, is that they are the origins of evils.

271<sup>2</sup>. He who is in the love of dominating from the love of self, feels in this love a delight of life which surpasses other delights of every kind ; hence all that is of that love he calls good, and all that is contrary to it he declares to be evil ; when yet it is the opposite.

273<sup>2</sup>. For in Hell the love of dominating from the love of self is the reigning love. This is there called the devil ; and the affections of falsity together with the thoughts originating from that love, are called his crew.

424<sup>2</sup>. (Natural love) descends in proportion as it loves dominion from no love of use, but from the love of self alone. It is this love which is called 'the devil.' They who are in this love are able to speak and act in the same manner as those who are in spiritual love ; but they do so either from the memory, or from the understanding elevated of itself into the light of Heaven. . . For when that corporeal love drags back its understanding from its elevation, which it does when the man is alone, and is then thinking from his own love, he then thinks against God in favour of nature, against Heaven in favour of the world, and against the truths and goods of the Church in favour of the falsities and evils of Hell . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. After death . . . those who in the world have been in the supreme love of dominating from the love of self, and at the same time in elevation of the understanding above others, appear as to the body like Egyptian mummies, and as to the mind gross and silly. Who in the world at the present day is aware that this love in itself is such ? Nevertheless there is a love of dominating from the love of use ; but from the love of use not for the sake of self, but for the sake of the common good. Man, however, can hardly distinguish this love from the former ; but yet the difference between them is such as there is between Heaven and Hell.

P. 38. The spring of these delights (of the concupiscences of evil) is the love of dominating from the love of self . . .

146<sup>6</sup>. The most difficult combat of all is that with the love of dominating from the love of self. He who subjugates this, easily subjugates all the other evil loves, because it is their head.

215<sup>6</sup>. The love of dignities and honours for the sake of dignities and honours is the love of self ; properly, the love of dominating from the love of self . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. He who loves himself alone sees others only as outside of himself . . . Hence he who is in the love of dominating from the love of self thinks nothing of defrauding the neighbour, of committing adultery with his wife, of reviling him, of breathing revenge against him even to the death, of cruelty towards him, and so on. The man derives this from the fact that the devil himself is nothing else than the love of dominating from the love of self . . . and he who is led by the devil . . . is led into all these evils . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. It has been given me to feel of what quality and how great is the delight of the love of dominating from the love of self. . . It was such as to surpass all the delights which are in the world. It was a delight of the whole mind from its inmosts to its ultimates ; but in the body it was felt only as pleasure and cheerfulness with a swelling bosom ; and it was also given me to feel that from that delight, as from their fountain, gushed forth the delights of all evils ; as those of committing adultery, revenge, fraud . . .

231<sup>7</sup>. Nearly the same (profanation) takes place with those who at heart acknowledge the Divine things of the Word and of the Church, and who completely immerse them in their proprium, which is the love of dominating over all things . . .

233<sup>5</sup>. This evil can be removed in no other way than by . . . the love of dominating becoming not for the sake of self, but for the sake of uses ; for thus uses make the head, and the love of self, or the love of dominating, becomes first the body beneath the head, and afterwards the feet to walk with.

R. 350<sup>2</sup>. By the tribe of Judah is also signified the opposite love, which is the love of self ; properly, the love of dominating from the love of self ; which love is called diabolical love.

387. The diabolical kingdom consists of those who are in the love of dominating from the love of self, and are thence in folly . . . But the satanic kingdom consists of those who are in the love of dominating from the pride of Own intelligence, and are thence in insanity . . .

502. 'Which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt' = the two infernal loves, which are the love of dominating from the love of self, and the love of reigning from the pride of Own intelligence ; which are in the Church where there is not one God, and where the Lord is not worshipped, and where men do not live according to the precepts of the decalogue. . . For man is born into these two loves, and comes into them when he grows up ; and these loves cannot be removed except by God the Saviour, and by a life according to His precepts . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That the love of dominating from the love of self, and the love of reigning from the pride of Own intelligence, are the heads of all the loves of Hell, and thus are the heads of all the evils and derivative falsities in the Church, is at this day unknown. The delights of these loves, which surpass the delights of all the pleasures of the lower mind, cause it not to be known, when yet they are spiritually Sodom and Egypt. That 'Sodom' is the love of dominating from the love of self, may be evident from the description of Sodom in . . . Gen. xix. . . These loves and their evils are signified by 'Sodom and Gomorrah' in the following passages. III.

—<sup>3</sup>. But it is to be known that there is the love of dominating from the love of self, and the love of dominating from the love of uses. The latter love is heavenly, but the former is infernal ; and therefore when the one makes the head, the other makes the feet. That is to say, when the love of dominating from the love of self makes the head, then the love of dominating from the love of uses—which is also the love of being of service to the neighbour from the Lord—first makes the feet, afterwards the soles of the feet, and finally is trampled on. But when the love of dominating from the love of uses . . . makes the head, then the love of dominating from the love of self . . . first makes the feet, afterwards the soles of the feet, and finally is trampled on. But in the world these two loves can with difficulty be distinguished by man, because the external forms of them are alike. But they are distinguished by this—that that heavenly love is with those who approach the Lord and live according to the precepts of the decalogue; and that that infernal love is with those who do not approach the Lord and do not live according to the precepts of the decalogue.

707. A mind to destroy the New Church originating from the love of command and of supereminence. Sig. and Ex.

729. That the Roman Catholic religiosity . . . from its origin from the love of dominating from the love of self over the holy things of the Church and over Heaven, thus over all things of the Lord and His Word, has defiled and profaned the things of the Word . . . Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>9</sup>. It is said the love of dominating from the love of self, because there is also the love of dominating from the love of uses, which two loves are diametrically opposite to each other. For the love of dominating from the love of self is diabolical, because it regards self alone, and the world for the sake of self; whereas the love of dominating from the love of uses is heavenly, because it regards the Lord . . . and uses to Him are to do good to the Church for the sake of the salvation of souls; and therefore this latter love abominates the love of dominating from the love of self.

763<sup>2</sup>. The delight of the love of dominating from the love of self over all things of the Lord, which are all things of Heaven and the Church, is turned after death into such torment; and the pleasantness of the love of filling the lower mind and the body with the delights acquired by means of opulence with those who are in the said love of dominating, is turned into such mourning. Sig.

782<sup>2</sup>. All those from that religiosity who have been in the love of dominion from the love of self, and in the derivative love of the world . . . after death breathe nothing else than dominion and the pleasures of the lower mind therefrom, and the pleasures of the body from opulence . . . But as the love of dominating from the love of self over the holy things of the Church and of Heaven . . . is diabolical, therefore, after some time has passed, they are separated from their companions, and are cast into the Hells . . . But these things happen to them according to the degree of the love of dominion over the Divine things of the Lord, according to which degree there is in them the rejection of the Lord.

802. It has been said above that the love of dominating from the love of self over . . . the Divine things of the Lord is 'the devil.' Now as this dominion is seated as the end in the lower minds of those who have founded this religiosity, they could not do otherwise than profane the holy things of the Word and of the Church. Ex.

M. 261<sup>3</sup>. The universals of Hell are these three loves—the love of dominating from the love of self . . . The universals of Heaven opposite to these are these three loves—the love of dominating from the love of use . . . T. 661.

262. I examined the first universal love of Hell, which was the love of dominating from the love of self, and afterwards the universal love of Heaven corresponding to it, which was the love of dominating from the love of uses; for I was not allowed to examine the one love without the other, because the understanding does not perceive the one love without the other, for they are opposites. . . When I considered the love of dominating from the love of self, it was given to perceive that this love was in the highest degree infernal, and consequently was with those who are in the deepest Hell; and that the love of dominating from the love of uses was in the highest degree heavenly, and consequently was with those who are in the highest Heaven. The reason the love of dominating from the love of self is in the highest degree infernal, is that to dominate from the love of self is [to do so] from the proprium, and man's proprium is from birth evil itself, and evil itself is diametrically against the Lord; and therefore the more they advance into this evil, the more they deny God and the holy things of the Church, and adore themselves and nature. Let those who are in this evil explore it in themselves, and they will see. This love also is such that in proportion as the reins are loosed, which is the case so long as what is impossible does not stand in the way, in the same proportion it rushes from step to step, even to the highest; and finds no bounds there, but grieves and sighs if there is no higher step. This love with statesmen ascends so high that they want to be kings and emperors; and, if possible, to dominate over all things of the world, and to be called kings of kings and emperors of emperors. And the same love with the clergy ascends so high that they want to be gods, and, as far as possible, to dominate over all things of Heaven, and to be called gods of gods. That at heart neither of these acknowledge any God, will be seen in what follows. But, on the other hand, they who want to dominate from the love of uses, do not want to dominate from themselves, but from the Lord; because the love of uses is from the Lord, and is the Lord Himself. These regard dignities no otherwise than as means to perform uses. (The nature of the love of dominating shown by examples from Hell, and from Heaven. 263–266.) T. 661.

291. From this desire . . . there flows a striving for Power, which is in some (consorts) from the delight of the love of dominating . . .

T. 405. But if the love of self, or the love of dominating, makes the head, the love of Heaven passes through the body to the feet . . . There is a love of dominating from the love of the neighbour, and there is a love of dominating from the love of self. They who are in the love of dominating from the love of the neighbour seek dominion for the sake of the end that they may perform uses to the public and to private persons; and therefore to these is entrusted domination in the Heavens. Emperors, kings, dukes, who have been born and educated to dominion, if they humble themselves before God, are sometimes less in that love than those who are of low origin, and who from pride seek for places of pre-eminence. But to those who are in the love of dominating from the love of self, the love of Heaven is like a footstool on which for the sake of the common people they rest their feet; but which, when the people are out of sight, they toss into a corner, or out of doors.

T.405<sup>3</sup>. The evils which are in those who are in the love of dominating from the love of self are in general these: contempt for others, envy, enmity against those who do not favour them, and the derivative hostility, hatreds, revenges, unmercifulness, fierceness, and cruelty; and, where there are such evils, there is also contempt for God and for Divine things. . . . But this love is different with the clergy from what it is with the laity: with the clergy, this love, when the reins are given to it, mounts up until they want to be gods; but with the laity, until they want to be kings. The phantasy of this love carries their lower minds away even to this extent.

431. What is due from a master and a mistress towards their servants, is derived from the love of reigning; and this from the state of each person's mind.

498<sup>2</sup>. For man is saturated with two loves, which are the love of dominating over all, and the love of possessing the wealth of all. These loves, if uncurbed, rush on to infinity. The hereditary evils into which man is born have arisen principally from these two loves. . . . All who have given themselves up to these loves look at themselves alone as the only one, in whom and for whom are all others. Such have no pity, no fear of God, no love of the neighbour; and thence there are in them unmercifulness, inhumanity, and cruelty, and an infernal cupidity and avidity for plundering and robbing, and cunning and deceit in effecting these things. Such things are not innate in the beasts of the earth. . . . But that man is such inwardly, manifests itself. . . . in massacres and pillaging. . . . from which scarcely one abstains until the drum is heard as the signal to desist. From these things it is evident that if men were not restrained by the fear of legal penalties. . . . the whole human race would be destroyed.

533. See LOVE-amor, here.

598. If man remains natural, he desires to rule Heaven from the world. Such becomes everyone who is in the love of dominating from the love of self. If he is explored inwardly, he believes in no God, but in himself; and after death he believes him to be God who is more powerful than others.

D. 3428, Pref. (It is a general law of Heaven that) in proportion as the love of commanding enters with a man, in the same proportion love towards the neighbour goes out of him.

— . Hence it follows that in proportion as the love of commanding enters, in the same proportion saving faith goes out. . . .

— . That this is so, is evident from conjugal love, which goes out in the same proportion as the love of commanding enters.

5000. On the love of commanding, and on the command of love.—I spoke to Spirits about the love of commanding. They supposed that it is not allowable for anyone to command. But it was said that it is allowable to command; but that the love of commanding is from two origins—from the love of self, and from the love of the neighbour. They who command from the love of self and not from the love of the neighbour are devils; because they do all things from themselves, and not from the Lord. Such rush into all execrable evils. . . . These regard no other use than for the sake of themselves. . . . Whereas they who command from love towards the neighbour can be exalted to great dignities; for they regard uses as the end. . . . The Lord commands through these; for they fear the Lord, and love truth, good, and use. . . . Such commands are good, and their command is the command of love; for when spiritual and celestial love commands, then the Lord commands. (Continued under COMMAND-imperare, at D.5001.)

5004<sup>e</sup>. Hence it was evident of what quality as to faith are they who are in the love of dominion—in amore dominatus.

5046. In the (Swedish) nation more than in others is the love of dominating; with some for the sake of honour, with some for the sake of gain; for they are not wealthy like other nations, and therefore nearly all seek for public employments; and as they have interior thoughts, in the other life they devise wicked arts. . . . for the sake of being pre-eminent; for in the love of dominating there are contempt, enmity, envy, hatred, revenge, fierceness, cruelty. . . .

5983. How greatly the love of commanding is against the Lord. Gen.art.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it was evident how much hatred against the Lord there is in such love of commanding.

6010. On the love of commanding.—What ineffable delight and as it were sweetness there is in the love of commanding, has been made known to me by much experience. . . . J.(Post.)245.

6034. On the love of commanding, and on the love of possessing the goods of the world. Gen.art.

6052. That the love of commanding has Hell in it, cannot be believed. . . . The reason is that the love of commanding sinks the lower mind into its proprium, so that it cannot be elevated by the Lord. . . . The highest degree of the love of self is the love of exercising command over others; and it contains in it the love of exercising command over the Divine; which is 'Babel.' The love of commanding is such as not to exercise command over others in its own office; but it wants to do so outside thereof over others; not being content with its own command. (This is one of the three evils which will be especially shunned by those who will be of the New Jerusalem. 6053.)

6096. xxix. They who are in the highest degree of the love of commanding from the love of self, are in sodomy.

E. 394<sup>3</sup>. For example: those with whom the love of reigning is predominant, have their delight in dominating over others; and, if they can, over all. This delight is in them after death, and cannot be taken away . . .

405<sup>38</sup>. Babel's love of exercising command over Heaven and the Church. Tr.

659<sup>5</sup>. Nothing is more delightful to those who have been given up to the love of commanding than an excrementitious stink.

950<sup>6</sup>. By the love of self is especially meant the love of exercising command over others from the sole delight of dominion, and for the sake of eminence; and not from the delight of uses . . .

951<sup>8</sup>. It is not believed in the world that the love of commanding from the sole delight of command, and the love of possessing goods from the sole delight of possession . . . store up in themselves all evils, and also contempt for and the rejection of all things which are of Heaven and the Church . . . But it is to be known that in proportion as these two loves regard uses in the first place, and self in the second, in the same proportion they are good; whereas in proportion as they regard self in the first place, and uses in the second, in the same proportion they are evil . . .

1006<sup>2</sup>. The sodomitical Hells are for those who have been in evils from the love of exercising command over others from the sole delight of command . . .

1010<sup>2</sup>. The reason the love of honour, command, and supereminence is the last state of the Church . . . is that this love would reign in the Church in its last times; and, when this love reigns, there also reigns falsity from evil; and this overcomes truth. For more than all other loves this love extinguishes the light of Heaven, and induces the darkness of Hell. The reason is that this love is the proprium itself of man, and by no force can a man be withdrawn from his proprium and be elevated towards Heaven so long as this love reigns; and the proprium into which this love completely immerses a man is nothing but evil and falsity. That from this love a man is in thick darkness as to all things which are of Heaven and the Church . . . does not appear to the man who is in it, because natural lumen becomes resplendent with them in the same proportion that spiritual light is extinguished . . . When, therefore, this love reigns in the Church, it is all over with it; for no one any longer has the understanding of truth and the will of good; for honour, command, and supereminence are the highest pleasure, and are felt as the highest good . . . From this it may in some measure be evident what is meant by 'Armageddon.' It has also been shown to the life that this love has vastated the Church, and has adulterated all its goods and truths, not only in the kingdoms of Babylon, but also in all the other kingdoms. At this day almost everyone, when he comes into the Spiritual World, bears with him from the natural world that he wants to be honoured, to exercise command, and to be supereminent; and there are very few who love uses for the sake of uses . . .

1032<sup>2</sup>. The reason Babylon is called 'the great harlot' is that the love of dominating over all things of the world, and over all things of Heaven and the Church, and finally over the Lord Himself, cannot but completely convert Divine truths into falsities, and Divine goods into evils; thus the Church into a religiosity in which all its good and truth are adulterated and profaned . . .

1056<sup>2</sup>. With those who from childhood begin to blaze with the love—cupido—of dominating by means of the holy things of the Church, the spiritual mind is completely closed, and also the rational mind, and finally the natural mind down to the sensuous mind . . . and thus they become merely sensuous; who are the most stupid of all in spiritual and the derivative rational things, and the most cunning of all in worldly and the derivative civil things . . .

1057<sup>6</sup>. In a word, the love of domination by means of the holy things of the Church corresponds to a stench, and its delight to a stink inexpressible in words . . .

1143. Love to the Lord is impossible with them; for the love of dominating over Heaven and over the Church is completely contrary; for it is the love of self, which is diabolical love . . .

1188. For example: the uses performed by a king, prince, consul, prefect, and officer, whose principal end is the love of commanding . . . are not for the sake of the good of the kingdom, commonwealth, country, societies, and fellow-citizens, but for the sake of the delight of command; thus for the sake of self . . . I have seen such after death . . . and they were among the fiery devils; for when the love of commanding is the principal end, it is the very fire of Hell.

—<sup>2</sup>. I have also seen others with whom the love of commanding was not the principal end; but the love of God and of the neighbour . . . and they were Angels, to whom had been given dominions in the Heavens.

— . The nature of the love of commanding, when it is the principal end, may be seen . . . from the kingdom which is meant by 'Babel' . . .

1189<sup>3</sup>. As, in the Christian world, there universally reigns the love of commanding, and the love of riches; and these loves are at this day so deeply inrooted that it is not known that they ever seduce, it is important that their quality should be taught. They seduce every man who does not shun evils because they are sins; for he who does not shun evils does not fear God, and therefore remains natural; and as the loves proper to the natural man are the love of commanding and the love of riches, he therefore does not see with interior acknowledgment the nature of these loves in himself. He does not see it unless he is being reformed; (in which case) light inflows from the Lord . . . and gives him the affection and also the faculty to see the nature of these loves, and whether they are dominating with him, or whether they are serving . . . If they are dominating, and are in the first place, then they are seducing him, and are becoming curses; but if they are serving and are in the second place, then they are not seducing, and are becoming blessings. I can asseverate that all with whom the love of commanding is in the first place are devils within. The love is known from its delight; for it surpasses all the delight of the life of men. It continually exhales from Hell, and the exhalation appears like the fire of a great furnace, and kindles the hearts of the men whom the Lord does not protect. The Lord protects all who are reformed. . . The Lord cannot lead the former out of Hell, because the love of commanding does not admit of internal bonds . . .

J. (Post.) 236. All who are in the love of reigning for the sake of self, and not for the sake of use, retain this love after death; and wherever they come they want to reign . . . This love rejects everything Divine, unless it is a means for it to reign . . .

237. Let all know who are in the world, and read these things, that the love of reigning for the sake of self and not for the sake of use is the diabolical love, and all evils are in it. Let them know this and beware. All evil loves are in it and with it . . . 238.

246. I have seen many who had lived in this and in former ages, some of whom had been commanders of armies . . . and some in civil offices, who from their favouring fortune had caught such a delight of commanding that they had aspired to domination over all things. Their delight was perceived to be Heaven to them . . . After death they at first spoke about God; but after a short time they denied God, and acknowledged nature, and finally became like fools, sitting in obscurity, and thus leading a miserable life. The reason is, that the love of commanding is opposite to heavenly love. 248.

249. They who are in the delight of the love of commanding cannot become spiritual. They become corporeal, because they immerse everything of affection and the derivative thought in their proprium, which in itself is corporeal and evil, inasmuch that they cannot be withdrawn from proprium.

Love of self. Amor sui.

See under LOVE OF DOMINATING, MOUNTAIN, and SELF.

A. 20. For all things which are of the love of self and of the love of the world, (external men) suppose to be goods; and all things which favour these loves they suppose to be truths; not knowing that these goods are evils, and these truths falsities.

33. The loves of self and of the world present something which is like life, and something which is like joy; but as they are altogether contrary to true love . . . it may be evident that they are not loves, but hatreds; for the more anyone loves himself and the world, the more he hates the neighbour, and thus the Lord.

191. From the love of self, or from the proprium, they then began to believe nothing which they did not apprehend with the senses. Tr. The love of self, or proprium, is represented by 'the woman.'

205. At last, because the love of self began to reign with them [they began to think] that they could lead themselves, and thus be like the Lord. The love of self is attended with this: that they do not want to be led by the Lord, but by themselves . . .

229. That the Rational of man suffered itself to be deceived by proprium . . . or by the love of self, so that it would believe nothing unless it saw and felt it. Sig.

230. The dominant evil of this posterity was the love of self; and not so much the love of the world, as at this day . . .

250. By 'the serpent' is here meant . . . in special, the love of self. 251, Ex.

251. Hatred against the neighbour and the Lord . . . is the same as the love of self.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'A flying fire-serpent' = the cupidity which is of the love of self.

257. 'The head of the serpent' = . . . in special, the dominion of the love of self, the nature of which is such that it not only seeks dominion, but also dominion over all things of the earth; (and also) over all things of Heaven; (and even) over the Lord; and even then it would not rest. This lies hidden in every spark of the love of self. . . Hence it is evident how 'the serpent,' or the evil of the love of self, wants to dominate; and how it hates him over whom it cannot dominate. This is 'the head of the serpent,' which lifts itself up, and which the Lord tramples on, even to the earth, that it may 'go upon its belly, and eat dust.' III.

583. The nephilim are called 'strong men' from the love of self. III.

636. Here, as no love remained, 'the earth' = the love of self . . .

760. Still less can anyone love himself and the neighbour at the same time, and still less can he love the Lord. He who loves himself hates all who do not serve him; so that he who loves himself is very far remote from heavenly love and charity . . .

808. 'He destroyed every substance' = the cupidities which are of the love of self. . . The cupidities of the antediluvians were those of the love of self . . . With these there reigned the love of self, and consequently its cupidities; for they had loved themselves so that they had supposed themselves to be gods . . .

911<sup>3</sup>. It is the contrary with those who place life solely in corporeal things . . . that is, who perceive nothing to be delightful except that which is of the love of self and of the world, which is the same as what is of hatred against all who do not favour and serve them . . .

1047. (For) the love of self and of the world, which are of the will of man, are nothing but hatreds; for in proportion as anyone loves himself, in the same proportion he hates the neighbour. And as these loves are so contrary to heavenly love, it cannot but be that there continually inflow from them such things as are contrary to mutual love, all of which in the intellectual part are falsities . . .

1079<sup>2</sup>. Where there is no charity, there is the love of self, consequently hatred against all who do not favour self. Hence it is that they do not see anything in the neighbour except his evil . . .

1304. The Church is such that when charity towards the neighbour recedes, and the love of self succeeds in its place, the doctrine of faith is nothing except in so far as it can be turned into the worship of self . . . All the love of self is attended with this; for he who loves himself above others not only hates all who do not serve him . . . but also . . . lifts himself up above God . . . These are the things signified by 'the city and the tower.' The love of self, and all the cupidity thence, is the most filthy and profane of all things, and is the veriest Infernal itself.

1306. Therefore the love of self, which is conceit and pride, is called 'height,' 'loftiness,' 'elation,' and is described by all things which are high. Ill.

— Here, the love of self is described by 'cedars,' 'oaks,' 'mountains,' 'hills,' 'a tower,' all of which are high.

1307. The love of self is that which least of all agrees with heavenly life; for it is the source of all evils; not only of hatreds, but also of revenges, cruelties, and adulteries; and still less does it agree when it enters into worship, and profanes it . . .

1324. (Thus) such a doctrine, or such a worship, in which interiorly is the love of self, or the worship of self, was not permitted with this Ancient Church. Sig.

1326. 'Babel'=such worship . . . in which interiorly is the love of self, consequently everything that is filthy and profane. The love of self is nothing else than the proprium. . . From Philautia, that is, the love of self or proprium, flow forth all evils; as hatreds, revenges, cruelties, adulteries, deceits, hypocrisies, impiety; and therefore when the love of self or proprium is in worship, such evils are in it . . . Hence is all the profanation of worship . . . (Therefore) in proportion as the love of self or proprium introduces itself into worship, in the same proportion internal worship recedes . . .

1419<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is that nothing is more contrary to heavenly love than the love of self.

1506. (The sphere of the love of self, shown.)

—<sup>e</sup>. The love of self, more than any other love, is contrary to mutual love.

1568<sup>2</sup>. There are many things which do not agree with the internal man. Such are all things which spring from the love of self and from the love of the world . . . The ends of the love of self and of the love of the world look outwards or downwards . . .

1594. He does not believe that the love of self and its cupidities are what disunite (the external man from the internal); and also the love of the world and its cupidities, but not so much as the love of self. —<sup>3</sup>.

—<sup>3</sup>. (Moreover) when a man lives in no charity, it cannot appear to him that the life of the love of self and its cupidities is so contrary to heavenly love. There is also then in the love of self and its cupidities a certain flame and the derivative delight, which so affects the life that he scarcely knows anything else than that eternal happiness itself consists therein . . . They who are in the love of self want even the Lord to serve them; and in so far as this is not done they recede . . . This lies hidden in the love of self. From this may be evident what is the quality of the love of self; and also from the fact that it stores up in itself hatred against all who do not subject themselves to it as servants . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. In proportion, therefore, as a man acknowledges and believes that he is (vile and filthy), in the same proportion he recedes from the love of self and its cupidities . . . and in proportion as he does this, he receives from the Lord heavenly love . . .

1667<sup>2</sup>. In infancy, whatever is of the love of self and of the love of the world appears as if it were good . . . and is to be called so, so long as it is with an infant or child . . .

1690<sup>6</sup>. That (the Lord fought) against the love of self and all things which are of the love of self. Sig.

1691. All evil and falsity come forth from the love of self and the love of the world. There is no other origin of them; for the love of self and of the world are the opposites to celestial and spiritual love; and as they are the opposites, they are the things which are continually endeavouring to destroy the celestial and spiritual things of the Lord's Kingdom. From the love of self and of the world come forth all hatreds; from hatreds all revenges and cruelties; from both the former all deceits; in a word, all the Hells.

—<sup>4</sup>. 'Babel and Chaldea'=the love of self and of the world.

1749<sup>2</sup>. With evil and infernal Spirits there reigns the love of self and of the world. Hence they suppose themselves to be the gods of the universe . . .

1774. They have done goods from the love of self and of the world . . .

1812<sup>2</sup>. The Lord never fought from the love of self, or for Himself . . .

1813<sup>2</sup>. Man . . . can never fight from any other love, when he fights from himself, than the love of self and of the world . . .

1861<sup>7</sup>. Those who are in the love of self; or, what is the same, in hatred against the neighbour. Sig.

—<sup>9</sup>. Infernal fire is nothing else than hatred, revenge, and cruelty; or, what is the same, the love of self. 1862<sup>2</sup>.

2027. Thus they dissociate themselves by the love of self . . .

2039. How contrary is the love of self to heavenly love, and how filthy. Refs.

2041. The removal of the love of self and of the world. Sig. and Ex. 2051, Sig.

2045. They who are in the loves of self and of the world can never believe that they are in such filthy and unclean things . . . For whatever favours anyone's love is believed to be good . . .

[A.2045]<sup>2</sup>. It is the love of self from which are all the evils which destroy civil society. From it as from an unclean well spring all hatreds, all revenges, all cruelties, nay, all adulteries; for he who loves himself either despises, vituperates, or hates all who do not serve him, or render honour to him, or favour him . . . Thus this love is destructive of society and of the human race . . .

2057. They who are in the love of self. Sig. and Ex. —. Those within the Church who are in falsity, and at the same time in the love of self, especially profane holy things . . . for the love of self is the most filthy of all, because it is destructive of society . . . That it is also diametrically opposite to the mutual love in which Heaven consists, and is thus destructive of heavenly order itself, may be evident from evil Spirits and Genii . . . and also from the Hells, in which nothing reigns except the love of self; and as the love of self reigns there, so also do all kinds of hatreds, revenges, and cruelties . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Nothing endeavours to destroy this (heavenly) form and order except the love of self; thus all those in the other life who are in the love of self are more deeply infernal than others. For the love of self communicates nothing to others; but extinguishes and suffocates the delights and happinesses of others. Whatever delight inflows to them from others they receive to themselves, concentrate it in themselves, turn it into what is filthy of self, and cause it not to be propagated any further. They thus destroy everything unanimous and consociable; the result of which is disunion, and consequently destruction. And as each of them wants to be served, worshipped, and adored by others, and loves none but himself, there thence results dissociation, which is determined and puts itself forth into lamentable states, so that they perceive nothing to be more delightful than to torture others by direful methods and phantasies, from their hatred, revenge, and cruelty. When such come to any Society where there is mutual love, they are cast down of themselves . . . because all the influent delight is terminated in them; and as they exhale a filthy idea of self, their delight is there turned into a cadaverous stench, from which they feel the Hell of self; and are besides seized with frightful agony. From this may be evident what is the quality of the love of self; namely, that it is not only destructive of the human race, but is also destructive of heavenly order; and thus that there is nothing in it except what is impure, filthy, profane, and Hell itself; however much it may appear not to be such to those who are in it. Those are in the love of self who despise others in comparison with themselves; who hate those who do not favour, serve, and pay them a kind of worship; and who take a cruel delight in revenge, and in depriving others of honour, reputation, wealth, and life. They who are in that are in these; and let those who are in these know that they are in that.

2102. The loves of self and of the world alone obstruct the influx and operation of good and truth from the Lord.

2114<sup>e</sup>. That they who have been purified from the loves of self and of the world—both within the Church, and also without the Church—are justified by the Lord. Sig.

2140. The Lord's grief and anxiety for the human race, because it was imbued with such love of self . . . Tr.

2219. 'The faces of Sodom' = . . . interior evils, which are of the love of self. . . The reason the worst evils originate from the love of self, is that the love of self is destructive of human society . . . and of heavenly society . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. It has been shown . . . that the love of self is utterly contrary to the order into which man has been created. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. The love of self is the primary thing, nay, the one only thing, which destroys this (order); and not so much the love of the world; for this latter is indeed opposite to the spiritual things of faith, but the love of self is opposite to the celestial things of love; for he who loves himself does not love anyone else, but endeavours to destroy all who do not worship him . . . Hence it is evident that from the love of self spring all hatreds, revenges, and cruelties, and also all infamous simulations and deceits, thus all wickednesses contrary to the order of human society, and contrary to the order of heavenly society.

—<sup>4</sup>. Nay, so wicked is the love of self, that when the bonds are relaxed to it . . . even with those of the lowest sort, it rushes on so as to want to dominate not only over the relatives and neighbours, but also over the universe; nay, over the Supreme Divine Itself. Man is indeed ignorant of this, because he is kept in bonds not well known to him; but in proportion as these bonds are relaxed, it rushes on; which it has been given to know from much experience in the other life. As these things lie hidden in the love of self, those who are in the love of self, and are not endowed with the bonds of conscience, above all others hate the Lord, thus all the truths of faith . . . Moreover, this love is the 'head of the serpent,' which . . . the Lord tramples on.

—<sup>5</sup>. But the love of self is not always that which in the external form appears as conceit and pride; for sometimes these persons are able to have charity towards the neighbour; for such an external is born with some, and with some is acquired in the age of childhood; but is afterwards subjugated, the external still remaining. But those are [in the love of self] who despise others in comparison with themselves . . . who care nothing whatever for the common good . . . and especially all those who hate those who do not favour and serve them, persecuting them, and so far as they can, depriving them of their possessions, honour, reputation, and life. They who breathe such things in their mind may know that they are in the love of self above others.

2220. That 'Sodom' = all the evil from the love of self. Ex. 2322.

— In the Word, the abominations springing from the love of self are represented by adulteries of various kinds.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'Pride' = the love of self.

2228<sup>3</sup>. Infernal life is contracted from all those ends, thoughts, and works, which flow from the love of self . . .

2261<sup>2</sup>. With those who live in things contrary to charity, there can never be acknowledgment of truth, but only some persuasion, to which is adjoined the life of the love of self or of the world . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Those can never have of the Lord's life, who . . . when their life of the love of self and of the world is touched, hate the neighbour, and perceive delight in the loss of his wealth, honour, reputation, and life.

2273. If he places anything of merit in temptations, it is from the love of self . . .

2327<sup>2</sup>. The reason a state of humiliation is essential to true worship, is that in proportion as the heart is humbled, in the same proportion the love of self and all the evil thence ceases; and in proportion as this ceases, good and truth inflow from the Lord; for that which stands in the way of the reception of these is principally the love of self; for in this love there are contempt for others in comparison with self, hatred and revenge if it is not worshipped, and unmercifulness and cruelty; thus the worst of all evils; into which good and truth can never be introduced, for they are opposites.

—<sup>2</sup>. They who are in (the angelic) state perceive how null, and how sad, and how lamentable, is the life of those who are in the evils of the love of self and of the world.

—<sup>3</sup>. But in order that man may know what the life . . . of the love of self and of the world relatively is—or, what is the same, the life of pride, avarice, envy, hatred, revenge, unmercifulness, adultery—let him who excels in some gift of talent make for himself the character of anyone of these evils; or, if he can, let him paint it before himself according to the ideas which he may take about these evils from experience, knowledge, and reason; and then he will see . . . how horrible they are, and that they are diabolical forms, in which there is nothing human. Such forms do all those become after death who perceive the delight of life in such things . . .

2441<sup>6</sup>. The love of self and its cupidities are meant by 'men being scorched with fire . . .'

—<sup>7</sup>. 'The sun and moon,' in the opposite sense, = the love of self and of the world.

2446. 'Sulphur' = the Hell of the evils of the love of self . . . For 'sulphur' with its derivative 'fire,' in the Word, = the love of self with its cupidities and the derivative Falsities . . .

2492. With those who have exercised the memory for the sake of the love of self and of the world, it appears conglutinated and indurated.

2657<sup>6</sup>. The first Rational at first knows no other love than the love of self and of the world . . .

2689<sup>4</sup>. It is the affection of the love of self and of the world which induces such a Persuasive . . .

2870. That which is of the love of self and of the world and their cupidities appears to the man as freedom; but it is infernal freedom.

2881<sup>2</sup>. At that time it appears to the man as if he had no freedom; for he is continually fighting against the love of self and of the world . . .

2884. The freedom of the love of self and of the world and their cupidities is . . . utter slavery . . . (For) the love of self and of the world is nothing so little as love. It is hatred.

2910<sup>2</sup>. The external bonds which restrain, come from the love of self and of the world . . .

2930<sup>5</sup>. For there are affections of truth which are not from the heart; as those which are from the love of self, or of being eminent; from the love of the world, or of acquiring gain . . .

2982<sup>6</sup>. Except in sicknesses . . . when the cupidities of the love of self and of the world cease . . .

3078<sup>2</sup>. In the other life, by means of a manifestation of the affection, there is sometimes presented to view how much there is in anyone of the love of self, and how much of the love of the world . . .

3147. The washing of the feet signified that the dirt of the natural man was washed away. The dirt of the natural man is all those things which are of the love of self and of the love of the world . . . and when the things which are of the love of self and of the world are removed, the good (which continually inflows from the Lord) is received there . . . —<sup>6</sup>.

3224. They who are in the loves of self and of the world, thus in the sole heat of the light of the world, are in the same degree affected with evils and falsities . . .

3300<sup>5</sup>. 'Red' = the evil which is of the love of self . . . because the cupidities of the love of self are compared to 'fire.' Ill.

3318<sup>3</sup>. So long as a man is in the state in which he was born . . . the good which moves these things . . . is of the love of self and of the world . . . (But) temptations take away the things which are of the love of self; which are contempt for others in comparison with self, consequently which are of one's own glory; and which are also hatreds and revenges on that account . . .

3322. 'Esau' = the evil of the love of self before falsities have been so much adjoined to it; and 'Edom' = the evil of that love when they have been adjoined to it.

—<sup>7</sup>. This evil, namely, that of the love of self, which is such that it does not admit the truths of faith . . . is described by 'Esau,' and 'Edom.' Ill.

3325<sup>3</sup>. At that time the affection of truth cannot be distinguished from the delight of the love of self and of the world which is simultaneously in this affection, and is believed to be good. 3330.

3336<sup>6</sup>. For in proportion as a man is in the love of self and of the world, in the same proportion the good which is of genuine love does not appear.

[A.] 3402<sup>2</sup>. Good and truth, or the Angels, are said to be removed from man . . . when he is affected with the things which are of the love of self and of the world . . .

3413. 'They filled the wells with dust'=by earthly things; that is, by the loves of self and of gain. . . From these loves the Philistines were called 'the uncircumcised;' for those who are in them cannot do otherwise than fill the wells of Abraham with dust; that is, obliterate the interior things of the Word by earthly things; for no one can possibly see spiritual things from these loves . . . for these loves induce darkness . . . For the love of self and of gain is such that it does not suffer anything of truth from the Divine to approach near to itself. But still they can glory and pride themselves from the fact that they know truths; nay, they can preach them from a certain zeal; but it is the fires of these loves which kindle and excite them . . .

3425<sup>3</sup>. His spirit is black and ugly, such as are the love of self and of the world—that is, such as are contempt for others, and hatred—in form.

3427<sup>e</sup>. For he who has as the end the delight of the love of self and of the world, completely casts out of his heart everything which is of eternal life . . .

3448<sup>4</sup>. 'The beast'=the evils of the love of self.

3539<sup>4</sup>. On the other hand, the most unhappy life is that from the love of self and the love of the world; because Hell inflows into it.

—<sup>5</sup>. (Thus) it is humiliation into which the Divine can inflow with man, because in this state the loves of self and of the world are removed . . .

3603<sup>2</sup>. For all those do not know what good is who lead a life of the love of self and of the world . . . and as they do not know what good is, they do not know what truth is . . .

3610. There is then some delight from the love of self, or from the love of the world, which has adjoined itself to the affection of truth, and which appears as good . . .

— . For there is no life in the love of self and the love of the world, or in their pleasure and delight.

3743. All these are indignant when it is said that they do not live from themselves. The love of self is what effects this.

3750. They who appear above the head, are those who in the world had wanted themselves to be worshipped as gods, and with whom the love of self had been exalted to its height . . .

3769<sup>3</sup>. For in proportion as a man is in the loves of self and of the world . . . in the same proportion the Word is closed to him; for these loves have self as the end, which end kindles natural lumen, but extinguishes heavenly light . . .

3849<sup>2</sup>. The reason truths appear animate although there is no good of charity is from the affections of the love of self and of the world, which have no other life than that which in a spiritual sense is called death, and is infernal life.

3941<sup>3</sup>. 'To reap thorns'=the evils and falsities which are of the love of self and of the world.

3986<sup>4</sup>. (Whereas) they who are in the love of self and of the world do not suffer themselves to be led and bent by the Lord . . .

3993<sup>9</sup>. For example: if anyone loves himself above others, and from this love studies to excel others in moral and civil life, in scientific and doctrinal things, and to be exalted to dignities, and also to wealth above others; and yet acknowledges and adores God, performs offices for the neighbour from the heart, and does from conscience what is just and fair—the evil of this love of self is that with which good and truth can be mixed. Ex. . . Whereas, he who loves himself above others, and from this love despises others in comparison with himself, hates those who do not honour and as it were adore him, and feels the delight of hatred in revenge and cruelty on that account—the evil of such love is that with which good and truth cannot be mixed; for they are contraries.

4175<sup>2</sup>. When a man is deprived of spiritual and celestial love, he is kindled with the love of self and of the world. This love is relatively cold, and also becomes cold; not only while the man lives in the body, but also when he comes into the other life . . .

4220<sup>2</sup>. Whereas they who have loved themselves alone . . . in the other life . . . are deprived of all intelligence, and become very stupid. 4221<sup>e</sup>.

4225. Whereas all who are in the love of self and in the love of the world . . . are outside the Grand Man . . .

4274. Men are admitted . . . solely into some natural anxieties, in order that they may thereby be withdrawn from the loves of self and of the world, into which they would otherwise rush unrestrainedly.

4352<sup>3</sup>. A state of persnasion from the love of self and of the world. 4368<sup>4</sup>.

4459<sup>5</sup>. He who is in externals alone loves himself more than the neighbour; and, if he loves others, it is because they favour him; and thus he loves them for the sake of himself; consequently he loves himself in them, and them in himself.

4496. 'Circumcision'=purification from the love of self and of the world; and all the cupidity of the flesh is from these loves; and therefore 'grief'=this cupidity; for when a man is being purified from these loves . . . he is in grief and anxiety . . .

4672<sup>2</sup>. The Church which commences from faith has no other regulator than the understanding; and the understanding than that which is hereditary to man; namely, the love of self and of the world . . .

4750<sup>3</sup>. Opposite to the good of celestial love is the evil of the love of self; and opposite to the good of spiritual love is the evil of the love of the world. They who are in the evil of the love of self are against all good whatever; but they who are in the evil of the love of the world not so much. By 'Judah,' in the Word, in the opposite sense, are represented those who are in the love of self; and by 'Israel,' those who are in the love of the world.

these two loves. They who are in the love of self, being against all good whatever, are in the deepest and the most grievous Hells; whereas they who are in the love of the world, being not so much against all good whatever, are in Hells not so deep, and thus not so grievous.

—<sup>5</sup>. The evil of the love of self is not, as appears to the commonality, the external elation which is called pride; but it is hatred against the neighbour, and thence a blazing desire for revenge, and a delight in cruelty. These are the interior things of the love of self. Its exteriors are contempt for others in comparison with self, and aversion for those who are in spiritual good; and this sometimes with manifest elation or pride, and sometimes without it. For he who holds the neighbour in such hatred, interiorly loves himself alone, and only those others whom he regards as one with himself; thus them in himself, and himself in them; for the sake of the sole end of self. Such are they who are represented by 'Judah,' in the opposite sense. Moreover, the Jewish nation had been in such a love from the earliest times. Des.

4751. See AVARICE, here.

4776<sup>2</sup>. They who are in the love of self do evil to the neighbour from ill-will. The reason is that they love no one except themselves . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) . . . Hell is the love of self.

— . They who are in the love of self can never receive the truths of faith, because Hell is in this love. They can receive them only for the sake of self-honour and gain . . . The things which they imbue and appropriate are the negatives of truth; for at heart they do not even believe that there is a Hell or a Heaven, or a life after death . . . When they are in worship they appear to themselves to believe; but this is because it has been implanted from infancy to put on that state then; but as soon as they are out of worship they are also out of that state; and then, when they think in themselves they believe nothing at all; and also according to the life of their loves they excoGITATE such things as are favourable thereto, which they call truths, and also confirm from the literal sense of the Word . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. All things are in the loves . . . the love of self receives the life of Hell. Thus in the love of self there is everything of Hell.

4818<sup>4</sup>. With those who from the evil of the love of self believe . . . —<sup>5</sup>.

4825<sup>e</sup>. They who are in the love of self and of the world are in internal idolatry; for they worship themselves and the world, and perform holy things for the sake of self-adoration and gain . . .

4904<sup>2</sup>. Put off the old man, that is, the loves of self and of the world with their concupiscences.

4911. They who are in the dirt of loves; that is, in avarice, and at the same time in the love of self . . . cannot elevate the view of the mind, and see truth, in any other way than from self . . .

4997. See EVIL, here.

5141<sup>2</sup>. When man is in . . . the delights of the love of the world, and also of the love of self, then the apperception is from the Sensuous. His life is then in the body, and admits no more from interior things than may suffice to moderate and check outbursts into what is dishonourable and unbecoming.

5145<sup>3</sup>. Without these degrees as planes, good . . . flows through . . . down to the Sensuous, and there . . . is turned into what is filthy . . . namely into the delight of the love of self and of the world, and consequently into the delight of hatred, revenge, cruelty, adultery, avarice; or into mere pleasure and luxury . . .

5165<sup>3</sup>. If the love of self and of the world . . . had formed the interiors . . . the face itself is hatred, revenge, and cruelty in form.

5215. In the opposite, 'the east wind,' and 'the east'=the love of self and the love of the world . . .

5270<sup>2</sup>. Truths . . . cannot be initiated and conjoined with good so long as the evils of the love of self and of the world remain in the natural man. These loves were the first introducers, with which truths cannot possibly be conjoined . . .

5279<sup>2</sup>. The reason despair is the last of this state, is that by it is removed the delight of the love of self and of the world; and in its place is insinuated the delight of the love of good and truth. Ex.

5287<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that in proportion as anyone loves himself above others, in the same proportion he is less wise.

5353<sup>2</sup>. In miseries and diseases, the loves of self and of the world, from which are all evils, are removed . . . In like manner in temptations . . .

5530<sup>2</sup>. With those who are in the loves of self and of the world, such things as favour these loves are in the midst . . .

5660<sup>e</sup>. They who are in a heavenly proprium . . . are not disturbed by anything of the love of self, consequently not by anything of enmity, hatred, revenge; nor by anything of the love of the world, consequently not by anything of fraud, fear, unrest.

5662<sup>2</sup>. For heavenly peace inflows when the cupidities originating from the love of self and of the world are taken away; for these are what take away peace; for they infest the interiors of man, and at last cause him to place rest in restlessness . . .

5721. The most obstinate of all are those who . . . had lived a mere life of the love of self . . .

5807<sup>3</sup>. Whereas the opposite loves, namely the loves of self and of the world, are not conjunctions but disjunctions. Ex.

5826<sup>4</sup>. 'Those who from the will of the flesh'=those who are in evils from the love of self and of the world. 9454.

5854. For the Angels cannot be present in evil ends; that is, in the loves of self and of the world . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. For nothing else is seated in man than the love of self and of gain . . .

6367<sup>2</sup>. 'A lion' . . . in the opposite sense,=the evil of the love of self in its power. Ill.

6385<sup>4</sup>. 'A great mountain burning with fire'=the love of self.

[A.] 6390. For all slavery is from the affection of the love of self and of the world.

6481. For the most part eminence begets the love of self, and opulence the love of the world . . .

6495. But when a man . . . receives influx from Hell, he feels the life of the love of self and of the world to be delightful . . .

6567<sup>2</sup>. Then subjugates in the Natural the delights of the love of self and of the world.

6667. These . . . have no love of the neighbour, but only the love of self. The love of the neighbour which appears with them is nothing else than the love of self; for in proportion as the other favours them . . . he is loved; and in proportion as he does not favour them . . . he is rejected; and if he had previously been a friend he is hated in the same proportion. Such things lie hidden in the love of self . . . and break forth in the other life.

6710. See NEIGHBOUR, here.

7245<sup>e</sup>. They worshipped Jehovah from the love of self and the love of the world.

7255. That is evil which is of the love of self and the love of the world . . .

7272<sup>e</sup>. The evils originating in evil are those which are from cupidity arising from the love of self and of the world.

7293<sup>2</sup>. 'Dragons'=reasonings from the loves of self and of the world.

7324<sup>4</sup>. 'Fire and sulphur'=the love of self and the derivative cupidities . . .

7364<sup>2</sup>. (The love of self and of the world the origin of empires and kingdoms.)

7369. In proportion as a man is in the love of self, in the same proportion he removes himself from the love of the neighbour. Consequently in proportion as a man is in the love of self, in the same proportion he removes himself from Heaven . . . From which it also follows, that in proportion as a man is in the love of self, in the same proportion he is in Hell; for in Hell there is the love of self.

7370. That man is in the love of self who despises the neighbour in comparison with himself, who holds him as an enemy if he does not favour him, and if he does not worship him: still more is he in the love of self who on this account hates the neighbour and persecutes him: and still more he who on this account blazes with revenge against him, and desires his ruin.

Such at last love to rage fiercely against the neighbour; and the same, if they are also adulterers, becomes cruel. N.68.

7371. The delight which these persons perceive in such things is the delight of the love of self. This delight with a man is infernal delight . . .

7376. (Thus) these two loves (the love of self and the love of the world) are the origins of all evils; for they are diametrically contrary to love towards the neighbour, and to love to the Lord; thus they are diametrically contrary to Heaven . . . Consequently it is these loves which make Hell with a man; for these two loves reign in Hell.

7377. But those are not in these loves (the love of self and the love of the world) who aspire to honours not for the sake of self, but for the sake of their country; and who aspire to wealth not for the sake of wealth, but for the sake of the necessities of life for themselves and theirs, and also for the sake of good use . . .

7489. As this is so, it is evident that in proportion as a man is in the loves of self and of the world, in the same proportion he is not in love towards the neighbour, still less in love to the Lord; for they are opposites.

7493. The loves of self and of the world begin to reign with a man when he arrives at the age of his own judgment and rights; for then a man begins to think from himself or from what is his own; and he then begins to appropriate these things to himself . . .

7542. 'The heart'=the inmost . . . and the inmost with the evil is the love of self and the love of the world . . .

7640<sup>e</sup>. For the internal with those who are in evil from the love of self, is to keep in view and magnify themselves alone, and to avert themselves from all who do not favour them.

7750<sup>e</sup>. As man is in the love of self and the love of the world, he cannot but be born into all ignorance . . . But by Divine means he is brought to something of intelligence and wisdom; but still not actually into any, unless he removes the loves of self and of the world; and thus opens the way for love to the Lord, and love towards the neighbour.

7819. The man who is in the good of charity and faith also loves himself and the world, but no otherwise than as means to an end. With him the love of self has regard to the love of the Lord; for he loves himself as a means to the end that he may be able to serve the Lord; and the love of the world with him has regard to the love of the neighbour; for he loves the world as a means for the sake of the end that he may be able to serve the neighbour.

8012. 'Everyone uncircumcised shall not eat of it' = that he who is in the loves of self and of the world cannot be together.

8037. They who have the love of self or the love of the world as the end cannot possibly be in charity and faith. They who are in these loves do not even know what charity and what faith are; and do not at all comprehend that to will good to the neighbour without recompense is Heaven in man . . . for they believe that if they are deprived of the joy from the glory of honours and wealth there is no longer any joy; when yet heavenly joy then first begins . . .

8118<sup>2</sup>. (In the Golden Age) the love of self and the love of the world were far removed.

8288. 'The heart of the sea (Suph)' = the evil of the love of self and the derivative falsities. Ex.

8313. These are 'Philistines;' and they are called 'the uncircumcised' from the evils of the love of self and of the world, in which is their life.

8314. (Despair of enlarging their dominion) with those who were in a life of evil from the love of self. Sig. and Ex. 8318.

8315. (And with) those who were in a life of falsity from the love of self. Sig. and Ex.

8318<sup>2</sup>. It is to be known that evils are from a twofold origin; namely, from the love of self, and from the love of the world. They who are in evils from the love of self love themselves alone, and despise all others except those who make one with themselves; in loving whom they do not love them, but themselves, because they see themselves in them. The evils from this origin are the worst of all; for they not only despise others in comparison with themselves, but also pursue them with vituperations and hold them in hatred for a slight cause, and then breathe their ruin; and thus revenge and cruelty become the delight of their lives. They who are in the evil of this love are deep down in Hell according to the quality and the quantity of this love. But they who are in evil from the love of the world also hold the neighbour in slight estimation, and esteem him solely for his wealth . . . They desire to possess all things which belong to the neighbour; and when they are in this cupidity they are devoid of all charity and mercy; for to deprive the neighbour of his goods is the delight of their lives, especially with those who are sordidly avaricious . . . Those with whom the evil of this love dominates are also in the Hells, but not in such deep ones as they who are in the evil of the love of self.

8349<sup>2</sup>. The communication with good is intercepted as soon as a man comes into his proprium; for he thus falls into the evil of the love of self or of the world . . .

8409. In the opposite sense, 'flesh' = the proprium of man; thus the evil of the love of self; and consequently the cupidities of this love.

8410<sup>2</sup>. In the opposite sense, 'bread' = that which nourishes those who are in Hell, and supports their life. That this is the evil of the love of self and of the world, is evident from the life of Hell, which consists solely in this love.

8462. Before regeneration, man believes that besides the delights of the love of self and of the world, which he calls goods, there cannot possibly be any good . . . And if anyone should say that there is an interior good which cannot come to the apperception so long as the delights of the love of self and of the world dominate, and that this is the good in which are good Spirits and Angels, [such persons] are astounded . . . when yet this good immensely transcends the delights of the love of self and of the world . . .

8480<sup>3</sup>. But good from man is with those who love themselves above all things, and despise the neighbour in comparison with themselves. These are they who also have care for the morrow, because they trust in themselves.

8487. Hence 'the sun,' in the opposite sense, = the love of self and of the world.

—<sup>2</sup>. In proportion, therefore, as the delights of the loves of self and of the world rise up, the good of celestial love vanishes; for they are opposites. So, also, conversely.

8513<sup>2</sup>. He who loves himself above the neighbour leads himself.

8549. Man is born into natural life . . . Natural life is to love self and the world above the neighbour; nay, above God Himself.

8550. Every man is born into the evils of the love of self and of the world from his parents . . .

8678. For pride is to love self above others . . . The love of self, which is pride, is such, that in proportion as the rein is given to it, it rushes on, increasing to the greatest possible degree, and at last to the Divine throne itself, so as to want to be a god. Such are all who are in Hell . . . This endeavour is that which is restrained by the Lord, and is what is meant by 'the head of the serpent' . . . Such are also meant by 'Lucifer . . .'

—<sup>2</sup>. That pride of heart, which is the love of self, repels from itself the Divine, and removes from itself Heaven. Ex.

8737. The instructor and castigator Spirits . . . are inflexible, because they do it from the love of self . . .

8781<sup>2</sup>. Heavenly light appears as the density of a cloud to those who are in the love of self and of the world, as was that nation. 8788.

8854. He who loves himself above all things, remembers himself in every single thing; he thinks about himself, he speaks about himself, he acts for the sake of himself; for his life is a life of self.

8868<sup>2</sup>. The truths which are not alive are not truths, because within them is the love of self and the love of the world.

8873. The life from the Lord inflows solely into a humble and submissive heart . . . for when the heart is truly humble, nothing of the love of self and of the love of the world causes obstruction.

[A.] 890<sup>82</sup>. All with whom there reigns the love of self or of the world ; that is, who have as the end eminence or honours, or wealth or gain, hesitate not to say and persuade that to be unjust which is just, and that to be just which is unjust ; and thus to act as 'witnesses of a lie.' Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. For 'Moab'=those who are in the evil of the love of self, and who therefore falsify truths.

8910. 'Thou shalt not covet...'=that we are to beware of the love of self and of the world . . .

8941<sup>3</sup>. There are two religiosities which are from Own intelligence ; one, in which the love of self and of the world is everything, (which) in the Word is called 'Babel.' Within, it is profane from the love of self and of the world . . .

8993<sup>2</sup>. By natural delight is meant the delight flowing forth from the love of self and the love of the world . . . Such affections of truth as flow forth . . . from natural delight are represented by 'the daughter of an Israelitish man sold for a maid-servant ;' for all that which derives its origin from the love of self or the love of the world is . . . enslaved.

8995<sup>4</sup>. (The man) had his head in Hell when he had the delights of the love of self or of the love of the world as the end ; but he has his head in Heaven when he holds them as means to the end . . . Sig. and Ex.

9049. With an evil man (in the Spiritual World) who from the heart does evil to another . . . the affection of the love of self is augmented ; and together with it the delight of hatred and revenge against those who do not submit themselves. The reason this takes place is that the evil of the love of self is what is universally regnant in Hell ; and it constantly inflows according to the degree in which it is practised against another. When this takes place, the punishers are immediately at hand, who evilly entreat him . . .

9096. External bonds are affections of the love of self and of the world . . . If these descend from internal bonds, which are affections of truth and good, they are good ; for then the man loves himself and the world . . . for the sake of good uses from himself and the world. But if they do not descend thence, they are evil, and are called cupidities ; for then the man loves himself for the sake of himself, and the world for the sake of the world.

9141<sup>2</sup>. The love of evil, that is, the love of self and the love of the world, make the fire of life with an evil man and with a Spirit of Hell . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. 'A river of sulphur'=falsities from the evils of the love of self and of the world.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'The day which cometh'=the last time of the Church, when the loves of self and of the world will reign, and will consume all the truths and goods of the Church . . .

9144<sup>2</sup>. When the loves of self and of the world are attacked, then fire from the will bursts forth into the Intellectual, and conceives a flame there. This flame is what is called anger.

—<sup>6</sup>. 'A prickly brier'=the falsity of the concupiscences of the love of self ; 'a thorn'=the falsity of the concupiscences of the love of the world.

9174. Good is like the soul in man . . . If the good of the love of self or of the love of the world is the soul of a man, he is not a man, but a wild beast . . .

9188. 'A witch'=those with whom something of the Church is conjoined with the falsities of the evil of the love of self. Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. 'Fire and flame'=the love of self.

9190. Conjunction with the evils of the cupidities of the love of self. Sig.

9207<sup>4</sup>. For they who love the Lord and themselves in an equal degree are they who are called 'lukewarm . . .'

9210<sup>8</sup>. But they who do all things for the sake of themselves and the world love themselves above all things, thus more than God . . .

9241. They who are in the love of self and of the world—that is, they who are in evils and the derivative falsities—cannot have the faith (which is called trust and confidence) . . .

9242. They think of the state of their life after death . . . from the love of self for Heaven.

9335. An afflux of falsities from the delights of the loves of self and of the world. Sig. and Ex.

9341<sup>2</sup>. 'The Euphrates'=the pleasure which originates from the loves of self and of the world . . .

9348. The reason evils allure and deceive, is that all evils spring from the loves of self and of the world ; and the loves of self and of the world are born with man . . . and therefore these loves, like the hidden currents of a river, continually draw the thought and will of man away from the Lord to himself, and away from Heaven to the world ; thus from the truths and goods of faith to falsities and evils.

—<sup>6</sup>. The diabolical crew attack nothing else with man than these loves of his (the loves of self and of the world), which they delight in every way . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. For from the love of self springs contempt for others in comparison with self ; then the ridiculing and vituperation of them ; afterwards enmity if they do not favour him ; and at last the delight of hatred, the delight of revenge ; thus the delight of fierceness ; nay, of cruelty. In the other life, this love ascends to such a point, that unless the Lord favours them, and gives them dominion over others, they not only despise Him, but also ridicule the Word which is about Him ; and at last act against Him from hatred and revenge ; and, in so far as they cannot act against Him, they exercise such things with fierceness and cruelty against all who profess Him. Hence it is evident that it is from the love of self that the diabolical crew is such. Therefore, as 'a snare'=the delight of the love of self and of the world, it also=the destruction of spiritual life, and perdition ; for everything of faith and love to the Lord, and everything of love towards the neighbour, are destroyed by the delight of the love of self and of the world, when it dominates.

—<sup>8</sup>. That these loves are the origins of all evils, and that Hell is from and in these loves; and that these loves are the fires there, is at this day unknown in the world; when yet it might be known from the fact that these loves are opposite to love towards the neighbour and to love to God, that they are opposite to humiliation of heart, and that from these alone come forth all contempt, all hatred, all revenge, and all fierceness and cruelty; as every one may know who takes the matter into consideration.

9377. The Divine of the Lord cannot inflow into a proud heart; that is, into a heart full of the love of self; for such a heart is hard . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. (The Israelitish people) were in the love of self and of the world above all the peoples in the universe . . . (and) they who humble themselves from the belief that they are holy of themselves . . . (do so) from the love of self . . . and they are in externals . . . for the love of self dwells in the external man, and cannot enter into the internal man . . . 9391<sup>12</sup>, Sig.

9434<sup>3</sup>. For with these the Divine love . . . is turned into the fire or love of self and of the world; thus into contempt for others in comparison with self; into enmities against all who do not favour them; and thus into hatreds, into revenges, and at last into fiercenesses. Sig.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'To put strange fire into the censers'=to institute worship from . . . the love of self and of the world.

9447. Good and truth continually inflow from the Lord with every man; but infernal loves—which are the loves of self and of the world in which they are—stand in the way, and turn the influx of good into evil, and that of truth into falsity.

9705. But in proportion as a man is in the love of self, and in the love of the world, in the same proportion he is in the external man; and in so far as he dares, he speaks and acts from it. (Compare N.42.)

9723<sup>9</sup>. 'Ashes'=what is damned remaining after the burning up from the fire of the love of self.

9802. They who are in the love of self, and in the persuasion of intelligence and wisdom from self, are in such cold and thick darkness.

9809<sup>9</sup>. The casting down of the infernal love of self into the Hells. Sig.

9960<sup>11</sup>. 'Nakedness' . . . and 'ignominy' . . . =infernal loves, which are the loves of self and of the world, which defile interior things. 9961<sup>9</sup>.

—<sup>13</sup>. The perversity of the Church is described by 'scortations,' 'adulteries,' and 'the revelation of nakedness,' which are nothing else than filthy and infernal loves, which are the loves of self and of the world when they are ends; from which spring all evils and the derivative falsities.

9976. Therefore they who place merit in works, love themselves; and they who love themselves despise the neighbour; nay, they are angry with God Himself if they do not receive the hoped-for reward.

10035<sup>2</sup>. It is to be known that all the voluntary proprium of man is evil, because from himself man loves nothing but himself and the world; and if he loves the neighbour, it is for the sake of himself.

10037<sup>5</sup>. 'A cake of barley with the dung of man'=the interior good of the Church interiorly defiled with the evils of the love of self; 'a cake with the excrements of an ox'=the external good of the Church defiled with the evils of that love.

10038. 'Thou shalt burn with fire outside the camp'=that they are to be committed to Hell, and to be consumed with the evils of the love of self. . . For this love consumes all the goods and truths of faith. That the love of self does this, is at this day known to scarcely anyone, and thus neither that this love is Hell with man, and that it is meant by infernal fire.

—<sup>2</sup>. For there are two fires of life with man; one is the love of self, and the other is love to God. They who are in the love of self cannot be in love to God, because they are opposites. The reason they are opposites is that the love of self produces all evils; which are contempt for others in comparison with ourselves, enmity against those who do not favour us, and at last hatreds, revenges, fiercenesses, cruelties; which evils utterly resist the Divine influx, and consequently extinguish the truths and goods of faith and charity . . . The love of self produces evils of every kind in proportion as it . . . reigns. The worst kind of the love of self is the love of dominating for the sake of self. . .

10130<sup>3</sup>. But they who are in the love of self and of the world; that is, who do the things which they do for the sake of self and the world as ends, are consociated in Hell.

—<sup>4</sup>. It is the contrary with those who are in Hell. The more they are in the love of self and in the love of the world, the more they turn themselves from the Lord and have Him behind them.

10210<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) the more anyone trusts and believes in himself—thus the more anyone is in the love of self—the less he is in the good of innocence . . .

10227<sup>2</sup>. In proportion as it is acknowledged (that nothing of truth and good is from self), in the same proportion the love of self departs; and, with the love of self, the thick darkness from falsities and evils; and also in the same proportion the man comes into innocence, and into love and faith in the Lord.

10284<sup>2</sup>. All love with man from man is the love of self, and the love of the world for the sake of self. . .

10319. That the evils of the love of self and of the world induce such ignorance concerning those things which are of eternal life . . .

10400<sup>2</sup>. All those are in externals without internals who are in the loves of self and of the world; for with them the internal man is closed, and only the external man is open . . .

10420<sup>2</sup>. When Heaven operates with a man . . . it withdraws him from the loves of self and of the world, and from the falsities thence springing . . . Whereas when the internal cannot be elevated . . . the external looks to nothing else than self and the world ; for the loves of self and of the world are reigning.

1045<sup>2</sup>. Such an inversion exists with those with whom the loves of self and of the world are reigning . . .

10463. 'He burnt it with fire' = altogether from the loves of self and of the world, which are condemned to Hell. . . For these loves, when they reign, are Hell with man.

10503<sup>9</sup>. All those are in this (worst kind) of worship who are in the love of self, and still believe in the Word ; for they apply the sense of the letter . . . to the worship of self.

10533. They who are in . . . the loves of self and of the world cannot at all receive anything Divine ; and therefore the Internal with them is kept closed . . . For their life is from the loves of self and of the world ; and there is a perpetual opposition and contrariety between these loves and heavenly loves . . . and therefore their life would be extinguished by the influx of the Divine.

10582<sup>2</sup>. They who are such . . . call the love of the world and the love of self heavenly love . . .

10596. The life of man after death is the life of his love and of his faith . . . It is the life of Hell for those who have loved themselves and the world above all things.

10609. The reason they could not be instructed concerning (the interior and exterior good of the Church) was that they were in the loves of self and of the world ; and they who are in these loves can never know what celestial and spiritual good is . . .

10694<sup>2</sup>. For when heavenly loves . . . inflow into earthly loves, which are the loves of self and of the world, they induce agonies as of death.

10724. Those with whom reign the love of self and the love of the world do not know what Heaven and the happiness of Heaven are ; and it appears incredible to them that there can be happiness in any other loves ; when yet the happiness of Heaven enters in proportion as these loves are removed as ends.

10741. In the same way as love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour make the life of Heaven with man, so the love of self and the love of the world, when they reign, make the life of Hell with him ; for the latter loves are opposite to the former ; and therefore they with whom reign the loves of self and of the world can receive nothing from Heaven ; but the things which they receive are from Hell.

10742. Hence it is that they with whom the love of self and the love of the world make the life, will good to themselves alone, and not to others except for the sake of themselves : and, as their life is from Hell, they despise others in comparison with themselves ; they are angry with them if they do not favour them ; they hate them ; they blaze with revenge against them ; nay, they desire to treat them with fierceness. At last these things become the delights of their life ; thus their loves.

10814<sup>2</sup>. For in proportion as a man does not love and worship the Lord, he loves and worships himself ; and in the same proportion also loves the world more than Heaven.

— This, then, is the dominion of the love of self. Des.

H. 18<sup>2</sup>. But they who are in the love of self and of the world are in no faculty of receiving (the things of Heaven) ; they are averse to them ; they reject them ; and at the first touch and influx of them they flee away, and associate with those in Hell, who are in like loves to themselves.

87. What correspondence is, is at this day unknown . . . the primary cause of which is, that man has removed himself from Heaven by the love of self and of the world ; for he who loves himself and the world above all things looks to no other than worldly things, because they gratify the external senses . . .

122. For the fieriness of the world corresponds to the love of self ; and the luminosity thence corresponds to the falsity from this love ; and the love of self is completely opposite to Divine love ; and the falsity from this love is completely opposite to Divine truth . . . Hence it is that to adore the sun and moon of the world . . . = to love self and the falsities which are from the love of self. III.

151<sup>e</sup>. They who are in evils from the love of self, dwell from the east to the west (of Hell).

272. An additional reason . . . which in Heaven is the primary one, why the Angels can receive such great wisdom, is that they are devoid of the love of self ; for in proportion as anyone is devoid of this love, in the same proportion he is able to be wise in Divine things. It is this love which closes the interiors to the Lord and to Heaven, and opens the exteriors and turns them to self ; and therefore all those with whom this love dominates are in thick darkness as to the things which are of Heaven, however much they may be in light as to the things which are of the world. On the other hand, the Angels, being devoid of this love, are in the light of wisdom ; for the heavenly loves in which they are . . . open the interiors, because these loves are from the Lord, and the Lord Himself is in them . . .

283<sup>e</sup>. From this it was evident that the proprium of man, and the derivative love of self, are contrary to innocence . . .

359. It is not difficult . . . to enter the way of Heaven. The sole difficulty is to be able to resist the love of self and of the world, and to prevent them from predominating ; for thence come all evils.

393<sup>e</sup>. From which it is evident that they who have loved themselves and the world more than use cannot have any lot in Heaven ; for his love . . . remains with everyone . . .

396. Such as is the love, such is the delight. The delights of the body . . . all flow forth from the love of self and from the love of the world . . . These loves and their delights inflow from the flesh and from the world by an external way, which is from beneath, and they affect the exteriors. In proportion, therefore . . . as these two loves of the world are received and affect, in the same proportion the exteriors are opened which are of the body, and which look from Heaven to the world . . .

398. For he who is wholly in the delight of the body . . . or, what is the same, in the love of self and of the world, feels nothing of delight except in honour, gain, and the pleasures of the body and senses; and these so extinguish and suffocate interior delights . . . that they are believed not to be.

399. (The two heavenly loves) are thus communicative of their delights. It is otherwise with the loves of self and of the world. The love of self withdraws and takes away all delight from others, and derives it into itself; for it wills well to itself alone; and the love of the world wills that the things of the neighbour should be its own. Therefore these loves are destructive of the delights with others. If they are communicative, it is for the sake of themselves . . . That such is the character of the loves of self and of the world when they reign, has often been given to perceive by living experience. Whenever Spirits approached who had been in these loves while they had lived as men in the world, my delight receded and vanished. And I have also been told that if such merely approach any heavenly Society, the delight of those who are in the Society is diminished exactly according to the degree of their presence; and, wonderful to say, those evil ones are then in their own delight. . . From these things it may be seen that the loves of self and of the world are destructive of the joys of Heaven; and are thus completely opposite to heavenly loves, which are communicative.

401. The man who is in the love of self and of the world feels delight from these loves so long as he lives in the body, and also in each of the pleasures which are from them. But the man who is in love to God and in love towards the neighbour does not manifestly feel delight from these loves so long as he lives in the body . . . But after death the states are completely changed. The delights of the love of self and of the world are then turned into things painful and direful, because into such things as are called infernal fire; and by turns into things filthy and dirty, which correspond to their unclean pleasures; and which, wonderful to say, are then delightful to them.

487. But to know their own reigning love is impossible to those who are in the love of self, because they love what is their own, and they call their evils goods, and the falsities which favour them . . . truths. Still . . . they can know it from others who are wise . . . But neither is this possible with those who have been so much given up to the love of self that they reject all the teaching of the wise.

508. For in proportion as anyone loves himself, in the same proportion he is removed from Heaven; (thus) from wisdom.

532. Hence it is that as the higher things of the mind are closed with those who love themselves and the world above all things, they at heart deny Divine truths; and if from the memory they say anything about them, still they do not understand them. They regard them no otherwise than as they regard worldly and bodily things. Such being their character, they can pay no attention to anything except the things which enter through the senses of the body . . . among which are many things which are filthy, obscene, profane, and wicked; and which cannot be withdrawn, because there is no influx from Heaven into the minds of such, on account of these being closed above.

551. That all who are in Hell are in evils and the derivative falsities from the loves of self and of the world. Gen.art.

554. From having looked at the monstrous forms of Spirits in the Hells—which are all forms of contempt for others, of threatenings against those who do not honour and reverence them; and also forms of hatreds and revenges against those who do not favour them—it was evident that all in general were forms of the love of self and of the love of the world; and that the evils, of which they are the special forms, derive their origins from these two loves. I have also been told from Heaven . . . that these two loves, namely, the love of self and the love of the world, reign in the Hells, and also make the Hells . . .

556. The love of self is to will well to one's self alone, and not to others except for the sake of self; not even to the Church, one's Country, nor to any human society; and is also to do well to them solely for the sake of one's own reputation, honour, and glory; and unless he sees these things in the uses which he performs to others, he says in his heart, What is that to me? . . . and so he omits them. Whence it is evident, that he who is in the love of self does not love the Church, his Country, nor society, nor any use, but himself alone. His delight is merely the delight of the love of self; and as the delight which comes forth from the love makes the life of a man, therefore his life is a life of self; and a life of self is a life from the proprium of man; and the proprium of man, regarded in itself, is nothing but evil. He who loves himself also loves his own, who in special are his children and grandchildren; and in general, all who make one with him . . . To love these is also to love himself; for he regards them as it were in himself, and himself in them. Among those whom he calls his own are also all those who praise, honour, and worship him. N.65. 67. T.400.

[H.] 557. The quality of the love of self may be evident from a comparison with heavenly love. Ex. . . Hence it follows that he who is in the love of self wills that the Church, his Country, human societies, and his fellow-citizens should serve him; and not he them; for he places himself above them, and them below himself. Hence it is that in proportion as anyone is in the love of self, in the same proportion he removes himself from Heaven . . . N.69.

558. (The contrast with heavenly love continued.) But in proportion as anyone is in the love of self—which love is to perform uses and goods for the sake of self—in the same proportion he is led by himself . . . Hence it also follows that in proportion as anyone loves himself, in the same proportion he removes himself from the Divine . . . N.70.

558a. That the love of self is opposite to love towards the neighbour, may be seen from the origin and the essence of both. The love of the neighbour with him who is in the love of self begins from self; for he says that everyone is neighbour unto himself; and from him as from a centre it proceeds to all who make one with him . . . They who are outside this consociation are accounted as nothing; and they who are against them and their evils are accounted as enemies, whatever their character may be . . .

—°. In a word, the love of self makes the head with the man in whom it is; and heavenly love makes the feet with him . . .

559. The love of self is also such that in proportion as the reins are loosed to it; that is, in proportion as external bonds are removed . . . in the same proportion it rushes on, until at last it wants to exercise command not only over the universal world, but also over the whole Heaven, and over the Divine itself; and there is never any terminus or end to it. This lies hidden in everyone who is in the love of self, although it is not evident before the world, where the said bonds withhold it. Examps. N.71.

560. Present to yourself some society composed wholly of such as love themselves alone, and none others except in so far as they make one with themselves. Des.

561. The interiors . . . of those who love themselves above all things are turned to themselves and the world . . . Hence it is that they are obsessed with evils of every kind, and that the Divine cannot inflow . . . Hence it is that in the other life all such look backwards from the Lord to the thick darkness which is there in place of the sun of the world . . .

562. The evils which are in those who are in the love of self are in general contempt for others, envy, enmity against all who do not favour them, the derivative hostility, hatreds of various kinds, revenges, cunning, deceits, unmercifulness, and cruelty; and in regard to the things of religion there is not only contempt for the Divine, and for Divine things . . . but also anger against them, which is also turned into hatred when the man becomes a Spirit; and then he not only cannot endure to hear of these things, but also blazes with hatred against all who acknowledge and worship the Divine. Examp. N.75.

563°. From this it was evident that they who are in the love of self, however much they from the fire of the love of self may seem in the world to speak wisely, still do so only from the memory, and not from any rational light; and therefore, in the other life, when it is no longer permitted that the things of the natural memory should be reproduced, they are more stupid than others; and this for the reason that they are separated from the Divine.

564°. (The dominion which is from the love of self. See DOMINION, here.)

570°. In these and many other places, by 'fire' is meant the cupiditv which is of the love of self and of the world.

571. Therefore when the Hells are opened, there is . . . a dense fieriness from the Hells where the love of self reigns; and a flaminess from those where the love of the world reigns.

578. The worst (devils) of all are those who have been in evils from the love of self, and who at the same time within themselves have acted from deceit . . . Most of these are in the Hells at the back, and are called Genii; and it is their delight there to render themselves invisible, and to fly around others like phantoms, and to introduce evils in secret . . . These are more direfully tormented than any others. But those who are not deceitful . . . and yet are in evils from the love of self, are also in the Hells at the back, but not in such deep ones.

587°. Hence the Hells in the western quarter are the worst of all . . . In these Hells are they who in the world had been in the love of self, and thence in contempt for others, and in enmity against those who did not favour them, and also in hatred and revenge against those who did not venerate and worship them . . .

596°. All in the Hells opposite to the Celestial Kingdom are in the love of self . . .

N. 59. The two loves from which are all evils and falsities, are the love of self, and the love of the world. These two loves are completely opposite to the two former loves.

60. The love of self and the love of the world make Hell with man; and therefore also they reign in Hell. They close and destroy the internal spiritual man, and make man natural and sensuous in the degree and quality of their dominion. 61.

65. On the loves of self and of the world. Chapter. T.400.

74. From these things, then, it may be Known who are in the love of self. It matters not how they may appear in the external form, whether self-exalted or humble; for such things [as the love of self] are in the interior man, and the interior man is hidden from most, and the exterior is taught to counterfeit the things which are of the love of the public and the neighbour . . . and this for the sake of self. For they know that to love the public and the neighbour affects all interiorly, and that they are loved and esteemed in the same proportion . . .

78. In a word, the love of self and the love of the world are completely opposite to love to the Lord and to love towards the neighbour; and therefore the love of self and the love of the world are infernal loves; for they also reign in Hell, and also make Hell with man.

79. From the things now said it may be seen that in these two loves, and from them, are all evils; for those evils which have been enumerated above, (75), are the general ones; and the rest, which have not been enumerated, being specific, are derived and flow from them. Hence it may be evident that as man is born into these two loves, he is born into evils of every kind.

U. 174<sup>2</sup>. Hence the love of self, when it is regnant, is the father of all such evils . . .

W. 47. The very essence-ipsum-of love, is not to love self . . . To feel one's own delight in another, and not his in one's self, is not to love; for this is to love self . . . To love one's own in another . . . so disjoins, that in proportion as anyone has so loved another, in the same proportion he afterwards hates him. For such conjunction is successively dissolved of itself, and then the love becomes hatred in the like degree. 48, Ex.

49. If there were anything of the Divine in others . . . (God) would love Himself. . . If the Infinite or the Divine were in others . . . He would be the love of self, of which not one whit can be in God, for it is completely opposite to the Divine essence. Therefore the love must be given to others in whom there is nothing of the Divine in itself.

262. From the reaction connate with him, the natural mind or man, when he loves himself and the world above all things, acts against those things which are of the spiritual mind or man. He then also feels delight in evils of every kind . . . and he then also acknowledges nature as the creatress of the universe, and confirms all these things by his Rational; and after the confirmations he either perverts, or suffocates, or rejects the goods and truths of Heaven and the Church, and at last either shuns them, or is averse to them, or hates them. This he does in his spirit . . . When a man is such, he successively shuts up the spiritual mind closer and closer.

275<sup>3</sup>. The love of self and the love of the world make the inmost degree in the Hells . . . and the folly and insanity from these loves, which appear like wisdom and intelligence, make the middle degree in the Hells . . . and the conclusions from these two degrees, which become either knowledges or acts, make the outermost degree in the Hells.

335<sup>2</sup>. For the proprium which is the love of self hardens and closes up the heart; but is removed by the acknowledgment that nothing but evil is done from himself, and nothing but good from the Lord.

396. The reason the love of self and the love of the world are infernal loves, and the reason man was able to come into them, and thus destroy the will and understanding in himself, is that from creation the love of self and the love of the world are heavenly; for they are loves of the natural man which are of service to spiritual loves as foundations are of service to houses. For from the love of self and of the world man wills well to his body; he wants to be fed, clothed, and housed, to take thought for his house, to solicit employment for the sake of use, and even to be honoured according to the dignity of the affairs which he administers, for the sake of obedience; and also to be delighted and recreated from the delights of the world. But all these things are for the sake of the end which must be use. For by these things he is in a state to serve the Lord, and to serve the neighbour. But when there is no love of serving the Lord and the neighbour, and only a love of serving himself from the world, then, from being heavenly, that love becomes infernal; for it causes the man to immerse his mind and animus in his proprium, which in itself is all evil.

419. From birth man loves nothing but himself and the world; for nothing else appears before his eyes . . . and this love is corporeal natural, and may be called material. Besides, this love has been made impure from the separation of heavenly love from it with the parents. This love cannot be separated from its impurity unless man has the faculty of elevating the understanding into the light of Heaven . . . in order that his love, together with the understanding, may be elevated into wisdom . . .

426. That natural and sensuous love is the love of the world and the love of self. Gen.art.

— The opposite loves are the loves of self and of the world; for these loves do not regard uses for the sake of others, but for the sake of self; and they who do this invert Divine order, and put self in the place of the Lord, and the world in the place of Heaven. Hence it is that they look backwards from the Lord . . .

P. 83<sup>2</sup>. For man is born into the love of self and the love of the world; and, from these as fountains, into evils of every kind. The delights of these loves are what he is led by, and they cause him not to know that he is in evils . . . and therefore unless a man is regenerated he knows no otherwise than that to love himself and the world above all things is good itself . . . Hence, too, is all evil; for he regards no one else from love except himself alone; and if he does regard another from love, it is as a devil does a devil . . . when they act as one. They who from the delight of them confirm these loves with themselves, and the evils which spring from them, remain natural, and become corporeal sensuous; and, in their own thought, which is that of their spirit, they are insane. But still, while in the world, they can speak and act rationally and wisely . . . but they do even this from the love of self and of the world. After death . . . they can have no other delight than that which they had had in their spirit . . . which is turned into what is undelightful, painful, and direful, and which is meant in the Word by infernal torment and fire.

[P.] 139<sup>5</sup>. The fear of the loss of honour and wealth invades the external of man's thought; and . . . closes the internal of thought . . . The reason is that every man's life's love from birth is the love of self and of the world; and the love of self makes one with the love of honour, and the love of the world makes one with the love of gain. Further ex.

197. If man's life's love is the love of self, he comes into the pride of Own intelligence . . . and thus recedes from the acknowledgment of the Divine Providence . . . In like manner if the love of the world is his life's love; but this does not recede in the same degree. From these things it is evident that these two loves ascribe all things to man and his prudence . . .

199<sup>6</sup>. Such as the love is, such is the whole man . . . If, therefore, he attributes all things to himself and to nature, the love of self becomes his soul . . .

206. The proprium of man is the love of self and the derivative love of the world; or else it is the love of the world and the derivative love of self. The love of self is such that it regards self alone, and others either as vile or as nothing; if it regards some as anything it is only so long as they honour and worship it. Inmost in this love, like the endeavour in a seed to fructify and procreate, lies hidden the will to become a great man; and, if he can, a king; and then, if possible, a god. Such is a devil, because he is the love of self itself; he is such that he adores himself, and favours no one except him who also adores him. He hates another devil who is like himself, because he wants to be adored alone.

— As there is no love without its consort . . . when the love of self inspires its consort the understanding with its own love, this becomes pride therein, which is the pride of Own intelligence . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Now as the love of self wants to be the sole lord of the world, thus also a god, therefore the concupiscences of evil, which are its derivations, have life in them from it; in like manner the perceptions of concupiscences, which are cunnings; and in like manner also the delights of the concupiscences, which are evils; and their thoughts which are falsities. They are all like servants and ministers of their lord . . . and do not know that they do not act, but are acted upon: they are acted upon by the love of self through the pride of Own intelligence.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason why the acknowledgment of nature alone also lies hidden in it, is that (the love of self) has closed the window in its roof through which Heaven is open, and also the windows at the sides, lest it should see and hear that the Lord alone rules all things, and that nature in itself is dead, and that the proprium of man is Hell, and consequently that the love of the proprium is the devil; and then, with the windows closed, it is in darkness; and there it makes its hearth, at which it sits with its consort, and they reason amicably in favour of nature against God, and in favour of man's Own prudence against the Divine Providence.

207. The Divine Providence is the Divine operation with a man who has removed the love of self; for the love of self . . . is the devil; and the concupiscences and their delights are the evils of his kingdom, which is Hell. When it is removed, the Lord enters with the affections of love towards the neighbour, and opens the window in his roof, and then the side windows, and causes him to see that there is a Heaven . . . and by means of the influent spiritual light and . . . spiritual love, causes him to acknowledge that God rules all things by His Divine Providence.

215<sup>3</sup>. Hence originated degrees of dignity . . . and, with these, the love of self, and the pride of man's Own prudence.

—<sup>6</sup>. The love of dignities and honours for the sake of dignities and honours is the love of self—properly, the love of dominating from the love of self. . . (This) is the love of the proprium; (which) is all evil. . . The Hereditary of man is his proprium, in which he is, and into which he comes through the love of self, and chiefly through the love of dominating from the love of self; for the man who is in this love regards nothing but himself, and thus immerses his thoughts and affections in his proprium. Hence it is that in the love of self there is the love of doing evil. The reason is that he does not love the neighbour, but himself alone; and he who loves himself alone sees others only as outside of himself, either as vile, or as nothing, whom he despises in comparison with himself, on whom he thinks nothing of inflicting evil. (Continued under LOVE OF DOMINATING.)

—<sup>8</sup>. Therefore all in Hell want to do evil to all . . . (But) man is in equilibrium, so that he can turn either to Hell or to Heaven; and in proportion as he favours the evils of the love of self, in the same proportion he turns himself to Hell; but in proportion as he removes these evils from himself, in the same proportion he turns to Heaven.

—<sup>12</sup>. For in the love of self and of the world there is more of the fire and ardour of doing uses than with those who are not in the love of self and of the world; but the former do uses for the sake of . . . themselves . . .

216. As the natural man calls goods the delights of the love of self, which are also the delights of the concupiscences of evil . . . he calls honours and wealth Divine blessings . . .

217<sup>2</sup>. Dignities and wealth . . . seduce when they excite the love of man's proprium, which is the love of self . . . but they do not seduce when they do not excite this love.

233<sup>5</sup>. Besides, the delight itself of man's life is to love himself and the world above all things. This delight cannot be removed in a moment, but successively; and in proportion as there remains of this delight with man, in the same proportion evil remains there; and this evil can be removed in no other way than by the love of self becoming the love of uses . . . for thus uses make the head, and the love of self or of dominating first makes the body . . . and afterwards the feet to walk with. —<sup>6</sup>, Ex.

—<sup>11</sup>. The love of self, which is the head of all evils, surpasses other loves in the cleverness of adulterating goods and falsifying truths; and it does this by the abuse of the rationality which every man has from the Lord; nay, by means of confirmations it can make evil appear exactly like good, and falsity like truth. What can it not do, when by a thousand arguments it can confirm that nature has created itself, and that it then created men, beasts, and plants of every kind? and also that by influx from its interior self it causes men to live, to think analytically, and to understand wisely? The reason the love of self excels in the cleverness of confirming whatever it wants, is that a certain resplendence of light, variegated in various colours, makes its ultimate surface. This resplendence is the glory of being wise of this love, and of thus being eminent and dominating. But when this love has confirmed such things, it then becomes so blind as not to see otherwise than that man is a beast, and that they think in like manner [as man does]; nay, that if a beast could speak, it would be a man under a different form. If from some persuasion it should be brought to believe that something of man lives after death, it is then so blind as to believe that a beast does so also . . . besides other insanities, with which nature itself . . . inspires its phantasy. This is done by the love of self, which, regarded in itself, is the love of the proprium; and the proprium of man as to the affections . . . is not unlike the life of a beast; and as to its perceptions . . . is not unlike an owl. Therefore he who continually immerses his thoughts in his proprium cannot be elevated out of natural light into spiritual light . . . As this love is such, and still excels in the cleverness of confirming whatever it pleases, therefore also with like cleverness it can adulterate the goods of the Word, and falsify its truths, when from some necessity it is kept in the confession of them.

241. (Thus) the men of the Most Ancient Church . . . were not seduced by any serpent, but by the love of self, which is there 'the head of the serpent' . . .

250<sup>2</sup>. What is more restless at heart, more frequently indignant, and more grievously angered, than the love of self? . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. Suppose some infernal kingdom in the world—although there is none such—where nothing reigns except the love of self—the love of self is the devil. Will not everyone do uses from the fire of the love of self, and from the resplendence of his own glory, more than in any other kingdom? The public good is in every mouth there, but its own good in every heart. And as everyone looks to his own chief for his advancement . . . can such a one see that there is a God? There is a smoke like that of a conflagration surrounding him, through which no spiritual truth in its own light can pass . . . Make inquiry how many there are in the kingdoms of the present day who aspire to dignities, who are not loves of self and of the world. Will you find fifty in a thousand who are loves of God? and among these there are only a few who aspire to dignities. As, therefore, there are so few who are loves of God, and so many who are loves of self and of the world; and as the latter loves, from their fires, perform uses more than the loves of God from theirs, how can anyone confirm himself [against the Divine providence] by the fact that the evil are in eminence and opulence above the good? Ill.

276. But when the love of the neighbour was turned into the love of self, and this latter love increased, then human love was turned into animal love, and man . . . became a beast . . .

— When the love of the neighbour was turned into the love of self, man could no longer be born into the light of knowledge and intelligence; but into the thick darkness of ignorance, because wholly into the ultimate of life, which is called the corporeal Sensuous . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That the love of the neighbour and the love of self are opposite loves, can be seen by everyone; for the love of the neighbour wills well to all from self; but the love of self wills well to self alone from all: the love of the neighbour wants to serve all; but the love of self wants all to serve it: the love of the neighbour regards all as its brothers and friends; but the love of self regards all as its servants, and if they do not act as servants, as enemies. In a word, it regards itself alone; and others as scarcely men, holding them in less estimation than its horses and dogs; and as it regards them as so vile, it makes nothing of doing evil to them. Hence come hatreds and revenges, adulteries and scortations, thefts and defraudings, lies and slanderings, fiercenesses and cruelties, and other like things. These are the evils in which man is from birth.

277. Who feels that to love himself above others is an evil . . . when yet it is the head of evils.

298<sup>3</sup>. In its essence the voluntary proprium is the love of self; and the intellectual proprium is the conceit from this love. These two are as two consorts; and their marriage is called the marriage of evil and falsity. Every evil Spirit is let into this marriage before he is sent into Hell . . . 321<sup>6</sup>.

301. The reason Spirits of Hell are concupiscences of evil and the derivative imaginations of falsity, is that they are in the love of self and in Own intelligence; and all the concupiscences of evil are from the love of self, and the imaginations of falsity from Own Intelligence.

310<sup>3</sup>. Especially do (sensuous men) confirm with themselves the love of self, calling it the fire of life, and the incentive to the various uses in a kingdom.

324<sup>10</sup>. Regarded in itself, the natural degree of life loves nothing but self and the world; for it coheres with the senses of the body . . . Whereas the spiritual degree of life, regarded in itself, loves the Lord and Heaven, and also loves self and the world; but God and Heaven as higher, principal, and dominant; and self and the world as lower, instrumental, and subservient.

692. That on account of the delight of the love of self . . . they had not acknowledged the Divinity of the Lord's Human. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The quality of the love of self shall be told in a few words. Its delight surpasses all the delight in the world ; for it is composed of the mere concupiscences of evils ; and each concupiscence breathes forth its own delight. Every man is born into this delight ; and because it drives the mind of man to be constantly thinking about self, it drags it down from thinking about God and the neighbour except from self, and about self ; and therefore unless God favours its concupiscences, it is angry with God, as it is angry with the neighbour who does not favour it. When this delight increases it causes the man not to be able to think above himself, but below himself ; for it immerses his mind in the proprium of his body. Hence the man successively becomes sensuous ; and a sensuous man speaks in a high and self-exalted tone about worldly and civil things ; but he cannot speak about God and Divine things, except from the memory alone . . .

919. That the men of (the New) Church will not be in the love of self and in Own intelligence. Sig. and Ex.

M. 67. The natural loves (which flow from spiritual loves) relate to the loves of self and of the world.

193<sup>2</sup>. The love of his own wisdom was transferred from the man into the woman, in order that it might become conjugal love ; and this was done in order that in the man there should not be the love of self, but the love of his wife ; who, from her innate nature, cannot do otherwise than convert the love of self with the man into his love for herself ; and I have heard that this is effected from the wife's love itself, neither the man nor the wife being conscious of it. Hence it is that no one can ever love his consort truly conjugally who is in the conceit of Own intelligence from the love of self.

264<sup>e</sup>. From these things it was evident of what quality is the political love of self, and of what quality is the ecclesiastical love of self ; the latter being that they want to be gods, and the former that they want to be emperors . . .

267<sup>e</sup>. Thinking something . . . about the unbridled love of self, that it is destructive of love to the Lord ; and about the unbridled love of the world, that it is destructive of love towards the neighbour.

269<sup>2</sup>. There are three universal loves . . . the love of the neighbour . . . the love of the world . . . and the love of self, which also is the love of exercising command over others. The love of the neighbour is a spiritual love ; the love of the world is a material love ; and the love of self . . . is a corporeal love. Man is a man when the love of the neighbour makes the head, the love of the world the body, and the love of self the feet . . . But when the love of self makes the head . . . he is a man standing on his palms with his head downwards, and his buttocks upwards . . . If the love of self makes the head, he appears from Heaven with a dusky face, and with a white circle round his head. Ex. T. 507.

—<sup>6</sup>. (The devils have such rationality) from the glory of the love of self ; for the love of self is girdled round with glory ; and glory elevates the understanding even into the light of Heaven . . .

333. A sign that (love truly conjugal) surpasses the love of self.

405<sup>e</sup>. The reason is, that with such parents the love of their offspring is also the love of self ; and this love cleaves to the subject outwardly, and does not enter into it . . .

496. There are three degrees of the natural man . . . In the third degree are they who love themselves alone, setting the heart on the quest of honour. These are properly meant by the corporeal ; the reason of which is that they immerse in the body all things of the will and thence of the understanding, and look backwards from others to themselves, and love only their own things.

I. 17<sup>4</sup>. There are three kinds of loves : the love of Heaven, the love of the world, and the love of self . . . the love of self is corporeal . . . If the principal love is the love of self, or the love of being eminent above all others, and thus is corporeal, all things which follow from it are corporeal. The reason is that the man of this love keeps himself solely in view, and thus immerses the thoughts of his mind in the body.

T. 45. From this description of the essence of Divine love, the quality of the essence of diabolical love may be seen . . . Diabolical love is the love of self. This is called love ; but, regarded in itself, is hatred ; for it does not love anyone outside of self ; nor does it want to be conjoined with others so as to benefit them ; but solely to benefit self. From its inmost it continually strives to exercise command over all, and also to possess the goods of all, and finally to be adored as a god. This is the reason why those who are in Hell do not acknowledge God ; but acknowledge as gods those who prevail in Power over others . . . and as everyone there has this at heart, he burns with hatred against his god, and the god against those who are under his Power ; and he reputes them as vile slaves, with whom he does indeed speak softly so long as they adore him ; but rages as from fire against all others, and also at heart against his followers. For the love of self is the same as the love of robbers, who kiss each other while they are at their robberies ; but afterwards burn with the desire to kill each other, in order to rob each other of their booty. This love causes its cupidities to appear . . . from afar as various species of wild beasts ; some like foxes and leopards ; some like wolves and tigers ; and some like crocodiles and poisonous serpents. It causes the deserts where they live to consist solely of heaps of stones, or of bare gravel, interspersed with marshes, in which frogs croak. It also causes doleful birds to fly over their huts and screech. The 'ochim, tziim, and ijim,' which are mentioned in the propheticals of the Word where it treats of the love of commanding from the love of self, are nothing else.

394. That there are three universal loves : the love of Heaven, the love of the world, and the love of self. Gen.art. (See under LOVE, here.)

—<sup>2</sup>. The love of self is not only the love of honour, glory, reputation, eminence ; but also the love of meriting and soliciting offices, and thus of reigning over others. The reason charity has something in common with each of these three loves, is that, regarded in itself, it is the love of uses . . . and the love of self regards corporeal uses, which may also be called domestic ones, done for one's self and one's own.

395. These three loves are rightly subordinated when the love of Heaven makes the head, the love of the world the breast and belly, and the love of self the feet and soles. Fully ex. 403.

403. When the love of Heaven makes the head, it inflows into the love of the world . . . and mediately through this into the love of self, which is principally the love of dignities, and through these it does uses.

405. But if the love of self or the love of dominating makes the head, the love of Heaven passes through the body to the feet. (Continued under LOVE OF DOMINATING.)

754. The cause of the consummation of truth and good is especially the two natural loves, which are diametrically opposite to the two spiritual loves, and which are called the love of self and the love of the world. When the love of self is regnant, it is opposite to love to God; and when the love of the world is regnant, it is opposite to love towards the neighbour. The love of self is to will well to self alone, and not to another except for the sake of self; in like manner the love of the world; and these loves, when made habitual, spread like gangrene through the body . . .

277<sup>e</sup>. Therefore if there reigns the love of self and of the world, in whatever manner they may be in external worship, they are conjoined with the Hells . . .

401<sup>34</sup>. As the love of self lets man into his proprium, and keeps him in it . . . by 'the heat of the sun' is signified truth adulterated . . . Ill.

—<sup>35</sup>. 'The rising of the sun' (in the parable of the Sower) = the love of self.

—<sup>36</sup>. The spiritual mind cannot be opened with those who are in the love of self. Ex.

—<sup>37</sup>. The reason the love of self is signified in the preceding passages, is that by 'the sun' is signified love to the Lord, and this is opposite to the love of self. Moreover, the Lord's Divine love, which is present with everyone, is turned into the love of self with the evil.

405<sup>38</sup>. All who are in the love of self, especially those who are in the love of commanding, have a most intense desire, when they come into the Spiritual World, to get up into high places; for this is implanted in that love . . . 510<sup>2</sup>.

409<sup>7</sup>. They who want to love the Lord and to love themselves equally. Sig.

506<sup>8</sup>. That all the perception of truth and good, and the derivative Knowledge of them, have perished through the loves of self and of the world . . . Sig. and Ex.

510. The love of self and the derivative Own intelligence. Sig. and Ex.

512. That when the love of self enters and takes possession of the natural man, it turns everything scientific therein into the falsity of evil. Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. The love of self is a merely corporeal love, springing from the boiling up and fermentation of the obsolete parts, and their titillation within the body; whence the Perceptive of the mind, which requires a pure atmosphere, is not only dulled and made gross, but also perishes. That the love of self is from this origin, may be evident from its correspondence with human ordure; for they who have been given up to this love, in the other life love stercoraceous dirt above all other things, the stink of which is grateful to them; a sign that the fine effluvial dust from it falls pleasantly upon their sensory of smell, as it had before done upon the general sensory which is extended on every side by means of the interior cuticles. From this alone it may be evident that the love of self is gross and sordidly corporeal above all other loves, and consequently that it takes away all spiritual perception, which is of the truth and good of Heaven and the Church. It also closes the spiritual mind, and fixes its seat solely in the natural and sensuous man, which proximately communicates with the body, and not at all with Heaven; whence also it is that all those with whom the love of self predominates are sensuous, and do not see the things which are of Heaven and the Church, except in the thickest darkness; and also that when they are alone and are thinking in themselves, they reject and deny them.

[E.] 517<sup>2</sup>. It is to be known that all those who are in the love of self, if they study the Word, falsify its truths. The reason is, that all truth is from . . . the Lord, and nothing from the proprium of man, and they who are in the love of self are immersed in their proprium, and take from it all the idea of thought concerning the truths of the Word. It is from this that they falsify them, not as to the sense of the letter . . . but as to the understanding of the truth in it.

585<sup>2</sup>. For man is born into two diabolical loves; namely, into the love of self, and the love of the world, from which loves spring all evils and the derivative falsities as from their very own fountains. And as man is born into these loves, he is also born into evils of every kind.

586<sup>2</sup>. For every Spirit, as every man, who is in the love of self, seeks to be worshipped as a god . . .

650<sup>2</sup>. Something shall be said about the assault (from infernal love). Infernal love is especially the love of self; for the love of self is the love of man's proprium, and the proprium of man is nothing but evil; and therefore in proportion as a man is in this love, in the same proportion he is against God, and thence against the good of love and charity, and against the truth of doctrine and faith; thus against these 'two witnesses.' Hence it is that the Hells where the love of self reigns are more direful and malignant, and are diametrically against the Lord, and are therefore constantly assaulting the goods of love and of faith, because these are from the Lord alone . . . That these Hells are more direful than the rest may be evident from the fact that they continually breathe the murder of those who confess the Divine of the Lord . . . The reason these Hells are more malignant than the rest, is that in proportion as a man is in the love of self, and at the same time in the love of Own intelligence, in the same proportion his natural lumen is in a certain false resplendence; for the love of self is as a fire which kindles that lumen. Hence it is that they are able to think and reason cleverly against the Divine, and against all things of Heaven and the Church. I have sometimes been astounded when I heard such, believing that above others they could be brought to receive faith; but I have taken notice that this is impossible; for in proportion as the corporeal, worldly, and natural things had been in light, in the same proportion the celestial and spiritual things with them had been in thick darkness. The thick darkness was seen, and was completely dusky with a fieriness intermingled . . . It is the love of self which is here meant in special by 'the beast ascending from the abyss,' which beast made war with the two witnesses, and killed them.

653. By the evils of the love of self, and by the derivative falsities. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. It shall first be shown that by 'Sodom' in the Word is signified the love of self, and thence all evil; for evils of every kind spring from the love of self. For he who loves himself alone, loves his own proprium, and thus immerses all things of his will and understanding in his proprium, inasmuch that he cannot be elevated from it . . . Hence it is that he sees nothing from the light of Heaven . . . Therefore also the more a man loves himself, the more he spurns spiritual things . . . Hence also the internal spiritual mind . . . is closed, whence the man becomes merely natural; and a merely natural man favours evils of every kind; for the evils into which man is born reside in the natural man . . . III.

—<sup>4</sup>. To spiritual good . . . the opposite is infernal evil, which is the evil of the love of the world; and to celestial good the opposite is diabolical evil, which is the evil of the love of self. From the love of self spring evils of all kinds, and much worse than from the love of the world.

—<sup>8</sup>. For celestial love is that which is turned into the love of self, which is diabolical love. Sig.

— . Moreover, all with whom there reigns the love of self despise the holy things of Heaven and the Church, and deny the Divine of the Lord; and in order to confirm the evils which flow forth from that love, they either adulterate the Word, or reject it as a writing which is not holy . . . Hence it is that they who do these things from that love are compared to 'Sodom and Gomorrah.'

—<sup>9</sup>. For no one interiorly rejects the holy things of the Church, and denies the Divine of the Lord, except those who are in the love of self. They who are in the love of the world and the derivative evils can also reject the holy things of the Church, but still not interiorly; that is, from the confirmation of the heart.

714. 'A great red dragon' = all who are merely natural and sensuous from the love of self, and still know more or fewer things from the Word.

—<sup>10</sup>. All of these, who study the Word, and are in the love of self, are also in the conceit of Own intelligence . . . Intelligence from the proprium exists with all those who are in the love of self; for the love of self is the proprium itself of man; and those are in the love of self who read the Word and collect dogmas thence for the sake of reputation, glory, and honours; and as these cannot see any truths, but only falsities, they are in the body of the dragon . . . The heart of this body is the love of self, and the soul of its respiration . . . is the conceit of Own intelligence. From these two the dragon is said to be 'a great red' one. —<sup>11</sup>.

730<sup>3</sup>. For no one can serve two lords . . . for they are opposites; for from the love of the body, which is the love of self, and from the love of the world, which is the love of riches, when they are loved above all things, flow forth all evils; and from the evils falsities . . .

740<sup>3</sup>. Thus the infernal kingdom which corresponds oppositely to the Celestial Kingdom consists of devils who are in the love of self. Hence it is that evils of all kinds flow forth from this Hell . . .

758<sup>2</sup>. All who are in the Hells, are in the loves of self and of the world ; and all who are in the Heavens are in loves to the Lord and towards the neighbour ; and the latter loves are completely opposite to the former. They who are in the loves of self and of the world love nothing but their own proprium, and the proprium of man is nothing but evil ; whereas they who are in loves to the Lord and towards the neighbour do not love their own proprium . . . and are withheld from their own proprium, and are kept in the Lord's proprium . . . Moreover, all the delights of life are the delights of the loves. The delights of the loves of self and of the world are delights of hatreds of various kinds ; whereas the delights of (the heavenly loves) are delights of charity of various kinds . . . and as they who are in the Hells do all things from the delights of their loves . . . it is evident whence comes such hatred of the dragon against the woman ; for by 'the dragon' are meant those who are in the love of self . . .

825. Hence it is that they who are in the love of self and of the world are in the love of all the evils thence originating, and in the love of the falsities from these evils.

837<sup>12</sup>. I tell thee, Reader, that all who live (faith alone) are in natural love separated from spiritual love, and natural love separated therefrom is the love of self and of the world, and consequently the love of all evils, and of all falsities from evils . . .

935<sup>2</sup>. The First Precept, 'Thou shalt not worship other gods,' contains also not to love self and the world ; for he who loves self and the world above all things worships other gods . . .

950<sup>3</sup>. There are two loves completely opposite to each other ; the love of self, and love to God ; and also the love of the world, and the love of Heaven. He who loves self loves his proprium . . . hence he loves evil in the whole complex ; and he who loves evil hates good, consequently God. He who loves self above all things immerses his affections and thoughts in the body, and thus in his proprium . . . and he who is immersed in the body and his proprium is in corporeal ideas, and in pleasures which are merely of the body ; and thence is in thick darkness as to the things which are above . . . and as he sees nothing of God, he denies God, and instead of God acknowledges either nature, or some man, or some idol, and also affects to be worshipped as God himself. Hence it follows then that he who loves self above all things worships other gods. In like manner he who loves the world above all things, but in a less degree, for the world cannot be loved so much as the proprium can ; and therefore the world is loved from the proprium, and for the sake of the proprium, because it is of service to it. By the love of self is especially meant the love of exercising command over others from the sole delight of dominion, and for the sake of eminence ; and not from the delight of uses . . . And by the love of the world is especially meant the love of possessing goods in the world from the sole delight of possession, and for the sake of opulence ; and not from the delight of uses from them . . . Both these loves are without limit ; and in proportion as the opportunity is given, rush on to infinity. 951<sup>5</sup>, Ex.

982<sup>2</sup>. It is scarcely known in the world that all who are in the love of self, are according to the delight of that love in the delight of injuring others who do not make one with them. That such is the case is manifestly evident from the same after death . . .

1021<sup>2</sup>. There are two loves from which all concupiscences spring and perennially emanate as do streams from their fountains. These loves are called the love of the world, and the love of self. Concupiscence is love continually willing . . . Now as the love of the world and the love of self are the fountains of all concupiscences ; and as all evil concupiscences are prohibited in these last two precepts, it follows that the Ninth Precept prohibits the concupiscences which flow forth from the love of the world ; and the Tenth Precept the concupiscences which flow forth from the love of self. Ex. 1022<sup>3</sup>, Ex.

1055<sup>2</sup>. They who are in the love of self and thence in the love of dominating, and who acquire domination by means of the holy things of the Word . . . are they who profane . . .

1143<sup>4</sup>. The Hell where are these who are called devils is the love of self . . . The reason the diabolical Hell is the love of self, is because this love is opposite to celestial love, which is love to the Lord . . .

1144<sup>2</sup>. It has been said that the love of self and the love of the world are Hell : whence these loves come shall now be told. Man has been created to love self and the world, to love the neighbour and Heaven, and to love the Lord. Hence it is that when a man is born he first loves self and the world ; and then in proportion as he is wise he loves the neighbour and Heaven ; and in proportion as he still is wise, he loves the Lord. When he is such he is then in Divine order, and is actually led by the Lord, and apparently by himself. But in proportion as he is not wise, he stands still in the first degree, which is to love self and the world ; and if he loves the neighbour, Heaven, and the Lord, it is for the sake of himself before the world. If, however, he is not at all wise, he then loves self alone and the world for the sake of self ; in like manner the neighbour ; and Heaven and the Lord he either holds cheap, or denies, or hates ; if not with his mouth, still at heart. These are the origins of the love of self, and of the love of the world ; and as these loves are Hell, it is evident whence Hell is.

—<sup>3</sup>. As the love of self determines to itself all things of the thought and will, and immerses them in the body, it thence inverts and retorts the exteriors of the mind . . . from which it is that they tend . . . to Hell.

1193<sup>3</sup>. Still, everyone ought to provide for himself and his the necessities . . . of life . . . but not from the love of self.

J. (Post.) 241<sup>2</sup>. Diabolical Spirits . . . place themselves behind the upright, and insufflate the love of self . . .

D. Love x<sup>2</sup>. Diabolical love . . . is in Hell distinguished into two kingdoms ; one, in which there reigns the love of self ; and another in which reigns the love of the world. The love of self involves evil uses a quo, which is from self ; and the love of the world involves evil uses ad quem ; which uses, as they are done from self, are also done for the sake of self ; for all love returns as by a circle to that from which it comes. This diabolical love is further distinguished into provinces ; and these again into Societies ; and so on . . .

[D. Love] xiv. That those are not men, and are not in the Lord, who love themselves above all things, and the world as themselves. Gen.art.

Love of the Sex. Amor sexus.

M. 22<sup>2</sup>. The Angel said, I conjecture that with you there is not the chaste love of the sex. In Heaven we love virgins from their beauty and elegance of manners ; and we love them very much ; but chastely.

37. That principally the love of the sex (remains with every man after death) . . . Gen.art.

38. For the love of the sex is different from conjugal love. The love of the sex is with the natural man ; whereas conjugal love is with the spiritual man. The natural man loves and desires only external conjunctions, and the pleasures of the body therefrom . . .

44<sup>3</sup>. The novitiates said, We have heard . . . that in Heaven they are not given in marriage . . . Is there therefore the love of the sex ? The angelic Spirits replied, Your love of the sex does not exist there ; but the angelic love of the sex, which is chaste, and devoid of all allurements from lust. To this the novitiates said, If there is a love of the sex with no allurements, what in that case is the love of the sex ? . . . Is not such a love barren, and devoid of life ? To this the angelic Spirits replied, smiling, The angelic love of the sex . . . is nevertheless full of inmost deliciousnesses ; it is a most pleasant expansion of all things of the mind, and thence of all things of the breast, and it is within the breast as if the heart were sporting with the lungs, from which sport there goes forth a respiration, a tone of voice, and a speech, which cause the social intercourse between the sexes—that is, between youths and maidens—to be heavenly sweetnesses themselves, which are pure. All novitiates, on ascending into Heaven, are explored as to the quality of their chastity ; for they are introduced into the company of maidens, the Beauties of Heaven, who perceive from their tone of voice, their speech, their faces, their eyes, their gestures, and from their exhaling sphere, of what quality they are as to the love of the sex ; and, if this is unchaste, they flee away and tell their companions that they have seen satyrs or priapuses. The new-comers also are changed, and before the eyes of the Angels appear rough and hairy, and with feet like those of calves or leopards ; and presently they are cast down, lest they should defile the aura there with their lust. On hearing this, the two novitiates again said, So there is no love of the sex in Heaven ! What is a chaste love of the sex but a love emptied of the essence of its life ! . . . On hearing this, the two angelic Spirits indignantly replied, You are utterly ignorant as to what the chaste love of the sex is, because as yet you are not chaste. That love is the very deliciousness itself of the mind, and thence of the heart, and not at the same time of the flesh below the heart. Angelic chastity, which is common to both sexes, prevents the passing of that love beyond the enclosure of the heart ; but within and above it the morality of a youth is delicatized with the beauty of a maiden with the deliciousnesses of the chaste love of the sex, which are too interior and too abundant in pleasantness to be described in words. But the Angels have this love of the sex, because they have conjugal love only ; and this latter love is not possible together with an unchaste love of the sex . . . On hearing this, the two novitate youths rejoiced, and said, There is still in Heaven the love of the sex : what else is conjugal love ? But to this the angelic Spirits replied, Think more deeply, consider, and you will perceive that your love of the sex is an extra-conjugal love ; and that conjugal love is quite different . . . If you were to ask the women in Heaven . . . What is love truly conjugal, I know that they would reply, It is not the love of the sex, but the love of one of the sex . . . I know also that they would swear that they do not know any other love of the sex ; for they say, How can there be a love of the sex, unless it is so meeting—obvious—and reciprocal that it breathes an eternal union, which consists in two being one flesh ?

46. That the love of the sex remains with every man after death, such as it had been interiorly, that is, such as it had been in his interior will and thought, in the world. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. As concerns the love of the sex, it is the universal of all loves ; for it has been implanted from creation in the very soul of man ; from which is the essence of the whole man ; and this for the sake of the propagation of the human race. The reason this love principally remains, is that after death a man is a man, and a woman a woman ; and because there is nothing in the soul, in the mind, and in the body, which is not masculine in the male, and feminine in the female ; and these two have been so created that they struggle towards conjunction . . . so as to become a one. This effort is the love of the sex, which precedes conjugal love. Now as the conjunctive inclination is inscribed on each and all things of the male and of the female, it follows that this inclination cannot be obliterated . . .

47. The reason the love of the sex remains such as it had been interiorly, is . . . (that) a man is his own love ; and love is seated in his spirit . . . As for example, if that love had been interiorly conjugal, or chaste, it remains after death conjugal, or chaste ; whereas if it had been interiorly scortatory, it remains so after death. But it is to be known that the love of the sex is not the same with one as it is with another ; the differences of it are infinite ; but still such as it is in the spirit of anyone, such it remains.

48. As the love of the sex is one thing, and conjugal love another, a distinct name is given to each . . . But as few know the difference between the love of the sex and conjugal love . . . I will preface something about it. The love of the sex is love towards many and with many of the sex ; whereas conjugal love is love only to one and with one of the sex ; and love to many and with many is natural love; for it is common [to man] with beasts and birds. . . But conjugal love is spiritual love, and is peculiar and proper to men . . . and therefore in proportion as a man becomes spiritual, in the same proportion he puts off the love of the sex, and puts on conjugal love. At the beginning of marriage the love of the sex appears as if it were conjoined with conjugal love; but in the progression of marriage they are separated; and then, with those who are spiritual, the love of the sex is exterminated, and conjugal love is insinuated; whereas with those who are natural the contrary takes place. From what has now been said it is evident that the love of the sex, being with many, and in itself natural, nay, animal, is impure and unchaste; and, because it is roving and unlimited, it is scortatory . . .

55°. The Angel said that they were singing the chaste love of the sex. But the bystanders asked, What is the chaste love of the sex? And the Angel said, It is the love of a man towards a maiden or for a wife who is beautiful in form and becoming in manners, free from all idea of lasciviousness; and vice versa. . . The singing continued; and as they then knew the subject of the affection which it expressed, they heard it with much variety, everyone according to the state of his love. Those who regarded women chastely, heard that singing as symphonious and sweet; those who regarded women unchastely, heard it as unharmonious and melancholy; and those who looked upon women with loathing, heard it as discordant and hoarse. Then suddenly the plane on which they were standing was changed into a theatre; and a voice was heard—Discuss this Love. And suddenly there were present Spirits from various Societies, and in the midst of them some Angels in white. The latter then said, We . . . have inquired into every species of love . . . and it has been granted us to pass through Societies and explore them, and we have never yet found the common love of the sex chaste except with those who from love truly conjugal are in continual potency; and these are in the highest Heavens. It has also been granted us to perceive the influx of this love into the affections of our hearts, and we have clearly perceived it to surpass in sweetness every other love, except the love of two consorts whose hearts are a one. But we ask you to discuss this love, because to you it is new and unknown; and as it is pleasantness itself, by us in Heaven it is called heavenly sweetness. (The Spirits then deliver their opinions on the subject.)

—6. On hearing these things, the Angels were indignant, and asked those who . . . were standing at the south to speak. And they said, There is the love of a man and a man, and also that of a woman and a woman; and there is the love of a man for a woman, and of a woman for a man; and these three pairs of loves are quite different from each other. (Continued under Love, here.) But the love of a man and a woman is the love of the understanding and its affection; and this love enters deeply and conjoins; and this conjunction is this love. But the conjunction of minds, and not at the same time of bodies—or the effort to this conjunction alone—is spiritual love, and consequently chaste love; and this love exists solely with those who are in love truly conjugal, and thence in eminent potency; because these, on account of chastity, do not admit the influx of love from the body of any other woman than their own wife; and as they are in supereminent potency, they cannot do otherwise than love the sex, and at the same time be averse to what is unchaste. Hence they have the chaste love of the sex; which, regarded in itself, is interior spiritual friendship, which draws its sweetness from potency which is eminent, but chaste. . . Now as this love with these does not partake of the flesh, but only of the spirit, it is chaste; and as the beauty of a woman, from the implanted inclination, at the same time enters into the mind, it is sweet. On hearing these things many of the bystanders put their hands to their ears, saying, These statements hurt our ears. . . They were unchaste. And then was again heard that singing from Heaven, and now sweeter than before . . .

58°. The primitive love of marriage emulates love truly conjugal . . . which takes place because there has then been cast out the love of the sex, which is unchaste; and in its place there sits implanted the love of one of the sex, which is love truly conjugal . . .

92. That from the influx of the marriage of good and truth from the Lord is the love of the sex, and also conjugal love. Gen.art.

— The universal conjugal sphere proceeds from the Lord, and pervades the universe from its primes to its ultimates . . . (and is) received by the male according to his form—thus in the understanding, because he is the intellectual form—and by the female according to hers—thus in the will, because she is the voluntary form from the intellectual one of the man—and as this same sphere is also the sphere of procreation, it follows that thence is the love of the sex.

93. In proportion as a man grows in wisdom, in the same proportion is his form perfected; and this form does not receive the love of the sex, but the love of one of the sex.

94. That the love of the sex is of the external or natural man; and hence is common to every animal. Gen.art.

97. That with man conjugal love is in the love of the sex as a gem in its matrix.

98. That the love of the sex with man is not the origin of conjugal love, but that it is the first of it; thus it is as an External Natural in which is implanted the Internal Spiritual. Gen.art.

98. The common love which is called conjugal . . . with some is nothing else than the limited love of the sex . . .

—2. Meanwhile the beginning of this love is as lust, which with some goes into the love of the sex actually . . .

99. That when conjugal love has been implanted, the love of the sex inverts itself, and becomes the chaste love of the sex. Ex.

145. The first love, by which is meant the love before the wedding and immediately after it, draws something from the love of the sex; thus from the ardour proper to the body . . .

150. That chastity cannot be predicated of . . . young men and maidens before they feel in themselves the love of the sex. Ex.

[M.] 161. For nothing of conjugal love, and not even of the love of the sex, is with men; but only with wives and women. . . All the women and wives were withdrawn from the men; and the very sphere of the love of the sex was removed together with them. . . The men then came into a very strange state . . . and then the women were brought to them, and the wives to their husbands . . . but they had become cold to their blandishments . . . But when the wives began to be grieved at the utterly cold indifference of the men . . . the sphere of the love of the feminine sex, and the conjugal sphere . . . were restored; and then the men at once returned into their former state; the lovers of marriage into their state, and the lovers of the sex into theirs. Thus the men were convinced that nothing of conjugal love, and not even of the love of the sex, resides with them; but solely with wives and women.

162. The first heat of marriage does not conjoin; for it partakes of the love of the sex, which is of the body and thence of the spirit; and what is from the body in the spirit does not last long.

214<sup>2</sup>. The love which precedes friendship is like the love of the sex, which departs after the attainment of its desire.

256. (Commonness is a cause of cold) especially between those who have not removed the unchaste love of the sex from the love which is between them . . .

296. Choice belongs to the man . . . also because with men there is commonly the love of the sex, but with women the love of one of the sex.

297<sup>2</sup>. Besides, men have not any innate love of the sex; and without this love there is no interior pleasantness of life; and therefore in order to exalt their life by means of this love, it is incumbent on men to make themselves agreeable to women . . .

330<sup>4</sup>. It is evident that such a woman has the love of the sex, and not the love of one of the sex.

331. But insanity is not to love the wife, but to love the sex; and virtue fails this love.

345. The reason polygamy is lasciviousness, is that . . . it is the love of the sex . . . merely being limited to the number . . . and thus, being the love of the sex, it is the love of lasciviousness.

355<sup>2</sup>. It is not known (in Heaven) that there is any other love of the sex than conjugal love.

445. That fornication is of the love of the sex. —It is said that fornication is of the love of the sex, because fornication is not the love of the sex, but is from it. The love of the sex is like a fountain, from which both conjugal love and scortatory love may be derived . . . for the love of the sex is in every man—homini—; and it either manifests itself, or it does not manifest itself. If it manifests itself before marriage, with a harlot, it is called fornication; if not until with a wife, it is called marriage; if after marriage, with another woman, it is called adultery. Therefore . . . the love of the sex is like a fountain from which may spring forth both chaste love and unchaste love.

446. That the love of the sex . . . begins when a youth begins to think and act from his own understanding, and the voice of his speech begins to become masculine. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) the love of the sex ascends as the understanding ascends, and descends as it descends. By ascending is meant into wisdom, and by descending is meant into insanity; and wisdom is to restrain the love of the sex, and insanity is to let it out widely . . .

447<sup>2</sup>. As to the love of the sex in special, it also is first corporeal, for it begins from the flesh; then it becomes sensuous, for the five senses are delighted by its General; afterwards it becomes natural, like the same love with animals, because it is the wandering love of the sex; but as man has been born in order to become spiritual, it afterwards becomes natural rational; and from natural rational spiritual; and finally spiritual natural; and then this love made spiritual inflows and acts into rational love, and through this into sensuous love, and finally through this into this love in the body and flesh; and as this is its ultimate plane, it acts into it spiritually, and at the same time rationally and sensuously; and it inflows and acts thus successively while the man is meditating upon it; but simultaneously when he is in the ultimate.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason fornication is of the natural man, is that it proximately proceeds from the natural love of the sex; and it may exist natural rational, but not spiritual; because the love of the sex cannot become spiritual until it becomes conjugal; and the love of the sex from being natural becomes spiritual when the man recedes from wandering lust, and devotes himself to one, to whose soul he unites his own soul.

449. From these things it is evident that natural love, which is love for the sex, precedes spiritual love, which is love for one of the sex . . .

450. That with some men the love of the sex cannot without injuries be totally restrained from going out into fornication. Ex.

Love of the world. Amor mundi.

See under LOVE OF SELF.

A. 230. The dominant evil of this posterity was . . . not so much the love of the world, as at this day; for they lived within their houses and families, and did not strive after wealth.

1675<sup>2</sup>. Persuasions from the love of the world do not rush on so far; and are only the insanities of not being content with their lot; but striving vainly after heavenly joy, and wanting to appropriate to themselves the goods of others; not so much with a mind to exercise command.

1690<sup>4</sup>. That the Lord fought against the love of the world, or against all things which are of the love of the world, is signified by, 'The devil brought Him upon a high mountain, and showed Him all the kingdoms of the world in a moment of time, and said, I will give Thee all this Power, and the glory of the world, because to me it has been given, and to whom I will I give it. If therefore thou wilt adore before me, all shall be Thine. But Jesus answering said unto him, Get thee behind Me satan; for it is written, Thou shalt adore the Lord thy God, and Him only shalt thou serve' (Luke iv. 5-8; Matt. iv. 8-10).

2219<sup>3</sup>. The love of the world does not so much destroy these things; for this love is opposite to the spiritual things of faith . . .

4581<sup>7</sup>. 'The drink-offerings' then signified the things which are opposite to charity and faith; namely, the evils and falsities of the love of the world. III.

4750<sup>3</sup>. The opposite to the good of spiritual love is the evil of the love of the world . . . They who are in the evil of the love of the world are not so much against all good . . . By 'Israel,' in the opposite sense, are represented those who are in the love of the world.

—<sup>4</sup>. They who are in the love of the world, not being so much against all good whatever, are in Hells not so deep.

4997<sup>2</sup>. Not unlike is the evil of the love of the world; for this desires the wealth and the goods of others, and desires to possess all things of others. Hence also come enmities and hatreds, but in a less degree.

5620<sup>15</sup>. As external delight is such . . . as to contain in itself many things from the love of the world, it was forbidden. Sig.

5660<sup>e</sup>. They who are in heavenly proprium . . . are not disturbed by anything of the love of the world; consequently not by anything of fraud, fear, unrest.

6481. For the most part . . . opulence begets the love of the world . . .

7373. But the love of the world reigns with a man—that is, a man is in the love of the world—when in the things which he thinks and does he does not regard and strive after anything but gain, caring nothing as to whether this is effected with injury to the neighbour, or with injury to the public.

7374. Those are in the love of the world who desire to draw to themselves the goods of others by means of arts which they have devised; and still more those who do so by means of cunning and deceit. Those who are in this love envy others their goods, and covet them; and, in proportion as they do not fear the laws, they deprive, nay, they despoil them of them. N. 76.

7819. (With the man who is in the good of charity and of faith) the love of the world regards the love of the neighbour; for he loves the world as a means for the sake of the end that he may be able to serve the neighbour . . .

9144<sup>6</sup>. 'Thorn' = the falsity of the concupiscences of the love of the world.

VOL. IV.

H. 565. As concerns the love of the world, this love is not opposite to heavenly love to so great a degree, because there are not such great evils stored up in it. The love of the world is to want to draw the wealth of others to ourselves by any art whatever; and is to set the heart on riches; and to suffer the world to hold back and withdraw us from spiritual love, which is love towards the neighbour; thus from Heaven and from the Divine. But this love is manifold; there is the love of wealth in order to be advanced to honours, which are the sole objects of love; there is the love of honours and dignities in order to gain wealth; there is the love of wealth for the sake of various uses with which they are delighted in the world; there is the love of wealth for its own sake . . . and so on. N. 77.

578<sup>e</sup>. But those who have been in evils from the love of the world are in the Hells in front, and are called Spirits. These are not such great evils—that is, such hatreds and revenges—as they who are in evils from the love of self; consequently neither have they such wickedness and cunning; and therefore their Hells are milder.

587<sup>4</sup>. In the Hells in the northern and southern quarters are those who when they lived had been in the love of the world, and thence in evils of various kinds, which are enmity, hostility, thefts, robberies, cunning, avarice, unmercifulness. The worst Hells of this kind are in the northern quarter . . . and the direfulness of them increases in proportion as they are nearer to the western quarter . . .

596<sup>2</sup>. All who are in the Hells opposite to the Spiritual Kingdom are in the love of the world. From this it was evident . . . that love towards the neighbour, and the love of the world, are opposites.

P. 139<sup>6</sup>. The love of the world makes one with the love of gain . . .

215<sup>6</sup>. The love of riches and wealth for their own sake is the love of the world; properly, the love of possessing the goods of others by any art whatever.

278a<sup>3</sup>. Those who on account of worldly things do not think about sins . . . are those who love the world above all things, and who do not admit any truth which may withdraw them from the falsity of their religion . . .

R. 458. By 'demons' are signified the concupiscences of evil which originate from the love of the world . . .

M. 49. The external perception of love derives its cause and origin from such things as are of the love of the world and of the body. Wealth and possessions are especially of the love of the world . . .

267<sup>3</sup>. They who are in the love of the world desire to possess all things thereof, and grieve and envy if any treasures lie hidden with any . . .

268. A longing came upon us to see those who from the love of the world are in the visionary concupiscence or phantasy of the possession of all wealth . . . Their abodes were under the earth . . . but above Hell . . . We descended, and it was said that they are to be approached from the east, lest we should enter into the mist of their phantasy . . . There was seen a house built of reeds, thus full of chinks, standing in a mist, which continually issued like smoke through the chinks of three of the walls. We entered, and saw fifty here, and fifty there, sitting upon benches. They were turned away from the east and south, and were looking to the west and north. Before each one there was a table, on which were distended purses, and around the purses an abundance of gold coins. We asked them, Is that the wealth of all the persons in the world? They said, Not of all in the world, but of all in the kingdom. The sound of their speech was hissing, and they appeared to have round faces, which glistened like the scales of a shell, and the pupils of their eyes shot forth as it were lightning on a green ground, which was from the light of the phantasy. We . . . said, You believe that you possess all the wealth of the kingdom? And they replied, We possess it. We then asked, Which of you? They said, Every one. We asked, How can every one? you are many. They said, Every one of us knows that all things which are his, are mine. No one is allowed to think, and still less to say, Mine are not thine; but everyone is allowed to think and say, Thine are mine. The coins upon the tables appeared, even to us, to be pure gold; but when we let in light from the east, they were little grains of gold, which they had magnified in that way by their common united phantasy. They said that everyone who enters ought to bring with him some gold, which they cut into small pieces, and these into little grains, and by the unanimous force of their phantasy they enlarge them into coins of the greater form. We then said, Were you not born men of reason? whence have you this visionary infatuation? They said, We know that it is an imaginary vanity; but as it delights the interiors of our minds, we enter here, and are delicatized as from the possession of all things. But we stay here only some hours, at the end of which we go out, and then a sound mind returns to us; but still our visionary delight alternately supervenes . . . thus we are alternately wise and insane. We also know that a hard lot awaits those who by cunning rob others of their goods. We inquired, What lot? They said, They are swallowed up, and are thrust naked into some infernal prison, where they are obliged to labour for clothing and food, and afterwards for some small coins, which they collect, and in which they place the joy of their hearts; but if they do evil to their comrades, they are fined a part of their coin.

333. A sign that (love truly conjugal) surpasses the love of the world.

496. There are three degrees of the natural man: in the first are those who solely love the world, setting the heart on wealth: these are properly meant by the natural. In the second degree are those who solely love the delights of the senses, setting the heart on luxuries and pleasures of all kinds: these are properly meant by the sensuous. (Continued under LOVE OF SELF.)

T. 394. The love of the world is not only the love of wealth and possessions, but also of all things which the world affords, and which delight the senses of the body; as beauty the eyes, harmony the ears, fragrance the nostrils, delicacies the tongue, soft things the skin; also becoming dress, convenient dwellings, company; thus all the delights from these and many other objects. . . . The reason charity has what is common with (this love), is that regarded in itself it is the love of uses . . . and the love of the world regards natural uses which may be called civil.

395. These three loves are rightly subordinated when . . . the love of the world makes the breast and the belly. (Continued under LOVE.) 403.

404. But . . . if the love of the world or of wealth makes the head—that is, if it is the reigning love—the love of Heaven is exiled from the head, and betakes itself into the body. The man who is in this state sets the world before Heaven; he does indeed worship God, but from love merely natural, which places merit in all worship; and he also does good to the neighbour, but for the sake of recompense. To these persons the things which are of Heaven are as coverings, in which they walk shining before the eyes of men, but dusky before the eyes of the Angels; for when the love of the world possesses the internal man, and the love of Heaven the external, the former then bedims all things of the Church, and hides them as under a veil.

—<sup>2</sup>. But this love exists in much variety, being worse in the degree in which it verges towards avarice; in this the love of Heaven becomes black; in like manner if it verges towards conceit, and eminence over others from the love of self. But it is otherwise if it verges towards prodigality. It is less hurtful if it regards as the end the splendid things of the world; as palaces, decorations, magnificent clothing, the pomp of servants, horses, and chariots, besides other like things. The quality of any love is predicated from the end which it regards and strives after. This love may be likened to a crystal of a blackish hue which smothers the light, and variegates it only in dusky and fading colours. It is like a mist and a cloud which take away the rays of the sun. It is also like the must of unfermented wine, which tastes sweet, but infests the stomach. Looked at from Heaven, such a man appears like a hunchback, walking with his head down and looking to the earth; and when he elevates it towards Heaven, he retorts the muscles, and quickly relapses into his stooping posture. By the Ancients in the Church such were called Mammons; but the Greeks called them Plutos.

Ad. 985. (On the love of the world.)

D. 1311. In an infant born from such parents . . . the love of the world is as it were yellow; the love of earthly things, as it were green . . .

4198. See OBSESS, here.

4199. Of these there are many genera, and many species; some also who indeed have loved the world, but have not thus acquired in the world the delight of life: these do not immediately want to return into it. There are others who also have loved the world, but are kept in a state of sleep until the delight of the world has been lulled . . . These are simple, and some good.

4225. See POSSESS, here.

E. 576°. The reason 'hyacinthine' also = the love of the world, is that the love of the world corresponds to the love of falsity ; as the love of self, which is signified by 'fire,' corresponds to the love of evil ; for from the love of self is all evil ; and from the love of the world—which is from that origin—is all falsity ; for the spiritual evil which is signified by the love of the world, in its essence is falsity ; as spiritual good in its essence is truth.

653<sup>4</sup>. To spiritual good . . . the opposite is infernal evil, which is the evil of the love of the world.

—<sup>9</sup>. They who are in the love of the world and the derivative evils can also reject the holy things of the Church ; but still not interiorly ; that is, from the confirmation of the heart.

730<sup>3</sup>. From the love of the world, which is the love of riches . . .

740<sup>3</sup>. As the Spiritual Kingdom consists of Angels who are in charity towards the neighbour, so the infernal kingdom which corresponds by oppositeness to the Spiritual Kingdom consists of satans who are in falsities from the love of the world. Hence it is that falsities of every kind flow forth from this Hell. 1143<sup>4</sup>.

950°. For the world cannot be loved to such a degree as can the proprium . . . By the love of the world is especially meant the love of possessing goods in the world from the sole delight of possession and for the sake of opulence ; and not from the delight of uses from them . . . This love also is devoid of a limit . . .

1021<sup>2</sup>. It follows that the Ninth Precept prohibits the concupiscences which flow forth from the love of the world. . . . By 'not to covet the neighbour's house' is meant not to covet his goods, which in general are possessions and wealth, and to appropriate them to self by evil arts. This concupiscence is of the love of the world.

1022<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) the concupiscence of the Ninth Precept is the concupiscence of the love of the world.

D. Love x<sup>2</sup>. The love of the world involves evil uses ad quem . . .

Love to the Lord. Amor in Dominum.

Love of the Lord. Amor Domini.

To love the Lord. Amare Dominum.

Love to God. Amor in Deum.

See CELESTIAL GOOD, CELESTIAL KINGDOM, CELESTIAL LOVE, and LOVE.

A. 33°. Therefore true love is love to the Lord . . . There can be only one true love . . .

61. Those are called celestial things which are of love to the Lord and towards the neighbour.

1013<sup>3</sup>. Love to the Lord makes man one with the Lord ; that is 'a likeness ;' charity also, or love towards the neighbour, but 'an image' . . . This oneness originating from love, the Lord Himself describes, in John : 'I pray that they all may be one . . . ' . . . 'He that hath My precepts, and doeth them, he it is that loveth Me. If anyone shall love Me, he will keep My word, and My Father will love him ; and we will come to him, and make our abode with him.' From which it is evident that it is love which conjoins ; and that the Lord has His abode with him who loves Him ; and also with him who loves the neighbour ; for this is the love of the Lord, Ex. 2034<sup>3</sup>.

—<sup>9</sup>. From these things it may be clearly seen what it is which makes a likeness, and an image, of God ; namely, that it is love to the Lord, and love towards the neighbour . . .

1055. (For) no other covenant is 'eternal' except love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour. This is eternal, because it is from eternity to eternity. Ex.

1121. The Most Ancient Church . . . had perception of all the things of faith, almost like the Angels, with whom they had communication, by reason that their interior man . . . through the medium of internal respiration, was joined with Heaven ; (for) love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour is attended with this ; for thus man is conjoined with the Angels through their veriest life, which consists in such love. They said that they had the law inscribed on them, because they were in love to the Lord and in love towards the neighbour . . . Nor did they doubt that all human laws, as all Divine ones, are founded in love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour . . . And therefore as they had in them from the Lord that which is fundamental, they could not but know all things which are thence. They also believe that all who live in the world at this day who love the Lord and the neighbour, also have the law inscribed on themselves, and are accepted as citizens everywhere on earth, as the same are in the other life.

1153. All the differences of external worship, as also of internal, are circumstanced according to the adoration of the Lord in the worship ; and the adoration is circumstanced according to the love to the Lord and the love towards the neighbour ; for the Lord is present in the love, thus in the worship.

1176. They do not know that love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour are faith itself.

1568<sup>2</sup>. The ends of the loves of self and the world look outwards or downwards ; but the ends of love to the Lord and of love towards the neighbour look inwards or upwards ; from which it may be evident that they disagree so much that they can never be together.

1707<sup>3</sup>. Therefore influx by celestial things exists solely with those who are in love to the Lord and in charity towards the neighbour.

1799<sup>4</sup>. That Churches are so called is from what is doctrinal alone, which would never have been so if love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour had been made the Principal of faith.

1803. Those who are in love to the Lord and in love towards the neighbour. Sig. and Ex.

1824. The Celestial itself is love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour. This Celestial inflows from the Lord, through the internal man into the external.

1844<sup>2</sup>. When yet the Church (is solely) with those who love the Lord, and the neighbour as themselves . . .

2023. By love is meant love to the Lord ; by charity, love towards the neighbour. Love to the Lord can never be separated from love towards the neighbour ; for the Lord's love is towards the universal human race . . . and therefore he who has love to the Lord has the Lord's love, and thus cannot do otherwise than love the neighbour. But they who are in love to the neighbour are not all on that account in love to the Lord; as the upright gentiles, who are in ignorance about the Lord . . . and also others, who are within the Church. For love to the Lord is in a higher degree. They who have love to the Lord are celestial men; whereas they who have love towards the neighbour, or charity, are spiritual. The Most Ancient Church . . . was in love to the Lord; but the Ancient Church . . . was in love towards the neighbour. This distinction between love and charity will be observed in what follows.

[A.] 2048<sup>2</sup>. Those are called celestial who are in love to the Lord . . . 3325<sup>7</sup>.

2069<sup>3</sup>. The celestial Angels are distinguished from the spiritual by love to the Lord . . .

2116<sup>2</sup>. The evils of life of those who have lived in love to the Lord and in charity towards the neighbour, also all remain, but they are tempered with the goods which . . . they have received from the Lord . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. In the Word, by 'faith' nothing else is meant than love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour; thus the derivative life.

—<sup>e</sup>. That Heaven itself consists in love to the Lord and in mutual love. Refs.

2120. By 'the sun' (which will be darkened) nothing else is meant than love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour.

2227<sup>2</sup>. Celestial good is of love to the Lord; spiritual good is of love towards the neighbour. From the former good is the latter; for no one can love the Lord unless he also loves the neighbour. Love towards the neighbour is in love to the Lord; for love to the Lord is from the Lord; thus from Love Itself towards the universal human race. To be in love to the Lord is the same as to be in the Lord; and they who are in the Lord cannot but be in His love, which is towards the human race . . .

2231<sup>2</sup>. Love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour would be as a flame, and all perception and thought would be as the light thence . . .

2243<sup>7</sup>. At this day they do not even know that the Fundamental of faith is love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour.

2268<sup>2</sup>. The Angels as it were dwell in man's truths, and insinuate affections of good from the Lord, when man lives in love to the Lord, and in charity towards the neighbour; for they are delighted to dwell . . . with such men.

2341<sup>2</sup>. 'Mountain'=love to the Lord.

2425<sup>e</sup>. (Thus) he is truly the neighbour who is in love to the Lord, and in charity towards the neighbour.

2508<sup>2</sup>. Angels and men are in the heavenly marriage in proportion as they are in love to the Lord and in charity towards the neighbour, and in proportion as they are in the derivative faith . . .

2571. As 'the Land of Canaan'=the man of the Church, the Church, and the Lord's Kingdom, it also =that which is the essential of them; namely, love to the Lord, and charity towards the neighbour . . .

2572<sup>3</sup>. As the Angels are in love to the Lord and in mutual love, they are also in all truth . . .

2588<sup>3</sup>. It is from the doctrine of the Word that the First and Principal of doctrine is love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. They who are in love to the Lord and in charity towards the neighbour can receive the truths of doctrine, and have faith in the Word . . .

2718<sup>6</sup>. For example: he who loves the neighbour from good, loves the Lord.

—<sup>7</sup>. (The spiritual) can come from obscurity into light, if only they are willing to be in the Affirmative that all good is of love to the Lord, and of charity towards the neighbour; and that love and charity are spiritual conjunction; and that all bliss and happiness are thence . . .

2760, Pref.<sup>2</sup>. That faith itself in the Lord, which exists solely with those who are in love to the Lord and in charity towards the neighbour, has this Power. Sig.

2870<sup>e</sup>. But that which is of love to the Lord, and of love towards the neighbour . . . is freedom itself. 2872.

2881. Nothing would be more more easy to the Lord than to compel man . . . to as it were love Him.

2935<sup>2</sup>. All that which is of love to the Lord and of charity towards the neighbour is good; and all that which asserts and confirms them is truth.

—<sup>e</sup>. They think of love to Him from a certain worldly love.

2982. (All the Lord's Churches) then made one in the fact that they acknowledged love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour as the Principal and as the very essential . . .

3122. By the 'mercy and truth' which are from the Lord, the Most Ancients understood nothing else than the reception of the influx of love to the Lord, and of the derivative charity towards the neighbour . . . Moreover, through charity towards the neighbour, celestial men were introduced into love to the Lord . . .

3147<sup>6</sup>. Unless natural things are purified, that is, unless the things of the love of self and the world are thence removed, internal things, which are of love to the Lord and towards the neighbour, can never inflow. Sig.

3175<sup>2</sup>. The good which man has above the animals is to love God, and to love the neighbour: all human good is thence.

3183. (A child) is then [introduced] into a state of the affection of celestial good, that is, of love towards his parents, which with them is in place of love to the Lord. This state is signified by 'an infant.'

3224. But they who are in love to the Lord and in love towards the neighbour, thus who are in spiritual heat, which is of the light of Heaven, are affected with goods and truths, which extinguish falsities; but still with these there exists a correspondence.

—e. The interior mind is opened solely with those who are in innocence, in love to the Lord, and in charity towards the neighbour.

3235<sup>2</sup>. To the celestial the Lord appears as a Sun, because these are in celestial love; that is, in love to the Lord . . .

3240. The good with the celestial is of love to the Lord; and the truth which is with them is of love towards the neighbour . . .

3263<sup>2</sup>. For there are many among the gentiles who know from rational lumen that there is one God . . . and who live in love to that God, and in love towards the neighbour.

3316<sup>3</sup>. When the word 'bread' is read in the Word, the Angels . . . instead of bread perceive celestial love, and the things which are of celestial love; that is, of love to the Lord . . .

3325<sup>4</sup>. Good is the first-born; that is, the good of love to the Lord and of love towards the neighbour; for no other good than that which is thence is good. Ex.

3427<sup>2</sup>. For the Word in the internal sense treats of no other thing than of love to the Lord, and of love towards the neighbour. Ill.

—4. But the interiors with those who are in love to the Lord are open, inasmuch that the light of truth from the Lord can inflow, affect their minds, and give the apprehension that it is so.

3464<sup>2</sup>. From the words, 'This is My Body,' and 'This is My Blood,' the Angels with the man are in the idea of love to the Lord, and of charity toward the neighbour . . .

3539<sup>4</sup>. A man can apprehend from the understanding, although his will may dissent . . . that the happiest life is from love to the Lord and from love towards the neighbour, because the Divine Itself inflows into it . . . Hence also it can be perceptible before the understanding, but not before the will, that love to the Lord is the life of Heaven; and that mutual love is the soul from this life . . .

3596<sup>2</sup>. 'Bread,' here, = the things which are of love to the Lord . . .

3635. The Celestial Kingdom consists of those who are in love to the Lord . . . Refs.

3653. There are three kinds of men within the Church; namely, those who are in love to the Lord; those who are in charity towards the neighbour; and those who are in the affection of truth. Those who are in the first class . . . are signified by 'Let those who are in Judea flee to the mountains' . . .

3688<sup>4</sup>. As the Lord is present in what is good and pious, (a regenerate man) by affection towards what is good, testifies love to the Lord. 3768<sup>2</sup>.

3691<sup>3</sup>. For the man who is in love to the Lord, and in charity towards the neighbour, is a kind of little Heaven, which corresponds in an image to the three Heavens; and also has an influx of good and truth . . . from the three Heavens . . .

—4. They who are in the very love to the Lord, inasmuch that they have a perception of the love, are in a higher degree of good and truth, and are in the . . . Third Heaven; thus are nearer to the Lord, and are called Celestial Angels . . .

—3. In love to the Lord there is the proximate image of the Lord, which is called 'a likeness;' and therefore they who are in the very love to the Lord are called His likenesses . . .

3804<sup>2</sup>. Such are all angelic forms; and such would man be if he were in love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour from his interior life. Into such forms was man created, because into the likeness and image of God . . .

3815. That in . . . Heaven there are no other relationships than those of love to the Lord and of love towards the neighbour; or, what is the same, than of good, might have been evident to me from the fact that all the Societies . . . are most distinct from each other according to the degrees and differences of love and of the derivative faith . . .

3816. The affection of good, or love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour, has bliss and happiness in it . . .

3887. The Celestial Kingdom is constituted of those who are called celestial; and these are they who have been in love to the Lord, and thence in all wisdom; for above others they are in the Lord; and thence above others are in a state of peace and innocence . . .

3957<sup>8</sup>. The seventh thing which man can know of himself, is that love to God and love towards the neighbour are the things which cause man to be man, distinct from brute animals; and that these things constitute heavenly life, or Heaven; and that the opposite things constitute infernal life, or Hell.

3969<sup>4</sup>. In the Lord's Celestial Kingdom are those who are in love to the Lord, and in the derivative charity. These constitute the Third or Inmost Heaven.

3994. Charity without innocence is not charity; still less is love to the Lord . . .

4060. The state of the Church then as to good; that is, as to charity towards the neighbour and love to the Lord. Sig. and Ex.

—2. 'The sun' (darkened) = that love to the Lord . . . will vanish. 10604<sup>2</sup>.

4104<sup>5</sup>. If a man sets the spiritual kingdom before (the natural kingdom), he then acknowledges love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour as principal and primary; consequently, all things which confirm them . . . Whereas, when he has the natural kingdom as the end . . . he extinguishes the things which are of love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour . . .

4191<sup>e</sup>. That love to the Lord is conjunction with Him, is evident . . .

4197<sup>4</sup>. Celestial good is of love to the Lord . . .

[A.] 4225. All who are in love to the Lord, and in charity towards the neighbour . . . are within the Grand Man.

4280<sup>4</sup>. Hence it is that those who are in genuine conjugal love, are also in . . . love to the Lord, and in . . . charity towards the neighbour.

4286<sup>2</sup>. The Inmost Heaven is celestial; for the Angels there are called celestial; for they are in love to the Lord, and are thence most conjoined with the Lord . . .

4581<sup>4</sup>. The oil (in the meat-offering)=love to the Lord; and the fine flour=charity towards the neighbour.

4723<sup>2</sup>. There are two essentials which constitute the Church, and thence two principal things of doctrine . . . The second is that love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour make the Church, and not faith separated from them.

4735<sup>2</sup>. This (Divine) love, and the reciprocal love of man to the Lord, and also love towards the neighbour, are the things which are signified and represented in the Holy Supper . . .

4776. It is the veriest truth of the Church, that love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour are the primary things (Mark xii. 29-31). Cupidities extinguish this truth; for they who are in the life of cupidities cannot be in the life of love and charity; for they are complete opposites. The life of cupidities is to love self alone . . . hence they extinguish charity with themselves; and they who extinguish charity, also extinguish love to the Lord; for there is no other means of loving the Lord except charity; for the Lord is in charity . . .

4844<sup>12</sup>. 'The cake' which the widow made in the first place=the good of love to the Lord; whom from her small store she loved above herself and her son.

4925<sup>2</sup>. As, in the supreme sense, the Lord is 'the First-born,' and thence love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour . . .

4981. 'The blessing of Jehovah,' in the genuine sense, =love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour; for those who are endowed with these are called 'the blessed of Jehovah;' for they are also endowed with Heaven and eternal salvation.

4997. Good is conjunction, because all good is of love to the Lord and of love towards the neighbour. The good of love to the Lord conjoins him with the Lord, and consequently with all the good which proceeds from the Lord; and the good of love towards the neighbour conjoins him with Heaven and the Societies there; thus he is conjoined with the Lord through this love also; for Heaven properly so called is the Lord; for He is the all in all things there.

5113<sup>3</sup>. When (the man of the Celestial Church) had gained the perception of charity, he was led into the perception of love to the Lord; hence all the truths of faith appeared to him in the Intellectual as in a mirror. Ex.

5120<sup>5</sup>. (The Celestial Church is distinguished from the Spiritual Church by being) in love to the Lord. And the Holy Supper was instituted in order to represent and signify the Lord's love towards the universal human race, and the reciprocal [love] of man towards Him.

5122<sup>2</sup>. Afterwards charity . . . becomes the beginning; and from it new states commence . . . towards interior things, to love to the Lord . . .

5165<sup>3</sup>. If love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour had formed the interiors, there is a splendence therefrom in the face . . .

5236<sup>2</sup>. For celestial and spiritual love—that is, love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour—are not possible except in innocence.

5530<sup>2</sup>. With those who are in the loves of self and of the world such things as favour these loves are in the middle . . . and those which are contrary are cast out of doors, as are those things which are of love to God and of love towards the neighbour.

5608. The Inmost Heaven consists of those who are in innocence; for they are in love to the Lord; and, as the Lord is innocence itself, those who are there, being in love to Him, are in innocence; who, although they are the wisest of all in the Heavens, still appear to others as infants.

—<sup>3</sup>. As end, cause, and effect are distinct from each other, so, in the Spiritual World, are love to the Lord, charity towards the neighbour, and the works of charity. For these three to make a one, or to come forth together, the first must be in the second, and the second in the third . . . Unless interiorly in charity there is love to God, it is not charity . . .

5922<sup>2</sup>. Celestial good is the good of love to the Lord . . . For the Internal of those who are in the Celestial Kingdom is love to the Lord . . .

6014<sup>6</sup>. All celestial goods are of love to the Lord.

6027<sup>2</sup>. For there inflows from the Lord good, which is of love to the Lord and of charity towards the neighbour, through the Internal into the External; and in proportion to the good in the External, in the same proportion it is received there.

6295<sup>2</sup>. With the celestial man there is the good of love to the Lord, and the good of love towards the neighbour. The good of love to the Lord is his Internal, and the good of love towards the neighbour is his External; and therefore with those who are of the Celestial Church, in the Internal of that Church are those who are in love to the Lord, and in the External of that Church are those who are in love towards the neighbour . . .

6323<sup>3</sup>. If man were in the order into which he was created; namely, in love towards the neighbour, and in love to the Lord—for these loves are proper to man—he, above all animals, would be born not only into scientifics, but also into all spiritual truths and celestial goods; and thus into all wisdom and intelligence; for he is able to think about the Lord, and to be conjoined with Him through love; and thus to be elevated to what is Divine and eternal . . . 7750<sup>2</sup>.

6370. For he is safe among all evils, even in the midst of the Hells; for love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour are attended with this; for the reason that they who are in this love are most conjoined with the Lord, and are in the Lord, because in the Divine which proceeds from Him; hence nothing of evil can touch them.

6390. For . . . all freedom is from the affection of love to the Lord and towards the neighbour . . . for the affection of this love inflows from the Lord, who does not command, but leads.

6626. Nay, with the Angel, Spirit, and man, who lives in charity towards the neighbour and in love to the Lord, the least of all the things of thought have relation to a man; because this charity and love are from the Lord; and whatever is from the Lord has relation to a man. Moreover, these are the things which make man.

6821<sup>e</sup>. And he who loves the Lord's Kingdom, loves the Lord; because the Lord is the all in all things of His Kingdom . . .

6824. As the Lord is in the highest (degree), and is to be regarded in each degree, as the End ad Quem; therefore He is above all, and is to be loved above all things.

7178. No one can know what good is as understood in a spiritual sense, unless he knows what is love towards the neighbour and love to God . . .

7233<sup>e</sup>. The Intellectual cannot be illustrated unless it is believed that love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour are the principals and essentials of the Church. He who proceeds from these as acknowledged [principles], provided he himself is in them, sees innumerable truths . . .

7488. (Thus) from love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour come forth all goods; and (therefore) all truths.

7489. (Therefore) in proportion as a man is in the loves of self and of the world, in the same proportion he is not in love towards the neighbour, and still less in love to the Lord; for they are opposites.

7542. The Inmost with the good is love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour . . . It is this Inmost which is here meant (by 'the heart').

7750<sup>e</sup>. That love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour have in them all intelligence and wisdom, may be evident from those who in the world had been in these loves. When these come into Heaven they know and have wisdom in such things as they had never known before; nay, they there think and speak like the rest of the Angels, which . . . are ineffable. The reason is that these loves have in them the faculty of receiving such things.

8269<sup>e</sup>. Good from the Divine is here described by 'to love the Lord' . . .

8455. Peace has in it confidence in the Lord, that He rules all things, and provides all things, and that He leads to a good end. When man is in the faith of these things, he is in peace; for he then fears nothing, and no solicitude about future things renders him unquiet. Man comes into this state in proportion as he comes into love to the Lord.

8480<sup>e</sup>. Good from the Lord is with those who love the Lord above all things and the neighbour as themselves; but good from man is with those who love themselves above all things . . .

8549. Spiritual life is to love God above all things, and to love the neighbour as one's self; and this according to the precepts of faith which the Lord has taught in the Word.

8639. He who does not know that the Lord is the Saviour of the human race, cannot have faith in Him, adore Him, love Him; and thus do what is good for His sake.

8665<sup>a</sup>. 'Peace' . . . = the state of the Inmost Heaven, where are those who are in love to the Lord, and in the derivative innocence . . .

8745. At last both (the internal and the external man) have as the end to love the neighbour and to love the Lord; and not, as before, to love self and the world.

8762. They who at the same time believe that such things are to be performed; but that still the essential of worship is the life of faith—that is, charity towards the neighbour and love to the Lord—are of the Internal Church . . .

8773. Primary truths are . . . also that love to God and love towards the neighbour are the precepts upon which all other things depend; and that this love is impossible except by means of faith.

8827. In the Third Heaven . . . they are under the immediate view of the Lord, because those who are there are in love to the Lord, and are thence in peace and in innocence above all others.

8857. The case is similar with love to the Lord. When this love is dominant, it is present in each thing of the man's life . . . This is meant by to have God constantly before the eyes; and by to love Him above all things, with the whole soul, and with the whole heart.

8868<sup>e</sup>. The truths which are alive are truths of faith from love to the Lord and from charity towards the neighbour . . .

888c. For they who love the Lord do not love Him from themselves, but from the Lord. For all good inflows from Him, and those love who desist from evil; for evil stands in the way, and rejects the influx of good from the Lord.

8891<sup>a</sup>. By the eating from the tree of knowledge was meant the fall of that Church from good to truth; consequently from love to the Lord and towards the neighbour to faith without these; and this through ratiocination from the intellectual proprium . . .

8897. 'Honour thy father and thy mother' = love for . . . the Lord and for His Kingdom.

8902<sup>a</sup>. Love to the Lord not being able to come forth with man. Sig.

8928<sup>a</sup>. For he who is in light never doubts, still less denies, that love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour are the essentials of the Church, and that upon them are founded all the truths which are of the Word, consequently which are of faith.

8941<sup>a</sup>. Whereas the truths which are from the Word

... have in them love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour; thus all goods in the complex.

[A.] 8979. For in the spiritual sense nothing else is called good except that which is of love to the Lord and of love towards the neighbour . . .

8988<sup>3</sup>. In Heaven good is the esse itself, and truth is the existere thence; or, what is the same, love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour are the esse itself of Heaven and the Church; and faith is the existere thence.

9032. It is a genuine truth of the doctrine of the Church that charity towards the neighbour and love to the Lord make the Church with man; and that these loves are insinuated by the Lord through faith; that is, through the truths of faith which are from the Word.

9141<sup>3</sup>. The love of good—that is, love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour—make the fire of life with a good man and with an Angel of Heaven . . .

9207<sup>4</sup>. For those who love the Lord, and also themselves in an equal degree, are those who are called 'lukewarm . . .'

9210<sup>3</sup>. For they who do what is good for the sake of the neighbour and the Lord, love the Lord above all things, and the neighbour as themselves . . .

9241. With the trust and confidence which are called faith itself, the case is this . . . they who are in charity towards the neighbour and in love to the Lord can have such faith; for their heart is towards the Lord. III.

9245<sup>e</sup>. They who 'do the Lord's words' are they who love the neighbour and who love the Lord; for he who loves, does. III.

9262. 'Innocent' is predicated of the good of love to the Lord . . . and the good of love to the Lord is interior good. Sig. . . Because they are in innocence who love the Lord.

9276<sup>6</sup>. The heart of the Grand Man—that is, of Heaven and the Church—is constituted of those who are in love to the Lord and in love towards the neighbour; thus, abstractedly from persons, of love to the Lord and of the love of the neighbour . . .

9341<sup>4</sup>. That then the truths of faith are seen and revealed to those who are in love to the Lord. Sig.

9378. And all those love the Lord, consequently are conjoined with Him through love, who are in the good of life from the truths of faith; because the good from these truths is from the Lord; nay, is the Lord. III.

9613<sup>3</sup>. The conjunction of the angelic Societies into one Heaven has relation to these laws . . . 5. That the universal bond is the Lord; thus love from Him, and the derivative love to Him.

9705. In a word, in proportion as a man is in love to the Lord and in love towards the neighbour, in the same proportion he is in the internal man, and thinks and wills from it, and also speaks from it and acts from it . . .

9800. They who are in love and faith to the Lord, and in charity towards the neighbour, are in the understanding of truth and in the will of good; for with them there is a reception of the good and truth which are from the Lord.

9863. For the good which inflows with a man, Spirit, or Angel, appears as his. Hence love to the Lord is love from the Lord.

10038<sup>2</sup>. There are two fires of life with man; one is of the love of self, the other is love to God. They who are in the love of self cannot be in love to God, because they are opposites. Ex.

10131<sup>2</sup>. For without the good of innocence there is no love to the Lord, nor charity towards the neighbour . . .

10187<sup>e</sup>. By good is meant charity towards the neighbour, and love to the Lord; for all goods are thence.

10205. That [there is to be] no worship from any other love than the love of the Lord. Sig. and Ex. . . The case is this: acknowledgment, faith, and love to the Lord, are the principal things of all the worship within the Church; for acknowledgment, faith, and love conjoin; acknowledgment and faith conjoin the Intellectual therein; and love the Voluntary; and these two make the whole man . . . It is otherwise with those who are outside the Church . . .

10284<sup>2</sup>. Whereas the love which is with a man from the Lord is love towards the neighbour and love to God . . . and love towards the neighbour and love to the Lord reign in Heaven, and are Heaven . . .

10551<sup>2</sup>. Every one is mistaken who believes himself to be in illustration if he does not love to know truth for the sake of truth, and for the sake of the good of life . . . because to live according to the Divine truths which are from the Word is to love the Lord; and from the Lord, when He is loved, is all illustration.

10559<sup>2</sup>. This do all who are in externals without an internal; for if these venerate and adore and as it were love God, it is not for His sake, but for the sake of themselves . . . 10602<sup>2</sup>.

10578<sup>2</sup>. Whereas they who are in externals not separated from what is internal, can all see the interior things of the Word, of the Church, and of worship . . . Hence it follows that those who are in love to the Lord, and also those who are in charity towards the neighbour, see them ; for love to the Lord and charity towards the neighbour open the internal man, and when this is opened the man as to his interiors is in Heaven among the Angels where the Lord is.

—<sup>3</sup>. It shall here be told in a few words what love to the Lord is, or what it is to love the Lord. He who believes that he loves the Lord, and does not live according to His precepts, is very much mistaken ; for to live according to them is to love the Lord. These precepts are truths which are from the Lord, thus in which is the Lord ; and therefore in proportion as these are loved—that is, in proportion as one lives according to them from love—in the same proportion the Lord is loved. The reason is that the Lord loves man, and from love wills that he be happy to eternity ; and man cannot become happy except through a life according to His precepts ; for through them man is regenerated, and becomes spiritual, and thus can be elevated into Heaven. But to love the Lord without a life according to His precepts, is not to love Him ; for then there is not anything with the man into which the Lord is inflowing, and elevating him to Himself . . . From these things it may be evident what it is to love the Lord . . . III.

10596. The life of Heaven is in those who have loved God above all things, and the neighbour as themselves. These are they who have faith . . .

10606. For in the Inmost Heaven there reigns celestial love, which is love to the Lord from the Lord . . .

10645<sup>2</sup>. Many suppose . . . that they worship the Lord through love when they love Him ; but by . . . merely loving, the Lord is not worshipped ; but by living according to His precepts ; because these alone are they who . . . love the Lord. The rest say . . . that they love Him, and still do not love Him. Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. Hence it is evident that . . . to love the Lord is to imbue the Voluntary with the goods of love ; and that this cannot be done, except by learning truths from the Word, by willing them, and by doing them . . .

10683<sup>4</sup>. They who love to do truth for the sake of truth, love the Lord ; because truth is from the Lord ; and the Lord causes it to become good by the willing and doing of it. Ex. and III. —<sup>6</sup>, Ref.

10694<sup>2</sup>. But they who are in the externals and at the same time in the internals of the Church, of worship, and of the Word, are in love towards the neighbour, and in love to the Lord ; and are thence in the light of Heaven. (Continued under LOVE OF SELF.)

10721. From these things it may be evident what makes Heaven ; namely, that it is love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour ; and also faith ; but the latter in proportion to the life it has from those loves.

10761. For the essentials of the Church are love and faith in the Lord from the Lord.

10787. We spoke to them about the Lord, about love to Him, about love towards the neighbour . . . that to love the Lord is to love the precepts which are from Him, which is to live according to them from love . . .

10814<sup>2</sup>. For in proportion as man does not love and worship the Lord, in the same proportion he loves and worships himself ; and in the same proportion also he loves the world above Heaven.

10829. To love the Lord is to live according to His precepts. That this is to love the Lord, He Himself teaches in John : ' If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments. He who hath My precepts, and doeth them, he it is who loveth Me. If anyone will love Me, he must keep My word ; but he who doth not love Me, keepeth not My words' (xiv. 15, 21, 23, 24).

H. 13. That the Divine of the Lord in Heaven is love to Him and charity towards the neighbour. Chapter.

15. There are two distinct loves in Heaven : love to the Lord, and love towards the neighbour. In the Inmost or Third Heaven there is love to the Lord ; and in the Second or Middle Heaven there is love towards the neighbour. Each proceeds from the Lord ; and each makes Heaven. How these two loves are distinguished from each other, and how they are conjoined with each other, is evident in Heaven in manifest light ; but not in the world except obscurely. In Heaven, by to love the Lord is not meant to love Him as to His person ; but to love the good which is from Him ; and to love good is to will and do good from love. And by to love the neighbour is not meant to love one's companion as to his person ; but to love the truth which is from the Word ; and to love truth is to will and do truth. Hence it is evident that these two loves are distinguished from each other as are good and truth ; and that they conjoin themselves with each other as good does with truth.

16. I have sometimes spoken on this subject with the Angels ; who said that they wonder that the men of the Church do not know that to love the Lord and to love the neighbour is to love good and truth, and, from willing, to do them ; when yet they might know that everyone testifies love by willing and doing the things which another wills ; and that thus he is loved in turn, and is conjoined with him ; and not by loving him and still not doing his will, which in itself is not to love ; and also that they might know that the good which proceeds from the Lord is the likeness of Him, because He Himself is in it ; and that those become likenesses of Him, and are conjoined with Him, who make good and truth to be of their life, by willing and doing them. III.

17<sup>2</sup>. In the other life . . . those who are in love to the Lord and in love towards the neighbour turn themselves constantly to the Lord . . .

19. That love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour comprehend in themselves all Divine truths, may be evident from the things which the Lord Himself has said about these two loves : ' Thou shalt love thy God from thy whole heart and from thy whole soul ; this is the greatest and the first precept. The second, which is like it, is, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. On these two precepts hang the Law and the Prophets' (Matt. xxii. 37-40). ' The Law and the Prophets' are the whole Word ; thus all truth Divine.

[H.] 64<sup>2</sup>. To perform use is to will well to others for the sake of the common good ; and not to perform use is to will well to others not for the sake of the common good, but for the sake of self. The latter are they who love themselves above all things ; but the former are they who love the Lord above all things. Hence it is that the former who are in Heaven act as a one ; but this not from themselves, but from the Lord ; for they regard Him as the Only One a Quo ; and His Kingdom as the common [good] which we are to consult. III.

72<sup>2</sup>. In the Heavens, the goods of all are from one love ; thus from one origin. The one love which is the origin of all the goods there is love to the Lord from the Lord. Hence it is that the whole Heaven is His likeness in general ; each Society in a less general ; and each Angel in particular.

112<sup>2</sup>. To love the Lord and the neighbour is, in general, to perform uses.

225°. (The Celestial Angels) say that to live according to truths is to love the Lord.

271. The reason the Angels of the Third Heaven are such (as to wisdom), is that they are in love to the Lord ; and this love opens the interiors of the mind to the third degree ; and is the receptacle of all things of wisdom.

—<sup>e</sup>. Love to the Lord in this Heaven is to will and to do Divine truth ; for Divine truth is the Lord in Heaven.

278. Those who are in a state of innocence . . . love all that is good, and are delighted with all that is true ; because they know and perceive that to love good—thus to will and to do it—is to love the Lord ; and that to love truth is to love the neighbour.

350°. To be loved by the Lord is also to love the Lord ; for love is reciprocal ; for to him who is loved the Lord gives that he should love.

356. App.<sup>4</sup>. That knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom are the sons of love to God and of love towards the neighbour. Refs.

390<sup>2</sup>. Wisdom is to love use ; thus the good of one's fellow-citizen, of the society, of our Country, and of the Church. In this also consists love to the Lord ; because all the good which is the good of use is from the Lord ; and is also love towards the neighbour ; because the neighbour is the good which is to be loved in (them).

396. But the delights of the soul or spirit all flow forth from love to the Lord and from love towards the neighbour ; thence too are the affections of good and truth, and interior happinesses. These loves together with their delights inflow from the Lord and from Heaven by an internal way . . . and affect the interiors . . . In proportion, therefore, as these two loves of Heaven are received and affect us, the interiors are opened . . .

399. In the Heavens there is a communication of all with each and of each with all. Such a communication flows forth from the two loves of Heaven, which are . . . love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour. These loves are communicative of their delights. The reason love to the Lord is such, is that the Lord's love is the love of the communication of all things of His own to all ; for He wills the happiness of all. There is a like love in each of those who love Him, because the Lord is in them . . .

401. The man who is in the love of self and the world, so long as he lives in the body, feels delight from them . . . But the man who is in love to God, and in love towards the neighbour, so long as he lives in the body, does not manifestly feel delight from them, and from the good affections which are from them ; but only a bliss almost imperceptible, because it is stored away in his interiors, and is covered over by the exteriors which are of the body, and is dulled by the cares of the world. But after death the states are completely changed . . . the obscure delight, and almost imperceptible bliss, which had been with those in the world who had been in love to God and in love towards the neighbour, is then turned into the delight of Heaven, which becomes perceptible and sensible in every way . . .

481. They who love goodness, sincerity, and justice for their own sake, and do and live them, also love the Lord above all things, because they are from Him ; and also love the neighbour, because these are the neighbour who is to be loved.

—(q). That to love the Lord is to love that which is from Him ; because in everything which is from Him is Himself. Refs.

554<sup>2</sup>. I have been told from Heaven . . . that love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour reign in the Heavens, and also make the Heavens . . .

557. Celestial love is to love uses for the sake of uses . . . for this is to love God and to love the neighbour ; because all uses . . . are from God ; and also are the neighbour who is to be loved . . .

596<sup>2</sup>. All who are in the Celestial Kingdom are in love to the Lord ; and all who are in the Hells opposite to this Kingdom are in the love of self . . . Hence it has been evident that love to the Lord, and the love of self, are opposites . . .

N. 59. The two loves from which are all goods and truths are love to the Lord, and love towards the neighbour . . .

60. The two loves from which are all goods and truths, and which . . . are love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour, make Heaven with man, and therefore they also reign in Heaven ; and, as they make Heaven with man, they also make the Church with him. 78.

61. These two loves . . . open and form the internal spiritual man, because they reside there . . .

90°. Hence it is evident that when good is loved, the Lord is loved ; for the Lord is He from whom is good, who is in good, and who is good itself.

96°. From these things it may now be evident in what way love to the Lord conjoins itself with love towards the neighbour.

106°. That within charity there is love to the Lord, thus the Lord, although the man is not aware of it. Refs.

231. Love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour make Heaven ; and so also does faith ; but the latter in proportion as it has life from these loves.

Life 38. In proportion as anyone is in good, and from good loves truths, in the same proportion he loves the Lord; because the Lord is good itself and truth itself . . . Ill.

22. Love to the Lord is properly love; and love towards the neighbour is charity. There is no love to the Lord with man except in charity: in the latter the Lord conjoins Himself with man.

W. 122. As all the quarters in the Spiritual World are determined from the east . . . it is evident that the Lord, and love to Him, are the source from which all things are; and that in proportion as anyone is not in this love, in the same proportion he is remote from Him; and dwells either in the west, or in the south, or in the north, at distances there according to the reception of the love.

125. Those Angels who are in love to the Lord from the Lord see Him directly; therefore they are in the east and the west . . .

141<sup>o</sup>. There are two loves which are the heads of all the rest, or to which all other loves have relation. The love which is the head, or that to which all heavenly loves have relation, is love to the Lord . . .

142. See LOVE OF DOMINATING, here.

237<sup>o</sup>. The third degree, which is called celestial, is opened by the celestial love of use, which love is love to the Lord; and love to the Lord is nothing else than to commit to life the precepts of the Word; which, in sum, are to shun evils because they are infernal and diabolical, and to do goods because they are heavenly and Divine. These three degrees are thus opened with man successively.

275<sup>o</sup>. Love to the Lord, and the derivative love towards the neighbour, make the inmost degree in the Heavens . . . Wisdom and intelligence from their loves make the middle degree in the Heavens . . .

426. That spiritual and celestial love is love towards the neighbour and love to the Lord . . . Gen.art.

— By love to the Lord is meant the love of doing uses . . .

P. 94. The conjunction of the Lord with man, and the reciprocal conjunction of man with the Lord, is effected by loving the neighbour as one's self, and loving the Lord above all things.

—<sup>2</sup>. To love the Lord above all things is nothing else than not to do evil to the Word, because in the Word is the Lord; and not to do evil to the holy things of the Church, because in the holy things of the Church is the Lord; and not to do evil to the soul of anyone, because the soul of everyone is in the hand of the Lord. They who shun these evils as enormous sins love the Lord above all things; but no others can do this than those who love the neighbour as themselves; for they are conjoined.

199<sup>o</sup>. Whereas if man attributes all things to the Lord, his soul becomes the love of the Lord . . .

R. 353. Mutual love proximately descends from love to the Lord, because the Lord's love is to do uses to the community, and to every society in general; and He effects them by means of men who are in love to Him.

556<sup>o</sup>. By to love the Lord is meant to love to do His precepts. Ill. The reason is that He Himself is His own precepts; for they are from Him; consequently He Himself is in them; thus in the man on whose life they have been inscribed; and they are inscribed on a man by his willing and doing them.

691. That love to the Lord would torment them, because they were in the concupiscences of evils from the delight of their love. Sig. and Ex.

903<sup>o</sup>. These things have been said that it may be known that all things of the doctrine of the New Jerusalem have relation to love to the Lord and to love towards the neighbour. Love to the Lord is to have faith in the Lord and to do His precepts; and to do His precepts is love towards the neighbour, because to do His precepts is to do uses to the neighbour. Ill.

915. For (those who approach the Lord immediately, and live according to the precepts of the decalogue by shunning evils as sins), and no others, are in the doctrine of love to God and of love towards the neighbour; which two things are the foundations of religion. Sig. and Ex.

M. 134<sup>o</sup>. Man is born into no love in order that he may come into all . . . and into love to the Lord by means of love towards the neighbour . . .

T. 160<sup>o</sup>. Because at the side towards the east there are Societies which are in love to God and towards the neighbour . . .

287. It is also known that all things of doctrine and of life have relation to love to God, and to love towards the neighbour . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Now as love to God, and love towards the neighbour, are all things of the Word; and the decalogue in its first table contains in a summary all things of love to God, and in the second table all things of love towards the neighbour, it follows that it contains all things which are of doctrine and of life.

306. In the spiritual sense, by 'to honour the father and mother' is meant to reverence and love God and the Church. Ex.

329. That the ten precepts of the decalogue contain all things which are of love to God, and all things which are of love towards the neighbour. Gen.art.

394. That there are three universal loves: the love of Heaven, the love of the world, and the love of self. Gen.art. . . By the love of Heaven is meant love to the Lord, and also love towards the neighbour; and as both of them regard use as the end, it may be called the love of uses. (Continued under LOVE.)

414<sup>o</sup>. It is to be known that those who love their Country . . . after death love the Lord's Kingdom . . . and they who love the Lord's Kingdom, love the Lord, because the Lord is the all in all things of His Kingdom.

416. They who love the Lord's Kingdom (which means the Communion of Saints and also Heaven) love the Lord above all things, consequently are in love to God above all others; for the Church in the Heavens and on earth is the Body of the Lord; for they are in the Lord, and the Lord is in them.

[T. 416]<sup>2</sup>. For they who love the Lord's Kingdom not only love the Lord above all things, but also love the neighbour as themselves; for love to the Lord is the universal love, and hence it is in each and all things of spiritual life, and is also in each and all things of natural life; for this love resides in the highest things with man; and the highest things inflow into the lower ones . . . Ill.

419. The man who loves good because it is good, and truth because it is truth, loves the neighbour eminently, because he loves the Lord, who is good itself and truth itself . . .

456. On the conjunction of love to God and of love towards the neighbour. Gen.art.

580<sup>2</sup>. Into the Highest Heaven come those who by regeneration receive love to the Lord . . .

797<sup>5</sup>. Then (Melancthon's) eyes were opened, and he saw that the whole of the Word was full of love to God and of love towards the neighbour . . .

D. 4792. (The Moravians) were told . . . that to love the Lord is most dangerous if they are not in the good of life according to the precepts of faith; because the Lord is the Holy itself . . .

5152. It is said that those who are in the Heavens are in love to the Lord and in charity towards the neighbour; but they who do not know in what way they are in love and charity may believe that it is merely to love the Lord and to love the neighbour; but it is not so. But love to the Lord consists in the fact that they love to do the things which the Lord has commanded; thus the Divine truths which are in the Word, and to love them. In this consists their love to the Lord. And love towards the neighbour, with them, consists in the fact that they love to do those things which the doctrine of their Church dictates; thus to do them from faith. This, with them, is to love the neighbour.

5988<sup>2</sup>. As (the Moravians) said that they had loved the Lord, because He has been received by God the Father as a Son on account of the passion of the cross, they were told that such love does not at all conjoin them, except with some simple ones in the Ultimate Heaven . . .

D. Min. 4593. They who have love towards the neighbour do not always have love to the Lord; as the spiritual; but they have reverence, and estimation; which are confirmed by means of the truths of faith.

4635. If man were devoid of hereditary evil, he would be born into Divine order itself; namely, into love to the Lord, and into love towards the neighbour . . .

E. 148. Those are in interior life who are in love to the Lord; and no others are in love to the Lord than those who acknowledge the Divine in His Human.

154. There are two loves which make Heaven or the Church: love to the Lord, and love towards the neighbour or charity. Love to the Lord is what is called celestial love; and love towards the neighbour, or charity, is what is called spiritual love . . .

218. They who are in spiritual love, or in charity and the derivative faith, are in intelligence; but they who are in celestial love, or in love to the Lord and the derivative perception of truth, are in wisdom.

409<sup>7</sup>. 'Servants'=those who want to love the Lord and themselves equally; and Heaven and the world equally . . . when yet there must be a predominance of one love over the other; and where there is a predominance, that which opposes itself is hated and despised. For the love of self and of the world is opposite to love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour. Hence it is that they who are in celestial love would rather die, and be deprived of honours and riches in the world, than be drawn away by them from the Lord and from Heaven . . .

433. 'Of the tribe of Judah were sealed twelve thousand'=love to the Lord, and that all who are therein are in Heaven and come into Heaven. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Besides, no one is admitted into Heaven except by the Lord; for the universal Heaven is His; and therefore no one is there or comes thither except him who acknowledges Him and loves Him. To love Him is not to love Him as to His person; but to live according to His precepts. Ill.

— The reason those love the Lord who do and keep His precepts and words, is that His 'precepts,' and 'words'=Divine truths; and all Divine truth proceeds from Him; and that which proceeds from Him is Himself; and therefore when a man is in this as to life, then the Lord is in him, and he is in the Lord; whence it is said: 'Ye in Me, and I in you;' and that He 'will come and make His abode with them.' This, therefore, is to love Him. Moreover, to love is to be conjoined; for love is spiritual conjunction; and conjunction is effected through the reception of the Divine truth in doctrine and in life.

—<sup>3</sup>. As 'Judah,' in the supreme sense,=the Lord as to celestial love; and, in the internal sense, the Celestial Kingdom, he also=love to the Lord; for this love is the reciprocal love with man; and reigns in the Lord's Celestial Kingdom. —<sup>4</sup>, Ill.

445<sup>2</sup>. They who are in the goods of life from the spiritual affection of truth and good are in charity; and they who are in the goods of life from the celestial affection are in love to the Lord . . .

707. The Church with those who are in love to the Lord, and thence in love towards the neighbour. Sig.

—<sup>2</sup>. For love to the Lord is to love and will the things which are the Lord's; thus the things which the Lord has commanded in the Word . . .

758<sup>2</sup>. Whereas all who are in the Heavens are in loves to the Lord and towards the neighbour . . . The delights of loves to the Lord and towards the neighbour are the delights of charity of various kinds . . .

780<sup>6</sup>. 'A child'=innocence, and at the same time love to the Lord; for love to the Lord makes one with innocence . . .

797<sup>4</sup>. (Such) hold cheap love to God, and love towards the neighbour . . .

798<sup>4</sup>. There are two universal loves, which are fundamental of all; namely, love to the Lord, and love towards the neighbour, which is called charity. In these are all who do goods from the Word ; for all good is of love.

799<sup>a</sup>. 'To remain in the house of Jehovah all the days of our life'=. . . to remain in the good of love to the Lord.

826<sup>2</sup>. I will show what love to the Lord is. In the Third Heaven they are all in love to the Lord from the Lord ; and they are such as possess truths inscribed on their life, and not on the memory . . . For all truths with them are inscribed on their affections, which derive their essence from celestial love, which is love to the Lord . . . And as these Angels are in love to the Lord from the Lord, their interior life consists of mere affections of good and truth from that love ; whence it is that they do not speak truths, but do truths ; thus they do good works ; for the affections of good and truth which are from this love cannot do otherwise than come forth into act ; and when they come forth they are called uses, and are meant by good works. They also perceive in themselves the quality of the uses or works, from the affection from which they are ; and also their differences, from the conjunction of many affections ; thus they do all things with interior wisdom. And as they do not think truths, and thence speak them ; but only do them ; and this comes from their love to the Lord, and consequently from affections alone, of which their life consists, it is evident that love to the Lord consists in doing truths from the affection of them, and that their deeds are good works ; consequently, that to love the Lord is to do. III.

—<sup>e</sup>. From these things it is evident how ample is the doctrine of love to the Lord ; for it is the doctrine of all the affections which are of love ; and each affection has truths inscribed on itself, according to the quality of its perfection ; and it produces them in act with infinite variety ; and these affections do not come into the understanding in the shape of ideas ; but to the interior sensitive perception, in the shape of the delights of the will, which cannot be described by words. Those become Angels of the Third Heaven who draw the laws of life from the Word, and live according to them ; and who worship the Lord.

828<sup>2</sup>. And love to the Lord from the Lord is innocence. Hence by 'infants,' and 'children,' in the Word, is signified innocence, and also love to the Lord.

831<sup>2</sup>. Spiritual love is the love of truth ; and, in the supreme sense, is the love of the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord ; thus is also love to the Lord, but in a lower degree than that in which are the Celestial Angels. The latter are in love to the Lord from the reception of the Divine good from Him ; but the former are in love to the Lord from the reception of Divine truth from Him . . .

863. They who love truths abstractedly from such things (as honours and gain) love the Lord ; for the Lord with man is in the truths which are from good . . .

973<sup>2</sup>. For to love the Lord is not to love His person ; but to love the things which proceed from the Lord ; for these are the Lord with man . . .

981. By love to the Lord is signified the love or affection of doing His commandments ; thus the love of keeping the precepts of the decalogue ; for in proportion as a man, from love or affection, keeps and does them, in the same proportion he loves the Lord. The reason is that these are the Lord with man.

1020<sup>2</sup>. When a man abstains from [acts of] false witness as understood in a moral and spiritual sense, and shuns and is averse to them as sins, there then inflows from the Lord through Heaven the love of Truth and the love of justice ; and when a man thence loves Truth and loves justice, he then loves the Lord ; for the Lord is Truth itself, and justice itself . . .

1026<sup>4</sup>. Upon one of the tables were written the Precepts of love to the Lord ; and upon the other those of love towards the neighbour. The first three Precepts are of love to the Lord ; and the last six are of love towards the neighbour ; and the Fourth Precept—which is 'Honour thy father and thy mother'—is an intermediate Precept ; for by 'the father' there is meant the Father in the Heavens ; and by 'the mother' is meant the Church, which is the neighbour.

1099<sup>3</sup>. By love is meant love to the Lord ; and by to love the Lord is not meant to love the Lord as a Person. By this love alone man is not conjoined with Heaven ; but by the love of Divine good and Divine truth, which are the Lord in Heaven and in the Church ; and these two are not loved by knowing them, thinking them, understanding them, and speaking them ; but by willing and doing them for the reason that they have been commanded by the Lord, and consequently because they are uses. Ex.

1143. Truths and goods from a celestial origin are the truths and goods with those who are in love to the Lord, which are called celestial . . .

— (The Babylonians) say that the Lord is loved, because He has given this Power to man . . . But love to the Lord is impossible with them ; for the love of dominating over Heaven and the Church is quite contrary . . .

1144<sup>2</sup>. See LOVE OF SELF, here.

D. Love x. Love to the Lord involves uses a quo ; and love towards the neighbour involves uses ad quem. xiii<sup>2</sup>, Ex.

xiii. That in proportion as a man is in the love of uses, in the same proportion he is in the Lord's love, and in the same proportion he loves Him, and loves the neighbour, and is a man. Gen.art.

— The reason why by to love the Lord is meant to do uses from Him and for His sake, is that all the good uses which man does are from the Lord . . . and to love Him is to do them ; for that which a man loves he does. No one can love the Lord in any other way ; for the uses which are goods are from the Lord . . . nay, are the Lord Himself with man. These are the things which the Lord can love. He cannot be conjoined in love with any man except through His own Divine things, consequently He cannot in any other way give to man to love Him ; for man cannot love the Lord from himself : the Lord Himself draws him, and conjoins him with Himself ; and therefore to love the Lord as a Person, and not use, is to love Him from self, which is not to love. He who does uses . . . from the Lord, does them for His sake. These things may be illustrated by the celestial love in which are the Angels of the Third Heaven. These Angels are in love to the Lord above the Angels in all the other Heavens. Both the latter and the former know that to love the Lord is nothing else than to do the goods which are uses ; saying that uses are the Lord with them. By uses they mean the uses and goods of ministry, of administration, of function, with both priests and magistrates, and with business men and workmen. The goods which do not flow from their offices they do not call uses ; but alms, benefits, and things gratuitous.

[D.Love] xvii<sup>e</sup>. These (who shun evils as sins), and no others, are they to whom the Lord can give to love Him above all things, and the neighbour as themselves.

xix<sup>e</sup>. Thus and no otherwise (that is, by man's doing and acting), the Lord is loved, and the neighbour is loved.

D. Wis. iv. Without this appearance there is no Reciprocal, so that man should love the Lord as the Lord loves him . . . For the Lord wills to be loved ; and therefore He gives to man to will it.

xi. That love to the Lord from the Lord comes forth in charity . . . Gen.art.

— They who think about love to the Lord and about charity towards the neighbour only naturally, and not at the same time spiritually, think no otherwise, because they can think no otherwise, than that the Lord is to be loved as to His person, and also the neighbour as to his person ; whereas they who think both naturally and spiritually, perceive . . . that both an evil and a good man can love the Lord as to His person ; and in like manner the neighbour ; and that if an evil man loves, he cannot be loved back ; but that if a good man loves, he can. Hence a spiritual natural man concludes that to love the Lord is to love that which is from Him, which in itself is the Divine in which the Lord is ; and that this is to do good to the neighbour ; and that thus and no otherwise can he be loved by the Lord, and be conjoined with Him through love. But a natural man cannot think spiritually about this matter, unless these things are delivered distinctly before him.

3. That love to the Lord comes forth in charity, because [it comes forth] in use. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is evident . . . that the conjunction of love to the Lord with charity towards the neighbour is in use . . . For man cannot love the Lord from himself ; nor can he from himself do uses ; but the Lord loves him, and reciprocates His own love in him, and also causes that it appears to him as if he loves the Lord from himself. This, therefore, is the love of the Lord from the Lord.

7. That the uses which are done by a man who does not fight against evils . . . are against love to the Lord, and against love towards the neighbour. Ex.

De Conj. 7. That conjugal love is love to the Lord. —All who are in love truly conjugal are in love to the Lord ; for the reason that it descends from the marriage of the Lord with the Church. Hence it is that they who are in the Third Heaven—who are all in love to the Lord—are in love truly conjugal.

Love towards the neighbour. Amor erga proximum.

Love of the neighbour. Amor proximi.
To love the neighbour. Amare proximum.

See CHARITY ; and under LOVE TO THE LORD, NEIGHBOUR, and SPIRITUAL.

A. 548. If they want to be like the Angels, they ought to love the neighbour more than themselves. . . They wondered that there is such a love in Heaven, or that it is possible for anyone to love the neighbour more than himself ; when yet they had heard that they should love the neighbour as themselves. But they were informed that all goods increase indefinitely in the other life ; and that there is such a life in the body that they cannot advance beyond loving the neighbour as themselves, because they are in corporeal things ; but that when these have been removed, the love becomes more pure, and at last angelic ; which is to love the neighbour more than self. That such a love is possible, might have been evident from the conjugal love of some, in that they have preferred death to the injury of their consort ; from the love of parents towards their children, in that a mother would rather suffer hunger than see her infant hungering, even in the case of birds and animals ; and also from sincere friendship, in that people undergo dangers for their friends ; and even from civil and simulated friendship, which wants to emulate sincere friendship, in that they prefer to offer [the best things] to those to whom they will well . . . ; and finally from the nature of love, which is such, that it is its joy to be of service to others, not for the sake of self, but for their sake. But these things could not be apprehended by those who loved themselves above others, and who in the life of the body had been greedy for gain ; and least of all by misers. 1392. H.406. D.4104.

904<sup>2</sup>. The presence of the Lord is predicated according to the state of love towards the neighbour, and of faith, in which the man is. The Lord is present in love towards the neighbour, because He is present in all good . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The presence of the Lord with a man exists for the first time when he loves the neighbour . . .

1013<sup>2</sup>. 'An image' = spiritual love ; that is, love towards the neighbour, or charity.

1141<sup>e</sup>. Those called 'sons of Shem' . . . worshipped the Lord, and loved the neighbour.

2023. By charity is meant love towards the neighbour.

—<sup>2</sup>. They who have love towards the neighbour or charity, are spiritual men . . . The Ancient Church . . . was in love towards the neighbour or charity. 2048<sup>2</sup>.

2048<sup>2</sup>. Those are called spiritual who are in love towards the neighbour, and thus in the truth of faith. 2069<sup>3</sup>.

2088<sup>2</sup>. Love towards the neighbour or charity was implanted through truth . . .

2196<sup>9</sup>. From appearances a man supposes that no one can love the neighbour more than himself.

2228<sup>3</sup>. Heavenly life is from all those ends, thoughts, and works which are of love towards the neighbour.

2253<sup>6</sup>. Hence it is evident that in proportion as anyone loves the neighbour, in the same proportion he has life from the Lord.

2715<sup>2</sup>. The celestial love the neighbour more than themselves.

2718<sup>5</sup>. The neighbour is to be loved from the good which is with him. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. He who loves the neighbour from good, loves the Lord. Ex.

3240. The truth with the celestial is of love towards the neighbour.

3316<sup>3</sup>. Instead of wine, the Angels have the idea of spiritual love . . . that is, of love towards the neighbour.

4221<sup>6</sup>. Hence it was evident of what quality those become who are in no love towards the neighbour . . .

4364<sup>2</sup>. He who has been regenerated; that is, who loves the neighbour . . .

4459<sup>5</sup>. They who are in mere externals cannot possibly apprehend that heavenly joy is to love the neighbour more than self, and the Lord above all things . . . For he who is in externals alone loves himself more than the neighbour . . .

4730<sup>2</sup>. Who at this day knows anything else than that love towards the neighbour is to give to the poor . . . to aid everyone from one's wealth, and to benefit him in every way, without distinction as to whether he is good or evil . . .

4776<sup>2</sup>. They who are in love towards the neighbour do good from good-will . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. From these things it may be evident what Heaven is; namely, that it is love towards the neighbour . . . They who are in love towards the neighbour are able to receive all the truths of faith, and to imbue them, and appropriate them to themselves; for in love towards the neighbour there is the all of faith; because Heaven and the Lord are in it.

—<sup>4</sup>. All things are in the loves . . . such, therefore, as the loves are, such are the lives . . . Love towards the neighbour receives the life of Heaven . . . Thus in love towards the neighbour there is the all of Heaven.

4837<sup>3</sup>. The love of good and truth is that which is called love towards the neighbour; for the neighbour is he who is in good and the derivative truth; and, in the abstract sense, is good itself and its truth.

6023<sup>2</sup>. The neighbour is loved when anyone rightly discharges his office for the good of others . . .

6295<sup>2</sup>. The good of love towards the neighbour is the External of the celestial man. Therefore . . . in the External of the Celestial Church are those who are in love towards the neighbour.

6366<sup>6</sup>. Influx from the Celestial Kingdom (into the Spiritual Kingdom) is effected through love towards the neighbour; for this is the External of the Celestial Kingdom; and is the Internal of the Spiritual Kingdom.

6495. The influx which is from the Lord is the good of celestial love; thus of love towards the neighbour. In this love the Lord is present; for He loves the universal human race . . . and as the good of this love is from Him, He Himself is in it; thus is present with the man who is in the good of this love.

— But when a man receives influx from Hell, he then feels . . . the life of the love of the neighbour—unless it is for himself—to be undelightful.

6667. For with these there is no mercy, because no love of the neighbour . . . The love of the neighbour which appears with them is nothing else than the love of self; for in proportion as the other favours him . . . in the same proportion he is loved . . .

7369. In proportion as a man is in the love of self, in the same proportion he removes himself from the love of the neighbour; consequently . . . from Heaven; for in Heaven there is the love of the neighbour. 7489.

8123<sup>2</sup>. Therefore he who does any good for the sake of good, and what is just for the sake of what is just, loves the neighbour . . . Whereas he who does what is unjust for the sake of any gain, hates the neighbour. N. 103<sup>6</sup>.

8678<sup>2</sup>. The state of the reception of the Divine and of Heaven . . . is a state of love towards the neighbour . . .

9049. With him who does good from the heart . . . there is increased the affection of love towards the neighbour, to whom he does good; and with this affection, a delight which is heavenly delight, ineffable. Ex.

9262. The good of love towards the neighbour is exterior good; and the good of love to the Lord is interior good. . . 'Just' = the good of love towards the neighbour. 9263 III.

10308. For no one can love the neighbour from himself. He who does so from himself, loves the neighbour and benefits him for the sake of self, which is to love self.

10787. (We said to them) that love towards the neighbour is to will good and thence to do good to a fellow-citizen, our Country, the Church, the Lord's Kingdom, not for the sake of self, in order to be seen, or for the sake of meriting; but from the affection of good.

H. 15. In the Second or Middle Heaven there is love towards the neighbour. (This also) proceeds from the Lord, and makes Heaven.

—<sup>2</sup>. By to love the neighbour is not meant to love one's companion as to his person; but to love the truth which is from the Word ; and to love truth is to will and do truth. 16.

[H.] 64°. And they who loveto do what is good to others, not for the sake of self, but for the sake of good, love the neighbour ; for there good is the neighbour.

558a. That the love of self is opposite to love towards the neighbour, may be seen from the origin and the essence of each. With him who is in the love of self, the love of the neighbour begins from self. Ex. . . But spiritual love towards the neighbour begins from the Lord ; and from Him as the centre proceeds to all who are conjoined with Him through love and faith ; and it proceeds according to the quality of the love and faith with them.

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is evident that the love of the neighbour which begins from man is opposite to the love of the neighbour which begins from the Lord ; and that the former proceeds from evil, because from the proprium of man ; but the latter from good, because from the Lord . . . It is also evident that the love of the neighbour which proceeds from man and his proprium is corporeal ; whereas the love of the neighbour which proceeds from the Lord is heavenly.

N. 74. The Exterior is instructed to counterfeit the things which are of the love of the public and of the neighbour . . . For they know that to love the public and the neighbour interiorly affects all ; and that they are loved and esteemed in the same proportion. The reason it affects them, is that Heaven inflows into this love.

84. On love towards the neighbour, or on charity. Chapter.

100. It is believed by man that love towards the neighbour is to give to the poor, to render aid to the needy, and to do good to everyone ; but charity is to act prudently, and for the sake of the end that good may result. He who renders aid to any vicious poor or needy person, thereby does evil to the neighbour ; for by the aid which he renders him he confirms him in evil, and supplies him with the means of doing evil to others. It is otherwise with him who renders assistance to the good.

103. The reason these things are of the love towards the neighbour or of charity, is that . . . every man is the neighbour, but diversely. A society less or greater is more the neighbour ; our Country is still more the neighbour ; the Lord's Kingdom is still more so ; and the Lord is so above all. And, in the universal sense, the good which proceeds from the Lord is the neighbour ; consequently also what is sincere and what is just.

106. That the love in the Spiritual Kingdom is love towards the neighbour or charity ; and is called spiritual love. Refs.

—<sup>3</sup>. That to love the neighbour is not to love his person ; but that which is with him and from which he is ; thus good and truth. Refs.

Life 67. That in proportion as anyone shuns as sins murders of every kind, in the same proportion he has love towards the neighbour. Gen.art.

F. 21. But it is one thing to love the neighbour from the good or use in him towards self, and it is another thing to love the neighbour from the good or use in self towards him. (The former) can be done by an evil person ; but (the latter) cannot be done except by a good one ; for the latter from good loves good ; or from the affection of use loves use. The difference between these two is described by the Lord in Matt.v.32,et seq. It is said by many, I love him because he loves me and does good to me ; but still to love him on this account alone is not to love him interiorly ; unless the man himself is in good, and from that loves his good. The latter is in charity ; but the former is in friendship which is not charity. He who loves the neighbour from charity conjoins himself with his good ; and not with his person, except in so far and so long as he is in good. This man is spiritual, and he loves the neighbour spiritually. Whereas he who loves another from friendship alone, conjoins himself with his person, and then at the same time with his evil. After death, this man can with difficulty be separated from the person, which is in evil ; but the other can. Charity effects this through faith ; because faith is truth ; and the man who is in charity scrutinizes and sees by means of truth what is to be loved ; and in loving and benefiting he has regard to the quality of the use.

22. Love towards the neighbour is charity . . .

W. 47<sup>2</sup>. See LOVE, here.

237. The second degree, which is called spiritual . . . is opened by the love of uses from intellectual things, or by the spiritual love of uses, which love is love towards the neighbour . . .

414<sup>2</sup>. Love towards the neighbour from the Lord is the love of wisdom ; or the genuine love of the human understanding.

426. By love towards the neighbour is meant the love of uses ; and by love to the Lord is meant the love of doing uses. Ex.

P. 207. See LOVE OF SELF here.

208. A sign that they are being led by the Lord, is that they love the neighbour.

275. The love into which man was created is the love of the neighbour ; that he may will as well to him as to himself, and better ; and that he may be in the delight of this love when he is benefiting him ; scarcely otherwise than as it is with a parent towards his little children. This love is truly human ; for in it there is what is spiritual ; by which it is distinguished from natural love, which brute animals have. If man were born into this love, he would not be born into the thick darkness of ignorance . . . but into a certain light of knowledge and of the derivative intelligence ; and into these he would quickly come. He would, indeed, at first creep like a quadruped ; but with the implanted endeavour to raise himself up upon his feet . . .

276. But when the love of the neighbour was turned into the love of self . . . human love was turned into animal love ; and man . . . became a beast . . .

— . When the love of the neighbour was turned into the love of self, man could no longer be born into the light of knowledge and intelligence ; but into the thick darkness of ignorance ; because into the . . .

ultimate of life, which is called the corporeal Sensuous . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That the love of the neighbour and the love of self are opposite loves, may be seen by everyone. For the love of the neighbour wills well to all from itself. (Continued under LOVE OF SELF.)

R. 356<sup>2</sup>. Love towards the neighbour is the love of obeying the Lord's precepts, especially those which are contained in the second table of the decalogue. Enum. . . . The man who does not will to do such things because they are sins, loves the neighbour; for he does not love the neighbour who bears hatred to him, and from hatred wants to kill him; he does not love the neighbour who wants to scortate with his wife; nor does he love the neighbour who wants to steal and plunder his goods; and so on. T.330.

387. As love towards the neighbour is at this day called charity . . .

M. 269<sup>2</sup>. There are three universal loves of which every man has been constituted from creation: the love of the neighbour, which is also the love of doing uses; the love of the world . . . and the love of self . . . The love of the neighbour, or that of doing uses, is spiritual love . . . Man is man when the love of the neighbour . . . makes the head . . . —<sup>3</sup>, Des.

T. 287<sup>2</sup>. The decalogue . . . in the second table contains all things of love towards the neighbour . . .

301. When the Lord came into the world . . . (the Sabbath) was made a day . . . also of love towards the neighbour. III.

392. On charity, or love towards the neighbour. Chapter.

407. What it is to love the neighbour shall be told. To love the neighbour is not only to will and do good to a relative, a friend, and a good man; but also to a stranger, an enemy, and an evil man. (Continued under CHARITY.)

410<sup>2</sup>. As, therefore, every man is the neighbour, and the variety of men is infinite, and every one is to be loved as the neighbour according to his good, it is evident that there are genera and species, and also degrees, of love towards the neighbour. Now as the Lord is to be loved above all things, it follows that the degrees of love towards the neighbour are to be measured by the love to Him; thus by the measure in which another possesses the Lord in Himself, or has a possession from the Lord . . . But as these degrees are in the internal man, and this rarely manifests itself in the world, it is enough that the neighbour be loved according to the degrees of which one has Knowledge. But after death these degrees are clearly perceived . . . That there are degrees of love towards the neighbour, is evident from the Lord's parable of the Samaritan, who showed mercy to him who had been wounded by thieves; whom the priest and the Levite saw and passed by; and when the Lord asked which of those three seemed to have been the neighbour, the reply was, 'He who did mercy' (Luke x. 30-37).

411. We read, 'Thou shalt . . . love the neighbour as thyself' (Luke x. 27). To love the neighbour as one's self, is not to despise him in comparison with one's self; to act justly with him; and not to bring an evil judgment concerning him. The law of charity laid down by the Lord Himself is this: 'Whatsoever things ye would that men should do to you, so also do ye to them; for this is the Law and the Prophets' (Matt. vii. 12; Luke vi. 31, 32). So do they love the neighbour who are in the love of Heaven; whereas they who are in the love of the world love the neighbour from the world, and for the sake of the world; but they who are in the love of self love the neighbour from self, and for the sake of self.

416. Love towards the Lord's Kingdom is therefore love towards the neighbour in its fulness; for they who love the Lord's Kingdom not only love the Lord above all things, but also love the neighbour as themselves . . .

417. That to love the neighbour, regarded in itself, is not to love his person; but the good which is in his person. Gen.art.

418<sup>o</sup>. But the love of good with a wicked man is not the love of the neighbour; for a wicked man does not love another interiorly, except in so far as he is of service to him. But to love the good in another from the good in one's self is genuine love towards the neighbour; for then the goods kiss each other, and conjoin themselves together.

419. The man who loves good because it is good, and truth because it is truth, loves the neighbour eminently, because he loves the Lord, who is good itself and truth itself. From no other source is the love of good and thence of truth, and thus of the neighbour. Thus is formed love towards the neighbour from a celestial origin.

431<sup>2</sup>. But conjugal love, and love towards children . . . do not produce love towards the neighbour as do the exercises of duties in employments . . .

3516<sup>2</sup>. Because they were completely contrary to love towards the neighbour . . .

3906. The life of Heaven . . . is a life of love; namely, in that everyone loves the neighbour more than himself.

4077. Therefore unless anyone loves the neighbour, he has not faith . . .

[D.]4104. It was perceived that he who in the life of the body loves the neighbour as himself, has it given him in the other life to love the neighbour more than himself; for the goods of love are indefinitely increased . . .

5152<sup>e</sup>. Love towards the neighbour, with (the Angels) consists in the fact that they love to do those things which the doctrine of their Church dictates; thus to do them from faith. This, with them, is to love the neighbour.

D. Min. 4593. They who have love towards the neighbour, as the spiritual, do not always have love to the Lord; but they have reverence, and estimation, which are confirmed by means of the truths of faith.

4596. On general love towards the neighbour. . . They who have had a general love towards the neighbour, without consideration as to who is the neighbour, and of what quality is the love, are at this day in great abundance, and suffer themselves to be seduced by every deceitful, hypocritical, and simulating Spirit . . . They are for the most part sensuous, and enter but little into reasons. They constitute the skin. Des. 4597.

E. 204<sup>2</sup>. The neighbour is not every man, but is that which is with man. If this is true, sincere, and just; and the man is loved from these, then the neighbour is loved. That this is what is meant by charity in the spiritual sense, may be seen by everyone, provided he reflects. No one loves another for the sake of his person; but for the sake of that which is with him; hence are all friendship, all favour, and all honour. It follows from this, that to love men from the truth, sincerity, and justice which are with them, is spiritual love; for truth, sincerity, and justice are spiritual things; for they are from Heaven from the Lord . . .

707<sup>2</sup>. By 'the woman encompassed with the sun,' is signified the Church with those who are in love to the Lord, (and are thence in love towards the neighbour). The reason it is said, and are thence in love towards the neighbour, is that love towards the neighbour is derived from love to the Lord, as what is posterior from its prior; or as what is exterior from its interior; in a word, as an effect from its effecting cause. For love to the Lord is to love and will those things which are the Lord's; thus those things which the Lord has commanded in the Word; and love towards the neighbour is to do them from that willing; and thus consists in the performance of the uses which are the effects.

768<sup>2</sup>. It is said in the Word that the neighbour is to be loved as a man loves himself; but in the spiritual sense it is not meant that the neighbour is to be thus loved as to his person, but that those things are to be loved, which appertain to his person from the Lord; for the person is not loved actually from the fact that he is a person or a man; but because he is such or such; thus the person is loved from his quality; and therefore this quality is that which is meant by the neighbour, and which therefore is the spiritual neighbour, or the neighbour who is to be loved in the spiritual sense; and this with those who are of the Lord's Church is all that which proceeds from the Lord; which in general has relation to all good; both spiritual, and moral and civil; and therefore they who are in these goods, love those who are in the same. This, therefore, is to love the neighbour as one's self.

828. Something shall now be said concerning love towards the neighbour with (the Angels of the Third Heaven). By the neighbour they understand uses, which indeed are works; but with them uses are all things which are done with them of the Lord, and which chiefly regard the worship of the Lord, His Church, the implantation of its holy things, chiefly with infants, with whom they have conjunction, and in whom they inspire innocence, and the affections thereof; also the good of society in general; and also in particular. These things are chiefly of their love, because they are of the love of the Lord . . . The reason these things are their neighbour, is that they do not look to persons; but to such things as appertain to persons . . . For every Angel, Spirit, and man is his own love . . . thus his own good and thence his own truth. As these things make them, (the Celestial Angels), being wise, cannot look to anything else than the things from which they are. To them this is the neighbour, or the brother and companion . . . Hence it is evident what is love towards the neighbour in the Third Heaven. Further ex.

831<sup>5</sup>. As the love (of the Angels of the Second Heaven) is the love of truth, they acknowledge as their neighbour truth in act, which is called spiritual good; thus the good of the Church, the good of the society in which they are, the good of their fellow-citizens in the society; consequently also moral good, which is called sincerity, and civil good, which is called justice; and therefore their love towards the neighbour consists also in exercises, which are works.

902<sup>4</sup>. (The Celestial Angels said) that they had loved the neighbour, because they had accounted hatreds and revenges as heinous.

1026<sup>4</sup>. Upon the second table were written the Precepts of love towards the neighbour. . . The last six Precepts are those of love towards the neighbour.

1144. These truths and goods have been profaned by Babylon by this: that they have perverted spiritual love, which is love towards the neighbour; for they who are in such love of self as are the Babylonians cannot possibly love the neighbour. If they do love him it is for the sake of themselves: so that the end is still the man himself; and the love of the neighbour is the means . . . The love of the neighbour, in the spiritual sense, is the love of uses; and when uses are for the sake of self, there is no love of uses, but the love of self.

1193<sup>2</sup>. To love uses is nothing else than to love the neighbour. In the spiritual sense, use is the neighbour. Ex.

D. Love xiii<sup>2</sup>. That by to love the neighbour is meant to do uses to the Church, one's Country, the society, and a fellow-citizen, is because these are the neighbour in a wide and in a narrow sense. These cannot be loved in any other way than by means of the uses which belong to each person's office. Enum.

xx<sup>2</sup>. As heat comes forth from the love of the neighbour, there is a correspondence between love and heat . . .

Coro. 16. Each Heaven which is founded after the consummation of each Church is made triplicate . . . Into the Highest are elevated those who are in love to the Lord and the derivative wisdom; into the Middle, those who are in spiritual love towards the neighbour and the derivative intelligence; into the Lowest those who are in spiritual natural love towards the neighbour, which is called charity, and who are thence in the faith of the Truths concerning God, and in a life according to the Precepts of the decalogue.

A. 539. He was therefore cast down into the Earth of Lower Things.

[A.] 699. In order that I might see . . . the vastation of those who are in the Lower Earth, I have sometimes been let down thither. . . A kind of column encompassed me, (which was) 'the wall of brass' . . . and was formed of angelic Spirits, in order that I might be let down safely to the unhappy. When I was there, I heard miserable lamentations; and, in fact, these: O God! O God! Have mercy upon us! Have mercy upon us! and this for a long time. It was granted to speak to those miserable ones . . . They especially complained of evil Spirits—that they desired and burned with nothing else than to torture them. They were in despair, and said that they believed that their torment would be eternal; but it was granted to comfort them. D.228.

951. Those who had supposed themselves to be holy are in the Lower Earth, before the left foot; where they sometimes appear to themselves to have a shining face . . .

1106. There are many who . . . from simplicity and ignorance, had imbued falsities as to faith, and had had a certain species of conscience according to the principles of their faith, and who had not . . . lived in hatreds, revenges, and adulteries. . . They cannot be admitted into the heavenly Societies so long as they are in falsity, because they would contaminate them; and therefore they are kept for some time in the Lower Earth, in order that they may there put off their principles of falsity. The periods of time they remain there are longer or shorter, according to the nature of the falsity, the life thence contracted, and the extent to which the principles have been confirmed with them. Some suffer sufficiently hard things there; some not hard things. These are the things which are called vastations . . . When the time of vastation is over, they are taken up into Heaven, and are instructed as novitiates . . .

1107. While they remain in the Lower Earth, they are kept by the Lord in the hope of deliverance, and in the thought of the end: that they are thus being amended . . .

2759. At the right side there rose up out of the Lower Earth as it were a roll; and it was said that they were many Spirits from the untaught common people; but not depraved. Des.

3481. (The Jews) appear in front, in the Lower Earth, beneath the plane of the left foot.

4728. The reason 'pits'=falsities, is that the men who have been in principles of falsity are kept for some time after death under the Lower Earth, until the falsities have been removed from them, and have been as it were cast to the sides. The places there are called 'pits.' They who come thither are those who must be in vastation. . . The Lower Earth is proximately beneath the feet, and the region round about to a short distance. There are very many after death before they are elevated into Heaven. This Earth is also mentioned here and there in the Word. Beneath it are the places of vastation, which are called 'pits.' Below these places, and round about to a great extension, are the Hells.

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is in some measure evident what 'Hell' is, what 'the Lower Earth,' and what 'the pit,' where mentioned in the Word. Fully ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'I will make thee dwell in the Earth of Lower Things' (Ezek.xxvi.20).

—<sup>4</sup>. 'They are all delivered to death, to the Lower Earth, in the midst of the sons of man, to them that go down to the pit . . . All the trees of Eden shall comfort themselves in the Lower Earth . . .' (Ezek.xxxi.14,16).

—<sup>5</sup>. Wail over the multitude of Egypt, and make her herself and the daughters of the magnificent nations descend to the Earth of Lower Things, with those who descend to the pit . . .' (Ezek.xxxii.18).

4940. When for the second time I was encompassed with an angelic column and let down into the places of lower things, it was given me sensibly to perceive that those who were in the Earth of Lower Things corresponded to the feet and the soles; moreover those places are under the feet and soles. I spoke to those who were there. They are such as had been in natural delight, and not in spiritual. Concerning the Lower Earth, see 4728.

4941. In these places are also those who had ascribed all things to nature, and but little to the Divine . . . But still those who had led a good moral life, when they have been detained there for some time, successively put off those principles, and put on principles of truth.

4942. While I was there, I heard in one chamber [a noise], as if some were at the other side of the wall who wanted to break in, at which those who were there were much terrified, believing that they were robbers; and it was said that those who are there are kept in such fear, in order that they may be deterred from evils; because with some fear is a means of amendment.

4943. In the Lower Earth beneath the feet and soles are also those who had placed merit in good deeds and in works; many of whom seem to themselves to be cutting wood. The place where they are is rather cold, and they seem to themselves to acquire heat by their labour. I spoke to them, and was permitted to ask them whether they did not want to go out of that place. They said that as yet they had not merited it by their labour. But when that state has been passed through, they are taken out thence. These also are natural . . . But as they had led a pious life, and had acted so from ignorance, in which there had been something of innocence, Angels are sometimes sent to them, who comfort them. A sheep . . . also sometimes appears to them at the left, above, at the sight of which they receive consolation.

4944. They who come from the Christian world, who have led a good moral life, and have had something of charity towards the neighbour, but have cared but little for spiritual things, are for the most part sent into the places beneath the feet and soles, and are kept there until they put off the natural things in which they have been, and imbue spiritual and celestial things in so far as they are able according to their life. When they have imbued these, they are elevated from thence to the heavenly Societies. I have sometimes seen them emerging, and also their gladness because they had come into heavenly light.

4945. In what situation are the places beneath the feet, it has not as yet been given me to know. They are very many; and are most distinct from each other. In general, they are called the Earth of Lower Things.

4947. Beneath the soles of the feet are also those who in the life of the body have lived for the world and pleasure-genio; having been delighted with such things as are of the world; and who have loved to live in splendour; but only from external cupidity or that of the body; and not from internal cupidity, or that of the mind; for they have not been proud in disposition, by setting themselves before others... and therefore such have not rejected the doctrinal things of the Church... in their hearts they have said that it is so, because those who study the Word say so. With some who are such the interiors are open towards Heaven, into which are successively insinuated celestial things; namely, justice, probity, piety, charity, mercy; and they are then elevated into Heaven.

5321<sup>4</sup>. There is a place at the right, near the Lower Earth, where there appear chariots and horses... Those walk and converse there who in the world had been learned, and who had made learning the end of life...

5392. In the region of the stomach and intestines are those who are in the Earth of Lower Things; who, as they have carried with them from the world unclean things, which inhere in their thoughts and affections, are on this account kept there for some time, until such things have been wiped away... They can (then) be elevated to Heaven. Those who are there are not as yet in the Grand Man; for they are like foods let down into the stomach, which are not intromitted into the blood, thus into the body, until they have been defecated. Those who have been defiled with earthly dregs are beneath these in the region of the intestines. But the excrements themselves, which are voided, correspond to the Hells...

5427. The Angels who are in the Heavens... can see each and all things which are taking place in the World of Spirits—which world is proximately below the Heavens—; and also each and all things which are taking place in the Earth of Lower Things; nay, which are taking place in the Hells; but not contrariwise.

6423. In order that good... may be able to protect... those who are in the Lower Earth, good acts by means of truth.

6854<sup>2</sup>. As the Spiritual could be saved only by the Advent of the Lord, they could not be elevated into Heaven before, and were therefore kept meanwhile in the Lower Earth, in the places there which in the Word are called 'pits,' which Earth was obsessed around by the Hells where are falsities; by which they were then much infested; but still they were guarded by the Lord. But after the Lord had come into the world, and had made the Human in Himself Divine, He then delivered those who were there in the 'pits,' and elevated them to Heaven; and out of them He formed... the Second Heaven. This is what is meant by the descent of the Lord to the Lower Regions—ad inferos; and by the deliverance of those who had been bound. 7207. 7932a. 8345°. 8668°. 8751°. 9229°.

—<sup>4</sup>. 'The bound,' in special, = those who had been detained in the Lower Earth until the Advent of the Lord.

6928. The Spirits of our Earth, especially when newly arrived in the other life, love things corporeal and worldly... and desire to know such things in the other life. In order, therefore, that they may be able to be with good Spirits, who do not care for such things, they are kept in places which are beneath the soles of the feet, and which are called in the Word 'the Lower Earth;' and this until they are averse to things corporeal and earthly, and thus put them off. When this has been effected, they are elevated into Heaven; and are initiated into interior things; and become Angels.

6945°. Therefore (the spiritual) could not be taken out of the Lower Earth... until after the Lord's resurrection. Ex.

7090. Here and in what follows it treats of those of the Spiritual Church who were saved by the Advent of the Lord into the world; and who, before His Advent, had been detained in the Lower Earth, and had there been harassed by falsities; that is, by infernals who are in falsities from evil. That Earth is beneath the soles, encompassed round by the Hells; at the front part by those who have falsified truths and adulterated goods; at the right by those who pervert Divine order, and thence study to acquire for themselves power; at the back by evil Genii, who from the love of self have secretly machinated evil against the neighbour; deep down below them are those who have altogether spurned the Divine, and have worshipped nature, and have thus removed from themselves everything spiritual. With such are those encompassed who are in the Lower Earth...

—<sup>2</sup>. The Lower Earth, where those of the Spiritual Church were reserved... is sometimes mentioned in the Word; as in Isaiah: 'Sing O Heavens, because Jehovah hath done it; shout O lower things of the earth...' (xliv.23); treating of those who are in the Lower Earth, that they are saved by the Lord. Further ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. At this day, also, they who are of the Church, and have filled their ideas with worldly and also with earthly things, and have caused the truths of faith to be adjoined to such things, are let down to the Lower Earth, and are also in combats there; and this until those worldly and earthly things have been separated from the truths of faith, and such things have been inserted that they can no more be conjoined. When this has been accomplished, they are elevated into Heaven... These worldly and earthly things cannot be separated and removed except by combats against falsities. (Continued under COMBAT.)

7147. They who are in the Lower Earth are infested by the falsities and evils injected by the Hells which are round about; for the reason that evils and falsities may be removed, and truths and goods insinuated; and that they may thus be brought into a state that they can be elevated into Heaven. (Continued under INFEST.) Sig.

7686. It treats in special of those who before the Advent of the Lord were in the Lower Earth, and could not be elevated into Heaven until the Lord had come into the world, and had assumed the Human, and had made it Divine. Meanwhile these were being infested by the evil, who also had been of the Church, and had confessed the truths of faith, but had lived an evil life. Des.

These things were represented by the Sons of Israel not being immediately introduced into the Land of Canaan, but first into the desert . . . —2. As they were 'under the altar,' it is evident that they had been guarded by the Lord. For all who have led any life of charity are guarded by the Lord, lest they should be injured by the evil; and, after the Last Judgment, when the evil have been removed, they are taken out from custody, and are elevated into Heaven. Since the Last Judgment, I have often seen them let out of the Lower Earth, and translated into Heaven. Ex.

—2. The place where they had been kept concealed is called the Lower Earth, which is proximately above the Hells, beneath the World of Spirits; and there, by communication with Heaven, and by conjunction with the Lord, they are in safety. There are many such places; and they live together cheerfully there, and worship the Lord; nor do they know anything about Hell. After the Last Judgment, they who are there are by turns elevated into Heaven by the Lord; and, while they are being elevated, those who are meant by the dragon are removed. I have often been permitted to see them taken up, and consociated with the Angels in Heaven. This is meant in the Word by the sepulchres being opened, and by the dead rising again.

884°. Those who had grieved on account of the infestations from them, and had come into fear of damnation, and of evils and falsities from Hell, and of grievous temptation, had been taken away by the Lord from consort with them, and had been sent into a certain Earth beneath that one, where also there are Societies, and had been guarded there; and this until the evil had been separated from the good; which was effected by the Last Judgment; and then those who had been guarded in the Lower Earth were elevated by the Lord into Heaven.

M. 231. I once heard vociferations which egurgitated as if through water from the Lower Regions—ex inferis . . . I descended by a flight of steps; and when I was below, I saw a level country set thick with trees, intermingled with thorns and nettles; and I asked whether that was Hell; and they said, It is the Lower Earth, which is proximately above Hell. T. 71. I once heard beneath me as it were the roaring of the sea . . . I was told that it was a tumult among those who were gathered together in the Lower Earth, which is proximately above Hell. And presently the ground, which made a roof over them, yawned; and through the opening birds of night flew out in flocks . . . and immediately after them locusts . . . When I had seen and wondered at these things, suddenly out of the Lower Earth, where that tumult was, a Spirit raised himself up, who could transform himself into an Angel of light; and he cried, Where is he who speaks and writes about the Order to which the Omnipotent God has tied Himself down in relation to man? We have heard these things below, through the roof. (Swedenborg then states to him the general laws of order.) When the satan had heard these things . . . he subsided . . . and the birds . . . cast themselves into the sea, which is there called the Sea Suph . . . and the tumult below ceased . . .

108. If hereafter anyone from the Christian world comes into the Spiritual World . . . and does not believe in the Lord, and approach Him alone, and is then not able to receive this, because he has lived evilly, or has confirmed himself in falsities, at his first step to Heaven he is repelled, and his face is turned . . . to the Lower Earth, whither he also goes, and conjoins himself with those there who are meant by the 'dragon' and 'the false-prophet.'

297. That those who are [elevated] by God Messiah from the Lower Earth or the pit into the interior Heaven, and also into the more interior one, have their places and abodes allotted them in the most exact manner. — I have wondered that thousands, perhaps tens of thousands, have been elevated by God Messiah from the pit, or from the lower parts of the earth . . . The greater part of them seem to themselves to be conveyed in chariots or carriages, and to be carried round to various places, and try whether this or that place is suitable for them . . . Nor is there any Soul ever elevated by God Messiah who does not find his rest . . . This translation may last longer with some; but not with anxiety. Meanwhile they are being more accommodated and perfected.

717. Below is Hell; then [comes] the Lower Earth, which is also signified by another name; then [comes] the Heaven of Spirits; then the interior Heaven; then the more interior one; and thus the inmost. Everywhere the like is going on, but with much difference; namely, in this: that in the Lower Earth, and in the Heaven of Spirits, they obtain whatever is a pleasure to them; and thus they are translated from one Society into another. But evil Spirits [are treated] in a contrary manner; namely, with punishments . . .

1701<sup>o</sup>. They who are under the feet are in the Earth of Lower Things; thus are in like manner more or less deep, as the former are more or less high.

1741. The greatest part of (those who constitute the externals of man) are from our Earth; for our orb is now in externals . . . nor are they (at first) admitted to act as such membranes; but they are outside or below the Grand Body; namely, in the Earth of Lower Things, and in various places of Hell; from which they are taken out, and elevated, in order to constitute such things. (Continued under MEMBRANE.)

1771. On those who are in the Earth of Lower Things. — In the Earth of Lower Things there are many abodes, or places, where those are kept who are being prepared . . . [They are] almost beneath the left foot, a little in front, to a rather great height. Many are kept in what is obscure, being in a state almost intermediate between the life of the body and its sleep; and there they think very little, merely by turns remembering the things which from imprudence they had done evilly in life; but not so that their conscience is tormented thereby; for such are there as have not done evil from a better conscience or of set purpose; but still they have perpetrated evil; thus from imprudence; for that it was evil they might have known in the life of the body; for so had they been instructed from the Word of the Lord; but after they had taken up with their principles the Word of the Lord could no longer penetrate, because they had persevered in the imprudence of their life.

1772. They who are in the Earth of Lower Things are not indeed in the Grand Man; but outside of it; but still they live from the Lord's life.

696<sup>3</sup>. All those who say that they have been in faith, but have not been in the life of faith . . . do not receive the instruction; and therefore they are separated; some into the Hells; and some into the Earth which is called in the Word 'the Lower Earth,' where they suffer hard things.

899<sup>2</sup>. They who had lived (the life of charity) had been heretofore reserved by the Lord beneath the Heavens, and had been protected from infestation by the Hells, until the Last Judgment; after the execution of which they had been exsuscitated from their places, and elevated into Heaven. The reason they were not elevated before, was that before it the Hells had prevailed . . . but after it the Heavens prevailed . . . and therefore if they had been elevated before they could not have resisted the power in which the Hells were over the Heavens. That they have been elevated it has been granted to see; for from the Lower Earth, where they had been reserved by the Lord, I saw phalanxes rising again and elevated, and translated into Heavenly Societies. This took place after this Last Judgment . . . The like took place also after the former Judgment, which was executed by the Lord when He was in the world. . . This arcanum is what is meant by the resurrection of those who had heretofore lived the life of charity. The same is meant by these words in John: 'Now is the judgment of this world; now shall the prince of this world be cast out. But I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all to Me' (xii.31,32). And this was represented by that 'many of the saints who slept were raised up, and going forth from their monuments after the Lord's resurrection, entered into the holy city, and appeared to many' (Matt. xxvii.52,53). —<sup>9</sup>.

Lucifer. Lucifer.

A. 254<sup>9</sup>. Who is there called 'Lucifer.'

7375. These two loves (of self and of the world) increase in proportion as the reins are loosed to them... insomuch that those who are in them want to climb into the throne of God... according to these words concerning Lucifer, by whom are meant those who are in these loves, and who are called 'Babel': 'Thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend the Heavens, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; and I will sit on the Mount of Assembly, in the sides of the north: I will ascend above the loftiness of the cloud; and I will become like the Most High. But thou shalt be let down to Hell' (Is. xiv. 13-15). 8678.

J. 58<sup>6</sup>. Those who are on the mountains there, are meant by 'Lucifer' (Is. xiv. 12).

P. 257<sup>2</sup>. From which it follows that Babel, there, is 'Lucifer'...

—<sup>3</sup>. The fire of the love of self first excited (the Babylonians) to preach the Lord and to teach the Word; and it is from this their primeval state that Lucifer is called 'the son of the dawn' (Is. xiv. 12).

—<sup>5</sup>. When the love of self pushed its dominion to the throne of the Lord, removed Him, and set itself thereon, that love, which is 'Lucifer,' could not do otherwise than profane all things of the Word and of the Church...

R. 737<sup>2</sup>. It is from their first state, when they held the Word to be holy, that Lucifer, by whom is meant Babel, has been called 'the son of the dawn'; but it is from their latter state that he is said to have been 'sent down into hell.' 763<sup>2</sup>.

M. 269<sup>4</sup>. The devil said, I am Lucifer the son of the dawn; and because I have made myself like the Most High, I have been cast down. But he was not Lucifer; but believed himself to be him...

T. 41<sup>2</sup>. In proportion as (the good of love or of charity, and the truth of wisdom or of faith) are divided by man, in the same proportion he becomes an image of Lucifer and the dragon; and is cast down from heaven...

146<sup>6</sup>. I know that those who are meant by 'Lucifer,' and who are of Babel... are carried away by a zeal which with many is from infernal love...

276. They are like the Lucifers in Hell, who still call themselves there the sons of the dawn.

D. 4723<sup>9</sup>. (This Spirit) is Lucifer, on the Mount of Assembly. Des.

4883. 'Lucifer' = the love of self, which makes itself God the Father upon the mountain... Lucifer is Babel.

E. 223<sup>4</sup>. By 'Lucifer' (Is. xiv.) is meant Babel, where all the truth of doctrine of the Church has been either falsified or annihilated. Ex. 405<sup>28</sup>, Ex.

1029<sup>11</sup>. The reason Babel is called 'Lucifer the son of the dawn,' is that Babel in the beginning is the Church which is in zeal for the Lord, for the good of love, and for the truths of faith; although within the zeal of its pastors there lies hidden the fire of dominating over all by means of the holy things of the Church...

—<sup>12</sup>. As by 'Babel' in the beginning is signified such a Church, therefore the king of Babel is here called 'the son of the dawn'; 'Lucifer' from the light of truth then; and 'the son of the dawn' from the beginning of the light or of day; for 'the dawn' = the Church in its beginning...

1188<sup>6</sup>. This (love of commanding) is described by 'Lucifer' (Is. xiv. 4-24). But it is those who have exercised this dominion from the love of it who are Lucifers; not the rest.

J. (Post.) 108. When Babel or Babylonia is called 'the son of the dawn' [it is meant] that Babel in the beginning adores the Lord, and observes the precepts above all others, nursing dominion in the mind; but that in process of time... it drags the Lord Himself from His throne, and seats itself thereon.

Lukewarm, To be. Tepescere.

A. 1513. One of those who are called lukewarm came to me, behaving himself as if he had repented; and I was not sensible of his deceit, although I thought that he was hiding something inwardly. But the Spirits said that they could not endure his presence; and that they felt themselves affected as men are wont to be when inclined to vomit; and that he was among those who are to be spewed out. He afterwards spoke execrable things, and could not desist . . .

5217<sup>8</sup>. A subject in whom truths and the opposite falsities subsist simultaneously is called lukewarm; and one in whom falsities and truths are commingled is called profane.

9207<sup>4</sup>. They who are in such truth (as is devoid of a desire for good) are they who are called 'lukewarm,' as is evident from the things which precede.

9210<sup>3</sup>. They who do all things for the sake of themselves and the world, love themselves above . . . God . . . This is meant by . . . 'No one can serve two lords . . . ' There are those who serve both; but these are they who are called 'lukewarm,' and 'neither cold nor hot,' who are 'spewed out.'

Life 71. Two opposites cannot be together . . . If they were, there would be what is lukewarm (Rev.iii. 15,16).

P. 231<sup>7</sup>. The seventh kind of profanation is from those who first acknowledge Divine truths, and live according to them, and afterwards recede and deny them. This is the worst kind of profanation . . . The profane of this kind are meant by 'the lukewarm' (Rev. iii.14-16).

296<sup>7</sup>. Man, whether he is in good or in evil, cannot be in both at the same time; nor by turns; unless he is lukewarm.

R. 204. 'Therefore because thou art lukewarm, and not cold nor hot, it will come to pass that I shall vomit thee out of My mouth' (Rev.iii.16)=profanation, and consequent separation from the Lord. Ex.

403<sup>9</sup>. Where there is no charity . . . there is infernal love. There is no middle love except with the lukewarm.

T. 437. In proportion as anyone turns away from Hell he turns to Heaven . . . No one can stand between the two with a versatile neck . . . for these are they of whom the Lord says . . . 1862. Such a heat, being counterfeit . . . is a lukewarm affair, which is to be spewed out.

3560. His being constant in his resistance was not a bad sign, because he was then less lukewarm.

4170. The reason lukewarm water excites vomiting [is] that lukewarm spiritual things are such. . . When I was thinking about lukewarm water, and about spiritual lukewarmness at the same time, there were Spirits who seemed as it were to vomit . . .

E. 189. Then the man is lukewarm. Des.

233. 'Therefore because thou art lukewarm' (Rev. iii.16)=those who live from the doctrine concerning faith alone and justification thereby. (For) 'lukewarm' =those who are between Heaven and Hell, and thereby serve two lords. That they are such who think, believe, and live from the doctrine concerning faith alone . . . is not as yet known, and it shall therefore be manifested. Ex.

Lull. Sopire.

Lulling, A. Sopitio.

A. 541. Certain Spirits . . . were reduced into such a state that they could be elevated into Heaven, being lulled as to corporeal things and phantasies. 542. D.2109.

994<sup>3</sup>. So long as man lives in the body . . . these interior things are as it were lulled . . .

1982. Certain Souls . . . who desired to see the glory of the Lord . . . were lulled as to the exterior senses and lower faculties into a kind of sweet sleep.

2041<sup>3</sup>. This can also be perceived by the unregenerate while the cupidities of these loves are quiescent with them, as takes place when they are in holy meditation, or while they are laid asleep, which takes place when they are in misfortunes, sicknesses, etc. . . Then, since bodily and worldly things have been laid asleep, and are as it were dead, they perceive something of heavenly light, and of comfort thence. But there is no removal of their cupidities with them, but only a lulling . . .

With the evil bodily and worldly things can also be laid asleep, and then they can be elevated as it were into something heavenly . . . these external things are then laid asleep with them, and so they are carried into the First Heaven.

235<sup>12</sup>. The falsity . . . that a man is saved . . . if only in the state of lulling of bodily things that is usual for a short time before death he utters something of faith with apparent affection.

3147<sup>2</sup>. When the things of the external man are only lulled; as in misfortunes.

8981<sup>e</sup>. When these loves are lulled, which takes place in a state of disease.

H. 467. Then the natural memory is lulled, and they are awakened into the interior memory.

497<sup>e</sup>. Then their interiors are opened, and their exteriors are lulled. 499. 501, Ex.

W. 257<sup>4</sup>. The man with whom the spiritual degree is opened comes into this wisdom when he dies; and is also able to come into it by the lulling of the sensations of the body . . .

P. 278a. For confession is a lulling of all things . . .

298. When (after death) the External is lulled, and the Internal awakes . . .

M. 1. These things . . . have been seen not in any dozing state of the mind; but in a state of full wakefulness.

T. 185. Who in the world had lulled—obsopiverunt—the understanding to sleep . . .

D. 2339<sup>e</sup>. Such an opinion has lulled to sleep many men.

2403. Evil Spirits lulled by singing.

2488. This cannot be restored, but can only be reduced to nothing, so that it is lulled as it were in sleep, or as in death . . . Therefore it is merely the lulling of it . . .

4471. At last their bodily delights can be lulled . . .

5003. That he may be let into his evils, lest they lie dormant . . .

5127<sup>2</sup>. Otherwise (their sensuous things) would be dormant . . .

5623<sup>e</sup>. With those who come into the interior Heaven the Natural is lulled.

5696. The Voluntary is then lulled . . .

5849<sup>e</sup>. While their confirmed falsities are lulled . . .

5917<sup>2</sup>. In this state the former state is lulled.

J. (Post.) 333. The love of evil is then stored away or lulled with them . . .

—<sup>c</sup>. There is such a thing as a holy External and a profane Internal: the Internal is lulled . . . the External is not lulled.

Lumen. Lumen.

See LUMINOUS; and under FOOL—fatuus, and LIGHT.

A. 186. The coming into eternal life is represented by a shining white lumen which flashes yellow beautifully; by which is signified his first life; namely, that it is celestial with spiritual.

455. (He supposed) that heavenly joy would consist in a lumen of glory, like the lumen when the solar rays appear golden . . . Such a lumen was given him, and he was in the midst of the lumen. . . He said that he was in Heaven; but he could not stay there long, for it gradually wearied him . . . D. 3348.

854. 'The mountains of Ararat' = lumen . . . (for) 'Ararat' = lumen, and in fact the lumen of one who is regenerate. New lumen, or the first lumen of the regenerate, never comes forth from the Knowledges of the Truths of faith, but from charity. The truths of faith are like rays of light; love or charity is like a flame. The lumen in one who is to be regenerated is not from the Truths of faith, but from charity; the Truths of faith themselves are the derivative rays of lumen. Thus it is evident that 'the mountains of Ararat' = such lumen. This lumen is the first lumen after temptation; and, being the first, it is dim, and is called lumen, and not light.

1528. Their life of phantasies appears like the lumen thence, which is dim . . .

1531. The lumen of which was almost solar.

1577<sup>2</sup>. If in the light of the sun there are both heat and lumen, as in the time of spring . . .

1666<sup>2</sup>. Falsities may be likened to the dim lumen from (a coal fire).

2162<sup>16</sup>. When the goods and truths of faith are perverted by natural lumen, as it is called . . .

2196<sup>13</sup>. Which the Rational of man, from its own lumen born from sensuous things, and thence darkened, cannot believe.

2367<sup>2</sup>. The light of wisdom and intelligence (of the Angels) is ineffable. The lumen itself in which man is is relatively dark. Sig.

2385<sup>2</sup>. The life of evil continually inflows into their Rational, and infuses a certain fallacious lumen from the fire of the affections of evil, and causes them to see falsities as truths, like those who are wont to see phantasms in nocturnal lumen . . .

2701<sup>2</sup>. 'If the lumen be darkness, how great is the darkness' (Matt. vi. 23). E. 274<sup>3</sup>.

2733<sup>2</sup>. (This) is contrary to the genuine lumen of reason.

2796<sup>e</sup>. For these have obscured and extinguished their natural and rational lumen . . .

3263<sup>2</sup>. For there are many among (the gentiles) who know from rational lumen that there is one God . . .

—<sup>c</sup>. The natural lumen which they have has in it what is spiritual; (otherwise) such things could never be acknowledged.

3340. Sometimes there is given (the infernals) a lumen, but it is like a fatuous lumen, and is extinguished to them, and becomes thick darkness, as soon as they look into the light of truth.

3573<sup>2</sup>. Of which man can have scarcely any idea by means of those things which are of the light of the world; that is, which are of natural lumen with him . . .

[A.] 3969<sup>16</sup>. Lumen is not in fire, but lumen proceeds from fire.

3993<sup>7</sup>. For every regenerate person sees goods and truths in his natural lumen from the light of Heaven; for the light of Heaven makes his intellectual sight, and the lumen of the world his natural sight.

4046. Afterwards the same (Spirits) presented a flaming lumen, gross but still luminous, which first appeared under the left side of the chin . . . from which it could be known of what quality they were; for lumens indicate affections, and also degrees of intelligence.

4060<sup>2</sup>. 'The moon shall not give her lumen' (Matt. xxvi.)=that (charity) will not appear . . .

—4. The Sun and Moon in the Heavens, that is, the Lord, is never darkened nor remits its lumen . . .

4156<sup>3</sup>. It is fatuous lumen which produces this skill.

4214<sup>2</sup>. This (imaginative and perceptive) faculty is twofold; one comes from the light of Heaven, and the other from fatuous lumen . . . That which is from the light of Heaven is in good . . . but that which is from fatuous lumen is in evil . . .

—3. As to fatuous lumen in the other life, the case is this: they who have been in such in the world are in the like in the other life, and there reason about good and truth, and about evil and falsity, and in fact much more perfectly and excellently than in the life of the body . . . But it at once appears—not to them, but to good Spirits and Angels—that their reasonings are of fatuous lumen; and that the light of Heaven which inflows with them is at once turned into such lumen . . .

—5. They are cast to Hell, where there is such lumen.

4416. There succeeds a yellow lumen as from sulphur. (See LIGHT here.)

—2. (Such) appear in a lumen like that of a coal fire. (See LIGHT here.)

—3. The man who leads a life of evil cannot believe that he is in such a lumen, because he does not see the lumen in which his spirit is, but only the lumen in which is the sight of his eye, and consequently his natural mind; whereas if he were to see the lumen of his spirit, and were to experience what it would become if the light of truth and good from Heaven were to inflow into it, he would clearly know how far he was from receiving the things which are of light . . .

4418. (The infernals) are in a yellow lumen like that of a fire of coal and sulphur. This lumen is what is meant by 'darkness'; for their understanding is according to the lumen, consequently according to the derivative sight . . . (Moreover) those lumens become darkness at [the approach of] heavenly light.

4531. In Hell there is not darkness, but a dim lumen, like that which is from a coal fire, in which they see each other; otherwise they could not live. This lumen originates with them from the light of Heaven, which is turned into such when it falls into their insanities; that is, into their Falsities and cupidities. The Lord is everywhere present with light, even in the Hells, otherwise they would not have any faculty of thinking and speaking; but it becomes light according to the reception. This lumen is what is called in the Word 'the shadow of death,' and is compared to 'darkness:' it is also turned into darkness with them when they approach the light of Heaven; and when they are in darkness they are in folly and stupidity . . . 6000.

4715. Everyone is able to know (this) from natural lumen alone.

5128<sup>e</sup>. When the Rational is subject to sensuous things . . . the things which are in the centre are in a certain lumen there, but in a fatuous lumen, or such as arises from a coal fire. Into this lumen there inflows lumen from Hell on all sides. It is this lumen which is called 'darkness;' for as soon as anything of light from Heaven inflows into it, it is turned into darkness.

5303<sup>2</sup>. When (such) are removed from the light (of Heaven), and are remitted into their own lumen which they have in Hell, they appear among themselves as men.

6240. (Celestial men, and those of the Spiritual Church) differ from each other as the lumen of the sun differs from the lumen of the moon.

6310. According to the degrees in man there are also lights. The internal Sensuous . . . has a very gross lumen. This lumen it has been granted me to discern by much experience; and I have observed that whenever I sank down into this lumen, falsities and evils of many kinds came in the way, and even stumbling-blocks against heavenly and Divine things, and filthy things besides. The reason is that this lumen dominates in the Hells, and by means of it especially the Hells inflow with man. When a man is in this lumen his thought is nearly in the same lumen as his external sight, and it is then almost in the body. Men who are in this lumen are to be called the sensuous . . . In this lumen are they who have not at all cultivated interior things, by living in the neglect of and contempt for all things which are rational and spiritual; and in this lumen especially are misers and adulterers, and also those who have lived in mere pleasures and in shameful idleness . . . D.4627<sup>5</sup>. —11.

6313. When a man is elevated towards interior things, he comes from a gross sensuous lumen into a milder lumen, and is then at the same time withdrawn from the influx of stumbling-blocks and filthy things, and is brought . . . nearer to the light of Heaven . . . 6844<sup>3</sup>. D.4627<sup>7</sup>.

6315. The man who in his life is elevated from sensuous things through the good of faith is alternately in sensuous lumen and in interior lumen . . . When he is in interior lumen he thinks from what is just and fair; and if he is in a still more interior lumen, he thinks from spiritual truth and good. He who is in the good of life is elevated from one lumen into the other, and into the interior lumen the moment he begins to think evilly; for the Angels are near him . . . I have frequently perceived the elevations . . .

6865<sup>3</sup>. It is sensuous lumen, which is from the lumen of the world, which then cheats them; for . . . when doctrinal things have been confirmed they appear to them in sensuous lumen as do truths themselves.

6948<sup>8</sup>. Hence when a man is in the Sensuous, and in its lumen, he is in thick darkness as to those things which are of the Spiritual World . . . and the sensuous lumen is turned into mere thick darkness when light from Heaven falls into it. Ex.

7645<sup>2</sup>. The lumen (of infernal Spirits), which is called intellectual lumen, is not unlike the lumen of this world . . .

7688. In the other life the lumen in which are those who are in falsity becomes thick darkness at the presence of the light of Heaven . . .

7870<sup>2</sup>. The lumen (from which (the infernals) see is indeed from the light from the Lord through Heaven . . . but when this heavenly light passes . . . into the will . . . it is turned into a lumen which is like the lumen from a coal fire; which lumen . . . is turned into dense thick darkness by the light of Heaven when it inflows.

8148<sup>4</sup>. Falsities are like the lumen from (that fire).

8636. From (the senses, man) has acquired a lumen which is called natural lumen; from which he sees nothing else than the things of the world and of self, and not the things which are of Heaven and of God . . .

8916. And the lumen of the world relatively to the light of Heaven is like a cloud, or relatively to the flame is like smoke.

8918. The (Angels) then fall from the light of Heaven into the lumen of nature, which to them is thick darkness.

8941<sup>3</sup>. The second religiosity (from Own intelligence) is one in which the lumen of nature is everything.

8944. It is believed in the world that man can know many things of religion from the lumen of nature . . .

— This is evident from the learned of the world, who by means of knowledges have raised the lumen of their nature above that of others . . .

— Hence it is evident of what quality is the lumen of nature without revelation. —

— Many who . . . from the lumen of their own nature have dexterously confirmed those things which belonged to the doctrine of their Church . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The gentiles . . . have not had this knowledge from the lumen of their own nature . . .

8951. (Some in Saturn call their great nocturnal lumen the Lord . . .)

9141<sup>2</sup>. The love of falsity and the faith of falsity make the lumen of life with an evil man and a Spirit of Hell.

9188<sup>4</sup>. Such persons see from the external man . . . thus from natural lumen, and nothing from spiritual light.

9391<sup>13</sup>. To hatch truth . . . from one's Own lumen. Sig.

10156<sup>2</sup>. Those who are . . . in no other light than the light of the world . . . even if they want to enter into the things of Heaven by their lumen, which is called natural lumen, there comes over them as it were a thick darkness . . . Hence it is that the merely natural man, however much he may believe himself to surpass others in lumen, at heart denies Divine and heavenly things . . . It is otherwise with those who suffer themselves to be elevated by the Lord into the light of Heaven . . .

10201<sup>4</sup>. For with them the internal man is closed, which sees from the light of Heaven; and the external man is open, which sees from the light of the world; and to see anything from the light of the world without an influx of light from Heaven, is to see the things of Heaven in thick darkness; nay, in proportion as the man has then kindled natural lumen by the loves of self and of the world, in the same proportion he rushes into falsities . . .

10400<sup>2</sup>. When the external man, when reading the Word, sees without the internal, he sees in thick darkness; for natural lumen without light from Heaven is mere thick darkness in spiritual things; and light from Heaven enters through the internal man into the external, and illuminates the latter.

10675<sup>8</sup>. He who sees solely from the world sees from fatuous lumen, which lumen becomes mere thick darkness when light from Heaven inflows into it.

10694. For they who are in externals without an internal are in the love of self and of the world, and are thence in a lumen which is called natural lumen. But they who are in the externals and at the same time in the internals of the Church . . . are in love towards the neighbour and in love to the Lord, and are thence in the light of Heaven . . .

10780. That it is so cannot be apprehended by man from the lumen of nature; for from this lumen he does not know the laws of Divine order.

H. 130<sup>2</sup>. See LIGHT, here.

[H.] 170. The man who thinks solely from natural lumen does not comprehend that . . .

171<sup>e</sup>. When it pleases the Lord (the eyes of a man's spirit) are opened, and he is withdrawn from the natural lumen in which he is from the senses of the body, and is elevated into spiritual light, in which he is from his spirit . . .

176<sup>e</sup>. Those who have not extinguished with themselves the light of Heaven by natural lumen and its fallacies . . .

352. The interiors of these are not open except from beneath, but their exteriors [are open] in proportion as they have confirmed themselves; and therefore the light from which they see is not the light of Heaven, but is the light of the world, which is called natural lumen; for in this light falsities can shine as do truths; nay, when confirmed, they can be resplendent; but not in the light of Heaven.

553<sup>4</sup>. As soon as anything of light from Heaven is let in, the human forms (of the infernals) are turned into monstrous forms . . . Hence it is that they shun the light of Heaven, and cast themselves down into their own lumen, which lumen is like the lumen from ignited coals, and in some places is like that from burning sulphur; but even this lumen is turned into mere thick darkness when anything of light from Heaven inflows thither. Hence it is that the Hells are said to be in 'darkness.' 584.

584<sup>2</sup>. The eyes (of the infernals) are accommodated to the reception of this lumen (as from ignited coals), because while they lived in the world they had been in thick darkness as to Divine truths, by denying them; and had been as it were in lumen as to falsities, by affirming them, whence the sight of their eyes had been so formed. Hence, too, it is, that the light of Heaven is thick darkness to them, and therefore when they go out of their caves they see nothing. (Continued under LIGHT.)

J. 58<sup>5</sup>. Those of the Babylonish crew who were in the east were pre-eminently in lumen, which lumen they had prepared for themselves by art.

W. 166<sup>2</sup>. To think so is contrary to the lumen of sound reason.

P. 166. The natural and rational lumen is not from this latter light, but from the former. (See LIGHT, here.)

R. 148. (That they overcome evils) by truths from the sense of the letter, and at the same time by rational things from natural lumen. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. By 'iron' is signified natural truth . . . and at the same time the natural lumen of man. In these two things consists the power of truth.

695<sup>2</sup>. When the light of Heaven inflows into the chambers with those in Hell, it becomes so dark that they cannot see one another; and therefore all Hell is closed, so that not a chink is open; and then they are in their own lumen. The reason they do not appear to themselves to be in darkness, but in lumen, although they are in falsities, is that their falsities, after they have confirmed them, appear to them as truths. Hence is their lumen; but it is a fatuous lumen, as is the lumen of the confirmation of falsity. This lumen corresponds to the lumen of the sight of owls and bats, to which [birds] darkness is lumen, and lumen is darkness . . .

897. 'Her light was like unto a stone most precious' (Rev. xxi. 11) . . . By 'her light' is signified the Divine truth there; for this is meant in the Word by 'light.'

919. That the men of (the New) Church will not be in the love of self and in Own intelligence, and thence in natural lumen alone; but in spiritual light from the Divine truth of the Word from the Lord alone. Sig. and Ex.

940. That in the New Jerusalem . . . men will not be in Knowledges concerning God from natural lumen, which is from their Own intelligence, and from glory originating from conceit; but will be in spiritual light from the Word from the Lord alone. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. It shall be explained . . . what natural lumen from the glory originating from conceit is. There is a natural lumen from the glory originating from conceit, and also [one which is] not from conceit. Those have a lumen from the glory originating from conceit who are in the love of self and thence in evils of every kind . . . These are in natural lumen from the glory originating from conceit; for the love of self in the will becomes conceit in the understanding; and this conceit from that love can elevate the understanding even into the light of Heaven . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. But natural lumen from the glory which is not from conceit is with those who are in the delight of uses from genuine love towards the neighbour. The natural lumen of these is also rational lumen, in which, within, there is spiritual light from the Lord. The glory with these is from the resplendence of the light which inflows from Heaven . . .

I. 6<sup>5</sup>. It is believed that natural lumen—which is also rational—is from the light of our world; but it is from the light of the Sun of the Spiritual World; for the sight of the mind inflows into the sight of the eye; and it is the same with lights; and not the reverse way.

T. 40<sup>2</sup>. When the higher regions of the mind, where the true light of life dwells, are closed up, the region of the mind below them opens itself, into which only the lumen of the world is admitted; and this lumen, separated from the light of the higher [regions], is a fatuous lumen, in which falsities appear as truths, and truths as falsities . . .

Ad. 940<sup>2</sup>. But the lumen in which the objects of the memory are seen, even with closed eyes, comes from its own little founts, which are Spirits of various natures in the infra-celestial sphere . . . But natural lumen [comes] from its own luminaries, namely from the sun, moon, stars, flames, and phosphorescent substances.

D. 1680. The lumen in the rotunda was like a living flame . . .

1689. The same [Spirits] presented a flaming lumen . . . under the left of the chin . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. Spirits are wont to show fixed lights.

3410. I was shown in what lumen (the dragon) was. It was said that he was in a lumen. Des.

— . There are many such . . . who are nocturnal fiery lumens; thus who are circumfused with such a lumen . . .

—<sup>v</sup>. They are nocturnal lumens; nay, waxen lumens, rather; because there is in them more of sulphur than of tallow.

3840<sup>o</sup>. He afterwards presented a luminous obscure something as the lumen of the Holy Spirit, about which (the Quakers) are wont to preach much, and by which they understand a mere luminous obscure something, and not intellectual lumen.

3853. They said that these things signify the lumen of corporeal or sensuous things.

— . By these things they said is signified natural lumen, that it is such.

4047. On candles and lights.—Candles have very often been seen by me, and the light from them . . .

4627<sup>b</sup>. Every division of the interiors of man has a distinct lumen and a distinct heat. The Sensuous has a relatively gross lumen. (Continued at A.6310, above.)

—<sup>6</sup>. This lumen is presented when such things come in the way of the thought as are entirely seen, heard, and felt . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. When a man is elevated from this lumen . . . he comes into an interior lumen, which is not of the Sensuous, but of the interior Natural. When a man is in this lumen he is in a better state, and is then in apperception about sensuous things; and if he is able to think still more interiorly about their quality and about the causes, he is then in a still more interior lumen, namely, in spiritual [lumen] of the Natural. This light is partly from the light of Heaven in natural light. The ancient Sophi . . . knew this, and said . . . that if the lower mind were to be withdrawn from sensuous things, it would come into a higher light and bliss.

—<sup>8</sup>. Thus the understanding sees by the light of Heaven; the interior understanding by the light of Heaven, the exterior by the influx of the light of Heaven into the lumen of the world . . . Hence, from light are thought, apperception, reflection, animadvertence, prudence, rational analysis, the faculty of judging, of discriminating, and of choosing. All these are from light, because they are of the internal sight. And therefore whatever a man hears passes into that light . . .

—<sup>12</sup>. Once at daybreak it was granted me to see by sensuous lumen the Spirits who in the other life were in this lumen. (Their appearance des.)

—<sup>13</sup>. He who is in this gross lumen—that is, in sensuous lumen—is also in the pleasures of the body and of sensuous things . . . and when he thinks from this lumen about the truths of faith . . . he rejects them . . .

—<sup>14</sup>. When a man is being regenerated the truths of faith and goods of charity are insinuated by the Lord into the things which are of sensuous lumen and heat . . . nor do they suffer themselves to be withdrawn; for then spiritual lumen is in that lumen, and leads it as the soul does the body.

—<sup>15</sup>. The reason sensuous lumen is such, is that all who are in the World of Spirits from Hell are in such lumen; and when one is in such lumen he is in consort with the infernal crew there.

4629<sup>6</sup>. They who are in sensuous lumen very rarely if ever can be in good and truth, or have good and truth as the end . . . but only themselves . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. All adulterers are in sensuous lumen . . . and so also are the voluptuous and avaricious.

—<sup>8</sup>. Whenever I have come into this lumen, there has inflowed what is evil and false, what is in the nature of a stumbling-block against the Lord, Heaven, good and truth, also filthy things, especially the lascivious things of adulteries. The reason is that the Spirits who are such are in this lumen, and then inflow; and there are few who have suffered themselves to be regenerated down to the Sensuous. . . As soon as I was withdrawn from that lumen into the lumen of the interior Natural . . . I was taken away from those things, and I came into thought and faith about good and truth. But man is much in sensuous lumen. But there are those who are in the lumen of the interior Natural: this alternately: and those who are evil are led by interior evil Spirits . . .

4631<sup>e</sup>. That lumen is darkness and thick darknesses.

4757<sup>e</sup>. The reason is that they are in the lumen of nature, and not in the light of Heaven; thus with infernals . . .

4759<sup>2</sup>. Because they are in the lumen of nature not illustrated by the light of Heaven.

—<sup>e</sup>. Because (the Angels) are in the light of Heaven; but (the infernals) in the lumen of Hell; which is such as is the lumen of nature not illustrated by the light of Heaven. This lumen is what is called 'darkness' in the Word.

4825. On external sensuous lumen.—There were two who had been in stations of dignity . . . and there was communicated to me the lumen of their understanding, which vibrated before the eyes . . . and took away all lumen or all understanding of things in an interior manner, so that I could apprehend nothing . . . there being left only a method of thinking . . . It was external sensuous lumen. They had such lumen because they had cared for nothing else than corporeal things . . . and especially because they had loved themselves more than others. It was said by the Angels that men at this day are for the most part such; and therefore they dwell in what is obscure, where there is scarcely anything of lumen.

5248. The Mohammedans are in natural lumen more than Christians, and also long to know truths more than they do.

5705. In general, sensuous lumen appears to the ignorant like spiritual lumen . . . and besides sensuous lumen is more resplendent than interior lumen, because it is in the world. Those who are evil are especially in sensuous lumen, and are much more skilful than others; and were therefore called serpents by the Ancients; for they can reason above all others.

E. 366<sup>2</sup>. The light which is from that fire is light such as is with those in Hell, which is fatuous light, like the light from ignited coals . . . Such also is the light which with the evil is called natural lumen, when they are reasoning against the things of the Church.

[E.] 410<sup>2</sup>. The thick darkness in these gates appears . . . to evil Spirits as a luminosity. The reason is that there is no light of Heaven there, but fatuous lumen, which is natural lumen without spiritual. But their luminosity is not like the diurnal luminosity in the world, but is like the nocturnal one for owls, bats, etc., which see nothing in the light of day, and therefore the light of day is thick darkness to them, but the darkness of night is lumen. Their sight is such because it is formed from falsities and evils, which in themselves are darkness and thick darkness . . .

526<sup>16</sup>. 'Darkness' also = natural lumen ; for relatively to spiritual light this is like darkness ; and therefore when the Angels look down into the natural lumen of man—such as there is in the natural thought of man—they regard it as darkness ; and the things which are in it as being in darkness. This lumen is signified, by 'darkness' in Gen.i.2-5.

527<sup>4</sup>. But by 'the darkness' (id.) is signified the lumen which is in the natural man, which is also called natural lumen ; because, relatively to spiritual light, this lumen is darkness ; and therefore it is meant by 'darkness.' (Continued under LIGHT.)

650<sup>3</sup>. The reason these Hells are more malignant than the rest, is that in proportion as a man is in the love of self, and at the same time in the love of his own intelligence, in the same proportion his natural lumen is in a certain quasi resplendence ; for the love of self is like a fire which kindles this lumen. Hence it is that they can think and reason cleverly against the Divine . . . When I have heard them, I believed that they pre-eminently could be brought to receive faith ; but I have noticed that this was impossible ; for in proportion as corporeal, worldly, and natural things were in light, in the same proportion celestial and spiritual things were in thick darkness with them. The thick darkness has been seen ; and was utterly dusky, intermingled with a fieriness.

776. As man from birth is in falsities from evils, he easily seizes . . . on them ; for they agree with his first natural lumen, and with the heat of this lumen, which is from the fire of the love of self or of the love of the world.

820<sup>2</sup>. For from the world man does not know anything about Heaven and Hell, the life after death, or God. His natural lumen does not teach anything but what has entered through the eyes ; thus nothing but what is of the world and of self . . .

837<sup>4</sup>. Reformation is effected in this order : man must first infl the memory from the knowledges and Knowledges of truth and good, by means of which he must procure for himself the lumen of reason . . .

846<sup>2</sup>. The natural understanding, which is lowest, cannot be illustrated by its own lumen. (Continued under LIGHT.)

1010<sup>2</sup>. The love of honour, of command, and of supereminence . . . above all other loves extinguishes the light of Heaven, and induces the darkness of Hell . . . (This) does not appear to the man who is in it, because the natural lumen with such is resplendent in proportion as spiritual light is extinguished ; but this resplendence is from fatuous lumen ; for it is a lumen kindled from the love of glory ; thus from the love of Own intelligence . . .

1081<sup>4</sup>. 'If the lumen be darkness' = if the truth is falsity, or is falsified. And as truth falsified is worse than any other falsity, it is said, 'if the lumen be darkness, how great is the darkness.'

1144<sup>4</sup>. As, being inverted, the man no longer receives any good or truth from Heaven . . . therefore in order to be eminent over others he procures for himself a lumen by means of confirmations of evil from falsity, and of falsity from evil. This he believes to be rational lumen, when yet it is infernal lumen, and in itself is fatuous, from which he has vision like that of a dream in the night ; or he has a delirious phantasy, from which the things which appear as if they were not, and the things which are not as if they were.

J. (Post.) 16. It is a general thing for the Dutch nation to excel in judgment from natural lumen ; from which they view very justly those things especially which are of the world ; and as they are constantly thinking about their business, spiritual light stores itself away in natural light ; and therefore they are able to apprehend what is true in religion ; but still when convinced they turn their backs.

De Verbo 3<sup>6</sup>. All the thoughts of man, together with every one of their ideas, derive something from space, time, person, and what is material ; and they appear in natural light, or that of the world ; for nothing can be thought without light, as nothing can be seen without light ; and natural light, or the light of the world, is dead, because it is from its sun, which is pure fire. Nevertheless there everywhere and constantly inflows into this light the light of Heaven, and vivifies it, and gives a perception and an understanding of the subject. The mere light of the world cannot give anything perceptive or intellectual, or present any natural or rational lumen ; but the light of the world does give and present it from the light of Heaven, because the light of Heaven is from its Sun, which is the Lord, and therefore is life itself.

Luminary. Luminare.

A. 10. (Love and faith) are now kindled in the internal man, and are called 'two luminaries.'

30. 'God said, Let there be luminaries in the expanse of the heavens, to distinguish between the day and the night ; and let them be for signs, and for stated times, and for days, and years. And let the luminaries be in the expanse of the heavens to give light upon the earth ; and it was so done. And God made the two great luminaries ; the great luminary to dominate by day, and the lesser luminary to dominate by night, and the stars. And God set them in the expanse of the heavens, to give light upon the earth' (Gen.i.14-17). What 'the great luminaries' are, cannot be well understood unless it is first known what is the essence of faith, and also what is its progression with those who are being created anew. Ex. . . Scientific and intellectual faith are represented . . . by the inanimate things ; but faith vivified by love . . . by the animate things ; and therefore it here now for the first time treats of love and the derivative faith, which are called 'luminaries.' Love is 'the great luminary which dominates by day;' faith from love is 'the lesser luminary which dominates by night;' and as these ought to make a one, it is said of them in the singular, 'Let there be one . . . luminaries.' 34. 709<sup>e</sup>. 3235<sup>3</sup>, Ex. E.610<sup>7</sup>.

—<sup>3</sup>. Love and faith are circumstanced in the internal man as are heat and light in the external corporeal man . . . and therefore the luminaries are said to have been set 'in the expanse of the heavens,' or in the internal man; the great luminary in his will, and the lesser one in his understanding. But they only appear in the will and understanding, as the light of the sun does in objects. It is the mercy of the Lord alone which affects the will with love, and the understanding with Truth or faith.

31. That 'the great luminaries'=love and faith; and that they are also named 'the sun, moon, and stars,' is evident from the Prophets. III.

—<sup>3</sup>. As 'luminaries' represented and signified love and faith in the Lord, it was commanded in the Jewish Church that there should be a perpetual luminary kindled from evening to morning . . .

32. Love and faith are first called 'great luminaries,' and afterwards love is called 'the great luminary,' and faith 'the lesser luminary.' Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. That it is the Lord from whom is all love, was also represented by the great luminary, or sun, when He was transfigured . . .

39. After the 'great luminaries' have been kindled, and placed in the internal man, and the external man receives light thence, he then first begins to live . . .

1532<sup>e</sup>. 'Her luminary as a stone most precious' (Rev. xxi.11). (=truth from the Divine. 5922<sup>14</sup>.) (=the truth of faith, and the derivative intelligence. 9872<sup>3</sup>.)

6015<sup>e</sup>. 'Luminaries'=goods and truths.

9473. 'Oil for the luminary' (Ex.xxv.6)=the internal good which is in mutual love and in charity. . . 'The luminary'=mutual love and charity. The reason 'the luminary'=mutual love, is from the flame, by which is signified this love; and the reason it=charity, is from the heat and light thence . . .

9712. Lastly, it treats (in Ex.xxvii.) concerning the good of charity, through which the Spiritual Heaven is illuminated by the Lord in the truths of faith. These things are signified by 'the oil of olive,' and by 'the luminary.'

9782. 'For the luminary' (ver.20)=the Spiritual Heaven; (for) 'the luminary,' or candelabrum,=the Spiritual Heaven.

E. 268<sup>e</sup>. By 'the luminary' of the Holy Jerusalem is signified the Divine truth of the Church shining; 'the luminary'=the truth itself shining.

3043<sup>e</sup>. By 'the luminaries of light in the heavens' (Ezek.xxxii.8) are meant the sun, moon, and stars; and by the sun is signified love; by the moon, the derivative faith; and by the stars, the Knowledges of good and truth. 401<sup>21</sup>.

401<sup>13</sup>. 'I will blacken all the luminaries of light above thee' (id.)=all truths.

3351. They who then formed the choirs were from the province of the lunge; thus were from the Lord's Spiritual Kingdom; for they inflowed softly into the respiration. But the choirs were distinct; some pertained to the voluntary respiration, and some to the spontaneous respiration.

3884<sup>2</sup>. The second general operation of Heaven (was) into the breathing of the lungs. (Continued under BREATHE.)

—<sup>3</sup>. The times of the beating (of the heart) were . . . of such a character as to cease in the pulmonic actions, and thus govern them. How the alternations of the heart insinuated themselves into the alternations of the lungs, at the end of each respiration, it was given in some measure to observe.

3886<sup>e</sup>. (The affections of love) pertain to the province of the heart; (the intellectual ideas) to that of the lungs.

3887<sup>2</sup>. Hence comes forth all sensation, and also all action, which are proper to the body, as may also be evident from embryos and new-born infants, which cannot have any bodily sensation, nor any voluntary action, until their lungs have been opened, and thus until there is an influx of the (heart) into the (lunge). The case is the like in the Spiritual World . . . (Continued under HEART.)

[A.] 3893. There were angelic choirs who were celebrating the Lord . . . They belonged to the province of the lungs and their functions ; for singing belongs to these, because this is the office of the lungs . . . They were permitted to rule my respiration . . .

4791. The tongue affords entrance to the lungs and also to the stomach ; and it thus represents as it were the court to spiritual things and to celestial things ; to spiritual things because it ministers to the lungs and the derivative speech . . .

6326<sup>2</sup>. How the most perfect variations exist in the purer forms may be concluded from the lungs, which fold themselves variously and vary their forms according to each word of speech, each tone of song, each motion of the body, and also according to each state of thought and affection . . .

9235. This resulted from the fact that the inhabitants of the moon did not speak so much from the lungs as do the inhabitants of other Earths ; but from the abdomen, and thus from some air collected there ; the reason being that the moon is not circumfused with an atmosphere like that of other Earths.

W. 382. That the understanding corresponds to the lungs. Gen.art.

— . There are two things which reign in the . . . mind—the will and the understanding, and there are two things which reign in the . . . body—the heart and the lungs ; and there is a correspondence of all things of the mind with all things of the body . . . Moreover, everyone can notice in himself that the understanding corresponds to the lungs ; (for) no one can think unless the pulmonary breath concurs and concords ; and therefore when a man thinks tacitly he breathes tacitly, and if he thinks deeply he breathes deeply . . . and if he holds the breath altogether he cannot think, except in his spirit from its respiration, which is not manifestly apperceived. Further ex. D. Wis. vi<sup>9</sup>.

403<sup>2</sup>. So that when the lungs respire, each and all things, in general and in part, receive something from the respiratory motion. Des.

405. The lungs des.

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that the lungs are able to respire non-synchronously with the heart . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) it may be seen from the influx of the blood from the heart into the lungs in what way the will inflows into the understanding . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. It follows that the blood-vessels of the heart in the lungs correspond to the affections of truth ; and that the ramifications of the bronchia of the lungs correspond to the perceptions and thoughts from those affections . . . 412<sup>2</sup>. 420.

407. So long as man is an embryo the lungs are closed, and therefore he has no sense and no action ; the sensories are closed up ; the hands are tied, and in like manner the feet. But after birth the lungs are opened ; and as they are opened so the man feels and acts. The lungs are opened by means of blood let in from the heart.

—<sup>e</sup>. (In swoons, etc.,) the blood does indeed make its circle through the lungs, but through the pulmonary arteries and veins, and not through the bronchial arteries and veins, and it is the latter which give man the faculty of breathing. It is the like with the influx of love into the understanding.

408. That the lungs are introduced into all these things in like manner as the understanding is introduced into all things of the mind, may be evident from the things which have been shown above . . .

— . (Thus) it is evident that each and all things in the whole body are so connected through the ligaments emitted from the ribs, vertebrae, sternum, and diaphragm, and from the peritoneum which hangs on these [supports], that when the lungs are respiring they are drawn and carried along in like manner into alternate acts.

413<sup>2</sup>. That (the understanding can be elevated) may be seen in a certain effigy in the lungs, because the lungs correspond to the understanding. It can be seen from the cellular substance in the lungs, which consists of the bronchia continued down to the most minute follicles, which are the receptacles of the air in the respirations. These are the things with which the thoughts make one by correspondence. This follicular substance is such that it can be expanded and contracted in a twofold state ; in one with the heart, and in the other almost separate from the heart. (Continued under HEART.)

415. As, by correspondence, the thoughts act as one with the respirations, it is evident from the twofold state of the lungs as to respiration that a man can think in one way . . . when in company with others, and in another way . . . when not in company . . .

D. Love v<sup>2</sup>. (The uses of the lungs in the body. Enum.)

D. Wis. iii. 5. Will and understanding do not begin with man until the lungs have been opened. Ex. (See also D. Wis. v.)

vi<sup>4</sup>. The case is the like with the lungs; by the soul or spirit of which is signified the understanding; for as the heart corresponds to the love or will, so the soul or spirit of the lungs—which is the respiration—corresponds to the understanding. Hence it is that it is said in the Word that man is to love God with the whole heart and the whole soul . . . In like manner that God will create in man a new heart and a new spirit . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. That the government of the lungs also [prevails] in the body, may be evident to every anatomist; for the lungs by their respiration act upon the ribs and the diaphragm; and (through these) by means of the ligaments and by means of the peritoneum upon all the viscera of the whole body, and also upon all its muscles . . . so that there is not the smallest thing in a viscera or in a muscle . . . which does not derive something from the ligaments, and consequently from the respiration. The stomach [does this] above all the rest, in consequence of its oesophagus passing through the diaphragm, and adjoining itself to the trachea which comes from the lungs. And hence the heart itself has, in addition to its own, a pulmonary motion; for it inclines upon the diaphragm, and lies in the bosom of the lungs, and by means of the auricles coheres with and is continued into them; and in like manner also what is respiratory passes through into the arteries and veins; and therefore they have their joint dwelling in one chamber separate from the rest of the body, which chamber is called the breast.

the co-operation of the cardiac motion and the pulmonary motion, which exists in each thing; both the general one which is external, and the singular one which is internal . . .

— By means of a wonderful and inexpressible fluxion into gyres the Angels formed a likeness of the heart and a likeness of the lungs, with all the interior and exterior things of their contexture, and they were then following the flux of Heaven; for Heaven strives to be in such forms from the influx of love and wisdom from the Lord. Thus did they represent each thing which is in the heart and each thing which is in the lungs, and also their union, which they called the marriage of love and wisdom . . .

—<sup>9</sup>. For after birth the lungs are opened, and together with the heart commence the active life which is of the will, and the sensitive life which is of the understanding of man. The latter and the former life do not exist from the separate operation of the heart, nor from the separate operation of the lungs; but from their co-operation.

vii. That the conjunction of the body and spirit with man is effected by means of his cardiac and pulmonary motions; and that their separation takes place when these motions cease. Gen.art.

3. That the pulsation of the heart and the respiration of the lungs (of the spirit) inflow into the pulsation of the heart and the respiration of the lungs with man in the world. Gen.art.

— That while man lives in the world he has a twofold pulmonary respiration, and a twofold cardiac pulsation, is not known . . . But that both motions constantly come forth in man, and that those two motions of the spirit inflow into these two motions of the body, it has been given to perceive sensibly. (Continued under BREATHE, at W.391.) (Moreover) as every man is endowed with a double respiration, one within the other, he can think rationally from the understanding; nay, even spiritually, and is thereby also distinguished from beasts; and can moreover be illustrated as to the understanding, be elevated into Heaven, and breathe with the Angels, and thus be reformed and regenerated. Besides, where there is an external, there must also be an internal; and this latter must be in every action and in every sensation. The external gives what is general, and the internal gives what is singular; and where there is no general there is no singular. Hence it is that with men there exist both an external and an internal systolic and animatory motion; an external one which is natural, and an internal one which is spiritual. Thus also the will together with the understanding can produce corporeal motions; and the understanding together with the will can produce corporeal senses. A general and a singular pulsation and respiration exist also in beasts; but both the External and the Internal with them are natural; whereas with man the External is natural and the Internal is spiritual. In a word, such as is the understanding, such is the respiration; because such is the spirit of man. The spirit is that which thinks from the understanding and acts from the will. In order that these spiritual operations may inflow into the body, and enable man to think and will naturally, the respiration and the pulsation of the spirit must be conjoined with the respiration and the pulsation of the body ; and there must be an influx of the one into the other ; otherwise no translation is possible.

[D. Wis.] x. 3<sup>2</sup>. For the lungs, which correspond to the understanding, not only purge the blood of its feculent things . . . but also nourish it from the air ; for the air is full of volatile elements and odours, which are homogeneous with the matter of the blood ; and there are also innumerable sanguineous networks in the lobules of the bronchia, which according to their wont imbue the things which come to them, in consequence of which the blood becomes lively and bright . . . That the atmosphere nourishes the pulmonic blood with new aliments, is evident from much experience ; for there are some currents of air which are injurious to the lungs, and some which recreate them . . . There are also those who have lived long without earthly food ; thus on atmospheric food alone ; and there are species of animals, such as bears, vipers . . . which prolong their life without any other food. From these things it is evident that the pulmonic blood is nourished also from the atmosphere ; and so also does the life of the understanding perfect and exalt the life of the will, according to correspondence.

4. The ligaments, being continued from the diaphragm or peritoneum, or from elsewhere, are in the alternate motion of the lungs. Hence it is evident that in motions the blood of the heart acts as first, and the respiration of the lungs as second. As the respiration in the muscles of the lungs acts as second, by means of the aforesaid ligaments, which are in its motion, [and] these ligaments constitute a general involucre to the muscles, and also to the coats of the moving fibres, and thus enter to the least things—there are reactions thence, both general and singular ; and the singular ones can be variously multiplied under the general one, according to the law of nature in all things. It is the like with the understanding and the will.

—<sup>c</sup>. But that the lungs act as first in the senses, and the heart as second, is evident from a survey of the organs of the senses . . . (for) all the organs of the senses correspond to such things as are of the understanding. Enum.

5. See SOUND, here.

—<sup>2</sup>. There are two lungs, which are called lobes ; the fountains of their respiration are called the bronchia ; the canal in which they cease is called the windpipe or aspera arteria : the head of this is called the larynx ; and the aperture for the sound there is called the glottis ; the continuation thence is into the nostrils and into the tongue ; and the exit is through the mouth of the lips. These in one complex are the things of the lungs, and their respiration and sounding ; and these taken together correspond to the understanding from the will ; their soundings to the understanding, and their motions to the will.

7<sup>2</sup>. As the heart in the womb forms the lungs, in order that through them it may perform respiration, and thus through respiration speech, so in like manner does love form the understanding, in order that through it it may think, and from thought speak . . . So also does love produce from itself affections, of which are the intentions ; and through these perception, to which belong lights ; and through perception thought, to which belong ideas ; and from these memory ; and these taken together are the understanding of the love, to which in a like series correspond all things of the lungs.

—<sup>o</sup>. He who can examine may see that there are progressions of uses from first to last in these things like the things which are in the lungs.

C. J. 55. I have heard and seen Luther many times. . . . He has often wanted to recede from his faith alone, but in vain ; and therefore he is still in the World of Spirits . . . where he sometimes suffers hard things.

P. 259<sup>o</sup>. I have heard Luther . . . cursing faith alone, and saying that when he established it he was warned by an Angel of the Lord not to do so ; but that he had thought within himself that if he did not reject works there would be no separation from the Catholic religiosity, and therefore he had confirmed it in spite of that warning.

R. IIa<sup>3</sup>. These things are from Luther . . .

T. 137<sup>8</sup>. He said, He lives not far from Luther's tomb. . . I said, Do you not know that Luther has risen again, and that at this day he has renounced his errors concerning justification by faith in three Divine Persons from eternity ; and that he has therefore been translated among the happy of the New Heaven, and that he sees and laughs at his insane followers ?

796. On Luther, etc., in the Spiritual World. Chapter.

— . As regards Luther : from the time when he first entered the Spiritual World, he was a most vehement propagator and defender of his dogmas, and his zeal for them increased as a multitude gathered from the earth who agreed with and favoured him. A house was given him there such as he had had . . . at Eisleben ; and there in its midst he erected a sort of throne slightly elevated, where he sat. He admitted hearers through the open door, whom he disposed into orders, setting those nearest him who favoured him the most, and those who favoured him less, behind them. He then spoke continuously ; but at intervals allowed questions, in order that he might take up the thread of his ended discourse from some new starting-point.

—<sup>2</sup>. From this general favour he at last imbued Persuasion, which in the Spiritual World is of such efficacy that no one can resist it, or speak against what is said. But as this was a kind of enchantment . . . he was strictly forbidden to speak from that Persuasion any more ; and thereafter he taught from the memory and the understanding together, as before.

—<sup>3</sup>. This was the state of his life up to the time of the Last Judgment . . . but a year after that he was brought from his first house to another, and then at the same time into a different state. And as he there heard that I, who am in the natural world, was speaking with those who are in the Spiritual World, he . . . came to me ; and after some inquiries and answers, he perceived that there is at this day the end of the former Church, and the beginning of the New Church . . . He also perceived that this New Church is meant by 'the New Jerusalem' . . . and by 'the Everlasting Gospel' . . . He was exceedingly indignant, and railed. But as he perceived that the New Heaven [increased] . . . and that the number of those who resorted to him daily diminished, his railing ceased ; and then he came nearer to me, and began to speak with me more familiarly ; and after he had been convinced that he had not taken his principal dogma of justification by faith alone from the Word, but from his Own intelligence, he suffered himself to be instructed concerning the Lord, charity, true faith, free-will, and redemption ; and this solely from the Word.

—<sup>4</sup>. At last, after conviction, he began to favour, and then to confirm himself more and more in the Truths from which the New Church is being established. At this time he was with me daily ; and then . . . began to laugh at his former dogmas as at such things as are diametrically contrary to the Word. And I heard him say, Do not wonder that I seized on faith alone as justifying, and that I excluded charity from its spiritual essence, and that I also took away from men all free-will in spiritual things, besides [holding] many things which depend on faith alone once accepted, as links on a chain, inasmuch as my end was to break away from the Roman Catholics ; and this end I could not follow out and attain in any other way. I therefore do not wonder that I erred ; but I do wonder that one raver should have been able to produce so many other ravers —and he looked at some dogmatical writers at the side

. . . faithful followers of his doctrine—so that they did not see the oppositions in the Holy Scripture, which nevertheless are very manifest.

[T. 796]°. It has been told me by the examining Angels that this Leader was in a state of conversion above many others who had confirmed themselves in justification by faith alone, because in his childhood, before he had entered on the reformation, he had imbedded the dogma of the pre-eminence of charity; for which reason also, in both, his writings and his discourses he has taught of charity so excellently; and it resulted from this that the faith of justification with him had been implanted in his external natural man; but had not been rooted in his internal spiritual man.

—°. I have conversed with the Prince of Saxony, with whom Luther was in the world; and he told me that he had often reproved Luther, especially for separating charity from faith, and for declaring faith to be saving and not charity . . . but that Luther had as often replied that he could not do otherwise, on account of the Roman Catholics. This prince is among the happy.

D. 4653°. When anything flows forth thence it is perceived as if [it were] from Luther.

5103. On Luther.

—°. One like a monk appeared . . . and it was said that it was Luther; and it was perceived that that crew (of hypocrites) was excited by him, against those who were with me, because they entirely disagreed with his doctrine concerning faith. . . I told him . . . that the two essentials of Divine worship are faith and charity; but that for man to be saved they must make one, besides many other things which were confirmed from Heaven. He stood listening, and consenting . . . But when he went away, he turned himself to where his delight carried him, which was to excite disturbances . . . Being again warned, he desisted, but betook himself upon a high rock; and when he saw us beneath, he again excited a like crew there. They said that they cannot do otherwise, because he has the persuasive force and also the authority of his opinion . . . But he was then punished and cast down. When he came to the valley he again excited the like disturbances, and also opened a Hell which is quite in the middle, under the groin, where there are those who believe that they know all things . . . and at the same time do not suffer others to speak . . . and not even to think, except those who agree with them . . . (Luther, being their Subject, had opened this Hell) for he is such that he wants all others to believe what he says, and [thinks] that he alone knows, and that he alone ought to speak. Nor does he permit others to believe and speak differently, always saying that they are truths themselves; and that they cannot be contradicted. J.(Post.) 31.

5104. In order that the disturbances and infestations might be appeased, he was driven to that place exactly under the groin, and was there let deeply down; and to places where they are continually quarrelling about all things, and where there are perpetual contradictions, and also fights . . . Luther is there.

5105. Luther had been there from the time when he came into the other life. He has not been fully devastated before; and therefore he could elevate [himself] from thence, and show what had been his quality in the world; namely, that he had been a quarreller; trusting in himself; he alone speaking; angry with all who did not agree with him; inveighing against all who disagreed . . . defending faith alone; caring little for the life; not knowing what charity is, nor what the neighbourhood. It was shown, from his excitation, that he had been a hypocrite; and it was said that he spoke in one way with princes, and in another with the common people . . . and that he had produced what was new from the itch of commanding . . . It was shown him that he was in darkness . . . and that he was ignorant what the light of Heaven was.

5106. He has now been devastated . . .

5910. (Luther said that when at the Holy Supper he had never thought about it according to his doctrine of it, because whenever he had attempted to do so he had been tormented.)

5911°, 5912. On hearing these things Luther burst out of his abode, because their speech pleased him, and he was then in the same, and in such a Persuasive . . . so that the truths which teach cannot be seen, because he suffocated the understanding . . . He had contracted the Persuasive by this: that whatever he had thought he had believed to be indubitable . . . His understanding is not interior, and therefore he became a turtle-dove as to the face, with a beak on the front part of the brain towards the mouth . . . This was done because he was drawing that forth solely from the thought, and nothing . . . from the will.

5913. At last, when his Persuasive had cooled down, I spoke to him about the Persuasive, and about persuasive faith, [saying] that it suffocates the understanding of others . . . Luther said that he is not allowed to be in his Persuasive, and that he is tormented whenever he comes into it, and that he therefore desists . . . but that he is still allowed to confirm his [doctrines] by reasonings . . .

5914. I afterwards spoke to him various things about the good of charity and the derivative faith; and this in intellectual light . . . and then angelic Spirits were associated with him, in order that he might perceive the things which were being said; and then he acknowledged them, and confessed that he had been in falsity; but [said] that he could not enter into these things any further, because he had confirmed himself in faith alone. He proceeded so far as this, that he wanted to make these things of his doctrine . . . but in vain, because he was then completely darkened as to his understanding . . . and he was therefore removed, and the angelic Spirits who had been adjoined to him were taken away; and so he returned into his own doctrine, and into his natural lumen, and consequently into his own life in which he had been before.

5915. Luther was pre-eminently fond of reasoning, and of confirming by means of reasonings; and he says that he rarely finds such as are able to reason with him about his doctrinal things, and he therefore grieves because he can rarely be in this delight. He was therefore told that the reason he is such is that he has hatched his dogmas from thought . . . and they who do this love to reason, and to present and hear such things cogitatively . . . and besides, his followers had thought but little about such things—only when they had preached and taught them—whereas he had thought about them continually, from morning to evening . . . J.(Post.) 31<sup>2</sup>.

5916. He is still preserved . . . because in his discourse he had said much about the good of love, and thus had still been in some good of life; and he has been told that whenever he had been in the good of his discourses and of his life he had not thought from his doctrine concerning faith alone.

5918<sup>e</sup>. Luther was in the pleasantness of his life when he was able to reason, and the more sharply the more he was in it. But when he was thinking by himself outside of what is doctrinal, he was in obscurity, and then he pondered about life. J.(Post.) 34.

6039. I spoke to Luther, and observed that he wanted to think against faith alone; but I perceived that he could not, because falsities filled his thought . . . He was carried from one Society into another, and also into that one where he was in the truth; but he could not stay there, because it was contrary to the delight of his conceit. He said that he had prayed to God that he might understand and make manifest the Truth; but that he had received for answer, that it would be given if he could receive it. J.(Post.) 36.

6040. See MELANCTHON, here.

6041. (Calvin said) that he had shown Luther that if faith alone were accepted, the things which are in the Word would be contradicted . . . and that Luther . . . had replied that if he were to receive works he would not recede far from the Papists. They afterwards communicated by letter, and Calvin had remained in faith with good works, but Luther in faith alone, believing that faith does indeed produce them as a tree does fruit; and saying that there is a conjunction, but he had not thought it out as his followers had done. He wrote to Calvin that he could not confirm works, because they are from man . . . J.(Post.) 25.

6042<sup>2</sup>. Luther afterwards obtained a ruinous-lacunatam-chamber in the neighbourhood of Melancthon, but more ornate than the chamber of Melancthon, because he had still spoken about works, which man must do from obedience, although he had not placed what is saving in them. I have sometimes heard about him that he wants to reject his principles concerning the separation, and that he has tried to do so; but in vain, because the density of the cloud which appears in his mind must first be dispelled.

—<sup>c</sup>. Luther has told me that he was told by an Angel from the Lord to beware of faith, because there is not anything in it; and therefore for some time he did beware, and recommended works; but he had still continued to separate works from faith, and so had cursed the Epistle of James, and had rejected the Apocalypse. J.(Post.) 33. 35.

6097. As Luther, and then Melancthon, began to make disturbances in defending faith separated . . . they were carried down from the Spiritual World into their places, according to their life, where they do not know who they are. This was done on the 30th of December, 1763.

J.(Post.) 33. The Angels have said that there is some hope of (Luther), because whenever in the world he had thought from his own spirit—that is, when he was left in quiet—he had thought about good works and had made them of religion; and that therefore it is that he has spoken and written so many things about the good of life, although he had not made it of his doctrine, nor for the sake of eternal life, because man cannot do what is good from himself . . . But when he came from the thought of his spirit into discourse with others, he then spoke about faith alone as if he had wheeled round. He does the like at this day.

36. After Luther had been informed by the Angels that no one has any faith unless he has the good of life . . . and as he had been convinced many times, he repented and laboured with all his might to make his escape from falsities . . . but as yet in vain. He has also prayed to the Lord that he might recede from his falsities . . . and therefore he was sent from one Society into another, where there were those with whom life had been conjoined with faith; but he could not stay long, because it was contrary to the delight of his life. He was told that the truths of doctrine cannot be received in the life until falsities have been rejected . . . In a word, Luther sometimes curses faith alone, and sometimes defends it. He curses it when he is in fear, and he defends it when he is in his love.

Machir. Machir.

A. 6584. 'The sons of Machir the son of Manasseh'
(Gen. l. 23) = as to the Voluntary and its derivatives. . .
The derivatives of the Voluntary of the Church, which are signified by 'the sons of Machir,' are goods conjoined with truths; thus also truths from good; for the truths which are derived from good are the forms of good. That 'the sons of Machir' = goods conjoined with truths, is signified by their being born on Joseph's knees
. . . and that they = truths from good, in the Book of Judges: 'From Machir shall descend lawgivers' (v. 14).
'Lawgivers' = truths from good.

E. 447<sup>4</sup>. 'From Machir shall descend lawgivers' = that the truths of good flow forth from the good of life; for 'Machir' has a like signification to Manasseh, because Machir was a son of Manasseh.

Machpelah. Machpelah.

A. 2901. 'Machpelah which is before Mamre' = regeneration.

2935. 'Let him give me the cave of Machpelah'
(Gen. xxiii. 9) = what is obscure of faith. 'Machpelah' = faith that is in obscurity. . . Since it is here said 'the cave of Machpelah,' and Machpelah was where the field was in the end of which was the cave, it is what is obscure of truth, or what is the same, what is obscure of faith; hence also it is manifest that 'Machpelah' is faith that is in obscurity.

2970. 'Which is in Machpelah which is before Mamre'
(ver. 17) = the quality and quantity of regeneration. . .
'Machpelah' = regeneration through the truth that is of faith.

— By 'Machpelah,' when 'cave' is joined to it, or when it is said 'the cave of Machpelah,' is signified faith that is in obscurity; but by 'Machpelah' when it is mentioned without 'cave,' and it follows that there was there 'a field and a cave,' is understood regeneration . . .

and moreover Machpelah was a tract in which there was also a sepulchre, by which is signified regeneration. 2980.

[A.] 3257. 'To the cave of Machpelah' (Gen.xxv.10) = resurrection as to truth.

6455. 'In the cave that is in the field of Machpelah' (Gen.xlix.30)=in that obscurity. 'A cave'=what is obscure, and also 'Machpelah;' but 'Machpelah'=the quality of the obscurity.

6548. 'In the cave of the field of Machpelah' (Gen. l.13)=the beginning of regeneration. . . 'Machpelah'=regeneration; thus the beginning of regeneration, for then faith is in obscurity. 6551,III. E.659<sup>16</sup>.

831<sup>2</sup>. These (self-indulgent and insinuating) women are those who in the other life become witches or sorceresses=praestigiatrices, some of whom are those who are called Sirens. They there seize upon arts which are unknown in the world. They are like sponges, and imbibe nefarious artifices, and that with such genius, that they promptly exercise them. The artifices unknown in the world which they learn there, are [as follows]. To speak as if they were elsewhere, so that the voice is heard as if it came from good Spirits, in some other place. They can be, as it were, present with many persons at the same time; thus persuading others that they are present everywhere. They speak like many together; and in many places at the same time.

They can avert the things which inflow from good Spirits . . . and instantly pervert them in various ways to favour themselves. They can induce the likeness of another by means of ideas which they catch and effigy. They can inspire everybody with affection for them, by insinuating themselves into the very state of another's affection. They can suddenly withdraw themselves from sight, and go away invisible. They can represent before Spirits a bright flame around the head; and this before many, which is an angelic sign. They can simulate innocence in various ways, and also by representing infants whom they kiss. They also inspire into others, against whom they bear hatred, to murder them, because they know that they cannot die; and they afterwards accuse them as murderers. They have excited from my memory whatever of evil I have thought and perpetrated; and this most skilfully. While I was asleep they have spoken to others exactly as from me, and in fact false and obscene things, so that the Spirits were persuaded. Besides many other things. Their nature is so persuasive that nothing of what is of a doubtful character is perceived to be therein; and hence their ideas are not communicated like those of other Spirits; and they have eyes resembling those ascribed to serpents, which see every way at once, and having the idea present everywhere. These sorceresses or Sirens are grievously punished; some in Gehennah; some in a certain court among snakes; some by tearings asunder and various collisions, with the greatest pain and torture. In course of time they are dissociated, and become like skeletons, from head to heel. 1094<sup>2</sup>.

1195. The rituals of that worship . . . were the source of . . . the magics.

1241. All the significatives and representatives which the Ancient Church had from the mouth of the Most Ancient Church . . . were turned . . . with some nations into things magical.

1380. The sorcerers and magicians=magici—in the other life by means of phantasies induce others to believe that when they are in one place they are at the same time in another, and even in many places . . .

1462. (The knowledge in Egypt was made magical.) 5700.

1515<sup>2</sup>. (Doctrinals turned by Sirens into things magical.)

2243<sup>4</sup>. The Ancient Church . . . was turned partly into magic . . .

3574<sup>2</sup>. They who are such are said to 'kiss the calves;' that is, to embrace magic and adjoin themselves to it.

3698<sup>o</sup>. Others were called diviners, soothsayers, sorcerers, and pythons, who were among those who had studied natural magic, whereby nothing of what is Divine could be foretold, but only that which is contrary to the Divine . . . This is magical, however it may appear in the external form.

3762<sup>2</sup>. Those wise ones who came to Jesus when He was born are called the magi; but so were the wise called at that time. III.

4013. The Egyptian magicians also used a rod when performing magical miracles.

4227<sup>2</sup>. By magical arts; thus by aid from the diabolical crew, (these Spirits) studied to arrive at their end.

4680<sup>2</sup>. In process of time (the Ancient Church) turned aside . . . in Egypt, Babel, and elsewhere, into things magical; for they began to worship external things without internal ones, and as . . . Heaven had thus recoiled from them, in its place there came Spirits from Hell, who led them. 4749.

4793<sup>1</sup>. When (these Spirits) cannot thus introduce themselves into the interiors . . . they try to do so by magical arts, of which there are many in the other life which are quite unknown in the world. By means of these arts they pervert the scientifics with a man, and apply only those which favour filthy cupidities. Such obsessions cannot be avoided, unless the man is in the affection of good, and is thence in faith in the Lord.

4936. See Ron, here.

4964<sup>2</sup>. The Egyptian magic itself originated from this; for they knew the correspondences of the natural world with the Spiritual one, which, after the Church had ceased with them, they abused to things magical.

5223. 'He sent and called all the magicians of Egypt, and the wise ones thereof' (Gen.xli.8)= in consulting scientifics both interior and exterior; (for) 'the magicians,' in a good sense, = interior scientifics. . . The reason why by 'the magicians and the wise ones of Egypt' are signified scientifics, is that Egypt was one of the kingdoms where the Ancient Representative Church was; but the scientifics of that Church were especially cultivated in Egypt, which related to correspondences, representatives, and significatives . . . The foremost ones among those who were skilled in and who taught these scientifics were called magicians (or magi) and wise ones. Those who were skilled in and taught the mystical scientifics were called magicians . . . But after they had begun to abuse the interior scientifics of the Church, and to turn them into things magical, then by 'Egypt' began to be signified the Scientific which perverts, and in like manner by 'the magicians of Egypt' . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The magicians of that time were acquainted with such things as are of the Spiritual World, which they had learned from the correspondences and representatives of the Church; and therefore many of them had communication with Spirits, and thence learned illusory arts, whereby they performed magical miracles: whereas those called 'the wise' did not care for such things; but solved enigmas, and taught the causes of natural things.

—<sup>3</sup>. But in the internal sense by 'the Egyptian wisdom' nothing else is signified than the knowledge of natural things; and by 'the magic,' the knowledge of spiritual things; thus by 'the wise, exterior scientifics; and by 'the magicians,' interior scientifics.

—<sup>4</sup>. That those were called 'magicians' who were in the knowledge of spiritual things, and also in the consequent revelations, is evident from 'the magicians (or magi) who came from the east to Jerusalem . . .' (Matt.ii.1,2). Further ill.

—<sup>5</sup>. That by 'magicians,' in the opposite sense, are meant those who have perverted spiritual things, and have thereby exercised magical arts, is known. Ill.

—<sup>6</sup>. Magic was nothing else than a perversion and a perverted application of such things as are of order in the Spiritual World; from this magic descends. But at this day this magic is called natural, because nothing above or beyond nature is any longer acknowledged.

5559<sup>2</sup>. With those who have been magical (the cuticles) appear like filthy intestines.

5566. He wanted to infest me by magical artifices . . .

5702<sup>2</sup>. (The Egyptians) turned into things magical the representatives and significatives of the celestial and spiritual things of the Ancient Church . . . 7097.

6052. Perverted scientifics are those which . . . invert order, like the magical things which were in Egypt; for there are very many things according to order which those magicians had abused . . . These (correspondences and representatives) follow from order even when applied by the evil; and when they are applied by them for exercising command over others, and for injuring others, they are perverted, because magical.

6484. (This Spirit) sought out magical artifices.

6692. For the representatives and significatives of the Ancient Church . . . were (in Egypt) turned into things magical. For at that time by means of the representatives and significatives of the Church there was communication with Heaven, which communication existed with those who were in the good of charity, and was open with many. Whereas with those who did not live in the good of charity . . . there was sometimes given open communication with evil Spirits, who perverted all the truths of the Church . . . Hence things magical.

—<sup>2</sup>. Magic is nothing else than a perversion of order: especially is it the abuse of correspondences . . . When a man believes that all things are of blind influx, and that if anything comes forth which is determined it is of his Own prudence, he perverts order; for he applies the things of order to himself . . . Hence, wonderful to say, all who have firmly impressed on themselves that all things are of their Own prudence, and nothing of the Divine Providence, in the other life are very prone to magic; and also imbue it so far as they can; especially those who . . . have devised many arts and astutenesses to elevate themselves above others. Such, when they have been judged in the other life, are cast towards the Hells of the magicians, which are in the plane beneath the soles, on the right, a little towards the front, stretching to a great distance, and in the deepest of which are the Egyptians.

—<sup>3</sup>. Lest, therefore, the representatives and significatives of the Church should be any longer turned into things magical, the Israelitish people were received . . . who were such that they could not make what is magical from them; for they were completely in externals . . . With such what is magical cannot come forth, such as there was with the Egyptians.

6832<sup>2</sup>. (In Hell) when everyone wants to be super-eminent, and to take from another what belongs to him . . . barbarities are exercised, especially by means of magical arts and phantasies; which arts are innumerable, and are utterly unknown in the world.

[A.] 6846. In Egypt and Babel were turned into things magical.

6917<sup>2</sup>. As the Egyptians had applied them to things magical . . . they were, with them, false scientifics.

7026. In the other life those who exercise things magical appear with rods . . . Hence, too, the Egyptian magicians had rods, by which they did such things as appeared to be miracles . . .

7097<sup>3</sup>. Many of them, in order to acquire power, learn magical things.

7296<sup>3</sup>. For those who in the life of the body have used cunning, and have devised many arts to defraud others, and at last from their success have attributed all things to their own prudence, in the other life learn things magical, which are nothing else than the abuse of Divine order, especially of correspondences . . . For example, the hands, arms, and shoulders correspond to power, and thence also a rod; and therefore they form rods for themselves, and also present representatively shoulders, arms, and hands, and thus exercise magical power. Ex. 10409<sup>6</sup>.

7298. Such a dulness is induced by the magicians in the other life, and this by the abuse and perversion of order; for they know how to take away the influx from Heaven . . . They know also how to induce fallacies . . .

—<sup>c</sup>. This is the reason why the magicians were allowed to do the same as Aaron. Ex.

7299. From the magicians in the other life there is taken away the power to abuse order and to pervert its laws—in two ways. One is that the Angels . . . annihilate their magical things . . . and the other is, that what is magical is quite taken away from them . . .

7337. 'The magicians of Egypt did so with their enchantments' (Ex. vii. 22) = that their falsifiers effigied the like. (For) the Egyptian magic . . . = the abuses of Divine order. 7388. 7426. 7429. 7530.

—<sup>c</sup>. Divine miracles differ from magical ones as Heaven differs from Hell. (Continued under MIRACLE.)

—<sup>3</sup>. For example: it is according to order that the states of affection and thought make the idea of place and distance there . . . The magicians there abuse this law of order; for they induce in others changes of state, and thus translate them now on high, now into the deep, and also cast them into Societies, so that they may serve them as Subjects.

7418. In the confines of the Hell of the magicians . . .

8200<sup>2</sup>. There are some who exercise power magically by means of truth from the Divine.

9391<sup>7</sup>. Hence the Egyptian magic.

10355<sup>4</sup>. When the knowledge of correspondences and representations had been turned into magic, that Church perished. 10632<sup>4</sup>.

10437<sup>2</sup>. Then the knowledge of correspondences and representations . . . was turned into magic . . . S. 22.

H. 488<sup>2</sup>. They who have ascribed all things to nature, and also to their Own prudence, and who by various arts have raised themselves to honours, and have gained wealth, in the other life study magical arts, which are abuses of Divine order, and in which they perceive the greatest delight of life. 508<sup>2</sup>.

508<sup>4</sup>. I have seen such . . . adoring a magician.

S. 102. They who were interiorly acquainted with the correspondences of that Word were called . . . afterwards, diviners and magicians.

6030. How magical things, sorceries, and the like are taken away from the evil.

— All who have been raised to honours or gains by arts . . . in the other life learn to act by correspondences; some by artificial garments . . . or by various motions of the members, or by the sight being determined to certain quarters . . . others excite Societies by sayings from the Word; and by a thousand other methods which are more or less magical . . .

6071. See POLHEM, here. 5059.

6098<sup>3</sup>. Therefore (this bishop) became a magician, and abused correspondences. Des.

D. Min. 4566. (Anthony) said that he had learned such magic in order that he might enter into the ideas of Spirits, and lead them . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. For interior magic is nothing but interior adulteries; for it produces such things.

4568. The nature of interior magic was shown; that it is secret hatred against the Lord, and against the innocent.

4575. A pair of scissors was represented by magical art . . .

4576. Shoulders, also, are represented magically. Ex.

4581. On magic.—The magical arts in the other life are so abundant and so wicked that they can never be described. Des. and Ex. 4596.

4603<sup>3</sup>. Many of the saints . . . are, more than others, magicians—magici. Enum.

4753. They who in the life of the body have been skilled in magical arts . . . in the other life become witches of a peculiar species. Des.

4758. These witches have also been with me . . .

4776. Magical art consists especially in this: that they communicate to others their wicked and filthy things by means of thoughts; and that they induce what is persuasive of piety, of honourableness, of innocence, and the like . . .

4779. When the magicians apperceived this, they, by means of magical art, effected something of communication . . .

E. 590<sup>2</sup>. In ancient times many kinds of infernal works were in use, which are called magics; some of which are enumerated in the Word, as in Deut. xviii. 9-11. (Continued under ENCHANT.)

827<sup>2</sup>. The celestial and spiritual things . . . remained as traditions with their priests and wise men, who were called magicians and soothsayers . . .

1182<sup>e</sup>. Such formerly were the pythons, and also the magicians in Egypt and in Babel; who, on account of their speech with Spirits, and on account of their operation being manifestly felt in themselves, were called wise ones; but the worship of God was thereby converted into the worship of demons . . . and therefore such intercourse was forbidden to the sons of Israel under penalty of death.

J. (Post.) 66. Francis Xavier . . . was a subtle magician . . .

Coro. 41<sup>2</sup>. That wisdom flourished in Arabia, is evident from . . . the three wise ones (magi) who came to Jesus when just born . . .

Magistrate. Magistratus.

A. 10793. Governors . . . over civil things are called magistrates, and their chief . . . the king. 10799.

Life 72. A magistrate—persona magistratus—who is in this good, does a good work whenever he disposes and judges . . .

M. 283. As it is of importance that those in authority—personis magistratus—should see and provide that order exists . . .

D. 5013. The English and others there are of that genius . . . that they think and do whatever the magistrate says . . . Therefore such magistrates are set over them . . .

D. Love xvii<sup>3</sup>. Magistrates, governors, and officials . . .

C. 161. Charity with magistrates.—By magistrates are meant the highest ones in kingdoms, republics, provinces, Cities, societies, over which they have jurisdiction in civil matters. Each of these, in his own place, if he looks to the Lord, and shuns evils as sins, and does the work of his supereminent function sincerely, justly, and faithfully, does the good of use to the community and the individuals in the community continually, and becomes charity in form. And this he does when he is affected by the good of the subjects or citizens; and, when this affects him, it affects him, together with men who are wise and fear God, to decree laws of use, to see that they are observed, and primarily to live under them; and also to appoint intelligent and at the same time benevolent officials under him over the assemblages, through whom, under his auspices, judgment and justice shall reign, and constantly perfect the common good. He will regard himself as the highest in the order of those who serve others; and not as the head; because the head leads all things of its body from love and wisdom in itself; and the Lord alone is love and wisdom in itself; by Whom he too will be led as a servant.

162. By the officials under magistrates are meant those who are set by them over the assemblages to discharge various necessary and useful functions . . .

A. 1149. 'Gomer, Magog,' etc. were so many nations with whom there was external worship which corresponded to internal; by whom in the internal sense are signified so many different doctrinals that were the same as the rituals which they sacredly observed. 1151, Ill.

1151<sup>4</sup>. 'Gog and Magog' = external worship separated from internal; that is, separated from love to the Lord and from love towards the neighbour; which is nothing else than idolatrous.

Magpie. Pica.

T. 42<sup>3</sup>. Those who believe a thing to be true because it has been declared to be so by a man of authority, are represented by magpies.

Mahalaleel. Mahalalel.

A. 463. The fifth Church was called 'Mahalaleel,' (Gen. v. 12). 506.

511. The life of those who constituted the Church Mahalaleel was such that they preferred delectation from truths to delight from uses.

Mahalath. Machalath.

A. 3687. 'Esau went to Ishmael, and took Mahalath the daughter of Ishmael, the son of Abraham' (Gen. xxviii. 9) = the conjunction of that good with truth from a Divine origin.

Mahanaim. Machanaim.

A. 4237. '(Jacob) called the name of that place Mahanaim' (Gen. xxxii. 2) = the quality of the state. . . In the Original Language, Mahanaim means two camps; and 'two camps' = both the Heavens, or both the Kingdoms of the Lord . . . and, in the supreme sense, the Divine Celestial and the Divine Spiritual of the Lord. Hence it is evident that the quality of the Lord's state, when His Natural was being illustrated by spiritual and celestial good, is signified by 'Mahanaim.'

Maid. See VIRGIN.

1486. (Abram) had . . . maid-servants, and she-asses' (Gen. xii. 16) = . . . the pleasures of scientifics.

1895. (Sarai) had a handmaid, an Egyptian' (Gen. xvi. 1) = the affection of knowledges. . . This affection, being of the exterior man, ought to serve intellectual truth . . . as a handmaid serves her mistress, or a maid-servant famula - her lady; and therefore this affection is that which is signified by the handmaid Hagar. Ex.

1900. 'Go in to my handmaid' (ver. 2) = conjunction with what is exterior. 1914.

2567. '(Abimelech took) men-servants and maidservants' (Gen. xx. 14) = (an enriching) also with rational truths and natural truths, and also with the affections thereof. Ex. and Ill.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'Men-servants and maid-servants' = lower truths and goods.

—<sup>7</sup>. 'Men-servants' = the truths, and 'maid-servants' the goods, which are of service. Ill.

—<sup>8</sup>. 'Maid-servants' = the goods of these truths; which goods, being lower ones, ought indeed to serve, but in a different manner; and therefore some of the laws delivered concerning maid-servants differ from those delivered concerning men-servants; for, regarded in themselves, truths are servants more than their goods are. Ill.

2583. 'And his maid-servants' (ver. 17) = as to the affections of doctrinal things; (for) 'maid-servants' = the affections of rational and scientific things; here, of doctrinal things, because they are predicated of the doctrine of faith; for they belonged to Abimelech.

2657. 'Cast out this handmaid and her son' (Gen. xxi. 10) = that the things of the merely human Rational should be banished. . . 'The handmaid' = the affection of rational and scientific things; thus the good of them. 3264.

3835. 'A handmaid' = external affections. Ex.

3925. 'A handmaid' = a medium which serves.

3956<sup>e</sup>. 'A handmaid' = an affirmative medium which serves for the conjunction of the external and the internal man. Refs.

4037. '(Jacob had) maid-servants and men-servants' (Gen. xxx. 43) = mediate goods and truths; that is, natural ones themselves; (for) 'maid-servants' = the affections of the Natural, consequently the goods there. 4153.

4244. 'A maid-servant' = the affection of (interior natural) truth.

4270. 'The two handmaids' (Bilhah and Zilpah) (Gen. xxxii. 22) = the exterior affections of truth which serve as media.

4344. 'Handmaids' = the affections of knowledges and of Knowledges; and also the media which serve for the conjunction of the external and internal man. Refs. 4345.

4360. 'The handmaids' = the affections of knowledges and of Knowledges, which are of the exterior man; consequently sensuous scientifics. Ex.

5023. The maid-servants and men-servants (in a house) = the pleasures and scientifics which minister and confirm.

7780. 'A maid-servant' = the affection of exterior truth, or the affection of knowledges; but 'the maid-servant behind the mills' (Ex. xi. 5) = the affection of knowledges which is in the highest degree external.

8890. 'Thy maid-servant' (Ex. xx. 10) = the Natural as to good.

8912. 'A maid-servant' = the affection of spiritual good. Ex.

8993. 'When a man shall sell his daughter for a maid-servant' (Ex.xxi.7)=the affection of truth from natural delight. . . 'A maid-servant'=external or natural affection. Ex.

8994. There are those who are in truth and not in its affection, and there are those who are in its affection; the former were represented by the man-servants from the sons of Israel, and the latter by the maid-servants also from the sons of Israel. But by 'the maid-servants' were not represented those who are in the genuine affection of truth, but those who are in a non-genuine one. Further ex.

8995. 'A maid-servant' of whom it is said that she 'is evil,'=affection from natural delight.

—<sup>2</sup>. That 'a maid-servant'=the affection of truth from the delights of the love of self or of the love of the world . . . and that this affection can be conjoined with spiritual truth . . .

9001<sup>e</sup>. But betrothal or conjunction with a maid-servant differs from conjunction with a daughter in this: that the latter conjunction is effected in the interior man, but the former in the external man.

9034. 'When a man shall smite his man-servant or his maid-servant with a rod' (ver.20)=if anyone within the Church ill-treats scientific truth or the affection thereof from his own power. . . 'A maid-servant'=natural affection; thus the affection of scientifics.

9059. 'Or the eye of his maid-servant' (ver.26)=(if he shall injure) the affection of truth in the External. . . 'A maid-servant'=the affection of natural truth.

9062. 'If he shall strike out the tooth of his man-servant or the tooth of his maid-servant' (ver.27)=if he shall destroy truth or the affection thereof in the Sensuous.

9081. 'If an ox shall strike with the horn a man-servant or a maid-servant' (ver.32)=if the affection of evil has destroyed truth or good in the Natural. . . 'A maid-servant'=the affection of truth in the Natural.

9281. 'The son of a maid-servant' (Ex.xxiii.12)=those who are in the affection of external truth; for. . . 'a maid-servant'=external affection. . . By 'the son of a maid-servant' are here signified those who are outside the Church . . . because they are from a lower origin.

M. 292<sup>3</sup>. (Let not the men consider their wives as viler than their maid-servants.)

T. 325. 'Thou shalt not covet thy . . . maid-servant,' etc. Ex.

D. 4500<sup>3</sup>. She effected the destruction of two maid-servants . . .

E. 1022<sup>3</sup>. By 'the man-servant and the maid-servant' (in the tenth commandment) are meant the affection of rational truth and good which serves the Spiritual.

De Conj. 88. Those who speak much about God, and yet are quite regardless about cheating men and plundering them of their goods, commit adultery with maid-servants, whom they often change.

Male. Mas, Masculus.

Masculine. Masculus.

See under MAN-vir.

A. 54. 'Male and female created He them' (Gen.i.27). What is meant by 'male and female,' in the internal sense, was very well known to the Most Ancient Church . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore they called the understanding in the spiritual man male, and the will female; and when these acted as one they called it a marriage.

475. 'Male and female created He them . . . ' (Gen.v.2). By 'male and female' is signified the marriage between faith and love. 476, Ex.

476<sup>2</sup>. As the state of the Church when it was spiritual is here treated of . . . 'male' precedes.

568<sup>3</sup>. The masculine sex has been so formed that understanding or reason shall reign. Such is also the disposition of their fibres, and such their nature . . . Hence it is that so many laws concerning the prerogative of the man and the obedience of the wife were delivered in the Jewish Church.

669. 'They shall be male and female' (Gen.vi.19) . . . 'Male'=truth; 'female'=good. 672, Ex. 725. 749.

770. When 'man and wife,' or 'male and female' are mentioned in the Word, 'man-vir,' and 'male'=intellectual things or the truths of faith; and 'wife,' and 'female'=voluntary things or the goods of faith.

2046. 'Every male' (Gen.xvii.12)=those who are in the truth of faith; (for) 'male'=truth. 2056. 2101.

2348. 'Old men-mares' (Zech. viii. 4) =confirmed truths.

[A.] 2466<sup>3</sup>. 'Images of a male' (Ezek.xvi.17)=that they appear as truths. (=appearances and likenesses of truth. 8904<sup>1</sup>.)

3242<sup>4</sup>. 'Every male' (Num.xxxi.7)=falsities.

4005<sup>2</sup>. In the Word an accurate distinction is made between males and females, as is evident from the sacrifices and burnt-offerings . . . By 'a male,' in general, is signified truth; and by 'a female,' good. Examp.

4500. 'They slew every male' (Gen.xxxiv.25)=that they extirpated the truths of doctrine . . . 'A male'=truth.

5198. For in the Word, where the male=good, the female=truth; and, vice versa, where the male=truth, the female=good. Examp.

7838. 'A male' (Ex.xii.5)=which is of the faith of charity; (for) 'a male'=the truth of faith; thus the faith of charity; for the truth of faith is not the truth of faith unless it is with the good of charity, and especially unless it is from it. The reason the paschal lamb was to be a male, was that that lamb=the innocence of those who are of the Spiritual Church; and those who are of the Spiritual Church are in no other good than that which in itself is the truth of faith; for this is called good when it is brought into act from the affection of charity. Hence it is that the lamb was to be a male. In other cases female lambs were employed in the sacrifices when worship from good was to be represented.

8009. 'Let every male be circumcised to him' (Ex.xii.48)=that the truth thereof must be defecated from impure loves. . . 'A male'=the truth of faith. 8076.

9297. 'Three times in the year all the male shall be seen at the faces of the Lord Jehovah' (Ex.xxiii.17)=the continual appearance and presence of the Lord thus in the truths of faith also. . . 'A male'=the truth of faith. —<sup>2</sup>. 10672.

10661. 'Of all thy cattle thou shalt give a male' (Ex.xxxiv.19)=that which is given by means of truth. Ex. 'A male'=truth.

R. 543. 'She brought forth a male son' (Rev.xii.5)=the doctrine of the New Church. By 'a son,' in the Word, is signified the truth of doctrine . . . but by 'a male son' is signified truth conceived in the spiritual man and born in the natural man . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. As . . . masculine offspring is truth and good in the understanding and thence in the thought; and feminine offspring is truth and good in the will, and thence in the affection . . .

M. 32. That (after death) the male is a male, and the female a female. Gen.art.

—. As a man lives as a man after death, and as man is male and female, and as the Masculine is one thing, and the Feminine another, and such another, that the one cannot be changed into the other, it follows that after death the male lives a male, and the female a female . . . It is said that the Masculine cannot be changed into the Feminine, nor the Feminine into the Masculine . . . but as it is not known in what the Masculine essentially consists, and in what the Feminine, it shall be told . . . The difference consists essentially in this: that the inmost in the male is love, and the covering of this is wisdom; or, what is the same, the male is love covered over with wisdom; and that the inmost in the female is that wisdom of the male, and the covering of this is the derivative love; but this love is feminine love, and is given by the Lord to the wife through the wisdom of the husband; whereas the former love is masculine love, and is the love of being wise, and is given by the Lord to the husband according to the reception of wisdom. It is from this that the male is the wisdom of love, and that the female is the love of this wisdom; and therefore from creation there has been implanted in both the love of conjunction into a one. . . That the Feminine is from the Masculine, or that the woman has been taken out of the man. Ill.

33. From this primitive formation it flows that the male is born intellectual, and that the female is born voluntary; or, what is the same, that the male is born into the affection of knowing, understanding, and being wise; and that the female is born into the love of conjoining herself with that affection in the male. And as the interiors form the exteriors to their own likeness, and as the masculine form is the form of understanding, and the feminine form is the form of the love of it, therefore it is that the male is different in face, in the tone of voice, and in the body, from the female; namely, being harder in the face, harsher in the tone of voice, and stronger in body, and also having a bearded chin, and in general a form more unbeautiful than the female. They differ also in their gestures and manners. In a word, there is not anything alike; but still there is what is conjunctive in each thing. Nay, the Masculine in the male is masculine in every part of his body, even the smallest, and also in every idea of his thought, and in every spark of his affection. In like manner the Feminine in the female; and as thus the one cannot be changed into the other, it follows that after death the male is a male, and the female a female. 37.

37<sup>2</sup>. For the male man and the female man have been so created, that from two they can become as it were one man, or one flesh; and, when they become one, then, taken together, they are a man in his fulness. But without this conjunction they are two; and each of them is like a divided or halved man . . .

51<sup>2</sup>. (After death) there is not anything wanting either in the male or in the female . . .

61<sup>o</sup>. The truth of good or truth from good is in the male, and is the Masculine itself; and the good of truth or truth from good is in the female, and is the Feminine itself; and between these two things there is a conjugal union. 88, Ex.

66. The male has been created to become wisdom from the love of being wise; and the female has been created to become the love of the male from his wisdom; thus according thereto; from which it is evident that two consorts are the very forms and effigies of the marriage of love and wisdom, or of good and truth.

90. That in the subjects of the animal kingdom the truth of good or truth from good is masculine; and that the good of truth therefrom, or the good from that truth, is feminine. Gen.art.

—. The male from this marriage (of good and truth) receives the truth of wisdom, and there is conjoined with it by the Lord the good of love according to the reception; and this reception takes place in the understanding; and therefore the male is born to become intellectual. (Shown from) his affection, application, manners, and form.

—<sup>2</sup>. The affection of the male is the affection of knowing, of understanding, and of being wise; the affection of knowing in childhood; the affection of understanding in adolescence and in early manhood; and the affection of being wise from this young manhood to old age; from which things it is evident that his nature . . . inclines to form the understanding; consequently, that he is born in order to become intellectual; but as this cannot be effected except from love, therefore the Lord adjoins this to him according to his reception; that is, according to the mind with which he wills to be wise.

—<sup>3</sup>. His application is to such things as are of the understanding, or in which the understanding predominates, of which many are public matters—forensia, and regard uses in public. . . His manners all partake of the predominance of the understanding; whence it is that the acts of his life—which are meant by his manners—are rational; and if not, he wants them to appear so; masculine rationality is also conspicuous in all his virtue . . . Add to this, that the Prolific is in him, which is from no other source than the understanding.

92<sup>e</sup>. As this universal sphere . . . of the marriage of good and truth, inflows into subjects according to the form of each, it follows that the male receives it according to his form, thus in the understanding, because he is the intellectual form; and that the female receives it according to her form, thus in the will, because she is the voluntary form from the intellectual one of the man.

98<sup>e</sup>. But these things have been said concerning the masculine sex; because it has allurement which actually kindles; and not concerning the feminine sex.

100. That the male—mas—and the female have been created to be the very form of the marriage of good and truth. Ex.

— For the male—mas—has been created to be the understanding of truth, thus truth in form; and the female has been created to be the will of good, thus good in form; and there has been implanted in each, from their inmosts, an inclination towards conjunction into a one. . . Thus the two make one form, which emulates the conjugal form of good and truth. Ex.

159. Because the male is born in order to become understanding, and the female in order to become will loving the understanding of the male . . .

168. This follows from the difference which there is between the Masculine and the Feminine. The Masculine is to perceive from the understanding, and the Feminine is to perceive from love; and the understanding perceives also those things which are above the body, and outside of the world—for the rational and spiritual sight goes thither; whereas love does not go beyond that which it feels: when it does go beyond, it derives it from the conjunction established from creation with the understanding of the man. For the understanding is of light, and love is of heat; and the things which are of light are clearly perceived, and those which are of heat are felt. From these things it is evident that on account of the universal difference which there is between the Masculine and the Feminine, the wisdom of the wife is not possible with the man, nor the wisdom of the man with the wife; nor is the moral wisdom of the man possible with women, in so far as it derives from his rational wisdom.

220. The Ancients . . . said that nothing is received by males from the spiritual marriage of good and truth . . . except truth, and that which has relation to truth; and that this in its progress into the body is formed into seed . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. As to formation (they said) that the masculine soul, being intellectual, is truth . . . and therefore when the soul descends, truth also descends . . . It follows that men have abundance according to the love of propagating the truths of their wisdom . . .

223. That the conjugal sphere is received by the feminine sex, and through it is transferred into the masculine sex. Ex.

— That there is not any conjugal love with the masculine sex, and that it exists solely with the feminine sex, and by this sex is transferred into the masculine one, I have seen testified by experience. Ref. (Moreover) the masculine form is the intellectual form, and the feminine form is the voluntary form; and the intellectual form cannot of itself grow warm with conjugal heat; but [it can do so] from the conjunctive heat of some one in whom this has been implanted from creation; consequently it cannot receive that love except through the voluntary form of woman adjoined to itself, because this latter form is also the form of love.

—<sup>3</sup>. It is from the transfer of this sphere from the feminine sex into the masculine one, that the mind is kindled by mere thought about the sex. That hence there is propagative formation and thus excitation, follows; for unless heat accedes to light on earth, nothing . . . is excited to fructify anything.

393. That the sphere (of the love of infants) principally affects the feminine sex, thus mothers; and the masculine sex, or fathers from them. Ex.

T. 585. In trees and all other subjects of the vegetable kingdom there are not two sexes . . . but every one of them is masculine. The earth alone, or the soil, is the common mother; thus is as the woman; for it receives the seeds of all plants. Fully ex.

D. 1061. According to institution from creation the masculine sex pertains to the classes of spiritual things; and the feminine sex to that of celestial things. Hence the precept of the first marriage: 'that the man should cleave to his wife;' that is, that intellectual things are to be associated with celestial things, so as to become one body.

6110. A male—mas—becomes the understanding of truth . . . when he wants to love the feminine sex.

E. 1957. That a male—mas aut masculus—= truth. Refs.

— Hence 'the images of a male'=appearances of truth. (=falsities. 324<sup>15</sup>.) (=appearances of truth, which yet are falsities. 725<sup>10</sup>.) 827<sup>6</sup>.

555<sup>14</sup>. 'A male' (Gen.i.)=the truth which is of the understanding; and 'a female,' the good which is of the will.

652<sup>12</sup>. 'Males and old women' . . . =those who are intelligent and wise . . .

710<sup>32</sup>. 'The male which first opens the womb' . . . =truth from good.

721<sup>22</sup>. 'A male-mas'=the truth of the Church.

724. 'A male son'=the doctrine of truth which is for the New Church. Ex. 725, Ill. 758.

725<sup>2</sup>. It follows that by 'a male' is meant the truth of the Church; and by 'a female' its good: thus also by 'a male' is meant doctrine; and by 'a female,' life . . . These two are meant by 'male and female;' and, taken together and conjoined in marriage, they are called 'man,' and also make the Church . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. That these two things which are signified by 'male and female,' must not be two, but one, the Lord teaches in . . . Matt.xix.4-6. . . These words are to be understood . . . not only naturally, but also spiritually; (otherwise) no one knows what is meant by 'the male and female no longer being two, but one flesh' . . . In the spiritual sense, by 'the male and the female' are signified truth and good; consequently also the doctrine of truth, which is the doctrine of life; and the life of truth, which is the life of doctrine. These must not be two, but one. Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. As the truth of doctrine or the doctrine of truth is signified by 'a male,' the law was delivered that 'every male that openeth the womb should be holy to Jehovah' (Ex.xiii.12; Deut.xv.19; Luke ii.23). Ex.

—<sup>5</sup>. As everything of regeneration is effected by means of truths of doctrine made of life from the Lord, therefore all the males—by whom were signified truths—presented themselves to the Lord (three times a year).

—<sup>6</sup>. Hence it was that the burnt-offerings were of entire males, by which are signified genuine truths from the Word, or from doctrine from the Word . . . The reason the sacrifices were either of males or of females, was that by males were signified truths, and by females goods, not conjoined in marriage, but by consanguinity; and as both, as brothers and sisters, are from one parent, worship from truths pleased equally with that from goods; that is, from males equally as from females.

—<sup>7</sup>. As all spiritual nourishment is from the truths which are from good, the law was delivered that 'a male among the priests should eat the holy things' (Lev.vi.11,22; vii.6) . . . because by 'males' are signified the truths of doctrine . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. The reason every male in a city . . . was to be smitten . . . but not the women . . . was that . . . by a city of the nations . . . was signified the doctrine of falsity; and in like manner by the males of that city . . . and as falsities only fight against truths and goods . . . but not evils without falsities, the women . . . were not smitten; for evils can be amended and reformed by means of truths.

—<sup>9</sup>. 'Cursed be the man who hath evangelized to his father, saying, A male is born to thee' (Jer.xx.15)=him who acknowledges falsity, and declares it to be truth . . .

—<sup>11</sup>. 'A male in the flock' (Mal.i.14)=the genuine truth of doctrine from the Word.

863<sup>2</sup>. A wife is the affection of good, and a husband is the understanding of truth; moreover, females and males-mares—are born such.

1000<sup>4</sup>. The males-mares-(there) become young men.

Mammon. Mammon.

A. 2588<sup>6</sup>. The like is meant by, 'Make yourselves friends of the mammon of injustice' (Luke xvi. 9). E. 141<sup>13</sup>.

P. 250<sup>5</sup>. By 'the mammon of injustice' are meant the Knowledges of truth and good which are possessed by the evil, and which they use solely to procure for themselves dignity and wealth . . .

R. 799<sup>2</sup>. These are the gains of the unjust mammon.

T. 404<sup>9</sup>. These were called mammons by the Ancients . . .

E. 189. This would be to serve . . . God and mammon; and then the man is lukewarm . . . 409<sup>7</sup>.

242<sup>20</sup>. 'By 'the unjust mammon' are meant the Knowledges of truth and good with those who do not justly possess them, who are those who do not apply them to life. 430<sup>11</sup>.

700<sup>17</sup>. As they are still Knowledges, although applied to evils, they serve for use with the good, by application to good . . . This is what is meant also by 'the unjust mammon.'

Mamre. Mamre.

A. 1616. 'Abram . . . dwelt in the oak-groves of Mamre, which are in Hebron' (Gen. xiii. 18) = that the Lord arrived at a perception still more interior. . . This perception is called 'the oak-groves of Mamre which are in Hebron.' 'Mamre' is mentioned in other places also. Ill.

1704. 'He was dwelling in the oak-groves of Mamre the Amorite' (Gen. xiv. 13) = a state of perception from the rational man; as is evident from the signification of . . . 'the oak-groves of Mamre the Amorite.' Refs.

[A.] 1705. By 'Mamre, Eshcol, and Aner' (id.) are represented . . . the Angels who were with the Lord when He fought in His first childhood, who were adequate to the goods and truths then with the Lord. They are named from these goods and truths. Ex.

1752. By 'Mamre, Eshcol, and Aner' was signified the state of the rational man as to the Lord's External, and the quality of its goods and truths; and thus by them are signified the Angels who were with the Lord when He fought. 1754, Ex.

2137. The state at that time of the Lord's perception in the Human is signified by 'the oak-groves of Mamre' (Gen. xviii. 1). 2144. 2145, Ex.

2901. 'Machpelah which is before Mamre' (Gen. xxiii. 17) = regeneration. ('Machpelah' = regeneration; and 'Mamre,' the quality and quantity thereof. 2970.)

2970<sup>2</sup>. Mamre, being Hebron, as is said in ver. 19, and in Hebron (Gen. xiii. 18) = nothing else than the quality and the quantity; here, of regeneration, when it is adjoined to 'Machpelah,' and of the Church, when it is adjoined to 'Hebron,' and also that of perception, when it is adjoined to 'oak-groves.' Thus 'Mamre' is only the determination of the state of a thing; for it was the place where Abraham dwelt; and where Isaac dwelt, and to which Jacob came. III.

3257. 'Upon the faces of Mamre' (Gen. xxv. 10) = as to good . . .

4613. 'Mamre Kirjath-arba' (Gen. xxxv. 27) = the state thereof; (for) 'Mamre' = the quality and quantity of that to which it is adjoined. 6456. 6551.

Man. Homo.

See CELESTIAL MAN (under CELESTIAL), DIVINE MAN, EXTERNAL MAN, GRAND MAN, INTERNAL MAN, NATURAL MAN (under NATURAL), SON OF MAN, and SPIRITUAL MAN (under SPIRITUAL).

See also under ADAM, ANIMAL, BEAST, BORN, HUMAN, HUMAN FORM, HUMAN RACE, PROPRIUM, SELF, AND TREE.

A. 39. For man of himself is dead, and in him there is nothing but evil and falsity. Ex. and III.

44. Man, like the earth, can produce nothing good, unless the Knowledges of faith are first sown in him . . .

49. 'Let us make man into our image, according to our likeness, and let them have dominion . . .' (Gen. i. 26) . . . In the Most Ancient Church . . . the Lord appeared as a man . . . Therefore they called no one man except Him, and the things which were of Him; and not themselves, except only those things which they perceived they had from the Lord; as all the good of love and truth of faith. These they called of man, because of the Lord. Hence in the Prophets by 'man,' and 'the Son of man,' in the supreme sense, is meant the Lord; and, in the internal sense, wisdom and intelligence; thus everyone who is regenerate. III.

—<sup>3</sup>. The Lord was therefore seen by the prophets as a man. III.

50<sup>3</sup>. The Lord alone rules man through Angels and Spirits . . .

55. By 'man' is here meant the spiritual man . . .

59. The whole man is composed of mere cupidities and the derivative falsities. . . To abolish them in a moment would be to destroy the whole man.

69. Man has been so created . . . that while he lives in the body he might speak with Spirits and Angels . . . for he is one with them, being a Spirit clothed with a body . . .

94. 'To form man dust from the ground' (Gen. ii. 7) = to form his external man, which before was not man; for it is said in verse 5 that 'there was no man to till the ground.' . . . 'Man became a living soul' = that his external man also was made alive.

95<sup>2</sup>. It is the life of love which makes him to be man.

149<sup>2</sup>. Man is only an organ of life; and such an organ as is the affection of life.

240. Thus from being man they became non-men.

270. Dead men are no longer men, although they suppose themselves to be men above others . . .

288. 'Man' (Gen. iii. 20) = the man-vir-of the Most Ancient Church, or the celestial man; and in fact that the Lord alone is man . . . Hence he was called a man who was of the Church . . . and at last everyone who as to the body appears as a man, to distinguish him from beasts.

303<sup>2</sup>. He is called 'man' (Is. vi. 11) who is wise, or who acknowledges and believes.

306. 'To cast out the man' (Gen. iii. 24) = to entirely deprive of all the will of good and understanding of truth, insomuch that he is separated from them, and is not man.

313. The first man.

— . It is the Most Ancient Church which . . . is called 'man.' Ex. 461. 477.

336. Charity implanted through faith is called 'Enos,' or another 'man.' 439.

338. 'The man Knew Eve his wife' (Gen. iv. 1). By 'the man, and Eve his wife' is signified the Most Ancient Church.

379<sup>2</sup>. To will is man himself . . .

434. By 'the man and his wife' (ver. 25) is here meant a new Church. 435.

477. In the supreme sense, the Lord Himself is the only Man. Hence the Celestial Church is called 'man,' because it is a likeness; and hence afterwards the Spiritual Church, because it is 'an image,' but in the general sense everyone is called 'man' who has a human understanding; for man is man from the understanding; and one is more man than another; although the distinction of man from man should be according to the faith of love to the Lord. III.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'Man' = the love of good.

— . 'Man' = those who have faith.

—<sup>5</sup>. In this passage 'man' is first named 'Enos,' and afterwards 'Adam.'

502. These three Churches, 'man,' 'Seth,' and 'Enos' constitute the Most Ancient Church.

530<sup>2</sup>. If there were no remains with man he would not be man, but would be much viler than a brute.

The fewer remains there are, the less he is man; and the more there are the more he is man.

565. By 'man' (Gen.vi.1) is here signified the human race of that time. Ill.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Lord alone is man; and, from Him, every celestial man, or Celestial Church, is called 'man;' and hence all the rest; and also everyone of every faith whatever, to distinguish him from the brutes. But man is not man, and distinct from the brutes, except through remains . . . which are the Lord's. Hence too man is called man; and as he is so called on account of remains, which are the Lord's, he is so called by the Lord also, even the worst one. For man is never man, but the vilest of the brutes, if he has not remains. 1738.

566. Hence the name of 'man,' or 'Adam,' which is 'ground.' —<sup>e</sup>.

585. For man is man from willing; not so much from knowing and understanding, because knowing and understanding are from his willing.

594. 'From man to beast . . .' (ver.7)=whatever is of the will . . . Man is not man except from will and understanding, by which he is distinguished from the brutes; all the other things are very like them.

637<sup>2</sup>. For man regarded in himself is much viler than the brutes. If he were left to himself he would rush into the destruction of himself and of all; for he desires nothing else . . . His order should be for one to love another as himself . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. Man (alone) lives altogether contrary to order; and therefore unless the Lord had compassion on him, and conjoined him with Himself through the Angels, he could never live one minute. Of this man is ignorant.

644<sup>2</sup>. Man is like a kind of very little Heaven, which corresponds to the World of Spirits and to Heaven. Ex.

697. With every man there are at least two evil Spirits and two Angels . . .

714. For, regarded in himself, and in his own proprium, man is nothing but a beast, having very similar senses, appetites, cupidities, and also affections of all kinds. His good and best loves are also very similar; as the love of companions of his own species, of his children, and of his consort; so that they do not at all differ. But the reason he is a man, and above beasts, is that he has an interior life . . . which life is the life of faith and of love from the Lord; and unless this life were in each thing which he has in common with beasts, he would not be at all different. Examp.

—<sup>2</sup>. It is through the life which man has from the Lord that he lives after death . . . And even if man lives like a wild beast . . . the mercy of the Lord . . . does not leave him; but continually . . . breathes into him His own life; which . . . causes him to be able to think, reflect, and understand whether a thing is good or evil, moral, civil, worldly, or corporeal; and hence whether it is true or false.

768<sup>3</sup>. The Lord is the Only Man . . . and is the all of the Church. The all of the Church is love or charity; and therefore 'man' . . . =love or charity; that is, the all of the Church . . .

776<sup>3</sup>. 'Man' (Jer.iv.25)=the good of love.

808<sup>2</sup>. The will is the very substance of man, or man himself.

810. 'From man even to beast . . .' (Gen.vii.23)=the nature of their evil; 'man'=the nature itself.

987. For man is nothing but evil; he is a congeries of evils; all his will is mere evil; as was said in Gen. viii.21: 'the fashion of the heart of man is evil from his childhood.' I have been shown by living experience that man, Spirit, and even Angel, regarded in himself . . . is the vilest excrement; and that when left to himself he breathes nothing but hatreds, revenges, cruelties, and the filthiest adulteries. These things are what are proper to him; and these are his will . . . This may be evident from the fact that man, when born, is the vilest living thing among all wild animals and beasts; and when he grows up . . . unless external bonds . . . prevented, he would rush into every wickedness. He would not rest until he had subjugated all in the universe, and had raked together the wealth of all in the universe. Nor would he spare any, except those who submitted themselves as vile slaves. Such is every man . . . Given the possibility and the power, and the bonds being relaxed, they would rush on as far as they could go. Wild beasts are never such . . . Hence it is evident what the proprium of man is, and what is his will.

—<sup>3</sup>. Man being such and so great evil and excrement, it is evident that he can never have dominion over evil from himself . . . (Thus) it is the Lord alone who has dominion over the evil with man, and over the Hell which is with man. In order that the evil . . . with man may be subjugated . . . man must be regenerated by the Lord; and be endowed with a new will, which is conscience . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. These things are of faith: that man is nothing but evil; and that all good is from the Lord . . .

1006<sup>e</sup>. Man is man from love and charity; but he is a wild beast from hatred, revenge, and cruelty.

1007. 'From the hand of man' (Gen.ix.5)=from all his Voluntary . . . For the essential and life of man is his will; and such as the will is, such is the man.

—<sup>2</sup>. 'Man,' and 'man-vir-brother' are here mentioned; and so are called the filthy Voluntary, and the filthy Intellectual . . .

1008. 'To require the soul of man' (id.)=to avenge profanation.

1010. 'To shed the blood of man in man' (ver.6)=to extinguish charity. 'In man'=with man . . . for man, of himself, is filthy and profane.

1042<sup>3</sup>. The Lord is 'the man' here spoken of (Ezek. i.26).

1044<sup>2</sup>. For the regenerate man as to his intellectual part is the Lord's; but as to the voluntary part he is his own.

—<sup>e</sup>. For from himself man is in Hell. From the Lord he is in Heaven; and man is continually being elevated from Hell into Heaven . . . The sign that the Lord is present, therefore, is that the Voluntary of man is removed . . .

1049. For the Lord knows that man is such; namely, that his proprium is infernal, and that it is his Hell itself. . . As man, from himself, is such a devil; and the Lord knows this, it is evident that 'to remember the covenant'=to have mercy. . .

[A.] 1050. Every man is called 'a living soul' from that which is alive with him. For no man can possibly live, still less as a man, if he has not something with him which is alive; that is, unless he has something of innocence, charity, and mercy. . . This. . . man receives from the Lord when he is an infant, and in childhood. . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That the states of innocence, charity, and mercy which man has in infancy. . . cause that man can be man, may be manifestly evident from the fact, that, unlike the brutes, man is not born into any exercise of life, but learns each and all things. (Continued under REMAINS.)

1055<sup>2</sup>. With man alone there is not love, but the contrary; because man has destroyed in himself the order of nature. But when he can be regenerated. . . there is a covenant or conjunction through charity. Tr.

1266<sup>e</sup>. Man cannot live a moment unless Spirits and Angels are with him.

1277. Men as to their souls are constantly bound to some Society of Spirits and Angels. . .

1321. For all the light of Truth is from the Lord, and all thick darkness is from man. . .

1326<sup>e</sup>. 'No man and no beast'=no good.

1555<sup>3</sup>. Man is not man unless he is endowed with understanding also; the will alone does not make man, but the understanding together with the will. . .

1616<sup>3</sup>. For through Knowledges man becomes man.

1707<sup>3</sup>. Thus is it given to man to think, and to be man.

1733. Man as to his interiors is an image of Heaven. . .

1795<sup>2</sup>. The things which are of the heart make the man. . .

1831<sup>e</sup>. The things which are above perception, dictate, and conscience are the Lord's; those which are below them are with man.

1864<sup>2</sup>. What is man except something vile and filthy. . .

1871<sup>e</sup>. Finally (the Word) is presented before the Lord as the image of a man. . .

1886, Pref.<sup>3</sup>. For man is a spirit clothed with a body. 3342<sup>2</sup>.

1894. The reason the Lord's internal man, which is Jehovah, is called a man, is that no one is man except Jehovah alone. For, in its genuine sense, man=that Esse from which man is. . . Without the Divine Celestial and Spiritual there is nothing human with man; but a certain animality such as there is with beasts. From the Esse of the Lord every man has that he is a man; thence also is he called a man. The Celestial which makes man is that he loves the Lord and the neighbour. Thus is he man, because an image of the Lord, and because he has this from the Lord; otherwise he is a wild beast.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Lord is the only man, and from Him men have [the fact] that they are called men; and one is more a man than another. Refs.

— . The Lord appeared. . . as a man; and deigned, after there was no longer a man on earth—that is, nothing celestial and spiritual with man—to assume human nature by being born like another man, and to make it Divine; thus also is He the Only Man. Besides, the universal Heaven presents before the Lord the image of a man, because it presents Him. . .

1904. Good, or the love of good, they called man as a husband; and truth, or the love of truth, they called man as a wife.

1906. When man is born he has not a whit of good from himself; but is wholly defiled with hereditary evil. . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Without these (remains) man can never be man. . .

1999<sup>3</sup>. The Internal of man is that from which man is man, and by which he is distinguished from brute animals; through this Internal man lives after death. . . It is the first form itself from which man becomes and is man. . .

2053. The conjunction of the Lord with man in his impurity. Sig. and Ex.

2183<sup>2</sup>. Before (the Rational and the Natural) make one, the man cannot be a whole man. . .

2194<sup>e</sup>. Differently from any other man.

2196<sup>3</sup>. No life with man except from the Lord.

—<sup>6</sup>. When yet in man there is nothing except what is evil, unjust, and profane.

2219<sup>2</sup>. To man there has been given a Rational above beasts, to the end that everyone may will well and do well to others. . . This is the order into which man has been created. . .

2242<sup>2</sup>. The Word as to the letter is for man. . .

2249<sup>2</sup>. Think of the Lord as a man. . .

2258<sup>2</sup>. Unless the Lord's mercy were eternal, all men whatever would be damned.

2305. For that man is man is from the intelligence of truth and the wisdom of good which they have from the Lord alone.

2385<sup>3</sup>. If (the Churches were in charity) all would be ruled by the Lord as one man. . .

2406<sup>e</sup>. Thus is the Lord continually fighting with man, and with Hell for man, although it does not appear so to man.

2500<sup>2</sup>. This way of being wise is never possible with any man.

2508<sup>2</sup>. In proportion, therefore, as he derives from the heavenly marriage, in the same proportion he is a man.

2576<sup>2</sup>. The inmosts of man are goods and truths . . .
 2649<sup>9</sup>. Such as is the life, such is the man.

2654<sup>9</sup>. Man can look from the interior into those things with himself which are beneath.

2712<sup>2</sup>. 'No man' = no celestial good . . .

2916. He then dies as to the former man, and rises again as to the new one.

2966<sup>2</sup>. Good and truth from man are not good and truth.

3134. See MAN-vir, here.

3175. Man is never born into any truth, not even into any natural truth. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For unless man is rational he is not man. Therefore in proportion as anyone has what is rational, such is he a man, and so far. A man can never be rational unless he has good. The good which man has above animals is to love God and the neighbour; all human good is thence . . .

3310<sup>2</sup>. When . . . in the affection of truth, they are called 'men-viri of the field;' but afterwards, when regenerated . . . and in good itself . . . they are called 'men of the field.'

3494. If man were without such good as he has derived from infancy, he would not be man; but would be more savage than any wild beast . . . 3793.

3514<sup>9</sup>. For the parallelism between the Lord and man exists as to the celestial things which are of good; and not according to the spiritual things which are of truth. Ref.

3573<sup>9</sup>. The quality of a man Angel and of a man devil.

3628. Not only the things which belong to the human mind . . . correspond (to Heaven); but also the whole man in general, and in particular whatever is in man; inasmuch that there is not the least part . . . which does not correspond. From this man comes forth and continually subsists. Unless there were such a correspondence of man with Heaven, and through Heaven with the Lord . . . he could not subsist for a moment . . . 3883<sup>9</sup>. 4041.

3633. All Spirits and Angels appear to themselves as men. Des.

— . The Primitive of man, which is from the soul of the parent, strives after the formation of the whole man . . . although this Primitive is not in the form of the body; but in another most perfect form which is known to the Lord alone. And as the Inmost with everyone in like manner conspires and strives after such a form, all there appear to themselves as men.

3634. A man who is in correspondence . . . with his spirit is in Heaven, and with his body in the world; and . . . is a little Heaven . . . For man has from good and truth that he is man, and is distinct from brute animals.

3644. All men in the universal world have their situation either in . . . Heaven, or . . . in Hell . . . 3645.

3702. Man was so created that the Divine things of the Lord should descend through him down to the ultimates of nature; and from the ultimates of nature ascend to Him; so that man should be the medium uniting the Divine with the world of nature . . . and that thus through man . . . the ultimate itself of nature might live from the Divine; which would have been the case, if man had lived according to Divine order. Ex.

3739<sup>2</sup>. Man has been created and formed after the effigy of the three Heavens. Ex.

3796<sup>2</sup>. For man is such that in each thing he reflects upon himself, and this from custom and habit.

3858<sup>2</sup>. 'Man' = that which is of the Church. Refs.

— . 'The measure of a man, that is, of an Angel' = the state of truth and good.

3860. Man is indeed born as a man from his parents; but he does not become man until he has been re-born from the Lord. It is the spiritual and celestial life which makes man; for this distinguishes him from brute animals.

3913<sup>2</sup>. For man is man from truths and goods.

3938<sup>2</sup>. For there are two things which make man, namely esse and existere. The esse of man is nothing else than that which is recipient of the Eternal which proceeds from the Lord . . . The reception of life is that of which existere is predicated . . .

3951. Through this (conjunction of good and truth) man becomes man, and is distinguished from brute animals; and he becomes man in proportion as he receives therefrom . . .

3957<sup>8</sup>. Love to God, and love towards the neighbour, are what cause man to be man, distinct from brute animals.

3993<sup>8</sup>. With man there is no pure good . . . nor pure truth . . .

4038<sup>2</sup>. With man there are three things in general; namely, the Corporeal, the Natural, and the Rational. Ex.

4042. Hence it is that through man alone there is a descent from the Heavens into the world, and an ascent from the world into the Heavens. Ex.

4051. Men are from intelligence and wisdom, and not from form. Hence good Spirits, and still more Angels, are men more than those who are in the body . . .

4054<sup>9</sup>. For the end makes the man . . .

4073<sup>9</sup>. Man is in effects.

4219. The Lord is the Only Man; and in proportion as an Angel or Spirit and also a man on earth has from Him, in the same proportion they are men. Let no one believe that man is man from the fact that he has a human face, a human body, a brain, and viscera and members; these are common to him with brute animals . . . But man is man because he can think and will as man; thus receive the things which are Divine . . . By these things man distinguishes himself from beasts and wild animals . . .

[A.] 4224°. (From) his conjunction with Heaven, and through Heaven with the Lord . . . man is man, and is distinguished from the brutes.

4247<sup>2</sup>. When it is in the will, it is in the man; for the will constitutes the man himself.

4257°. Man perishes when the Church . . . with him perishes . . .

4279°. For man communicates with the three Heavens; for man has been created after the image of (them).

4287. 'With God and with men' (Gen. xxxii. 28) = as to truths and goods. —<sup>4</sup>, Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. The reason 'man' = good, is that the Lord is the Only Man, and because man is called man from Him; and also because Heaven is a man from Him; and hence too the Most Ancient Church, which was in celestial good, was called 'man.' Therefore by 'man,' in the Word, where what is good is treated of, is signified good. Ill.

—<sup>e</sup>. In these passages 'man' = those who are in good; thus good; for man is man from good. Whereas the truth which is from good is called in the Word 'vir homo,' and also 'the son of man.'

4322. (All) believe that man comes forth from seed and an ovum, naturally . . .

4364°. The spirit is the man himself.

4454<sup>2</sup>. Hence that Church above others was called 'man.'

4524°. For man is a little Spiritual World in the least effigy.

4527. (Were surprised to find themselves men.)

4644<sup>2</sup>. No man is born into any good; but into . . . evil interiorly from the father, and into evil exteriorly from the mother.

4672. The Church is as a man . . .

4692<sup>2</sup>. (The Ancient Church also) believed that the God of the universe was a Divine Man . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The Jewish Church . . . did indeed believe that Jehovah was a Man . . . because He had appeared to Moses and the prophets as a man . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. The Lord showed . . . that He was a Divine Man when He was transfigured.

4760<sup>2</sup>. (Man believed to be an animal.)

—<sup>3</sup>. Brute animals act from instinct, and man from reason.

4839<sup>2</sup>. When the Divine order is represented in a form, it appears as a man; for the Lord who is the source of it is the Only Man; and in proportion as Angels, Spirits, and men have from Him—that is, in proportion as they are in good and the derivative truth; thus in proportion as they are in Divine order—in the same proportion they are men. Hence it is that the universal Heaven represents one man . . . and that the Angels appear in the human form; and that among themselves evil Spirits appear from phantasy as men . . .

4963. Through man there is conjunction of Heaven with the world. Ex.

5023<sup>2</sup>. For the rational and natural mind makes man. Without . . . goods and truths, and their affections, and the ministry of these, he is not a man, but a brute.

—<sup>4</sup>. 'House' = man, or his mind.

5084<sup>5</sup>. The fallacy that man is only a more perfect animal.

5110°. Hence everyone can think of the Divine Itself as a man.

5114<sup>4</sup>. As with man there is a connection with the Divine; and his inmost is such that it can receive the Divine . . . therefore man . . . can never die . . .

5145<sup>2</sup>. Man is in the fourth or sensuous degree.

5149°. 'No man' = no good.

5160°. By being regenerated, man becomes man, and is completely distinguished from the brutes.

5222<sup>2</sup>. The interior man is the man himself.

5256. Almost all have the idea of the Lord as of another man . . .

5301°. That the mind is the man himself.

5302. For man is man from his mind; for the mind itself constitutes man; and such as this is such is the man.

— . The stupid suppose that man is man from his external form . . . they who are less stupid say that man is man from the fact that he can speak; and they who are still less stupid, that man is man from the fact that he can think. But man is not man from these things; but from the fact that he is able to think truth and will good, and can (thus) view the Divine, and receive it perceptibly. In this is man distinguished from the brute animals.

—<sup>2</sup>. His appearing as man because he can speak and think does not make him man; for if he thinks what is false and wills what is evil, he . . . is worse than a brute animal . . .

5393. Men left to themselves . . . are much more savage than the worst wild beasts . . . The Angels were horrified (to hear) that the human race is such.

5398<sup>2</sup>. For man is so evil that he cannot to eternity be delivered from one sin; but only . . . be withheld from sin . . .

5649<sup>4</sup>. Men have successively become more exterior . . .

5663<sup>2</sup>. He took this man upon Himself.

5786<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) man when in (proprium) is a devil under a human form.

5826°. So long as good and truth are outside the will . . . they are outside the man . . .

5848°. For man of himself is continually in evil . . .

5850°. Whereas men are not in order, nor in any law of order; and therefore there is particular influx into them; that is, with them there are Angels and Spirits, through whom is influx; and unless these were with men, they would rush into every wickedness, and would in a moment precipitate themselves into the deepest Hell . . . The order into which man was created would have been that he should love the neighbour as himself; nay, more than himself . . . But man loves only himself and the world . . . and therefore, as the life of man is completely contrary to heavenly order, he is ruled by the Lord through separate Spirits and Angels.

5863. If evil Spirits perceived that they were with man . . .

5992<sup>3</sup>. Thus man is in the midst . . .

6013<sup>2</sup>. For as to his interiors man has been formed after the image of the three Heavens . . . and as to his exteriors . . . after the image of the world . . .

6053<sup>o</sup>. Latent (idea) that they will live as men there.

6054. The soul is the man himself . . . that is, the interior man . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. All Spirits . . . appear as men.

6057<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) in man the Spiritual World is conjoined with the natural world . . .

6158. For man is not man from his external form, but from his mind . . .

6191. That man is ruled through Angels and Spirits . . .

6323<sup>3</sup>. If man were in the order into which he was created . . . he would be born not only into scientifics, but also into all spiritual truths and celestial goods . . . Thus man would in that case be ruled by nothing but general influx . . . But as he is born . . . contrary to his order, he is born into ignorance of all things . . . 7750<sup>2</sup>. H. 352<sup>3</sup>.

6326. (This Philosopher said) that man consists of mere forms recipient of life; and that one form is more interior than another . . .

6368. For man from himself is in Hell . . .

6571<sup>2</sup>. A man is altogether such as is his end . . .

6605. So each Society relates to a man . . .

6626. The Lord who alone is Man, and from whom Angels, Spirits, and the inhabitants of the Earth are called men, by His influx into Heaven causes the universal Heaven to represent and relate to one man; and through influx through Heaven and immediately from Himself into each person there, causes every one to appear as a man . . . Nay, with the Angel, Spirit, and man who lives in charity towards the neighbour and in love to the Lord, the leasts of thought relate to a man, because this charity and love are from the Lord, and whatever is from the Lord relates to a man. Moreover, these are the things which make man. In Hell, however . . . in their own lumen they do indeed appear as men; but in the light of Heaven as horrible monsters . . .

6697. There are men wherever there is an Earth. Ex.

6823<sup>o</sup>. This man—that is, the Lord's Kingdom—is loved, when from inmost affection one benefits those who are man through that man from the Lord.

6832<sup>4</sup>. 'The aspect of a man upon the throne' (Ezek. i.)=the Lord as to the Divine Human.

6872<sup>2</sup>. Such as is the love, such is the man . . .

6876<sup>2</sup>. The Ancients could think no otherwise about Jehovah than as a Man, whose Human was Divine.

7032<sup>3</sup>. Such is man interiorly . . .

7081. The dominant love . . . is what makes the man.

7091. For those who are of the (Spiritual) Church have natural ideas about everything spiritual and celestial . . . and therefore unless they thought about the Divine as a natural Man, they could not be conjoined with the Divine by anything of affection . . .

7120. There are two words in the Original Language which mean man; one is 'Adam,' and the other is 'Enos.' By the man who is called 'Adam' is meant the man of the Celestial Church; and by the man who is called 'Enos' is meant the man of the Spiritual Church. Here, 'men-viri' are expressed by 'Enos,' because it treats of those who are of the Spiritual Church.

7175<sup>2</sup>. (The Spirits of Mercury) do not want to appear as men, as do the Spirits of our Earth; but as crystalline globes . . . in order to remove from themselves material ideas.

7206<sup>o</sup>. For man is in evils, and from himself is in Hell . . .

7396. Empires and kingdoms are represented in Heaven as a man; and the Societies therein are represented as the members of that man; and the king as the head . . .

7424. 'Louse in man and in beast' (Ex. viii. 17)=interior and exterior evils of cupidities. . . 'Man'=good; thus, in the opposite sense, evil . . . But when it is said 'man and beast,' by 'man' is signified interior good, and in the opposite sense interior evil . . . The reason of this is that man is man from his internal man and its quality; but not from the external man; for the external man is not man without the internal. For the external man also to be man, it must be completely subordinated to the internal . . .

7505. 'To cut off man and beast' (Ezek. xiv. 21)=to vastate interior and exterior good.

7506<sup>2</sup>. The ideas of these, in the Spiritual World . . . have the likeness of a man.

7523. 'It shall be upon man and upon beast' (Ex. ix. 9)=which are from interior and exterior evil. 'Man'=the affection of good; and, in the opposite sense, the cupidity of evil; and in like manner 'beast;' but when it is said 'man and beast,' then by 'man' is signified interior affection or cupidity, and by 'beast,' exterior. The interior good, and also the interior evil, which are signified by 'man,' are those which are of the intention or end; for the intention or end is the inmost of man.

—As to his external or natural man, man is nothing but a beast . . . (but) as to his internal or spiritual man, man is man; there he rejoices in the affections of good and truth . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. These are the things which are signified by 'man and beast,' in the following passages. III.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'Man and beast'=interior and exterior good, in the following passages. III. 7558. 7570. 7582.

7560. For man without (good and truth) is not man . . . Through these there is communication with Heaven; and in the proportion that man has communication with Heaven, in the same proportion he is man . . .

7604<sup>o</sup>. Man is distinguished from brute animals by this: that he can look upwards, that is, to the Divine. Without this faculty, man would be like a beast . . .

[A.] 7607. Man has been so created that he can look above himself to . . . the Divine, and also below himself to the world . . . In this is man distinguished from brute animals. And man looks above himself . . . when he has as the end the neighbour, his country, the Church, Heaven, and especially the Lord; and he looks below himself when he has as the end himself and the world. To have as the end is to love . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. From this it is evident that when man looks below himself, he separates himself from the Divine, and determines his interiors to self and the world, in like manner as they are determined with brute animals; and thus in the same proportion he puts off what is human. 8604<sup>2</sup>.

7643<sup>9</sup>. 'Men' (Rev.ix.)=affections of good.

7821. To look above self is proper to man; and to look below self is proper to beasts. Hence it follows that in proportion as a man looks below himself, in the same proportion he is a beast, and also an image of Hell; and that in proportion as he looks above himself . . . he is a man, and also an image of the Lord.

7848<sup>2</sup>. Besides, whether you say man, or his mind, it is the same thing; for man is not man from the form of his body, but from his mind; and man is such a man as is his mind . . . most especially such as is his will.

7872. 'From man even to beast' (Ex.xii.12)=their interior and exterior evil cupidities . . . For by 'man' is signified the affection of interior good.

÷ 7973<sup>4</sup>. By 'man' and 'Angel' (Rev.xxi.) is signified all the truth and good of faith.

8043. That which is conceived and born (anew) is not the man as a man; but is the faith of charity; for this makes the Spiritual of man; thus as it were makes the man himself anew.

8045. 'In man and in beast' (Ex.xiii.2)=the good of faith interior and exterior.

8116. A great multitude of men (in Jupiter). Ex.

8391. For of himself man is continually falling . . .

8408. 'The pot'=man.

8443<sup>2</sup>. Truth Divine in the third degree . . . and in the fourth cannot be apprehended by man; that in the fifth can be a little perceived by a man who is illustrated . . . But truth Divine in the sixth degree is such as there is with man, being accommodated to his apprehension; thus it is the sense of the letter . . .

8480. The good which is from man is not good; because from himself man is nothing but evil . . .

8497<sup>2</sup>. For man and Angels are only recipients, or forms accommodated to receive life . . .

8505. 'A field'=man. Ex.

8541. (In Jupiter) they know that the Lord is a Man . . . 8547.

8549. Man is not born from his parents into spiritual life, but into natural life. Ex.

8550. Every man is born from his parents into the evils of the love of self and of the world.

8553. As man is such, the order of life with him is inverted . . .

8604. How man is distinguished from brutes. (See 7607, above.)

8740. Beneath the wood there appears something of man, which they attempt to strike. Ex.

8851. Lest the multitude of men should increase (too much).

8858. A man is entirely such as is the dominating [principle] of his life. By this he is distinguished from others . . .

8902<sup>4</sup>. For by 'man' is signified the good of the Church; and by 'the son of man,' truth from good. 9348<sup>4</sup>.

8911. That man is such as is his will. Ex.

8918<sup>4</sup>. Hell and Heaven are near man; nay, in man; Hell in an evil man, and Heaven in a good man.

8939<sup>2</sup>. He there appears to himself and others exactly like a man in the world . . .

8988<sup>3</sup>. As to the soul, the men of the Church are in Heaven.

9003<sup>2</sup>. As to his interiors, man is nothing but affection; a good man is the affection of good and of the derivative truth; and an evil man is the affection of evil and of the derivative falsity.

9007<sup>2</sup>. Thus by man there is perceived (in Heaven) his Voluntary; because man is man from the will, but man-vir from the understanding. Therefore 'man'=the good of love. Refs.

9013. He thus destroys everything there which is of man; that is, which is of life from the good of faith and of charity.

—<sup>2</sup>. Genii are not admitted to men as Spirits are. Ex.

9144<sup>11</sup>. The Lord's saying . . . 'Behold the Man' signified, 'Behold the Divine truth such as it is at this day in the Church; for the Divine truth which proceeds from the Lord in Heaven is a man. Hence Heaven is the Grand Man; and this from influx and correspondence. . . Hence also the Lord's Celestial Church was called 'man.'

9231. By these things man is distinguished from beasts.

9276<sup>5</sup>. Before the Lord, the universal Church is like a man. —<sup>3</sup>, Refs.

9315<sup>5</sup>. The Lord thus taught that He was . . . Jehovah Man.

9336<sup>2</sup>. Man, when born, as to hereditary evils, is a Hell in the least form . . .

9351. That God has become a Man. 9356.

9401<sup>6</sup>. Whatever goes forth from man as from himself is nothing but evil and the derivative falsity. Refs. Hence it is evident that the conjunction of man with the Lord is from the Lord, and not from man.

9407<sup>12</sup>. For man is not man from the form of his face and body; but from the understanding of truth and the will of good.

9415<sup>2</sup>. For the Lord presents Himself present with man; but not man with the Lord . . .

9438. For as to his interiors, man is a Spirit and an Angel . . .

9441. For the end of the creation of the universe is man, in order that from man there may be an angelic Heaven.

9473<sup>3</sup>. And that which proceeds from man is evil; for man regards himself in all the good which he does . . .

9481<sup>2</sup>. With man there are always Spirits and Angels; and without them man cannot live . . . 9715.

9603<sup>2</sup>. 'Man' (Rev.xxi.)=the Church; and 'Angel'=Heaven.

9613<sup>2</sup>. These are the laws from which Heaven . . . is as one man. Enum.

9708. This is meant by that the old man must die.

9937<sup>4</sup>. From himself man is Hell; but when he is being regenerated he becomes Heaven.

9942<sup>3</sup>. By 'the man and his wife' (Gen.iii.) is meant the Celestial Church; by the man himself as a husband that Church as to good; and by his wife that Church as to truth.

10042<sup>2</sup>. As to his external man, man is nothing else than an animal; but he is distinguished by his internal man . . .

10044<sup>8</sup>. Man in ultimates is the Church on earth; man in the Prime is the Lord; man in interiors is Heaven; for before the Lord the Church and Heaven are as one man. . . By man in the Prime is meant the Lord as to His Divine Human.

10076<sup>2</sup>. Who can believe that the whole man is the image of his will and the derivative understanding, consequently of his own good and the derivative truth, or of his own evil and the derivative falsity? . . . Thus the whole man is such as is his soul. Ex.

10177<sup>4</sup>. For love makes the whole man . . .

10199<sup>2</sup>. The interiors of man . . . are in the Spiritual World; and his externals . . . are in the natural world.

10217<sup>6</sup>. 'The number of a man' (Rev.xiii.18)=the condition-rem-and state of that Church.

10298<sup>2</sup>. Man is not man from his face, and not even from speech, but from understanding and will. Such as are his understanding and will, such is the man. That when born he has nothing of understanding, and also nothing of will, is known; and also that his understanding and will are formed by degrees from infancy. Hence man becomes man, and such a man as both of these are formed with him. The understanding is formed through truths, and the will through goods . . . Hence it follows that man is nothing but the truth and good from which his two faculties have been formed. Each and all things of his body correspond to these . . . 10645<sup>2</sup>. —4.

—6. This arcanum besides: that in every idea of thought which proceeds from the will of a man there is the whole man. Ex.

10299<sup>5</sup>. Man has been created no otherwise than that he may be a receptacle of the Divine . . .

10336<sup>6</sup>. For whatever is from man for the sake of himself as the end is from evil. . . Hence the end propter quem, or the intention, is the man himself; for a man is such as is his will or love.

10367<sup>2</sup>. That the whole man is such as he is as to good, and not as to truth without good. Ex.

—3. Man is born into evils of every kind, and thence into falsities of every kind; thus from himself is condemned to Hell . . .

10406<sup>5</sup>. 'Man-vir'=truth; and 'man,' the good of that truth.

10490<sup>5</sup>. 'Man'=the good which is from the Lord.

10604<sup>2</sup>. As to his spirit, man is in society with Spirits; and as to his interior thought, which is spiritual, with the Angels of Heaven. Hence too man has the faculty of thinking.

10753. Four kinds of men seen in the Fifth Earth. Des.

10781. For what comes from man is nothing but evil.

10785. In (the Sixth Earth) they know and perceive that God is . . . a Man.

10809. The Lord appears in the Sun as a Man.

10816. The life of Heaven is not at all from man.

H. 39. Through this Inmost or Highest (the human Internal), man is man, and is distinguished from brute animals. . . Hence it is that man, differently from animals, can be elevated by the Lord to Himself as to all the interiors which are of his mind and lower mind, can believe in Him, be affected with love to Him, and thus see Him; and that he can receive intelligence and wisdom, and speak from reason. Hence also it is that he lives to eternity. But that which is disposed and provided by the Lord in this Inmost does not inflow manifestly into the perception of any Angel, because it is above his thought, and surpasses his wisdom. J.25<sup>6</sup>.

57. A man in whom is the Church, is, equally with an Angel, a Heaven (in the least form) . . . And therefore that man in whom there is good from the Lord, is an Angel man.

—2. I may mention what man has in common with an Angel, and what he has more than the Angels. Man has in common with an Angel that his interiors have equally been formed to the image of Heaven; and also that he becomes an image of Heaven in proportion as he is in the good of love and of faith. Man has more than the Angels, that his exteriors have been formed to the image of the world; and that in proportion as he is in good the world with him is subordinated to Heaven, and serves Heaven; and that then the Lord is present with him in both as in His Heaven . . .

59. That the universal Heaven in one complex relates to one man. Chapter. W.19.

60. These think that the earthly and material things which compose the ultimate of man make him, and that without these man is not man. But let them know that man is not man from these things ; but from the fact that he is able to understand truth and will good. These are the spiritual and celestial things which make man. Moreover, man knows that everyone is such a man as he is as to understanding and will ; and is also able to know that his earthly body has been formed to be of service to these [faculties] in the world . . . Hence it is evident that the intellectual and voluntary things make man ; and that these are in the like form . . . From these, therefore, is man called an internal and a spiritual man. Such a man in the greatest and most perfect form is Heaven.

[H.] 61. Such is the idea of the Angels about man ; and therefore they never attend to those things which a man does with his body ; but to the will from which his body is acting. This they call the man himself ; and the understanding in so far as it acts as one with the will.

63. Heaven being such, it is ruled by the Lord as one man ; and thus as a one. Ex.

64. The reason so many various things act as a one in man, is that there is not anything there which does not do something for the common weal . . . The general performs a use to its parts, and the parts to the general . . .

65. As Heaven . . . is a Divine Spiritual Man in the greatest form, even in figure . . .

68. That every Society in the Heaven relates to one man. Chapter. W.19.

73<sup>2</sup>. 'A man' (Rev.xxi.)=that in which all these things are, in general and in part ; thus in which Heaven is ; and as an Angel also is a man from these things, it is said, 'the measure of a man, which is that of an Angel.'

75. As to their form, Angels are altogether men. Des. 77.

78. That the reason Heaven in the whole and in part relates to a man, is from the Divine Human of the Lord. Chapter.

80. Therefore it is common for the Angels to say that the Lord alone is man, and that they are men from Him ; and that everyone is a man in proportion as he receives Him. To receive the Lord is to receive the good and truth which are from Him . . . They say that everyone knows that intelligence and wisdom make man, and not the face without them. Shown.

87. That there is a correspondence of all things of Heaven with all things of man. Chapter.

94<sup>o</sup>. From this correspondence man subsists.

99. Nevertheless man is not an image of Heaven as to his external form, but as to his internal one ; for the interiors of man receive Heaven, and his exteriors receive the world. In proportion, therefore, as his interiors receive Heaven, in the same proportion man as to them is a Heaven in the least form . . . but in proportion as his interiors do not receive it, he is not a Heaven . . . But still his exteriors, which receive the world, can be in form according to the order of the world, and thence in a various beauty . . .

108<sup>o</sup>. Man (unlike animals) thinks from the Spiritual

World ; and as he has perverted this with himself . . . he cannot but be born into mere ignorance, and afterwards by Divine means be led back into the order of Heaven.

112<sup>2</sup>. It is to be known that it is man through whom the natural world is conjoined with the Spiritual World ; that is, he is the medium of the conjunction ; for in him there is the natural world and also the Spiritual World ; and therefore in proportion as a man is spiritual, in the same proportion is he a medium of the conjunction ; but in proportion as he is natural and not spiritual, he is not a medium of the conjunction. Still, there continues, without man as the medium, a Divine influx into the world, and also into those things which are from the world with man, but not into his Rational.

123<sup>2</sup>. As to his spirit, man also turns himself in like manner (as do Angels and Spirits) . . .

131<sup>o</sup>. In like manner does man appear as to his spirit, when looked at by the Angels . . .

243. (Spiritual) speech is implanted also in every man . . .

246. On the speech of the Angels with man. Chapter.

267<sup>2</sup>. The wisdom of the (lowest) Angels in like manner transcends the wisdom of man ; for man is in what is corporeal . . .

292. Spirits do not at all know that they are with man . . .

293. The reason Spirits who communicate with Hell are adjoined to man, is that man is born into evils of every kind . . .

294<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is, that as man is conjoined with Spirits, so is he conjoined with Heaven or with Hell, and in fact with that Society there in which he is as to his affection . . .

296. The reason man is ruled by the Lord through Spirits, is that he is not in the order of Heaven ; for he is born into the evils which are of Hell . . . and therefore he must be reduced into order, and (this) can only be done mediately through Spirits. It would be otherwise if man were born into the good which is according to the order of Heaven ; he would then not be ruled by the Lord through Spirits ; but through order itself ; thus through general influx. Man is ruled through this influx as to those things which are proceeding from thought and will into act ; thus as to his speech and actions ; for these flow according to natural order, with which the Spirits who are adjoined to man have nothing in common.

300. The conjunction of Heaven with man is not like the conjunction of a man with a man ; but it is a conjunction with the interiors which are of his mind . . . But with his Natural there is conjunction through correspondences.

303. On the conjunction of Heaven with man through the Word. Chapter.

304. Man has been so created that he has connection and conjunction with the Lord, but only consociation with the Angels of Heaven. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Man has besides—what the Angels have not—that he is not only in the Spiritual World as to his interiors, but also at the same time in the natural world as to his exteriors. His exteriors which are in the natural world are all things which belong to his external memory, and to the derivative thought and imagination . . . also many pleasures which belong to the sensuous things of the body; and the senses themselves, the speech, and the actions, besides. All these, moreover, are the ultimates in which the Lord's Divine influx ceases . . . From (which) it may be evident that the ultimate of Divine order is in man . . .

350<sup>2</sup>. Regarded in himself, man is nothing but his own good and truth . . .

390<sup>2</sup>. He who regards men from spiritual truth . . . sees one man [as being] like another, whether he is in great dignity or in little; but he regards the difference [as being] solely in wisdom . . .

391<sup>2</sup>. In general, the Angels of every Society are sent to men . . .

423<sup>2</sup>. For the understanding alone does not make man, nor the will alone, but the understanding and the will together . . .

430<sup>2</sup>. The correspondence of man with Heaven and with Hell [is as follows]. His rational mind, during formation, corresponds to the World of Spirits; the things which are above it correspond to Heaven; and the things which are below it to Hell.

432. That every man is a Spirit as to his interiors. Chapter.

433. It follows that the spirit is the man himself; or, what is the same, that regarded in himself man is a spirit . . . for whatever lives and sensates in man is of his spirit . . . Hence it is that when the body is separated from his spirit . . . the man still remains a man . . .

434. Man cannot think and will, unless there is a subject which is a substance.

435. (Thus) the Corporeal which is added to man . . . is not man . . .

445<sup>2</sup>. It is said that the man himself lives, because a man is not man from his body, but from his spirit; for the spirit thinks in man; and thought together with affection make man. 453.

463. Hence it was evident that a man's is such in the whole as he is in his will and the derivative thought . . .

475. It is further to be known that in his deeds or works the whole man is presented. Ex.

484<sup>e</sup>. And all the things which are done from man himself are, in themselves, evil; for, regarded in himself, or as to his proprium, man is nothing but evil.

501. It is to be known that man is entirely such as he is as to his interiors; and not such as he is as to his exteriors separated from his interiors. Ex.

540. Hence all men in the world are kept in a like equilibrium; for men in the world are ruled by the Lord through Spirits who are in the World of Spirits.

546<sup>2</sup>. Therefore if the Lord were to avert Himself, and were to leave man to evil alone, he would no longer be man. (Continued under LORD.)

552. He is then no longer a man Spirit, such as he is in his first state . . .

577<sup>3</sup>. Unless the Lord protected man, he could never be taken out of Hell . . . and the Lord cannot protect man, unless man acknowledges the Divine, and lives the life of faith and charity . . .

602. (The simple have the implanted idea that the spirit is a man.)

N. 20<sup>2</sup>. There are four kinds of men. 1. Those who are in falsities from evil, and those who are in falsities not from evil. 2. Those who are in truths without good. 3. Those who are in truths, and through them look to and strive after good. 4. Those who are in truths from good. Tr.

24<sup>e</sup>. That truths conjoined from good present the image of a man. Ref.

79<sup>e</sup>. (Thus) as man is born into these two loves, he is born into evils of every kind.

J. 9. For man was created last, and that which is created last is the basis of all things which precede . . . The ultimate of creation is the natural world, and therein the terraqueous globe with all things thereon. When these things had been accomplished, man was created, and into him were collected all things of Divine order from primes to ultimates; into his inmosts were collected those things which are in the primes of that order; into his ultimates those which are in the ultimates of it; so that man was made Divine order in form. Hence it is that all things which are in man and with man are both from Heaven and from the world; from Heaven, those things which are of his mind; and from the world those things which are of his body; for those things which are of Heaven inflow into his thoughts and affections, and present them according to the reception by his spirit; and those things which are of the world inflow into his sensations and pleasures, and present them according to the reception in his body, but this in an accommodated way according to the agreements of the thoughts and affections of his spirit.

—7. But Angels and Spirits do not know with what men they are . . .

—9. I can assert . . . that no Angel or Spirit subsists without man, and no man without Spirit and Angel; and that there is a mutual and reciprocal conjunction.

C. J. 6<sup>e</sup>. Believe, therefore . . . that you will be a man after death as you were before it, with the sole difference which there is between the Natural and the Spiritual.

74. All who acknowledge and worship one God as the Creator of the universe have the idea of a Man in relation to God . . .

W. H. 11<sup>4</sup>. In this respect the Word is as the image of a man. Ref.

L. 16<sup>7</sup>. After He had been whipped and brought forth wearing the thorny crown and the crimson vestment . . . He said 'Behold the Man' (John xix.1,5). This was said because by 'man' is signified the Church; for by 'the son of man' is signified the truth of the Church; thus the Word.

35<sup>10</sup>. In order to confirm still further that He was not a Spirit, but a man, the Lord said . . .

[L.] 36. That thus God became a Man, as in primes, so also in ultimates. Gen.art.

S. 13. 'Their faces like the faces of men' (Rev.ix.)= that they appear to themselves as victors and wise.

23<sup>2</sup>. (The upper part of Dagon) was like a man . . . because a man=intelligence. F.52<sup>2</sup>.

97<sup>e</sup>. The external Divine sphere of the Word . . . represented as 'a man' (Ezek.i.5).

100. Every man is his own love, and thence his own good and his own truth. Man is man from no other source; and nothing else with him is man. From the fact that man is his own good and his own truth, Angels and Spirits also are men; for all the good and truth which proceeds from the Lord is in its form a man. But the Lord is Divine good and Divine truth itself; thus He is Man Himself; from whom every man is a man.

105. Before the Lord, the universal Heaven is as one man; in like manner the Church . . . In this man, the Church where the Word is read and by it the Lord known is as the heart and as the lungs; the Celestial Kingdom as the heart, and the Spiritual Kingdom as the lungs.

Life 30<sup>2</sup>. That these things are from proprium, and therefore that there is no life in them, is meant by 'Egypt is man, and not God . . .' (Is.xxxi.3).

68. Such is man in himself . . . (Therefore) it is evident what a devil he would be if not reformed.

86<sup>5</sup>. As soon as these concupiscences have been dispelled by the Lord, man is man; because he then thinks truth in the understanding from good in the will.

101. These two faculties, freedom and reason, are not proper to man; but are of the Lord with him; and in so far as he is man they are not taken away from him . . .

F. 20. Man in the composite is the Church, one's country, and society; and man in the individual is our fellow-citizen, who in the Word is called 'brother,' and 'companion.'

60<sup>e</sup>. 'The number of a man' (Rev.xiii.)=the quality of Own intelligence.

W. 1. That love is the life of man. Gen.art.

4. That Angels and men are (only) recipients of life. Gen.art.

11. That God is Very Man. Gen.art. (See God, here, and also at 12. 13. 16. 18. 21. 64.)

19. The universal Heaven . . . in its universal form is like a man; in like manner each Society of Heaven, whether greater or less; hence too an Angel is a man; for an Angel is Heaven in the least form . . . Heaven is in such a form in the whole, in the part, and in the individual, from the Divine which the Angels receive; for in proportion as an Angel receives from the Divine, in the same proportion he is in perfect form a man.

24. Every man—although he is unaware of it—thinks of a collective body as of a man . . .

52. All things in the universe have such a correspondence with each and all things of man; so that it may be said that man too is a kind of universe. There is a correspondence of his affections and the derivative thoughts with all things of the animal kingdom; of his will and the derivative understanding with all things of the vegetable kingdom; and of his ultimate life with all things of the mineral kingdom.

61. That all things which have been created, in a certain image relate to man. Gen.art.

— The relation to man in each and all things of the Animal kingdom, is evident from these things. (Continued under ANIMAL.)

—<sup>2</sup>. The relation to man from each and all things of the vegetable kingdom, is evident from these things: that they come forth from seed, and from this advance successively by their ages; that they have some things which are like marriage . . . that their vegetative soul is use . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The relation to man from each and all things of the mineral kingdom, appears solely in the endeavour to produce forms which relate, which are . . . each and all things of the vegetable kingdom; and thus to perform uses . . .

65. That the uses of all things which have been created ascend through degrees from ultimates to man, and through man to God the Creator, from whom [they are]. Gen.art.

—<sup>3</sup>. Primes are each and all things of the animal kingdom . . . the highests (of which) are men.

66. Man alone is a recipient of the life of the three degrees not only of the natural world, but also of the three degrees of the Spiritual World. Hence it is that man can be elevated above nature, differently from any animal; can think analytically and rationally about the civil and moral things which are within nature, and also about the spiritual and celestial things which are above nature; nay, can be elevated into wisdom even so that he sees God.

68. It is from this cause that man from his hereditary evil reacts against God . . .

— Thus does reaction become of action; and man acts with God as of himself.

90<sup>2</sup>. Every man, as to the interiors of his mind, is a Spirit . . .

92<sup>e</sup>. Therefore the Spiritual World is where man is . . .

97. Therefore when the Lord manifests Himself to the Angels in Person, He manifests Himself as a Man; and this sometimes in the Sun, and sometimes outside of it.

107. Unless it is known (that there are two suns) nothing can be justly understood concerning . . . man.

112. It is the like with men. As to the interiors of their minds men are warmed and enlightened by the same Sun . . . The difference between Angels and men is that Angels are solely under that Sun; whereas men are not under that Sun alone, but are under the sun of the world also; for the bodies of men cannot come forth and subsist unless they are under both suns . . .

118. The like that has been said of an Angel . . . is to be said of a man; for an Angel of Heaven and a man of the Church act as one through conjunction; and moreover a man of the Church is an Angel as to the interiors which are of his mind. But by a man of the Church is meant a man in whom is the Church.

129. All things which are here said about the Angels and their conversion to the Lord as a Sun are also to be understood of man as to his spirit; for man as to his mind is a Spirit; and, if he is in love and wisdom, he is an Angel . . .

130°. When yet God is everywhere, both within man and without him . . . For if He were in man, he would not only be divisible, but also enclosed in space; nay, man might then even think that he was God. This heresy is so abominable, that in the Spiritual World it stinks like a carcase.

137°. It is the like with man. If he has the Lord constantly before his eyes—which is the case if he is in love and wisdom—he then looks at Him not only with his eyes and face, but also with his whole mind and with his whole body . . .

140°. All the Spirits who are in the World of Spirits are adjoined to men; because as to the interiors of their minds men are in like manner between Heaven and Hell; and through those Spirits they communicate with Heaven and with Hell, according to their life.

170. The universal end . . . is that there may be an eternal conjunction of the Creator with the created universe; and this is not possible unless there be subjects in whom His Divine may be as in itself . . . In order that these subjects may be His habitations and abodes, they must be as of themselves recipients of His love and wisdom; thus they must be those who shall as of themselves elevate themselves to the Creator, and shall conjoin themselves with Him . . . These subjects are men . . . Through this conjunction the Lord is present in every work created by Himself. For everything has been created finally for the sake of man; and therefore the uses of all things which have been created ascend through degrees from ultimates to man, and through man to God the Creator . . .

171°. For out of the Earth forms of uses are continually being elevated by God the Creator in their order up to man; who as to his body is also thence. Man is then elevated through the reception of love and wisdom from the Lord . . .

179. And love together with wisdom is in its form a man; because God . . . is a man.

181. For as to the interiors of their minds, men are in the like heat of love, and the like light of wisdom, to those in which the Angels are. . . Yet with this difference: that the Angels feel that heat, and see that light, but not men; the reason of which is that men are in natural heat and light . . .

185°. Without a Knowledge of these degrees, nothing can be known . . . of any difference of life between men and beasts.

221°. For every man is his own good and his own truth: man is not man from any other source.

230. That there are three infinite and uncreated degrees in the Lord; and that there are three finite and created degrees in man. Gen.art.

231. That there are these three degrees in man, may be evident from the elevation of his mind to the degrees of love and wisdom in which are the Angels of the Second and Third Heavens; for all the Angels have been born men; and man as to the interiors which are of his mind is a Heaven in the least form . . . Moreover man is an image and likeness of God; and therefore these three degrees have been inscribed on man . . .
VOL. IV.

232. To these is to be added a third Kingdom in which are men in the world, which is the Natural Kingdom.

233. After the assumption of the Human in the world, the Lord superinduced the third degree, which is called natural, and thereby became a man like a man in the world . . .

236. That these three degrees of height are in every man from his birth; and that they can be successively opened; and that as they are opened, the man is in the Lord, and the Lord in him. Gen.art.

240. There are two faculties from the Lord with man by which man is distinguished from beasts; one faculty is that he is able to understand what is true and what is good; this faculty is called rationality, and is the faculty of his understanding; and the other faculty is that he is able to do what is true and good; this faculty is called freedom, and is the faculty of his will. For from his rationality man can think whatever he pleases, both with God and against God, and with his neighbour and against his neighbour; and also can will and do the things which he thinks . . . From these two faculties man is man, and is distinguished from beasts. These two faculties are in man from the Lord; and are continually from Him; nor are they taken away from him; for if they were taken away, his human would perish. In these two faculties is the Lord with every man . . . they are the abode of the Lord in the human race. Hence it is that every man . . . lives to eternity. But the abode of the Lord is nearer with man in proportion as man by means of these faculties opens the higher degrees . . .

241°. But the love with one man is not the same as with another; thus neither is the wisdom . . . nor consequently the use . . .

247. By the influx of spiritual light into all the three degrees of the mind man is distinguished from beasts; and man is above beasts in being able to think analytically; to see truths not only natural but also spiritual; and, when he sees them, in being able to acknowledge them, and thus to be reformed and regenerated.

251. Man is not man from his face and body; but from his understanding and will . . .

252. The natural man is a full man when the spiritual degree with him has been opened . . .

270. The spiritual mind derives its form solely from the substances of the Spiritual World, and is preserved by the Lord in its integrity, in order that man may be able to become man; for he is born an animal, but becomes man.

285. That the Lord . . . could not have created the universe . . . unless He had been a Man. Gen.art.

286°. In a word, man is a form of wisdom; and as man is a form of wisdom, he is also a form of love, mercy, clemency, good and truth.

[W.] 287. That love and wisdom are man . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. For his spirit, which is called the soul, is a man; and this is a man because it is receptible of love and wisdom from the Lord; and in proportion as the spirit or soul of man receives them, in the same proportion he becomes a man after the death of the material body . . . and in proportion as he does not receive them, he becomes a monster, which derives something of man from the faculty of receiving them.

298. That, regarded as to his exteriors and interiors, man is the form of all uses; and that all the uses in the created universe correspond to these uses . . .

316<sup>a</sup>. A like image of the creation comes forth in each of the things which are in man. Ex.

317. That in all the forms of uses there is some image of a man. Ex.

319. That all things of the created universe regarded from uses relate to man in an image; and that this testifies that God is a man. Gen.art. 322.

324. There is nothing in the created universe which has not correspondence with something of man . . .

327. That all things which have been created by the Lord are uses; and that they are uses in the order, degree, and respect in which they relate to man; and through man to the Lord from whom they are. Gen.art.

328. By the man to whom uses relate is meant not only man, but also collective bodies of men . . .

346<sup>a</sup>. Only man derives his origin from all the degrees . . .

358. The creation of man. Tr.

368. Such as is the love, such is the wisdom, and thence such is the man. Gen.art.

369<sup>a</sup>. The mind of man is a man because God is a Man; and the body is the external of the mind, which sensates and acts.

386. That the mind of man is his spirit, and that his spirit is a man; and that the body is the external by means of which the mind or spirit sensates and acts in its world. Gen.art.

403. It is said the will and the understanding; but it is to be well known that the will is the whole man . . . Ex.

413. By this faculty (of rationality), which is the faculty of interiorly understanding things, and of concluding concerning what is just and fair, and concerning what is good and true, man is distinguished from beasts.

432. On the quality of the initiament of man from conception. Gen.art.

—<sup>1</sup>. Many have fallen into the error that man is in his fulness from his . . . beginning . . . Ex.

P. 3<sup>a</sup>. The connection and preservation of all things depends on the conjunction of the Creator with man.

16. The chief end of the Divine Providence is that man be in good and at the same time in truth . . . for thereby man is man . . .

32. That from creation man is such that he can be more and more nearly conjoined with the Lord. Gen.art.

57<sup>a</sup>. A man or Angel is only a receptacle, in itself dead. What is living in him is from the proceeding Divine conjoined with him by contiguity, which appears to him as his own.

61<sup>a</sup>. As the Divine love and Divine wisdom are in their form a man, it follows that the angelic Heaven must be in such a form.

66. The arcanum, that every affection of good and at the same time of truth is in its form a man. Ex.

69. For of himself man continually strives after the lowest of Hell; but is continually withdrawn by the Lord.

75. It is otherwise with man, who [differently from beasts] has not only the affection of natural love, but also the affection of spiritual love, and the affection of celestial love. For the human mind is of three degrees . . . and therefore man can be elevated from natural knowledge into spiritual intelligence, and thence into celestial wisdom; and, from these two . . . can look to the Lord, and thus be conjoined with Him, through which he lives to eternity . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. By means of these faculties man can think within himself concerning those things which he perceives outside of himself with the senses of his body; and can also think superiorly concerning those things which he thinks inferiorly. For everyone can say, I have thought this, and I think this; and also, I have willed this, and I will this; and also, I understand this to be so; I love this because it is of such and such a character; and so on. Hence it is evident that man thinks above his thought, and sees it as it were below himself. Man has this from his rationality and freedom . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. (Such) cause themselves to be men no further than this: that from their implanted rationality and freedom they can understand if they will; and also will.

76. Man, without the appearance that it is his, cannot be in any affection of knowing, or of understanding. Ex.

83<sup>2</sup>. The first state of man, which is a state of damnation. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. The third state of man, which is a state of regeneration. Ex.

90<sup>a</sup>. Otherwise the truth which he thinks and the good which he does are not in themselves truth and good; for the man is in them . . . and the good in which man is . . . is meritorious good . . .

92. See CONJOIN, here. 326.

96<sup>2</sup>. That without these two faculties man would not have will and understanding; and thus would not be man. Ex.

124. That the Lord never acts into any particular thing with a man . . . unless He acts into all things of him together, is because all things of man are in such a connection, and through their connection in such a form, that they do not act as many things, but as one. Ex.

125. (Thus) the Lord cannot act from inmosts and ultimates together, except together with man; for man together with the Lord is in ultimates . . .

172<sup>1</sup>. No man is man from his face and body; but from the good of his love and the truths of his wisdom; and as man is man from these, every man is his own truth and his own good, or his own love and his own wisdom; without these he is not man.

176<sup>o</sup>. Thus he would not be man. Ex.

181<sup>2</sup>. As man disposes the externals, the Lord disposes the internals . . .

183. The Divine Providence never acts together with the love of a man's will; but continually against it; for from his hereditary evil man continually pants towards the lowest Hell . . . Ex.

219<sup>2</sup>. That man in himself is temporary . . . and that therefore nothing but what is temporary can proceed from man. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. That the Lord conjoins man with Himself through appearances. Ex.

—<sup>5</sup>. That the Lord conjoins man with Himself through correspondences. Ex.

226. As (profaners) are no longer men, they are called . . . it.

227<sup>2</sup>. Every man is in both evil and good; for he is in evil from himself, and in good from the Lord; and man cannot live unless he is in both. Ex.

251<sup>2</sup>. For from his birth man is like a little Hell . . .

275. If man were born into the love into which he was created, he would not be in any evil; nay, he would not know what evil is . . . This state is the state of innocence in which were Adam and Eve . . .

— . The love into which man was created is the love of the neighbour . . . If man were born into this love, he would not be born into the thick darkness of ignorance—as is now the case with every man—but into a certain light of knowledge and of the derivative intelligence; into which (knowledge and intelligence) he would also shortly come. He would indeed at first creep like a quadruped, but with the implanted endeavour to erect himself upon his feet . . .

277. Hence it is that with man there is nothing whole . . .

281<sup>2</sup>. Hear now the reason. Every man is in evils of many kinds from his birth . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. If man were not allowed to think according to the delights of his life's love . . . he would be man no longer . . .

285<sup>2</sup>. That through these two faculties man is man . . .

293. There does not exist a grain of his own proper will or prudence with any man . . . (otherwise) the human race would perish.

294<sup>4</sup>. Therefore whatever a man believes that he does from himself, is said to be done from man . . .

296. For every man is his own evil or his own good from head to the sole of the foot.

298<sup>4</sup>. When this form has been induced, the man does not [merely] appear to be man, but is man. 311<sup>o</sup>.

321. That he who confirms with himself the appearance that wisdom and prudence are from man and in man as his, cannot see otherwise than that otherwise he would not be man, but either a beast or a statue; when yet it is the contrary. Gen.art.

— . Hence it follows that he who thinks and prudently acts as of himself, and at the same time acknowledges that it is of the Lord, is a man; but not he who confirms with himself that everything which he thinks and which he acts is from himself; nor yet he who because he knows that wisdom and prudence are from God, awaits the influx . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. Without which (appearance) man would not be man.

322. That every man can be reformed . . . Gen.art.

324. That every man has been created in order to live to eternity. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. That every man has been created in order to live to eternity in a blessed state. Ex.

—<sup>7</sup>. That thus every man has been created in order to come into Heaven. Ex.

—<sup>o</sup>. But as it is of His Divine love that man should feel heavenly bliss in himself as his own; and as this cannot be done unless man is kept in all the appearance that he thinks, wills, speaks, and acts of himself; therefore he cannot lead man otherwise than according to the laws of His Divine Providence. 330<sup>3</sup>.

327<sup>2</sup>. It is the like whether it is said that evil is from man, or that evil is from Hell.

R. 243. 'The third animal had a face like a man' (Rev.iv.7)=the Divine truth of the Word as to wisdom. By 'a man,' in the Word, is signified wisdom, because he is born in order to receive wisdom from the Lord, and to become an Angel. Hence in proportion as he is wise, in the same proportion he is man . . . That by 'a man' is signified wisdom. Ill. E.280.

— . 'A man-vir homo (enosh)'=intelligence; and 'a man-homo (adam)'=wisdom. (Is.xiii.12).

433. 'Their faces as the faces of men' (Rev.ix.7)=that they appeared to themselves as wise.

463. (A turtle seen with a face like a man.)

466. 'The man' upon the throne=the Lord. 830<sup>3</sup>.

567<sup>2</sup>. Men are forms not only of natural affections, but also at the same time of spiritual ones.

—<sup>5</sup>. By 'man and beast,' mentioned together, is signified man as to spiritual affection, and as to natural affection. Ill.

601<sup>2</sup>. Every Church appears before the Lord as a man. Ex.

609. 'The number of a man' (Rev.xiii.18)=the quality of the Word and thence of the Church. By 'a man' is signified wisdom and intelligence; here, wisdom and intelligence from the Word; thus also the Word as to wisdom and intelligence with the man of the Church; for the Church itself appears before the Lord as a man. Hence the man of the Church appears as to his spirit in Heaven as a man according to the quality of the Church from the Word with him. This, therefore, is what is here signified by 'the number of a man' . . .

[R.] 875<sup>9</sup>. How man can do good from God, and yet as of himself . . .

—<sup>10</sup>. I said . . . You believe that all things which man wills and thinks, and thence does and speaks, are in him, and consequently are from him; when yet nothing of them is in him except the state of receiving that which inflows. Man is not life in himself; but is an organ recipient of life. . . Love and wisdom . . . inflow from God, and are received by man, and are felt in man as if [they were] in him; and (therefore) they proceed as if [they were] from him. Ex.

—<sup>12</sup>. In a word, man is an organ recipient of life from God; consequently he is a recipient of good in proportion as he desists from evil. The Lord gives to every man to be able to desist from evil, because He gives him to will and understand as of himself . . .

—<sup>13</sup>. (Such) cannot think otherwise than that God has infused Himself into man, and thus that men are partly gods . . . I. 11<sup>6</sup>.

910. 'The measure of a man, which is [that] of an Angel' (Rev. xxi. 17) = the quality of that Church, that it makes one with Heaven. . . By 'a man' is here signified the Church from men . . .

— By 'man,' in the Word, is signified intelligence and wisdom from the Word; and intelligence and wisdom from the Word with a man is the Church with him. Hence by 'man' in the concrete or in general—that is, when a society or collective body is called a man—in the spiritual sense is meant the Church. Hence it is that the prophets were called 'sons of man,' and that the Lord Himself called Himself 'the Son of man;' and 'the son of man' = the truth of the Church from the Word; and, when predicated of the Lord, it = the Word itself from which is the Church.

947<sup>2</sup>. Unless man had a higher and a lower thought, he would not be man, but a brute.

961<sup>2</sup>. The Lord Himself is not the Sun . . . but is a man in the Sun.

M. 10<sup>8</sup>. For man from creation is a least effigy, image, and type of the great Heaven. The human form is nothing else . . .

28. That man lives a man after death. Gen. art.

29<sup>9</sup>. Nothing (in that case) would be more lamentable than to be born a man.

30. That Angels and Spirits are men. Ill.

31. Man after death is not a natural man, but a spiritual man; but still he appears to himself altogether similar . . .

35. From this it is evident that man is his own love; nay, that he is the form of his love. (That is to say) it is the interior man . . . which lives after death which is the form of his love . . .

36. Man is also his own thought, thus his own intelligence and wisdom; but these make one with his love . . . From which it may be seen that love is the esse or essence of the life of man, and that thought is the derivative existence or manifestation of his life . . .

37<sup>2</sup>. For the male man and the female man have been so created, that from two they are able to become as it were one man . . . and, when they become one, then, taken together, they are a man in his fulness. But without this conjunction . . . each of them is like a divided or halved man.

44. They were marvelling that they lived altogether men, as before. Des.

48<sup>2</sup>. Conjugal love is . . . proper to men, because men have been created . . . in order to become spiritual. 96.

52<sup>9</sup>. (By union with his consort, an Angel) becomes more and more a man . . .

132<sup>2</sup>. Why man is not born into the knowledge of any love . . . 133. Fully ex.

—<sup>5</sup>. The likeness or appearance that love and wisdom, or good and truth, are in man as his own, causes man to be man, and to be able to be conjoined with God, and thus to live to eternity; from which it flows that man is man from the fact that he is able to will good and understand truth altogether as of himself, and still to know and believe that [he does so] from God; for in proportion as he knows and believes this, God places His image in man . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. This conclusion is made: Man is a receptacle of God, and a receptacle of God is an image of God; and as God is love itself and wisdom itself, man is a receptacle of these; and a receptacle becomes an image of God as he receives; and man is a likeness of God from the fact that he feels in himself that these things which are from God are in him as his own . . .

133. In a word, man is born as corporeal as worms; and remains corporeal, unless he learns from others to know, to understand, and to be wise.

—<sup>9</sup>. Thus the imperfection of the birth of man becomes his perfection . . .

134. Hence it is that man grows up (so slowly).

—<sup>2</sup>. Man is not born knowledge . . . but he is born faculty and inclination; faculty to know, and inclination to love . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The universal love which adjoins itself is the love of knowing, of understanding, and of being wise. This love belongs to man alone . . . and inflows from God.

—<sup>4</sup>. Man is not born into any love . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. This conclusion was made: Man is born into no knowledge in order that he may be able to come into all, and to progress into intelligence, and through this into wisdom; and he is born into no love, in order that he may be able to come into all, through applications of knowledges from intelligence; and into love to the Lord through love towards the neighbour; and thus he conjoined with the Lord, and thereby become man, and live to eternity.

136. (They joined their three conclusions into the following sentence.) Man has been created in order to receive love and wisdom from God, and yet in all likeness as of himself, and this for the sake of reception and conjunction; and therefore man is not born into any love, nor into any knowledge, and also not into any power of loving and being wise from himself; and therefore if he ascribes all the good of love and truth of wisdom to God he becomes a living man, whereas if he ascribes them to himself he becomes a dead man.

137. (The two consorts from Heaven) appeared as two men in the first flower of their age.

—<sup>6</sup>. But with men there is a perpetual influx of vernal heat from the Lord ; and therefore they can be delighted in marriage at all times (of the year).

152<sup>a</sup>. We conclude that without instruction man is neither man nor beast ; but that he is a form which is able to receive in itself that which makes man ; and thus that he is not born man, but that he becomes man ; and that man is born such a form that he is an organ recipient of life from God, for the sake of the end that he may be a subject into which God can introduce all good ; and, by union with Himself, make him blessed to eternity.

153a. How man who was created a form of God could be changed into a form of the devil. Ex.

171<sup>2</sup>. There is no part within man, nor without him, which does not renew itself . . . Hence a sphere . . .

177. That according to (these) conjunctions, consorts become one man more and more. Ex.

178. That they who are in love truly conjugal feel themselves to be a united man . . . Ex.

183<sup>4</sup>. Love and wisdom together with use not only make man, but also are man ; nay . . . they propagate man. Ex.

— From immediate influx from the Lord into the souls of men ; from mediate influx into the souls of animals . . .

230. That according to the defect and loss of conjugal love, man accedes to the nature of a beast. Ex.

233. You shall see portents of men. You shall see faces and bodies which belong to men, and yet are not men. I said, Are they beasts then ? He replied, They are not beasts, but beast men. Des. —<sup>6</sup>. T. 160<sup>r</sup>.

249. Man was created for use, because use is the continent of good and truth . . .

269<sup>2</sup>. See LOVE, here.

—<sup>6</sup>. The highest things in man were turned upwards to God, the middle things outwards to the world, and the lowest things downwards to self ; and as the latter were turned downwards, man thinks as of himself . . .

315<sup>11</sup>. In a word, the soul is the man himself, because it is the inmost man . . .

350. Man is born viler than a beast. Ex.

432. That sortatory love makes a man more and more not a man, and a man-vir-more and more not a man-vir ; and that conjugal love makes a man more and more a man and a man-vir. Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. A natural man separated from the Spiritual is a man only as to the understanding . . .

437. That between these two spheres there is an equilibrium, and that man is in it. Ex.

444<sup>4</sup>. From which things it is evident that man himself is the origin of evil ; not that this origin was implanted in man from creation, but that by turning away from God to himself he implanted it in himself. Ex.

—<sup>5</sup>. But the two Angels then asked, How could man turn himself away from God, and turn to himself, when yet man can will, think, and thence do nothing except from God ? . . . I replied, Man was created in order that everything he wills, thinks, and does may appear to him as in himself, and thus from himself. Without this appearance, man would not be man . . . But if from this appearance he induces on himself the belief that he wills, thinks, and thence does good from himself . . . he turns good into evil with himself, and thus makes in himself the origin of evil. This was the sin of Adam. —<sup>6</sup>, Further ex.

447. Every man is born corporeal, becomes sensuous, then natural, and successively rational ; and if he does not then come to a stand, he becomes spiritual. The reason of this progression is in order that planes may be formed . . .

I. 11<sup>7</sup>. I once heard a voice from Heaven saying that if there were a spark of life in man . . . there would be no Heaven . . .

14<sup>4</sup>. Unless the understanding could be perfected separately, and the will through it, man would not be man, but a beast. Ex. T. 588<sup>2</sup>.

T. 33. That the Infinite is . . . in men as in its images. Gen.art.

34. (Thus) man is an organ recipient of God . . .

41<sup>2</sup>. In men the light of life, which is intelligence, and the heat of life, which is love, are divided . . . because man is to be reformed and regenerated . . .

65. That man was created a form of Divine order. Gen.art.

67. As man is the principal end of creation, it follows that each and all things have been created for the sake of man, and consequently that each and all things of order have been collected into him, and concentrated in him, in order that through him God may effect primary uses.

68. That man is so far in power against evil and falsity from the Divine omnipotence, and that he is so far in wisdom concerning good and truth from the Divine omniscience, and that he is so far in God from the Divine omnipresence, as he lives according to Divine order. Gen.art.

70. It is a general canon in Heaven that God is in every man, both evil and good ; but that man is not in God unless he lives according to order . . .

71<sup>2</sup>. II. That God created man from order, in order, and into order.

101. That thus God became man, and man God, in one Person. Gen.art. 102.

103. This arcaum : That the soul which is from the father is the man himself ; and that the body which is from the mother is not the man in himself, but is from him . . .

109. From these things the Angels know that in the universal Spiritual World the Lord alone is a full man.

110<sup>6</sup>. From himself man is merely passive ; but through the influx of life from the Lord he is also active . . .

[T.] 154<sup>5</sup>. The Lord from Himself or from the Word acts in man; but not through him; because man acts and speaks freely from the Lord when from the Word.

335<sup>2</sup>. That there are no ideas connate with men . . .

364. That the Lord inflows with all His Divine love, with all His Divine wisdom, thus with all His Divine life, with every man. Gen.art.

366. That the things which inflow from the Lord are received by man according to his form. Gen.art.

368. That the Lord is charity and faith in man, and that man is charity and faith in the Lord. Gen.art.

369. Man has been created so that he can be conjoined with God . . .

371<sup>6</sup>. There is no such reciprocal conjunction of the Lord with man; but there is mutual conjunction, which is not effected by means of actions and reactions, but by means of co-operations; for the Lord acts, and man receives the action from the Lord, and operates as of himself, nay, from himself from the Lord. This operation of man from the Lord is imputed to him as his . . .

380. That spurious faith . . . is with those who . . . regard the Lord . . . solely as a man. Gen.art.

—<sup>8</sup>. For there is with every man a consociate Spirit, because without this he cannot think analytically, rationally, and spiritually; thus would not be man but a brute . . .

406. That every man in the singular is the neighbour who is to be loved; but according to the quality of his good. Gen.art.

— Man is not born for the sake of himself, but for the sake of others; that is, that he should not live for himself alone, but for others . . .

412. That man in the plural, which is a society . . . and that man in the composite, which is our country, is the neighbour who is to be loved. Gen.art.

— When the Lord and an Angel look down into the earth, they see a whole society no otherwise than as one man . . . I too have been permitted to see a certain Society in Heaven exactly as one man, in like stature to that in which is man in the world.

417. Man is not man from the human face and body, but from his wisdom . . . and goodness . . . When man is born he is more a brute than any animal, but becomes a man through instructions . . .

470. That man is not life, but a receptacle of life from God. Gen.art.

473<sup>6</sup>. Man alone receives light and heat—that is, wisdom and love—immediately from the Lord. This is the difference.

475<sup>3</sup>. In the middle of this interspace is every man as to his spirit . . .

481. Through this the Lord inspires life into man which is distinct from the life of beasts.

576<sup>2</sup>. As to charity and faith, the Lord acts, and man acts from the Lord; for there is the Active of the Lord in the Passive of man; and therefore the power to act well is from the Lord, and the derivative will to act is as of the man, because he is in free-will . . . The action of man concordant with the action of the Lord is what is here meant by co-operation.

585<sup>2</sup>. As (the heat of the Spiritual Sun) essentially breathes the generation of man, it induces a certain likeness of man on whatever it generates.

612. From birth man inclines to evils of every kind . . . and is a Hell in miniature. Des.

712. Hence it is that there are three things in man as to his Internal; namely, the soul or mind, the will, and the understanding. These three are receptacles of those universals; the soul or mind is the receptacle of the Lord . . . the will is the receptacle of love or good, and the understanding is the receptacle of wisdom or truth . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. In like manner there are three things in man as to his External, to which also each and all things relate and on which they depend; to wit, the body, the heart, and the lungs. Moreover, these three things of the body correspond to the three things of the mind . . .

778. Every man is his own love and his own intelligence . . . Therefore all things which proceed from a man . . . make the man, and are the man himself.

2324. That every society is a man.

2376. That Societies have their own Spirits near men.

2470. Nothing else is required with man than to be a yielding vessel . . .

2486. Every man is born into all evil . . .

2489. (Thus) man can do nothing but evil . . .

2589. That there can be no mercy, nor innocence, of man.

2591. That the Lord has led the human race since the creation of the first man.

— How could the first man have come forth . . . before the Grand Body was formed . . .

2817. These genera, and these species of men had been unknown to me . . .

2854. That the perceptive view and affection of ends distinguishes man from brutes.

2904. That spiritual minds are men.

3020. How the influx of Spirits is effected into man . . .

3115°. Man is continually wishing to precipitate himself into the worst evil.

3145. That the Angels can know the whole nature of a man or Spirit from one of his ideas.

3341. With man there are not such spheres, because he is in phantasies. Man too would not only have such spheres, which are the lowest, but would have a sphere of Knowing his companion as soon as he saw him . . .

3398. These have their feet in man.

— They who are recently arrived from the Earth from fallacy appear to themselves as men.

3473. That which appears clear to man is obscure to good Spirits . . . Ex.

3634. Therefore unless the Lord saw man to be something, the whole World of Spirits would see him as nothing . . .

3641. That men are kept in a Society of Spirits.

3759. That men are vessels.

3820. It is the prerogative of man . . . that he can think of and view those things which are . . . spiritual and celestial, which beasts cannot do; and thus have as an end the Societies of the other life . . .

4060. Men appear to Spirits as a black mass without life . . .

4337. On the Spirits who are with man.

4603. Man was created after the type of both worlds . . .

4607. Wherefore it has been so provided by the Lord that the Divine shall pass through man from the Spiritual World into the natural world . . . and that thus through man there should be the connection of the Spiritual World with the natural world . . .

4608. Such as a man is in his organic principles, such is he wholly . . .

4629°. There is an influx thence into every man; for his interiors are formed after the image of Heaven . . .

4683. In the midst there was an obscure something, which was said to be the man around whom they are . . .

4686. On the Hells around man.

— The man who has not yet become actually evil appears above the earth there . . . but as it were veiled with a very dense and opaque membrane . . . Below he appears as an obscure and inanimate something. This appears to the Angels, but not to the Spirits who are there . . . But when he acquires a life of evil he is more and more submerged beneath the plane of the earth, first to the feet, afterwards to the loins, then to the breast, and finally to the head; and then he is in Hell, and he cannot be elevated thence, because he is then in adult and even old age, and can no longer receive new truths, nor can those which are with him be bent, because they have become hard. He then appears there, and at last much lower; and it was perceived that when a man is not far from the end of his life, his head droops, and at last his body bends forward . . .

4687. When about to die, his head droops, and at last he falls.

4847°. The Divine Itself in its first essence was a man in endeavour, or in becoming, whence it was like a man; thus a man reflexively; and the second essence was a man born and essentially from the first; and the third essence was a man proceeding in what was successive, which is the whole Heaven . . .

5190. Man is therefore as it were the plane upon which are the thoughts of the Angels . . .

5606. There are four kinds of men there, as in the world. The first attend to the uses in the Word . . . they serve as a plane. Thus is it read by the celestial. The second are those who take the doctrinal things of the Word; thus do the spiritual apprehend it. The third are those who are delighted solely with its holy external, without intelligence; these are they who are in the ultimate Heaven. And the fourth are they who attend only to the literal sense; and they who attend solely to the words, as critics . . . the former are in the threshold of Heaven, and the latter are in the very extremes.

5608. The natural thought of man is the plane in which cease all things of angelic wisdom . . .

5610. The Angels . . . are not turned to themselves, but to men . . .

5617. The plane and the ultimate is with an intelligent man, whether he is thinking about such things, or about other things, or is asleep . . . For the whole man is such as are the truth and good with him. Many men can simultaneously serve as one plane for one Angel. The Lord so disposes that what is absent in one may be in another . . .

5645. That the spirit of man appears in the other life . . . But this takes place with those only who think within themselves more deeply . . . But those who think solely in their Sensuous . . . never appear. Nor do Spirits know anything about man, as to where he is . . . For if evil Spirits knew where a man is, and that they were with a man, they would utterly destroy him . . . They hold men as vile . . . But the Lord loves men. D. Min. 4693.

5760. Those who remained appeared together as one man. Those who were outside him were cast out . . . 5769.

5775. That Heaven relates to one man.

5787. For the nature of every thing has been inscribed on man.

5832. All were told that they are no longer men . . .

5972. All (in the temples) when taken together form as it were one man . . .

6026. That in the other life all who acknowledge the Divine think of God as a Man.

6057. Concerning God as a Man. 6061r.

E. 1317. 'A man' who is 'rare' (Is. xiii. 12) = those who are in truths.

280. 'Had a face like a man' = the Divine . . . as to wisdom. . . (For) 'a man' = one who receives Divine truth; and (therefore) by 'a man' is signified wisdom; for man was created to be rational and wise . . . Hence it is that by 'man' in the Word is signified wisdom. The reason 'man' = the affection of truth and at the same time wisdom, is that (these two things) act as one.

[E.280]. Some suppose that man is man from his face and body, and that he is by these distinguished from beasts. But they are in error. Man is man from wisdom; and therefore in the proportion that anyone is wise, in the same proportion is he a man; (and so appears in the other life).

—<sup>2</sup>. That by 'man,' in the Word, is signified the affection of truth, and the derivative wisdom. Ill. 315<sup>6</sup>.

—<sup>14</sup>. As 'man'=the spiritual affection of truth and the derivative wisdom, he also=the Church. Ill.

—<sup>15</sup>. But by 'man,' in the supreme sense, is meant the Lord Himself. Ex. and Ill.

295. Two things make man . . . good and truth . . .

304<sup>5</sup>. 'Man'=intelligence and wisdom. 400<sup>9</sup>.

328<sup>15</sup>. 'Man,' in the opposite sense,=the desire for falsity and the derivative insanity.

351<sup>2</sup>. Before the Lord the Church in the whole world is as one man . . .

355<sup>35</sup>. 'Man,' here=intelligence from proprium . . .

386<sup>9</sup>. 'Man and beast'=spiritual affection and natural affection. 388<sup>20</sup>.

391<sup>23</sup>. Man is called 'man' from the good of life.

430<sup>4</sup>. 'A man'=the reception of truth from spiritual affection—that is, from good—and the derivative intelligence.

433<sup>25</sup>. 'Man'=intelligence.

507<sup>3</sup>. Man is man according to the way in which the Knowledge with him live . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. 'Man' (Is.li.12)=man as to wisdom; and 'the son of man'=man as to intelligence.

518<sup>35</sup>. 'Unless Jehovah had been for us when man rose up against us' (Ps.cxxiv.2)=when man from himself, from his own love, and from his Own intelligence . . . endeavours to destroy the truths of the Church.

537<sup>14</sup>. 'Man-vir,' in the Word,=the understanding of truth; and 'man,' the perception of good.

546. 'Man'=the affection of truth and the derivative intelligence and wisdom; here (Rev.ix.4) the understanding of truth and the perception of good. Ex.

547. This faculty man never loses . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. If he loses this faculty he is no longer man . . . It is from this that man lives after death . . .

554. 'Like the faces of men'=like spiritual affections of truth.

—<sup>3</sup>. All in the Heavens are men . . .

— But in Hell . . . they appear among themselves as men . . .

555<sup>3</sup>. 'Thy men shall fall by the sword' (Is.iii.25)=that the understanding of truth will be destroyed through falsities.

—<sup>14</sup>. By 'man' (Gen.ii.) is meant the Church in general and in particular.

561. 'To hurt men five months' (Rev.ix.10)=to induce stupor on the understanding of truth and the perception of good so long as they are in that state.

572. 'To kill the third part of men' (ver.15)=to deprive themselves of all the understanding of truth and the derivative spiritual life. 579.

587<sup>11</sup>. 'To sacrifice a man' (Hos.xiii.2)=to destroy the spiritual life.

600<sup>14</sup>. 'A man'=Divine truth in light and intelligence.

601<sup>13</sup>. 'He devoured men' (Ezek.xix.3)=the destruction of all the understanding of truth. 722<sup>2</sup>.

650<sup>10</sup>. 'Man' (Ps.civ.14)=the derivative intelligence.

—<sup>17</sup>. For man as to his external or natural man is nothing but a beast . . . and therefore the natural man may be called the animal man. But the reason what is internal or spiritual is signified by 'man,' is that man is man as to his Internal or Spiritual . . .

—<sup>41</sup>. 'Man' (Ezek.xxxviii.20)=all these (thoughts, affections, etc.) from primes to ultimates.

654<sup>27</sup>. Their derivative intelligence is signified by 'man.'

—<sup>42</sup>. That the natural man does not understand Divine things from himself, is signified by, 'Egypt is man, and not God.'

—<sup>53</sup>. 'I will cut off from thee man and beast'=that falsity will destroy all the intelligence of truth and affection of good in the natural man. 724<sup>28</sup>.

665<sup>2</sup>. Without conjunction with Heaven, and through it with the Lord, man would not be man, but a beast.

676. 'Slain the names of men seven thousand' (Rev.xi.13)=that all the truths of good perished . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. 'Man'=intelligence; thus, also, the understanding of truth.

695<sup>12</sup>. 'Man'=the spiritual affection of truth; 'beast,' the natural affection of good.

701<sup>3</sup>. This would never have been said unless there were something given to man from which he is able to do what is good; and that which has been given him appears to him as his own, although it is not his.

725<sup>2</sup>. By 'man,' who was called 'Adam and Eve,' is meant that Church; for it is said 'male and female created He them, and called their name man'. . . Taken together, and conjoined in marriage, they are called 'man'. . . The reason these two things, doctrine and life, taken together, and as it were conjoined in marriage, are called 'man,' and also make the Church, is that man is man from the understanding of truth and the will of good; consequently from the doctrine of life . . . and the life of doctrine . . .

780<sup>3</sup>. For all truth from the Lord is in its form a man. Hence the Angels . . . are human forms . . .

790<sup>10</sup>. As man is formed, so is he perfected in intelligence and wisdom, and becomes a man; for no man is a man from his natural mind—from this he is rather a beast—but he becomes man through intelligence and wisdom from the Lord; and in proportion as he is intelligent and wise, in the same proportion he is a beautiful man and an Angel of Heaven. (Otherwise) he is a monster and not a man . . . From these things it may be evident that man is not man from his parents, but from the Lord, from whom he is born anew.

802<sup>5</sup>. The difference between animals and men is that animals cannot think and speak truths, and will and do goods, from God; but that men can, and thus believe the things which they think, and love the things which they will; and this as of themselves . . .

825. 'Before men' (Rev. xiii. 13) = before those especially who are in the conceit of Own intelligence . . .

832<sup>6</sup>. There is also the lowest degree, which is corporeal and material, and which is with man . . .

834. The Angels (of the Ultimate Heaven), being as to understanding almost like men in the world . . .

837<sup>2</sup>. This arcanum: That each and all things of man, both of his mind and of his body, are forms of love in a wonderful series; and the organs of the brain and face, and also the members and viscera of the body, are perpetual contextures which correspond to the affections of Heaven . . .

889<sup>2</sup>. Man is his own truth, or falsity, not only as to the thoughts which are from his will, but also as to his universal body . . .

1004<sup>4</sup>. (The consorts) then appear as one man.

1026. 'To descend from heaven upon men' (Rev. xvi. 21) = from Hell destroying the understanding of truth with those who are of the Church; for by 'men' are signified the men of the Church as to the understanding of truth; or, what is the same, the understanding of truth which is with the men of the Church.

1087<sup>3</sup>. For man in the world is in his fulness; and therefore he can be conceived and born there; and afterwards be imbued with knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom . . .

1112<sup>4</sup>. (Thus) God is now more a man than the Angels.

1120<sup>3</sup>. The reason the Lord is the Only Man, is . . .

1121<sup>3</sup>. These forms are men . . .

1124<sup>6</sup>. God is a perfect man, with a face like a man, and with a body like a man. There is no difference as to form; but as to essence . . .

1127<sup>2</sup>. That all things are from Life itself . . . which is a man, may be illustrated by the man who has been created, in that as to his ultimates, his mediates, and his inmosts, he is a man. For the man who in the world . . . has been corporeal, thus stupid, after (death) appears as a man: the man who in the world . . . has been sensuous or natural . . . after death appears as a man: the man who in the world has been rational . . . after death . . . appears as a man: the man who in the world has been spiritual . . . after death appears as a man perfect according to the reception of life from the Lord: the man with whom the third degree of life has been opened . . . after death . . . appears as a man in all perfection. The life itself with him is a man, whether sensuous and natural, rational, spiritual, or celestial . . . the man in whom they are is only a recipient.

—<sup>3</sup>. As it is in the least types, so is it in the greatest. The universal angelic Heaven in the whole complex is a man: each Heaven by itself, the First, the Second, and the Third, is a man: each Society of the Heavens, greater or less, is a man: nay, the Church on earth in general is a man: all collective bodies, which are called Churches, are, by themselves, men. It is said the Church, and there are meant all with whom the Church is, in the complex. So does the Church on earth appear to the Angels . . . The reason of this appearance is that the life which is from the Lord is a man. The life from the Lord is love and wisdom; hence such as is the reception of love and wisdom from the Lord, such is the man. These things testify . . . That all things have been created from the life which is God and which is a man.

1138<sup>5</sup>. Without this perception (as if life were in him) man would not be man. Ex.

1139<sup>2</sup>. Man is a recipient subject . . .

1141<sup>2</sup>. (This) is not from man, but from the Lord. . . (This) is not from man, but from Hell. Ex.

1146<sup>4</sup>. That man is only a recipient of good and truth from the Lord, and of evil and falsity from Hell . . .

1148<sup>3</sup>. The life which makes man to be man, and to be distinguished from brute animals . . . is perpetually from the Lord with him; but the derivative understanding and will of man . . . are changed and varied according to the reception . . . 1162<sup>6</sup>.

1202<sup>4</sup>. The order into which man has been created, is to love the Lord above all things, and his neighbour as himself . . .

1207<sup>6</sup>. That all things may return to the First . . . which takes place through man.

1222<sup>2</sup>. It has been given to see a Society consisting of thousands of Angels as one man of medium stature . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. I have not seen, but have heard that the Church on earth is before the Lord as one man; and also that it is distinguished into Societies, and that each Society is a man; and also that all who are within this man are within Heaven; but that those who are outside of it are in Hell . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. The reason that Heaven and the Church are a man in the concrete, or the greatest, less, and least complex, is that God is a man, and thence the proceeding Divine . . . is the like in every least and greatest, which is a man . . . 1223<sup>6</sup>.

1224<sup>4</sup>. (So also Hell) before the Lord is as one man, but as a devil man, or monster man . . .

Ath. 181. Spirits do not see the man; but only his affections.

C. 82. Thus also a society on earth appears before the Angels in the Heavens as one man.

84. Each kingdom is presented before the Angels in Heaven as one man when the Lord pleases . . .

93. That at this day for man to be man he must be charity in form. Gen. art. 126.

D. Love ii. From the Divine Itself in itself man cannot be created; for thus he would be the Divine in itself; but he can be formed from created and finite things, in which the Divine can be . . .

v. That in such a form is man in particular. Gen. art.

—<sup>4</sup>. (Thus) man is the complex of all uses . . . viii<sup>2</sup>.

vi. That in such a form is man in general. Gen. art.

xiii. That in proportion as man is in the love of use, in the same proportion he is in the Lord's love, in the same proportion he loves him, and loves the neighbour, and is man. Gen.art.

[D.Love xiii.]<sup>4</sup>. For every use which is in any way of service to the general good . . . is a man. Ex.

— Nay, the parts of parts . . . are men more than the compounded [parts]; because all perfection increases towards the interiors . . .

—c. That every degree, even the least in man, is a man from its use . . . falls into a spiritual idea; for in a spiritual idea man is not a person, but a use; for a spiritual idea is devoid of the idea of person . . . and therefore when one sees another in Heaven, he does indeed see him as a man, but he thinks of him as a use . . . Thus every good use is in form a man.

xiv. That those are not men . . . who love themselves above all things, and the world as themselves. Gen.art.

xvi. That every man is an affection; and that there are as many various affections as there are men born, or who will be born to eternity. Gen.art.

D.Wis. iii. 4. The Primitive of man. Des.

vii. 1. That the spirit of man is equally a man. Ex.

xii. 4<sup>3</sup>. All things in the world have been created for the use, benefit, and delight of men . . .

Conv. 9. There is nothing in man except the faculty of receiving . . .

Can. Holy Spirit iv. Thence through men to men . . .

5. The Holy meant by the Holy Spirit is not transferred from man into man; but from the Lord through man into man.

Coro. 11. For every man after death is a man; not a material man, as before, but a substantial man. The mind or spirit of every man is such a man . . .

15. Before the Lord, the universal angelic Heaven together with the Church appears as one man.

Docu. 302. C. 9. Man cannot become a beast, but he can become as a beast.

Man. Vir.

See VIRILE, and under WIFE.

A. 156. 'Man' (Gen.ii.23)=the internal man. 158,III.

162. The men of the Most Ancient Church . . .

191. The Rational is represented by 'the man' (in Gen.iii.).

207 By 'the man's eating' (ver.6) is signified that the Rational consented. 265.

261. 'To thy man thine obedience' (ver.16) . . . By 'the man,' here, as before, is signified the Rational, which (the Church) will obey . . .

289. 'The man' (Ezek.xvi.45)=the Lord, and also all the Celestial.

338. 'I have gotten a man Jehovah' (Gen.iv.1)=that with those who are called 'Cain,' faith is Known and acknowledged as a thing by itself. 340. 429.

427. 'I have slain a man for my wound' (ver.23)=that he had extinguished faith. 429.

430<sup>2</sup>. 'Man and wife' (Jer.xliv.7)=the intellectual things of truth, and the voluntary things of good.

476. 'A male,' or a man=the understanding, and the things which are of the understanding; thus the things which are of faith.

568<sup>e</sup>. Hence so many laws concerning the prerogative of the man, and the obedience of the wife.

713. 'Of every clean beast thou shalt take to thee by sevens, the man and his wife; and of the beast which is not clean, by twos, the man and his wife' (Gen.vii.2) . . . By 'the man and the wife' is signified that truths were conjoined with goods. 718,Ex.

725. 'Man and wife' is predicated of voluntary things, because by 'man and wife' is represented a marriage. (See MALE, here.)

770. See WIFE, here.

1007. 'And from the hand of man brother' (Gen.ix.5)=from all his Intellectual . . . The Intellectual with man is called 'man brother' (Ref.) . . . for the understanding is called 'man.' Refs.

1126. A tall man seen, (who) signified those called 'Noah' . . .

1179<sup>e</sup>. They called themselves 'men' and 'mighty ones' from faith; for, in the Original Language, there is a word by which 'mighty one' is expressed and at the same time 'man,' which word is predicated of faith . . .

1468. When, instead of 'husband,' the term 'man' is used, 'man'=truth, and 'wife' good. 2581<sup>e</sup>. 4823<sup>2</sup>,Ex.

1499. 'Pharaoh commanded his men upon him' (Gen. xii.20)=that scientifics left the Lord. . . 'Men'=intellectual things; and as they are here predicated of Pharaoh, or knowledge, 'men'=things adapted thereto.

1578. 'We are men brethren' (Gen.xiii.8)=that in themselves they were united; (for) 'man brother'=the union of truth and good.

1594. 'A man from his brother' (ver.8)=disunion.

1600. 'The men of Sodom were evil . . .' (ver.13) . . . 'Men'=intellectual and rational, here, scientific things, because they are predicated of the external man . . .

1753. 'The portion of the men who went with me' (Gen.xiv.24)=the Angels; (for) Angels . . . are called 'men.'

2362. 'Who have not known a man' (Gen.xix.8)=that falsity has not contaminated them; for 'a man'=rational truth; and, in the opposite sense, falsity.

2374. 'They pressed upon the man' (ver. 9)=that they wanted to inflict violence on truth. 'A man'=what is intellectual and rational with man; thus truth.

2382. 'The men who were at the door of the house' (ver.11)=the rational things and the derivative doctrinal things through which violence is offered to the good of charity.

2387. 'The men said to Lot' (ver.12)=that the Lord admonishes those who are in the good of charity. 'The men'=the Lord. 2411.

2389. 'Man,' in the Word, =truth; and 'wife,' good.

2465. 'No man in the earth' (ver.31)=that it is no longer known what truth is.

2533. For when Abraham . . . is called 'a man,' it=celestial truth.

2543<sup>a</sup>. 'Men'=rational and scientific things, or intellectual things of all kinds.

2731<sup>a</sup>. Wives are affections of good . . . and men are thoughts of truth . . .

2826<sup>10</sup>. 'The legs of a man' (Ps.cxlvi.10)=man's Own power of doing good.

3066. 'The men of the city' (Gen.xxiv.13)=truths.

3081. 'A man had not Known her' (ver.16)=pure from all falsity.

— By 'a man,' in the Word, is signified not only rational truths; but also, in the opposite sense, falsity . . .

3103. 'A man'=what is rational.

3131. 'A man'=truth. 3134, Ill. 3191.

3191. 'Man,' here, (ver.61)=Divine truth natural.

3236. Therefore the Lord is called 'the Bridegroom,' 'the Man,' 'the Husband' . . .

3309. 'A man knowing' (Gen.xxv.27) is predicated of the affection of truth.

3402. As those in the Spiritual Church are treated of . . . it is said 'man and woman' (Gen.xxvi.11).

3459. 'A man to his brother' (ver.31)=those who are in the good of truth. . . 'A man'=truth. 3654<sup>2</sup>.

3831. 'Men'=truths.

3865. 'Now my man will love me' (Gen.xxix.32)=that thence is the good of truth. . . 'A man'=truth.

4287<sup>5</sup>. 'A man-vir homo'=spiritual good, or the good of truth.

4341<sup>2</sup>. 'Men' (Gen.xxxiii.1)=the rational truths which have been conjoined with good when it inflows into the Natural.

4478. 'The men of the city' (Gen.xxxiv.20)=those who are in the truths of doctrine. . . For when the inhabitants of a city are called 'the men of the city,' it is not the good of doctrine, but its truths, which are signified.

4479. 'These men are peaceable with us' (ver.21)=agreement as to doctrinal things. 'Men'=truths, and therefore also doctrinal things . . .

4502<sup>2</sup>. 'A man'=the truth of the Church.

4717. 'A man of the field' (Gen.xxxvii.15)=the good of life from doctrinal things. It is said 'a man,' because by 'a man' is signified the truth which is of the Church.

4725. 'A man to his brother' (ver.19)=mutually. Ex. 5468. 8461. 9516.

4756. The Midianites are called 'men' because they =those in truth.

4816. 'A man'=one who is intelligent; and, in the abstract sense, truth, because the genuine Intellectual is from truths; but in the opposite sense, one who is not intelligent, consequently, falsity. 4818. 4823.

4889. 'He asked the men of that place' (Gen.xxxviii.21)=that truths were consulted.

4967. 'An Egyptian man' (Gen.xxxix.1)=natural truth.

5011. 'She cried to the men of the house' (ver.14)=the falsities of evil.

5307. 'A man' (Gen.xli.38)=truth.

5510. 'The man the lord' (Gen.xlii.30)=the Celestial of the Spiritual. 'Man' is predicated of what is spiritual, because 'man'=truth.

5584<sup>a</sup>. As Joseph is here called 'the man' (Gen.xliii.3), he =the Spiritual, or truth inflowing from the Internal. 5591.

5634. 'The men' (ver.15)=truths.

5652. 'The man over Joseph's house' (ver.19)=that which is of the External Church; thus what is doctrinal.

6086. 'Men of activity' (Gen.xlvii.6)=those more excellent in doctrine. For 'a man'=one who is intelligent, and also truth, consequently doctrine.

6356. 'They slew a man' (Gen.xlix.6)=that they extinguished faith. . . 'A man'=the truth of faith.

6639. 'A man and his house came' (Ex.i.1)=as to truth and as to good.

6716. 'There went a man of the house of Levi' (Ex.ii.1)=the origin of truth from good. 'A man'=truth.

6792. 'The man' (ver.21)=the truth of good of that Church.

7456<sup>5</sup>. 'A man and woman'=truth and good.

7716. 'They did not see a man his brother' (Ex.x.23)=that they did not perceive the truth of any good.

7770. 'A man' (Ex.xi.2) relates to truth; and 'a woman' to good.

7785. 'From man and even to beast' (ver.7)=neither as to truth nor as to good.

8337. For when men represent truth, their women represent good.

— Women represent good, and men truth, when the Spiritual Church is treated of; but women represent truth, and men good, when the Celestial Church is treated of. 8338.

8596. 'Choose for us men' (Ex.xvii.9)=that he should draw up truths for the combat.

8647<sup>a</sup>. In the Spiritual Church the man represents truth, and the wife good.

8665. 'A man to his companion'=mutually.

8694. 'To judge between a man and his companion' (Ex.xviii.16)=disposition among truths.

8710. 'Men of activity' (Ex.xviii.21)=those who have strength-vires-from truths which are from good. (=truths with which good can be conjoined. 8725.

8711. 'Men of truth, hating gain' (id.)=because the truths are pure without a worldly end.

[A.] 8801. 'Whether beast or man, he shall not live' (Ex.xix.13)=that good and truth would lose their spiritual life.

8902<sup>10</sup>. 'A man who does judgment' (Jer.v.1)=those who are in truths from good.

8993. 'A man'=truth.

8994<sup>3</sup>. Such an affection (for truths and goods themselves) is general with good women; but the affection of the knowledges of truth is general with men . . . For it is according to Divine order that men should be in knowledges, but women only in affections . . . On this account knowledges and Knowledges are represented by men. (Continued under FEMALE.)

9007. 'He that smiteth a man, and he die' (Ex.xxi.12)=the injuring of the truth of faith, and the consequent loss of spiritual life.

—<sup>2</sup>. In Heaven they do not perceive a man, when he is mentioned in the Word; for a man is a person; but instead they perceive his faculty from which he is a man, namely, the intellectual faculty; and when they perceive this, they perceive the truth of faith. (Continued under MAN-homo.)

9018. 'To steal a man' (ver.16)=the application of the truth of faith to evil.

9024. 'When men shall dispute' (ver.18)=contention in themselves about truths. . . 'Men'=those who are intelligent, and who are in truths; and, in the abstract sense, intellectual things and truths.

9034. 'A man' (of the sons of Israel)=him who is of the Church, and is thence in spiritual truth, which is the truth of the doctrine of faith of the Church from the Word. 9041. 9058.

9041. 'When men shall quarrel' (ver.22)=grievous contention among truths.

9058. 'A man' (ver.26)=the internal man . . . For the truth of faith is in the internal man . . .

9065. 'A man' (ver.28)=the truth of faith. 9073. 9090. 9149. 9182.

9406<sup>6</sup>. By 'the man clothed in linen' (Dan.x.5), in the supreme sense, is meant the Lord, and (therefore) the Divine truth which is from Him; for the Divine truth which is from the Lord is the Lord Himself in Heaven and the Church.

9790. (A man of the First Earth.) Des.

9807<sup>10</sup>. 'A man'=its truth itself conjoined with good.

9828<sup>8</sup>. 'Men painted on the wall' (Ezek.xxiii.14)=appearances of truth in externals.

9872<sup>2</sup>. 'The man clothed in linen' was an Angel from Heaven.

10400. The reason Moses is here called 'that man' (Ex.xxxii.1), is that by 'a man,' in the Word, is signified truth.

10406<sup>5</sup>. For 'a man'=truth; and 'a man-homo,' the good of that truth.

10555. 'A man'=truth.

10754<sup>6</sup>. (The men of the Fifth Earth.) Des.

H. 368. For a man is born to be intellectual; thus to think from the understanding . . . (For) a man acts from reason . . . and is harsher and less beautiful in the face, heavier in speech, and harder in body . . . Hence it is that in the Word by 'a youth' and 'a man' is meant the understanding of truth . . .

369. Both man and woman enjoy understanding and will; but still understanding predominates with the man, and will with the woman; and a man-homo-is according to that which predominates.

R. 243. See MAN-homo-here.

M. 9<sup>4</sup>. I saw four men in shining garments and mitres . . .

10. There were present nine men . . .

23. These ten men with their Angel . . .

44<sup>2</sup>. In a word, a man (there) is a man, and a woman a woman, in all the perfection of the form in which they have been created. Retire if you like, and examine yourself as to whether anything is wanting to prevent you from being a man as before.

—<sup>7</sup>. With the men there all the nerves fall at the sight of a harlot, and are in tension at the sight of a wife.

49. Sometimes the man separates from the wife, and sometimes the wife from the man; and sometimes both from each other. Ex.

50. That then to the man is given a suitable wife . . . Ex.

55<sup>6</sup>. There is the love of a man and a man, and also of a woman and a woman; and there is the love of a man for a woman, and the love of a woman for a man . . . The love of a man and a man is like the love of understanding and understanding. (Continued under LOVE, here.)

— . Therefore two men with their reasonings fight like two wrestlers; and two women with their concupiscences sometimes come to blows like two pugilists.

56<sup>8</sup>. Women were created by the Lord affections of the wisdom of the men . . . The second (of the wise ones) said that woman was created by the Lord through the wisdom of the man, because from the man . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. The fourth said that the Lord has taken away beauty and elegance of life from the man, and has transcribed it into the woman; and that hence the man, without reunion with his beauty and elegance in the woman, is grim, austere, dry, and unlovable; and is not wise except to himself alone, and such a one is foolish: but when a man is united with his beauty and elegance of life in a wife, he becomes delightful, pleasant, lively, and lovable, and thus wise.

63. The Church is formed by the Lord with the man, and through the man with the wife . . . 125<sup>2</sup>.

75<sup>4</sup>. These men ran up to us . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. For a man was born to be wisdom; and the woman to be the love of the wisdom of the man.

88<sup>2</sup>. There are therefore two loves with the man, one of which, which is the prior one, is the love of being wise; and the other of which, which is the posterior one, is the love of wisdom. But if this latter love remains with the man, it is an evil love, and is called the conceit or love of his Own intelligence. That this love has been taken out of the man, lest it should destroy him, and has been transcribed into the woman, in order to become conjugal love . . . will be confirmed in what follows.

91. For the man cannot be loved from his form alone . . . but from the talent which is in him, which causes him to be a man-homo.

—<sup>e</sup>. (The woman's domestic offices), which adjoin themselves to the offices of the men, which are called forensic.

137<sup>b</sup>. For the men were created receptions of light—that is, of wisdom from the Lord; and the women were created receptions of heat, that is, of the love of the wisdom of the man from the Lord.

159. That the will of the wife conjoins itself with the understanding of the man, and thence the understanding of the man with the will of the wife. Ex.

160. That the inclination to unite the man to herself is constant and perpetual with the wife; but is inconstant and alternate with the man. Ex.

— Women are born loves; but men . . . are receptions. 161<sup>b</sup>.

—<sup>2</sup>. For the man is not love; but only a recipient of love . . .

161. That conjunction is inspired into the man by the wife according to his love, and is received by the man according to his wisdom. Gen.art.

— For there is nothing of conjugal love, and not even of the love of the sex, with men; but solely with wives and women. (Shown by experiment.)

165. The reason the conjunction of the wife with the rational wisdom of the man is from within, is that this wisdom is proper to the understanding of the men, and climbs up into the light, in which women are not . . .

167. Because in very many men conjugal cold is deeply seated . . .

168. That this perception is the wisdom of the wife; and that it is not possible with the men; nor is the rational wisdom of the man possible with the wife. Ex.

—<sup>c</sup>. Neither is the moral wisdom of the man possible with women in so far as it partakes of his rational wisdom.

174. That there are offices proper to the man, and offices proper to the wife; and that the wife cannot enter into the offices proper to the man, nor the man into the offices proper to the wife, and discharge them aright. Gen.art.

175. In the offices proper to the men, understanding, thought, and wisdom play the leading part . . . (Continued under WOMAN-mulier.)

—<sup>4</sup>. The reason men cannot enter into the offices proper to women, and discharge them aright, is that they are not in the affections of women, which are altogether distinct from the affections of men. As the affections and perceptions of the male sex have been thus discriminated from creation . . . therefore among the statutes with the sons of Israel was this: 'There shall not be the garment of a man upon a woman, nor the garment of a woman upon a man; because this is an abomination' (Deut.xxii.5). The reason was, that in the Spiritual World all are clothed according to their affections; and the two affections—of the woman and of the man—cannot be united, except between two, and never in one.

187. That these changes (of state) are different with men from what they are with women; because men from creation are forms of knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom; and women are forms of the love of these things with men. Ex.

188. That with men there is an elevation of the mind into higher light; and that with women there is an elevation of the mind into higher heat; and that the woman feels the deliciousnesses of her heat in the man's light. Ex.

— By the light into which men are elevated is meant intelligence and wisdom.

190. That with both men and women the states of life before marriage are different from what they are after marriage. Ex.

192<sup>e</sup>. The man derives from the wife the lovely bloom of her love; and the wife from the man the bright resplendence of his wisdom . . .

193. 'She shall be called Ishah, because she was taken out of Ish, man' (Gen.ii.23) . . . By the breast of the man is signified that essential and proper thing which is distinguished from the breast of the woman; which is wisdom . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) the woman was created out of the man by the transcription of his proper wisdom; that is, from natural truth; and the love of this was transferred from the man into the woman, in order that it might become conjugal love; and this was done that in the man there might not be the love of self but the love of his wife. (Continued under WIFE.)

194. The woman's being created while the man slept. Ex.

195. That this formation by the wife is effected through the conjunction of her own will with the internal will of the man. Ex.

— With the man there are rational wisdom and moral wisdom, and the wife conjoins herself with those things which are of moral wisdom with the man . . . The things of rational wisdom make the man's understanding, and the things of moral wisdom make his will . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. With the internal will of the man is said because the will of the man has its seat in his understanding; and the Intellectual of the man is the inmost of the woman . . . Men have an external will also, but this often partakes of simulation and dissimulation. This will the wife clearly sees; but she does not conjoin herself with it, except pretendedly or playfully.

197<sup>e</sup>. The affections with men are in the understanding, but with women in the will.

213. The wife sees nothing more lovable than the man, and the man (nothing more lovable than the wife).

218. (The intelligence of women contrasted with that of men.) Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. How much from their very birth the genius of men differs from that of women . . .

[M. 218]<sup>8</sup>. (Thus) the man is born understanding, and the woman love . . .

— . What would be the quality of the man's understanding without conjunction with feminine love . . .

219. That wives are in no excitation as men are . . . Ex.

220. That men have abundance according to the love of propagating the truths of wisdom, and according to the love of doing uses. Gen.art.

259. See COLD, here.

292<sup>2</sup>. They know that the men, from their nature, are unable to resist the obstinacy of their wives; and that after giving way they submit themselves . . . Because a man acts from the understanding, and a woman from the will; and the will can make itself obstinate, but not the understanding.

—<sup>3</sup>. They added this admonition for the men: to leave their wives their own rights; and while they are in the alternate colds, not to account them as viler than their maid-servants.

294<sup>3</sup>. For every man who is only naturally rational and moral has cold towards his wife . . .

296. The reason choice belongs to the man, and not to the woman, is because the man is born to be understanding, and the woman to be love; and also because with men there is commonly the love of the sex; but with women the love of one of the sex; and also because it is not unbecoming for men to speak about love, and to publish it, whereas for women this is unbecoming . . . Ex.

297. That the man ought to court and entreat the woman to marry him, and not the woman the man. Ex.
—<sup>2</sup>. Besides, men have not any innate love of the sex . . .

321<sup>3</sup>. A sphere of love constantly flows forth from the wife, and a sphere of understanding from the man . . .

325<sup>3</sup>. As the man from creation is truth, and the wife is the good thereof . . .

331. Whether a man who loves himself from his own intelligence can love his wife . . .

— . Virtue is not deficient when a man loves his wife from intelligence; but it is deficient if he loves her from insanity. Intelligence is to love the wife alone . . .

372<sup>2</sup>. Therefore zeal has been implanted in the men; and, through the men, and for the sake of the men, in the women.

379. That jealousy with men and husbands is different from what it is with women and wives. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. But with the spiritual the jealousy of the man is transferred into the wife, as the love of the wife is transferred into the man . . . But the jealousy of the wife is inspired into the man against the endeavours of the violating harlot . . .

393. The sphere of conjugal love is received by women, and through the women is transferred into the men; for the reason that the women have been born loves of the understanding of the men, and the understanding is a recipient. It is the like with the love of infants . . .

432. See MAN-homo, here.

446<sup>6</sup>. A sign that understanding makes the man . . .

D. 3896. They say that they will have nothing to do with men . . . 3899.

605<sup>5</sup>. Because the woman has been born the affection of truth and good, and the man the understanding of truth and good . . .

E. 63<sup>11</sup>. 'A man'=the Church's truth itself conjoined with good. Refs.

141<sup>6</sup>. 'If ye can find a man'=whether there is any truth there.

151<sup>5</sup>. 'The will of a man'=falsity from the voluntary proprium. (=the love of falsity. 295<sup>6</sup>.) (=the falsities of faith. 329<sup>20</sup>.) 745<sup>6</sup>. 802<sup>6</sup>.

280<sup>3</sup>. By 'man-virum hominem' is signified intelligence; and by 'man-hominem, wisdom. 400<sup>4</sup>.

—<sup>12</sup>. 'Man'=truth.

313<sup>13</sup>. 'The middle of a man' (Ps.lxiv.6)=the Intellectual where there was truth.

340<sup>25</sup>. 'To smite a man'=to reject all truth.

381<sup>3</sup>. 'A man'=Own intelligence.

386<sup>2</sup>. 'A man'=what is false.

405<sup>60</sup>. 'No man passing through it' (Jer.ix.10)=no longer any truth, and thence not any intelligence.

412<sup>6</sup>. 'A man'=truth, and falsity.

430<sup>15</sup>. 'Men'=those who are in truths; 'women and children,' those who are in goods.

443<sup>6</sup>. 'In their anger they slew a man'=that they have completely averted themselves from truths, and in their aversion have extinguished faith.

—<sup>7</sup>. 'A man,' in the Word, =truth and intelligence.

537<sup>14</sup>. 'A man,' in the Word, =the understanding of truth; and 'a man-homo,' the perception of good.

555<sup>2</sup>. 'Man and woman' (Jer.li.22)=truth and its affection.

—<sup>3</sup>. 'Seven women shall take hold of one man' (Is.iv.1)=that from affection they will desire and seek truth; but will not find it.

—<sup>4</sup>. 'A woman shall compass a man' (Jer.xxxi.22)=that a new Church will be instaurated in which truth will be conjoined with its own affection.

—<sup>11</sup>. 'Men'=those who are in truths; 'women,' those who are in good from the affection of truth.

—<sup>14</sup>. 'A man shall leave father and mother, and cleave to his wife'=that truth must be of good.

—<sup>15</sup>. 'Man and woman'=the conjunction of truth and good. Ill. 652<sup>28</sup>.

587<sup>7</sup>. 'The form of a man'=the appearance of truth.

617<sup>27</sup>. 'A man and a brother'=faith and charity. (=truth and charity. 633<sup>3</sup>.)

624<sup>12</sup>. 'A man spirit' (Hos.ix.7).

652<sup>11</sup>. 'Man and inhabitants'=all who are in truths and goods . . .

653<sup>5</sup>. 'A man'=intelligence.

675<sup>14</sup>. 'Ten men' (Amos vi.9)=all truths.

710<sup>25</sup>. For a man is born to act from the understanding; but a woman from affection; and the understanding with men is the understanding of truth and good, and the affection with women is the affection of truth and good; and as all understanding draws its life from affection, they are coupled in Heaven as this affection is coupled with the corresponding thought . . .

714<sup>17</sup>. That no truth of the Church will be left, is signified by, 'No man shall dwell there . . .' (Jer. xlix. 33).

721<sup>10</sup>. 'Man' = the truth of the Church.

734<sup>23</sup>. 'Man and brother' = truth and good; and, in the opposite sense, falsity and evil. 'Man and companion' = truths among themselves; and, in the opposite sense, falsities among themselves. 746<sup>4</sup>. —<sup>6</sup>.

739<sup>11</sup>. The woman's 'man' (Gen. iii.) = the Rational.

768<sup>19</sup>. 'Man and wife,' in the Word, = the understanding of truth and the will of good; (and therefore also) the thought of truth and the affection of good; and also truth and good.

817<sup>3</sup>. Therefore Cain was named 'a man of Jehovah,' for by 'a man of Jehovah' is signified the truth of Heaven and the Church.

983<sup>3</sup>. 'The man was created to be the understanding of truth, and the woman to be the affection of good; consequently, the man to be truth, and the woman good. When the understanding of truth which is with the man, makes one with the affection of good which is with the woman, there is a conjunction of the two minds into one . . . 993<sup>2</sup>. 998<sup>4</sup>.

1000<sup>4</sup>. Then the wife is good in form, and the man is truth in form.

1004<sup>2</sup>. Inmost union is like that of the soul and the heart; the soul of the wife is the man, and the heart of the man is the wife. The man communicates and conjoins his soul to his wife by actual love, and the wife receives it at heart. Hence the two are one . . . For it is from creation that all things of the man of both mind and body should have their Mutual in the mind and body of the wife . . .

1120<sup>2</sup>. The man is born to be understanding . . . thus truth.

1121. For the man is born to be the understanding of truth; hence this predominates with him; and the woman is born to be the affection of good; hence this predominates with her . . . D. Wis. iii. 3<sup>2</sup>.

J. (Post.) 21. The men dwell at one side of the city, and the women at the other . . .

Coro. 31. The Intellectual (of the natural man separated from the spiritual) is signified by 'the man' (Gen. iii.).

Manasseh. Menaschah.

See under EPHRAIM.

A. 5351. 'Joseph called the name of the first-born Manasseh' (Gen. xli. 51) = the new Voluntary in the Natural, and its quality. (For) 'Manasseh, in the Word, represents spiritual good in the Natural; thus the new Voluntary. This name also involves the very quality of this good, or of this new Voluntary; (as is evident from the words) 'Because God hath made me forget all my labour, and all my father's house' (id.).

Thus is described the quality which is signified by 'Manasseh.'

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason the first-born, who was named Manasseh, = spiritual good in the Natural, or the new Voluntary there, is that good is actually the first-born in the Church, or with the man who becomes a Church. Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. That 'Manasseh' = the new Voluntary in the Natural; or, what is the same, spiritual good there, cannot be so evident from the Word elsewhere . . . But still from Ephraim it may be concluded concerning Manasseh . . .

5353. 'Manasseh' means forgetfulness; thus, in the internal sense, removal, namely, of evils, both actual and hereditary; for when these have been removed there rises up a new Voluntary. Ex.

5354<sup>12</sup>. Ephraim was accepted in place of Reuben, and Manasseh in place of Simeon (Gen. xlviii. 5). E. 440<sup>3</sup>.

6222<sup>6</sup>. The good of the Church which is represented by 'Manasseh' is the good of charity, which is insinuated by the Lord into the man of the Church by means of the truths of faith.

6271. 'His left hand upon the head of Manasseh' (ver. 14) = that he accounted good in the second place. . . . 'Manasseh' = the Voluntary; thus also the good of charity.

6273. 'Because Manasseh was the first-born' (id.) = since good is in the prior place. 'Manasseh' = the good which is of the Voluntary.

6275. 'Ephraim and Manasseh,' who here are 'Joseph,' = the truth of the Intellectual and the good of the Voluntary in the Natural born from the Internal. 6295.

6295. As 'Manasseh' = the good of the Voluntary, therefore by him is represented the celestial man, but the external celestial man, or the man of the External Celestial Church; for 'Manasseh' = the good of the Voluntary in the Natural; thus in the external man.

—<sup>2</sup>. In the external of this Church are those who are in love towards the neighbour. The good of this love—namely of love towards the neighbour with the celestial man—is what is here called the truth of good, and is represented by 'Manasseh' . . .

6584. See MACHIR, here.

—, 'Manasseh' = the Voluntary of the Church. Refs.

R. 355. 'Of the tribe of Manasseh were sealed twelve thousand' (Rev. vii. 6) = the will of serving and the act with those who will be of the Lord's New Heaven and New Church . . . The will of serving with the act, is the effect, thus the ultimate, in which (mutual love, and understanding) are and coexist. The reason 'Manasseh' signifies this, is that Joseph . . . = the Spiritual of the Church, and the Spiritual of the Church is the good of the will, and at the same time the truth of the understanding. Hence it is that 'Manasseh' = the Voluntary of the Church . . . The reason 'Manasseh' = the Voluntary of the Church, is that 'Ephraim' = the Intellectual . . . and as 'Manasseh' = the Voluntary of the Church, he also = act; for will is the endeavour of every act; and where there is endeavour, there is act when it is possible. Ill.

[R.] 362<sup>a</sup>. (In the enumeration of the tribes) instead of Dan there is 'Manasseh.' E.450.

434<sup>12</sup>. See GAD, here.

435. The good of life from a spiritual origin is the good of life which is done from the good of charity towards the neighbour through the truths from this good. This good of life is meant by 'Manasseh.' For . . . the tribes of 'Asher, Naphtali, and Manasseh' = those things which fully constitute spiritual good.

438. Charity towards the neighbour is signified by these three tribes, namely, 'Asher, Naphtali, and Manasseh.'

—<sup>2</sup>. By 'Manasseh' is meant the good of life of those who are in (charity towards the neighbour).

440. 'Of the tribe of Manasseh were sealed twelve thousand' = the derivative good of life. . . (For) the tribe of Manasseh = the Voluntary of the Church, and the derivative good of life. Ex.

—<sup>5</sup>. 'Manasseh,' here, = the good of the Church; and 'Ephraim,' its truth.

—<sup>7</sup>. As by 'Manasseh' was represented . . . good in the natural man from a spiritual origin, an inheritance beyond Jordan and also on this side Jordan was given to this tribe . . . for by the land beyond Jordan was represented the External Church, which is with men in the natural man; and by the land on this side Jordan was represented the Internal Church, which is with men in the spiritual man; and good is what makes the Church; and this good inflows immediately from the spiritual man into the natural; and without this influx there is no Church with man. This is why to the tribe of Manasseh, by which is signified the good of the Church, there was given an inheritance both within and beyond the Jordan . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. That 'Manasseh' = the good of the Church, or the good of life, which is the same as the good of the will, may be evident from the representation of Ephraim . . .

441<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) by 'Manasseh' is signified the corresponding external.

443. Those who are in the Second Heaven . . . are signified by 'Asher, Naphtali, and Manasseh,' who therefore constitute the second class of the sealed.

449<sup>12</sup>. See BENJAMIN, here.

617<sup>29</sup>. 'Manasseh (shall devour) Ephraim, and Ephraim Manasseh' (Is.ix.21) = that the will of evil will consume the understanding of truth; and that the understanding of falsity will consume the will of good.

Mandrakes. Dudaim, Mandragoras.

A. 3941. It now treats of the conjunction of good and truth by the rest of the sons; and therefore first of 'the dudaim,' by which is signified this conjunction, or Conjugal.

3942. 'He found dudaim in the field' (Gen.xxx.14) = those things which are of conjugal love in the truth and good of charity and of love. 'Dudaim' = the things which are of conjugal love. . . The translators do not know what 'the dudaim' were. It is supposed that they were fruits or flowers, which also are named, according to each person's opinion; but of what kind [they were] it is of no concern to know . . . That by 'the dudaim' is signified the Conjugal of good and truth, may be evident from the series of things in the internal sense; and also from the derivation of the word in the Original Language; for it is derived from the word 'dudim,' which means loves, and conjunction through them. III.

3945. 'Give me I pray of thy son's dudaim' (id.) = the affection and longing for the things which are of conjugal love . . . 3947. 3948. 3951.

Ad. 733. (Thus) 'the dudaim' = the love itself of marriage; that is, the flowers called dudaim represented it . . . Therefore some call these flowers mandrakes-mandragoras, and also flowers of love.

736. The dudaim were flowers, with the shrubs-fruticibus, by which conjugal love is signified.

E. 434<sup>8</sup>. 'The dudaim' = the marriage of good and truth . . . and therefore by 'the dudaim' found by Reuben is signified the Conjugal which is of truth with good; and as this Conjugal is between truth and good in the internal man, which makes the Internal Church, and still this truth first exists in the external man, which makes the External Church, therefore the dudaim were found by Reuben, by whom was represented truth from good, and were first given to Leah his mother, by whom was represented the External Church; but still were given by Leah to Rachel, by whom was represented the Internal Church.

Manger. Praesepe.

S. 26<sup>3</sup>. The place where they were stored up appeared like a manger in a stable . . . The manger in the stable, in which the purses lay, = spiritual instruction for the understanding. R.255. D.3605a.

T. 277. The manger as it were in a stable = spiritual nourishment for the understanding. This is signified by a manger, because a horse, which eats out of it, = the understanding.

E. 706<sup>12</sup>. 'A manger' (Luke ii.12) = the doctrine of truth from the Word; from the fact that by horses is signified the understanding of the Word. . . Hence by 'a manger,' where is the pasture of horses, is signified the doctrine of truth from the Word.

Manna. Man, Manna.

A. 276. This Celestial was represented by the manna also. 999<sup>2</sup>.

—<sup>2</sup>. Therefore the Jews . . . could not be otherwise than averse to the manna, because it was a representation of the Lord; and could not but call it vile bread; and therefore serpents were sent against them (Num. xxi.5,6).

2493. (Why the manna was given 'daily.')

2838<sup>4</sup>. Because the manna signified the Divine Human of the Lord (John vi.31,32,49,50,58); and as it signified the Divine Human of the Lord, it signified celestial food, which is nothing else than love and charity with the goods and truths of faith. In the Heavens this food is given by the Lord every moment; thus in perpetuity and to eternity.

— The manna, being celestial bread, in the supreme sense,=the Lord as to Divine good; hence with men the Celestial of love; for this is from the Divine of the Lord.

[A.] 5620<sup>11</sup>. The manna, which was for bread for the descendants of Jacob in the wilderness, is thus described in . . . Ex.xvi.31. As the manna-man—signified truth Divine, which descends from the Lord through Heaven, and consequently the Lord Himself as to the Divine Human, as He Himself teaches in John vi.51,58—for it is the Lord's Divine Human from which comes all truth Divine; nay, concerning which is all truth Divine—the manna is described as to delight and pleasantness by its taste, which was like that of a cake kneaded with honey . . .

8395. The consolation after temptation is signified and described by 'the manna' which they received, and by 'the quails.' 'The manna'=spiritual good; and that this is continually given by the Lord, and without any care or aid of theirs, is signified by their receiving the manna daily; and that if they gathered more, it bred worms.

8400<sup>2</sup>. Here, what is new of life is signified by the manna which they had received from Heaven; for 'the manna'=the good of truth, which is the life of the spiritual man.

8413<sup>2</sup>. He knows not that when this (delight of pleasures) is removed, there is insinuated by the Lord in its place spiritual delight and good. It is this good which is signified by 'the manna'; the former good or delight is meant by the flesh and bread in the land of Egypt; and the privation of it by the famine. Ex.

8422. The gathering of the manna every day=the reception of good . . .

8431. It is to be known that by 'the manna' is signified the good of the internal or spiritual man; but by 'the quails,' the good of the external or natural man, which is called delight. That these are signified is evident from the fact that the manna was given in the morning time, and the quails in the evening time; and by that which is given in the morning time is signified spiritual good; and by that which is given in the evening time is signified natural good, or delight. Ex.

8462. 'This is manna-man, because they did not know what this is' (Ex.xvi.15)=amazement from what is not Known; (for 'manna-man,' in their language is 'What?'; thus what is not Known. The reason the bread given the sons of Israel in the wilderness was from this called 'manna,' is that this bread=the good of charity which is begotten through the truth of faith. This good, before regeneration, is quite unknown to man . . .

8464<sup>2</sup>. From each thing here it is evident that 'the manna,' in the spiritual sense, = the good of truth; that is, the good of the Spiritual Church. Hence also it is called 'the corn of the heavens' in David . . . (Ps. lxxviii.24). 'Corn'=the good of truth. 'Manna' also = the good of truth, which is given to those who undergo temptations and conquer, in John: 'He that overcometh, to him will I give to eat of the hidden manna' (Rev.ii.17). That in the supreme sense 'manna'=the Lord in us, is evident from the Lord's words in John vi.49-58. From these things it is manifestly evident that by 'the manna,' in the supreme sense, is signified the Lord. The reason is that 'the manna'=the good of truth; and all good is from the Lord; and hence the Lord is in good, and is good itself.

8469. A quantity [sufficient] of the good of truth which is signified by 'the manna.' Sig.

— It here treats of the good possessed by those of the Spiritual Kingdom, which good is signified by 'the manna' . . .

8472. For the manna is heavenly food; and heavenly food is good and truth; and the good and truth in Heaven are the Lord . . . From these things it may be evident that the things here appointed concerning the manna are such things as come forth in the said Societies . . .

8478. The manna was given every morning, and worms were bred in the residue; by which things is signified that the Lord provides necessities daily, and that therefore they ought not to be solicitous about acquiring them from themselves.

8505<sup>6</sup>. (Their not finding the manna-man—on the seventh day, means that in the second state of regeneration the man acts from affection, and is no longer allowed to acquire good through truth). Ex.

8516. 'The manna,' which is here 'the bread'=the good of truth.

8520. 'And the house of Israel called the name thereof manna-man' (ver.31)=its quality with them. . . . 'The manna-man' was so called from its not being Known; and it=the good of truth, which is the good of those who belong to the Spiritual Church. Refs.

8521. The good of truth is now being described (ver. 31), which is signified by 'the manna,' as to both the quality of the truth and that of the good therein. (Continued under GOOD OF TRUTH.)

8531. 'Put there the fulness of an omer of manna-man' (ver.33)=the good therein as much as it contains. . . . 'The manna-man'=spiritual good, or the good of truth.

8537. 'The sons of Israel did eat manna-man—forty years' (ver.35)=the appropriation of the good of truth in the state of all temptations.

8539. 'They did eat manna-man—until they came to the border of the Land of Canaan' (id.)=that they had the appropriation of good from truth until they came to the region of Heaven. Ex.

10303<sup>5</sup>. 'The sons of Israel ground the manna in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and cooked it into cakes' (Num.xi.8). By 'the manna' was signified celestial and spiritual good . . .

L. 27. By 'meat' is meant all the truth and good of doctrine from the Word . . . This is also here (John vi.) meant by 'the manna,' and 'the bread,' which cometh down from Heaven.

R. 120. 'To him will I give to eat of the hidden manna'=wisdom, and then the appropriation of the good of celestial love in works, and thus the conjunction of the Lord with those who are working. By 'the hidden manna,' which will be for those who are in good works and who at the same time adjoin to the works the truths of doctrine, is meant hidden wisdom such as is possessed by those who are in the Third Heaven . . .

T. 820<sup>e</sup>. The Angels send down to (them) a plate containing manna, in form and taste like that sent down upon the camp of the sons of Israel . . .

E. 146. 'To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna' = to those who conquer in temptations the delight of celestial love from the Divine Human of the Lord. . . As by 'the hidden manna' is meant the Lord as to the Divine Human, by 'to eat of it' is here signified the delight of celestial love. . . That it is the Lord Himself who is meant by 'the manna.' Ill.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason it is called 'the hidden manna' is that the delight of celestial love which is received by those who are conjoined with the Lord through love is quite unknown to those who are not in celestial love; and this delight can be received solely by him who acknowledges the Divine Human of the Lord, because it proceeds therefrom. As this delight was unknown to the sons of Israel in the wilderness, they called it 'manna-man,' Ill. and Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. The reason the delight of celestial love is signified by 'to eat of the hidden manna,' when yet by 'the hidden manna' is signified the Lord as to the Divine Human, is that it is the same whether you say the Divine Human of the Lord, or the Divine love. Ex.

513<sup>6</sup>. 'Manna-man' (Num. xi. 6) = spiritual food, which is knowledge, intelligence, and wisdom.

617<sup>4</sup>. The Lord's doctrine was what (the multitude who were fed) spiritually ate; from which the natural eating followed; namely, it flowed from Heaven with them as did the manna with the sons of Israel . . . for, when the Lord wills, spiritual food . . . is turned into natural food, in like manner as it was turned into manna every morning.

730<sup>35</sup>. 3. That meanwhile the Lord supports man with spiritual food and drink, which are the goods and truths of Heaven, is signified by His feeding them with manna, and by His bringing forth water out of the rock . . . By 'the manna' is meant the good of celestial love . . .

750<sup>15</sup>. As by 'the manna' is signified spiritual nourishment, it also = faith and understanding, or the intelligence of man, which are spiritually nourished . . . 'There is not anything except to the manna our eyes' (Num. xi. 6) = that there is only spiritual nourishment . . .

899<sup>6</sup>. By 'the manna' which the sons of Jacob ate in the wilderness' (John vi. 49), as to them, because they were natural, is meant natural food; and by 'the bread which cometh down from Heaven,' is meant spiritual food . . .

5 M. 18. Then from the cloud there dropped as it were dew, which being scattered around condensed into manna, some of which the Angels took up, and gave to their guests, who ate it . . .

19. The dew falling from the cloud . . . and condensed into manna, represented the celestial affections of the thoughts in their speech . . .

Coro. 22<sup>2</sup>. Because they loathed the manna-man-from heaven, by which in the supreme sense is meant the Lord.

—'. The prophets shall not put on a mantle of hair in order to lie' (Zech.xiii.4)=that they shall not say that truths are falsities, and falsities truths.

—<sup>4</sup>. As 'a mantle' = Divine truth in general, which is the Word in ultimates, the mantle of Elijah came to Elisha; and the waters of Jordan were also divided by the mantle of Elijah.

—'. That Elijah cast his mantle upon Elisha, signified that he transferred to him the representation of the Lord as to the Word. And that the mantle fell from Elijah when he was taken away, and that it was taken by Elisha, signified that that representation was transferred to Elisha; for . . . 'the mantle' signified the Word in ultimates, which is Divine truth in general, or Divine truth in the whole complex. That the waters of Jordan were divided by the mantle of Elijah, first by Elijah, and afterwards by Elisha, signified the power of Divine truth in ultimates . . . A. 54. The highest happinesses and deliciousnesses (of the Most Ancient Church) were marriages, and they likened to marriages whatever they possibly could, in order to perceive thence the happiness of marriage. . . They perceived the happiness of their marriages to come from the heavenly marriage; and therefore they called the understanding in the spiritual man 'the male,' and the will 'the female;' and when these acted as one, they called it a marriage. 55.

60. Thus is a marriage effected between spiritual and celestial things.

162. Principally does the law of marriages descend from (celestial principles). It is the heavenly marriage from which, and according to which, must be all marriages on earth; which is such that there is one Lord and one Heaven . . . The law of marriages thence is that there shall be one husband and one wife; and, when this is the case, they represent the heavenly marriage, and are an exemplar of the celestial man.

This law was not only revealed to the men of the Most Ancient Church, but was also inscribed on their internal man . . . But when their descendants ceased to be internal men . . . they married more wives than one. (Continued under MARRIAGE LOVE.)

475. 'Male and female'=the marriage between faith and love.

718. There is never with man the least of thought, of affection, or of action, in which there is not a kind of marriage of the will and the understanding. Without a kind of marriage, nothing ever comes forth or is produced. In the very organic things of man, compound and simple, even in the most simple, there are a passive and an active, which could not possibly be there, still less produce anything, if they were not coupled in a kind of marriage like that of man and wife. In like manner [is it] in universal nature. These perpetual marriages derive their beginning and origin from the heavenly marriage, by means of which the idea of the Lord's Kingdom is impressed on every thing in universal nature. 1432.

747. For there is in all things a resemblance of marriage, or a coupling; like that of truths with goods, and that of evils with falsities; because there is a marriage of the understanding with the will, or of intellectual with voluntary things; and in fact every thing has its own marriage, or its own coupling, without which it could never subsist.

865<sup>2</sup>. For example: true marriage is that of one man with one wife; and such a marriage is a representative of the heavenly marriage; consequently, in such a marriage there can be heavenly happiness; but never in the marriage of a man with a number of wives. The spiritual man, who knows this from the Lord's Word, acquiesces, and thence receives the conscience that marriage with a number of wives is a sin. He knows no more; whereas the celestial man perceives thousands of things which confirm, so that he abhors matrimony with a number.

1902. The Rational would be born immediately from the marriage of the celestial things of the internal man with its spiritual things . . .

1907. For it is from a law of Divine order that there is no marriage except that of one man and one woman: marriage love can never be divided. That which is divided among a number is not marriage love, but is [the love] of lasciviousness.

2063. Represent . . . the Divine marriage of good with truth in the Lord . . . from which should be born the Divine Rational . . . 2093.

2173. In the historicals . . . good and truth have to be represented by a marriage; for . . . there is a Divine marriage between celestial and spiritual things; that is, between the things of love and those of faith; that is, between the things of the will and those of the understanding. . . There is such a marriage in . . . the Heavens; in . . . the Church; in every man, and in his most singular things. The things not in such a marriage do not live. Nay, there is thence such a marriage in universal nature, and in each thing of it, but under a different form . . . otherwise nothing would ever subsist there. As there is such a marriage in each thing, every subject is expressed in the Prophets in a twofold manner . . . one expression having reference to good . . . and the other to truth.

2466. For good and truth form a marriage between them . . . From this . . . is the sanctity of marriages on earth; and also the laws of marriages in the Word.

2524. Whereas rational good and truth are not conjoined . . . as in a marriage; but by consanguinity . . . 2554.

2574<sup>2</sup>. That in each thing there might be the marriage of the Human with the Divine, and of the Divine with the Human.

2588. The Lord is the marriage itself of truth and good, and of good and truth.

2618. The state of the union of the Lord's Divine Spiritual in His Divine Celestial . . . is the marriage itself of good and truth, whence is the heavenly marriage, which marriage is that of the Lord's Kingdom . . . (which) is therefore so frequently called 'a marriage' . . . The reason is, that from the Divine marriage of good and truth, and of Divine truth and good in the Lord, is all conjugal or marriage love, and, through this, all celestial and spiritual love.

2649. For the union of the Divine of the Lord with His Human, and of His Human with His Divine, is the marriage itself of good and truth; and thence is the heavenly marriage, which is the same thing as the Lord's Kingdom.

2727. On marriages, and how they are considered in the Heavens . . . Gen.art.

— For the Conjugal comes forth also with animals. (Continued under MARRIAGE LOVE.)

2728. From the union of good and truth, which inflows from the Lord, Heaven is compared to a marriage, and is called 'a marriage;' (and) when good united to truth flows down into a lower sphere, it presents that union of minds; when into a still lower one, it presents a marriage; and therefore the union of minds from good united to truth from the Lord, is conjugal love itself. 2729.

2733<sup>2</sup>. (I told him) that marriages are the seminaries of the human race, and thus of the heavenly Kingdom; and therefore they are never to be violated, but are to be held as holy . . . D.4405.

2734. Those who in the life of the body have had happiness in marriages from genuine conjugal love also have happiness in the other life; so that the happiness of the one life is continued with them into the other; and there becomes a union of minds, in which is Heaven. I have been told that the most universal merely of the genera of celestial and spiritual happinesses from this source are indefinite in number.

2739. From the marriage of good and truth in the Heavens descend all loves . . . There are ineffable varieties, all of which originate and are derived from the union of the good and truth from the Lord, which union is the heavenly marriage. Hence it is that from marriages on earth originate all relationships . . . But as at this day there is no conjugal love, the relationships are indeed taken account of, but they are not relationships of love.

3009<sup>2</sup>. Thus the Royal with them represented . . . the Divine marriage of good in truth; and the Priestly the Divine marriage of truth in good.

3073. That marriage is from love Divine. Sig. and Ex.

3077<sup>2</sup>. The essence of all marriage—that is, conjugal love—is from the Divine marriage of good and truth, and of truth and good in the Lord. Refs.

[A.] 3090. For the source of marriage is that there is consent on each side. This originates from the marriage of good and truth. There is will on the part of good, and consent on the part of truth; hence the conjunction . . . (For) while a man is being regenerated, a resemblance of a marriage is effected between the will and the understanding . . . and therefore the Ancients instituted a marriage between the will and the understanding, and between the several things thereof.

3132<sup>2</sup>. The marriage between Isaac and Rebekah. Ex.

3158. (A free state of deliberation required in betrothal and marriage.) Sig. and Ex.

3179<sup>3</sup>. The Ancient Church formed for themselves an idea of these things from marriages . . .

3211. For between rational good, and truth called out of the Natural and made Divine, there is no marriage; but a covenant which resembles the conjugal covenant. The Divine marriage itself which is in the Lord is the union of the Divine essence with the Human one, and of the Human essence with the Divine one.

3236. The Church is the marriage of good and truth. Ex.

3246<sup>2</sup>. The spiritual are not sons from the marriage itself of good and truth; but from a kind of covenant not so conjugal. Ex.

— The celestial, being from the marriage itself of good and truth, have good and the derivative truth . . .

— Therefore with the spiritual there is no marriage of good and truth . . . Hence it is that the spiritual are here called 'the sons of the concubines' . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. These ancients . . . were such that they had no conjugal love; thus marriage with them was not marriage, but only carnal copulation for the sake of procreating offspring . . .

3538. Good acts through truth united or conjoined with itself. This is represented in the marriages between a husband and wife who constitute one house . . . and both have will from good; but with a difference like that of good in relation to its truth; and therefore by the husband is signified good, and by the wife truth. For when the house is one, then good is the all there; and truth, being of good, is also good.

3610<sup>4</sup>. With those being born anew the Conjugal which is of good and truth long lies stored away; but still is present as an endeavour . . .

3665<sup>4</sup>. Hence it was commanded that (they) should contract marriages within the families of their own nation; for thus Heaven could be represented by them, and the conjunction of its Societies as to good and truth. Ex.

3703<sup>17</sup>. The laws of marriages . . . had their origin from the celestial and spiritual marriage in the Lord's Kingdom, or that of good and truth, which are signified by 'father and mother.' In like manner the laws delivered concerning the lawful and the forbidden degrees . . .

3915. For this conjunction (of truth and good) is the Conjugal itself in the Lord's Kingdom.

3941. 'The dudaim' = this conjunction or Conjugal. 3942.

3942<sup>3</sup>. For in the spiritual sense the Conjugal is nothing else than that truth which is able to be conjoined with good, and that good which is able to be conjoined with truth. Hence, too, is all conjugal love . . .

3946. That there is a conjugal longing. Sig.

3947. That thus the Conjugal of natural good with external truth would be withdrawn. Sig.

3952. It treats of the conjunction of truth with good and of good with truth, which conjunction is the Conjugal as understood in the spiritual sense. (Continued under HEAVENLY MARRIAGE.)

4171<sup>1</sup>. (How the Conjugal becomes what is called 'torn.') Ex.

4280<sup>2</sup>. With (the Ancients) the thighs and the loins signified what is conjugal . . .

4288. Thus the heavenly Conjugal was separated from that nation, and therefore no Church could be instituted with them . . .

4434<sup>9</sup>. As through love truly conjugal marriages on earth correspond to the heavenly marriage . . . the laws delivered in the Word concerning betrothals and marriages exactly correspond to the spiritual laws of the heavenly marriage; as that they were to marry only one wife (Mark x. 2-8; Luke xvi. 18). For in the heavenly marriage the case is this, namely, that good can only be conjoined with its own truth, and truth with its own good . . . In the Spiritual Church, the wife represents good, and the man truth; but in the Celestial Church, the husband represents good, and the wife truth; and . . . they not only represent these things, but also actually correspond to them.

—<sup>10</sup>. In the Old Testament also the laws relating to marriages in like manner have a correspondence with the laws of the heavenly marriage. III.

4444<sup>4</sup>. The law that they should not enter into marriages with the gentiles . . . was delivered lest by marriages they should turn aside to idolatrous worship . . .

4466. For marriage in the spiritual sense is the conjunction of good and truth. 4470.

4592<sup>13</sup>. 'Zebulon' = the heavenly marriage . . . 'Joseph' = the Celestial of the Spiritual . . . and 'Benjamin' = the Spiritual of the Celestial . . . This is the Conjugal in Heaven; and hence it is that these are named last.

4820. For marriages, in the internal sense, represent the conjunction of good and truth, because they are derived thence; but, in the opposite sense, the conjunction of evil and falsity . . .

4823<sup>3</sup>. This is why . . . marriages represent the conjunction of good and truth, and of truth and good. Moreover, conjugal love originates from this conjunction: conjugal love with the celestial from the conjunction of good with truth, and conjugal love with the spiritual from the conjunction of truth with good. The marriages also actually correspond to these conjunctions.

4835. (Explanation of a levirate marriage.)

4837<sup>2</sup>. That that nation had not any Conjugal as understood in either a spiritual or a natural sense, is manifestly evident from the fact that they were permitted to marry more wives than one; for where there is the Conjugal as understood in a spiritual sense—that is, where there are the good and truth of the Church, consequently where there is the Church—this is in nowise permitted; for the genuine Conjugal is never possible except with those with whom is the Church or the Lord's Kingdom; and not with these except as between two. Marriage between two who are in genuine conjugal love corresponds to the heavenly marriage—that is, to the conjunction of good and truth—the husband corresponding to good, and the wife to the truth of that good . . . Besides, the marriage of one husband with a number of wives would present in Heaven an idea or image as if one good were conjoined with a number of truths which were not in accordance with each other; and thus that there was no good; for good . . . has its quality from truths and from their agreement together. It would also present an image as if the Church were not one, but many, and these distinct from each other according to . . . doctrinal things. Ex. 4865.

4899. There must be the Conjugal in order that there may be the Church; namely the Conjugal between truth and good.

4903. A perception that it is false that any Conjugal intervenes. Sig. and Ex.

5002. As Heaven makes one through love from Him, and the Reciprocal to Him by reception, and through mutual love, it is called 'a marriage,' through which it is.

5053<sup>o</sup>. For marriages are the seminaries of the universal human race; and also of the Lord's heavenly Kingdom.

5084<sup>7</sup>. A sensuous man believes . . . that marriages are of order only for the sake of the bringing up of offspring . . . and also that the Conjugal is like any other lasciviousness, but conceded; and therefore that it would not be contrary to order to marry a number of wives if the Christian world had not forbidden it from Holy Scripture. If they are told that there is a correspondence between the heavenly marriage and marriages on earth; and that no one can have the Conjugal in him unless he is in spiritual truth and good; and also that the genuine Conjugal cannot possibly exist between a husband and a number of wives; and thus that in themselves marriages are holy; these things are rejected by the sensuous man as of no account.

5138. For there is a marriage in each thing of the Word. For the heavenly marriage is that of good and truth, and the infernal marriage is that of evil and falsity . . .

5194<sup>2</sup>. There is such a resemblance of marriage in each and all things of nature and its three kingdoms: without it nothing ever comes forth. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is that the Ancients likened to marriages each and all things in the world, and each and all things with man. Refs. 9206<sup>o</sup>.

5332. The quality of the marriage of truth with good, and of good with truth. Sig. and Ex.

5345<sup>o</sup>. For nothing can be multiplied except from something like a marriage. Truth cannot enter into marriage with anything else than good. If it does, it is not marriage, but adultery. Therefore that which is multiplied from marriage is legitimate . . .

5489. (Thus) scientifics form with these goods as it were a marriage . . .

5570. When the ardour (with women) ceases which is wont to precede marriage . . .

5581<sup>o</sup>. (For) the Church is a spiritual marriage, which is from good as a father and truth as a mother.

6179. The Conjugal, in the supreme sense, is the union of the Divine and the Divine Human in the Lord. Hence comes the union of Divine good and Divine truth in Heaven; for that which proceeds from the Lord is Divine truth from Divine good. Hence Heaven is Heaven, and is called 'a marriage' . . . And as the Lord is the good there, and Heaven is the derivative truth, the Lord is called 'the Bridegroom,' and Heaven, and also the Church, 'the bride;' for good and truth make a marriage, and their conjunction is what is meant by the Conjugal. Hence it is evident what a sacred thing it was to be bound by the Conjugal. Sig.

—<sup>e</sup>. From this marriage of good and truth descends genuine conjugal love.

6343<sup>2</sup>. That the Word is holy . . . is evident from the fact that in each thing of it there is the heavenly marriage, namely the marriage of good and truth, and thus Heaven; and that in each thing of the inmost sense there is the marriage of the Lord's Divine Human with His Kingdom and Church; nay, in the supreme sense, there is the union of the Divine Itself and the Divine Human in the Lord . . .

7022. There is a resemblance of a marriage where there are an active and a passive . . . The reason there is a resemblance of a marriage in all things, is that all things have relation to good and truth . . .

7605<sup>2</sup>. On account of the union of the Divine Itself and the Divine Human in the Lord, to which the marriage of good and truth in Heaven corresponds.

8356. Consequently the conjunction of good and truth is compared in the Word to 'a marriage;' and the truths and goods thence born are called 'sons and daughters.'

8423<sup>2</sup>. The conjunction of (good and truth) is called a marriage; for when these two are conjoined with each other they are circumstanced like two consorts: they love each other; they conceive and beget; the derivative offspring are called fruits.

8647<sup>2</sup>. For marriages represent the conjunction of good and truth. In the Celestial Church the husband represents good, and the wife the derivative truth; whereas in the Spiritual Church the man represents truth, and the wife good.

8754<sup>2</sup>. Then are implanted the truths of faith; and, in the internal man, they enter as it were into a marriage with good.

[A.] 8809. (For) with the Israelitish nation marriages were impure, because their interiors were filthy. For conjugal love descends from the marriage of good and truth; and therefore they who as to the interiors are not in good and truth cannot be in pure marriage; and they who as to the interiors are in evil and falsity . . . are in impure marriage.

—<sup>2</sup>. Neither are they of the Spiritual Church . . . in anything conjugal, until the truth with them has been implanted in good. Before this is done, there is indeed marriage, but not pure; for in their interiors there is not before this the marriage of good and truth.

8851<sup>2</sup>. (In Jupiter) they marry-sociant conjugia—in the first flower of youth; and their deliciousnesses are to love their consorts, and to have the care of children.

8875<sup>3</sup>. The two names 'Jesus' and 'Christ' = the Divine marriage which is in the Lord.

8904<sup>9</sup>. Adulteries are so wicked . . . because they correspond to the marriage of falsity and evil, which is the infernal marriage. On the other hand, genuine marriages are holy . . . because they correspond to the marriage of good and truth, which is the heavenly marriage. Nay, genuine conjugal love descends from the marriage of good and truth . . . and the love of adultery from the marriage of falsity and evil . . .

8983. For marriage on earth represents the heavenly marriage . . . and conjugal love corresponds to this marriage; but between a servant and a woman who has been given by her lord there is no marriage, but a coupling like that of a concubine with a man, which coupling does not correspond to the heavenly marriage; and therefore it is dissolved when the servant goes out . . .

8994<sup>4</sup>. For it is according to Divine order that men should be in knowledges, but women only in affections; and thus that they should not love themselves from knowledges, but the men; whence is the Conjugal . . . This, however, is the case with those of the Spiritual Kingdom; whereas with those of the Celestial Kingdom the husbands are in affection, and the wives in the Knowledges of good and truth; hence with these is the Conjugal.

8998. They who have been born within the Church, and who from infancy have imbued the principles of truth of the Church, ought not to marry-conjugia sociare—those who are outside the Church, and thus imbue such things as are not of the Church. The reason is that in the Spiritual World there is no conjunction between them . . . and therefore there ought to be none on earth; for, regarded in themselves, marriages are conjunctions of lower minds and of minds, the spiritual life of which is from the truths and goods of faith and charity; and therefore in Heaven marriages on earth between those who are of diverse religions are accounted as heinous; and still more [marriages] between those who are of the Church and those who are outside the Church. This also was the reason why the Jewish and Israelitish nation were forbidden to contract matrimony with the gentiles (Deut. vii. 3, 4) . . . This appears still more evidently from the origin of conjugal love, which is the marriage of good and truth. When conjugal love descends from this, it is Heaven itself in man; and this is destroyed when two consorts are unlike in heart from an unlike faith. H. 378 (p).

9003. 'Her . . . marriage duty—debitum conjugiale—he shall not diminish' (Ex. xxi. 10) = the non-deprivation of conjunction. Ex.

9182<sup>2</sup>. Illegitimate conjunction is that which is not effected from conjugal affection; but from some other affection. Enum.

—<sup>3</sup>. Legitimate conjunction, which is that of lower minds, takes place when both are in the like good and truth. Ex. . . Hence it is evident that lawful conjunction is effected when one of the consorts is in truth, and the other in the corresponding good; for thus the heavenly marriage is represented in the pair.

—<sup>4</sup>. The betrothals before marriages . . . represented the first conjunction, which is that of the internal man without the external. The marriages themselves afterwards represented the second conjunction, which is that of the internal man together with the external . . .

9188. The falsity of faith and the evil of the love of self . . . with those who are in Hell, are conjoined, and make the infernal marriage. But (the truth of faith in the Lord and the good of love to Him) are conjoined with those who are in Heaven, and make the heavenly marriage. 9382<sup>2</sup>.

9206. The reason 'women' = goods, is that by the marriage of a man and a woman is represented the conjunction of truth and good.

9604. For the communications must be reciprocal, as is the conjugal conjunction of truth and good.

9961<sup>4</sup>. From these things it may be evident how holy in Heaven are marriages, and how profane, there, are adulteries. For, in themselves, marriages are so holy that nothing is more so . . .

10172. From the marriage of good and truth in Heaven and in the Church we can be instructed as to what must be the quality of marriages on earth; namely, that they must be between two, one husband and one wife; and that love truly conjugal is never possible if there are a number of wives to one husband.

10173. Hence it is that to want to command in marriages destroys genuine love . . .

10174. From these things it may be evident that marriages are holy . . .

10175<sup>9</sup>. For the love of adultery is from the marriage of evil and falsity, which is the infernal marriage.

10185<sup>3</sup>. The florescence before the fruit corresponds to the state of that age with man when the Conjugal enters lower minds, and gladdens them; thus when truth is being conjoined with good.

10756. (Those of the Fifth Earth) said that they have a perception as to whether there is the Conjugal with those of their nation who are naked; and it was shown that they perceive this from a spiritual idea about marriage. Des.

366. On marriages in Heaven. Chapter.

— As . . . it is from creation that the woman is for the man, and the man for the woman . . . and as this love is innate in both of them, it follows that there are marriages in the Heavens equally as on earth. But the marriages in the Heavens differ exceedingly from the marriages on earth.

367. Marriage in the Heavens is the conjunction of two into one mind . . . the husband there acts the part called the understanding, and the wife that called the will. When this conjunction . . . descends into the lower things which belong to their bodies, it is perceived and felt as love. This love is conjugal love; from which it is evident that conjugal love originates from the conjunction of two into one mind. In Heaven this is called dwelling together; and it is said that they are not two but one; and therefore two consorts are there called not two but one Angel.

375. Everyone knows that two consorts who love each other are interiorly united; and that the essential of marriage is the union of lower minds or of minds. Hence it may also be known that such as are the minds in themselves, such is the union, and such also is the love between them. The mind is formed solely from truths and goods . . .

377. Below . . . in the external man separated from the internal, there exists the conjunction of falsity and evil, which conjunction is called the infernal marriage. . . In (such a marriage) they converse together, and are also conjoined from what is lascivious; but interiorly they burn against each other with deadly hatred . . .

378. For this reason marriages in the Heavens are contracted with those who are within the Society; because they are in like good and truth . . . This was represented among the Israelitish nation by their marriages being contracted within the tribe . . . and . . . family.

380. This (mutual communication of love and its delight) and the derivative conjunction, are the interior delight itself which is called blessedness, in marriage. The love of dominion completely extinguishes this bliss . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The interiors of those who live in such marriage (as where there is dominion) are in mutual collision and combat. Des.

382a. Marriages in the Heavens differ from marriages on earth in this: that marriages on earth are also for the sake of the procreation of offspring; but not in the Heavens. In place of this procreation there is in the Heavens the procreation of good and truth . . . (For) their marriage is the marriage of good and truth . . . and, in this marriage, good and truth, and their conjunction, are loved above all things . . . Hence it is that by the births and generations in the Word are signified spiritual births and generations, which are those of good and truth. Enum. (Continued under WEDDING.)

383. How marriages are contracted in the Heavens . . . Each Society consists of those who are alike; and like are carried to like, not from themselves, but from the Lord . . . and therefore at first sight they inmost love each other, see themselves to be consorts, and enter into marriage. Hence it is that all the marriages in Heaven are from the Lord alone. They also celebrate a feast, which takes place in a meeting of many. The festivities differ in the different Societies.

384. Marriages on earth, because they are the seminaries of the human race . . . and also because they are from a spiritual origin, that is, from the marriage of good and truth; and because the Divine of the Lord inflows principally into this love, are therefore most holy before the Angels of Heaven. (Continued under ADULTERY.)

—<sup>2</sup>. The sphere which exhales from Hell is a perpetual endeavour to dissolve and violate marriages.

402<sup>e</sup>. Conjugal delight, which is a purer and more exquisite touch, excels all (others) on account of its use, which is the procreation of the human race . . .

489<sup>7</sup>. They who have . . . lived in the chaste love of marriage, above all others are in the order and form of Heaven, and thence are in all beauty, and continually in the flower of youth. The delights of their love are unspeakable, and increase to eternity; for all the delights and joys of Heaven inflow into this love, because this love descends from the conjunction of the Lord with Heaven and with the Church; and, in general, from the conjunction of good and truth; which conjunction is Heaven itself in general, and with every Angel in particular. Their external delights are such that they cannot be described in human words.

N. 32. Between the will and the understanding there is a like marriage to that between good and truth . . . Life 43<sup>2</sup>.

S. 80. That in each thing of the Word there is the marriage of the Lord and the Church, and the derivative marriage of good and truth. Gen.art. 82. R.134.

Life 75. In proportion as anyone shuns adultery, in the same proportion he loves marriage . . .

76. No one can know the nature of the chastity of marriage except him who shuns the lasciviousness of adultery as a sin . . . It is a Truth that the lasciviousness of adultery and the chastity of marriage differ from each other exactly as do Hell and Heaven; and that the lasciviousness of adultery makes Hell with a man, and the chastity of marriage Heaven.

W. 409. Therefore there is such a marriage between love and the understanding, that although they are two, still they act as one. There is a like marriage between good and truth. There is such a marriage in each thing of the universe which has been created by the Lord; their use relates to good, and the form of their use to truth. It is from this marriage that there are a right and a left in each and all things of the body . . .

P. 74<sup>2</sup>. In beasts there is a marriage of affection and knowledge . . .

298<sup>3</sup>. The marriage of (the love of self and of the derivative conceit) is called the marriage of evil and falsity. Every evil Spirit is let into this marriage before he is let into Hell; and when he is therein he does not know what good is . . .

R. 380. This arcanum:—that the marriage of the Lord with the Church consists in this: that the Lord inflows with Angels and men with the good of love, and that Angels and men receive Him, or His good of love, in truths ; and that thereby is effected the marriage of good and truth, which marriage is the Church itself, and makes Heaven with them . . . The influx of the Lord with truths into Angels and men is not like the influx of good ; for it is mediate . . . This, therefore, is the marriage of love and wisdom, or of good and truth from the Lord, with the recipients in Heaven and on earth.

[R.] 812. 'The wedding of the Lamb is come' = that from now there is being effected a full marriage of the Lord with the Church.

—<sup>2</sup>. There is a full marriage of the Lord and the Church when His Human is acknowledged to be Divine . . . Before (this is done) there is indeed a marriage of the Lord with the Church ; but solely with those who approach the Lord, and think of His Divine . . .

960<sup>2</sup>. By 'the Gospel' is signified the Advent of the Lord . . . here, to spiritual marriage with the Church . . . for the Lord and the Church here speak as the Bridegroom and the bride . . .

M. 21<sup>2</sup>. There are two things which make the marriage of the Lord and the Church : love and wisdom ; and the Lord is love, and the Church is wisdom, and wisdom is at the right of love . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Consent is the essential of marriage ; and all other things which follow are its formal things. T.748.

27. On marriages in Heaven. Chapter.

— . As it has not been known that the Angels are men in perfect form . . . it has been impossible to reveal anything about the marriages there . . .

44<sup>6</sup>. Both feel what is conjugal kindled in their hearts ; and they perceive, he, that she is his ; and she, that he is hers ; for love comes to meet love, and causes them to know each other ; and at once conjoins their souls, and afterwards their minds ; and thence enters their bosoms ; and after the wedding [goes] further, and thus becomes full love, which increases daily into conjunction, until they are no longer two . . .

48<sup>2</sup>. In the beginning of marriage the love of the sex appears as if it were conjoined with conjugal love ; but in the progression of marriage they are separated . . .

47a. They continue their conjugal life . . .

49<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that marriages entered into in the world are for the most part external, and not at the same time internal ; when yet internal conjunction, which is that of souls, makes marriage itself ; and this conjunction is not perceptible until . . . after death. Hence it is that separations then take place ; and afterwards new conjunctions with similar and homogeneous ones ; unless these had been provided on earth ; as takes place with those who from the age of youth have loved, wished for, and asked from the Lord a lawful and lovely companionship with one, while spurning and detesting wandering lusts.

52. The reason marriages in the Heavens are devoid of procreation, and that instead there is spiritual procreation, which is that of love and wisdom, is that with those who are in the Spiritual World, the third [degree], which is the Natural, is wanting ; and this is the containant of spiritual things ; and without their containant spiritual things have no consistence . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. By conjugal union they infill themselves with what is human, which is to want to be wise, and to love that which is of wisdom.

53<sup>2</sup>. All who come into Hell are natural ; and merely natural marriages are not marriages ; but conjunctions which partake of unchaste lust.

54<sup>3</sup>. For those who in celibacy have longed for marriage . . . if they are spiritual, blessed marriages are provided ; but not until they come into Heaven.

—<sup>4</sup>. Whether they want to live as conjugal ones, or not.

55<sup>4</sup>. Those who could not think of chastity in relation to marriages said . . .

55<sup>6</sup>. Who loved conjugal chastity.

59<sup>2</sup>. It is almost the same when a man enters upon marriage. He then becomes a fuller man, because he is conjoined with his consort, with whom he acts as one man . . . In like manner then does he begin from what is corporeal, and proceed into what is natural ; but as to the conjugal life . . . Those who then love corporeal natural things, and rational things solely from them, cannot be conjoined with their consort as into one, except as to these externals ; and when these fail, cold invades the internals, which disperses the delights of that love ; as from the mind, so from the body ; and afterwards as from the body, so from the mind ; and this until no recollection is left of the primeval state of their marriage . . . Now as at this day this takes place with most people, it is evident that the nature of love truly conjugal is not known . . . (But) with the spiritual the first state is the initiament to perpetual happinesses, which are heightened as the Spiritual Rational of the mind, and from this the Sensuous Natural of the body, in each consort, conjoin and unite themselves. But these are rare.

62. That there is a correspondence of (conjugal) love with the marriage of the Lord and the Church. Gen.art.

64<sup>2</sup>. The celestial are loves and the derivative wisdoms, and the spiritual are wisdoms and the derivative loves. Their Conjugal is the like.

75<sup>3</sup>. (In regard to) the marriages of the Most Ancients (as witnessed in the persons of those who had lived in the Golden Age) . . . I noticed as it were the unity of their souls in their faces, and said, You two are one. The man replied, We are one. Her life is in me, and mine is in her. We are two bodies, but one soul. There is a union between us like that of the . . . heart and the lungs ; she is my heart, and I am her lungs ; (that is to say) she is the love of my wisdom, and I am the wisdom of her love ; and therefore her love veils over my wisdom from without, and my wisdom is in her love from within . . . I then asked, As there is such a union, can you look at any other woman than your own ? He replied, I can ; but as my wife is united to my soul, we both look together, and then nothing of lust can enter ; for when I look at the wives of others, I look at them through my own wife, whom alone I love . . . Further ex.

76<sup>5</sup>. The Angel asked (those who had lived in the Silver Age) to give some account of the marriages among them. The husband said, There is a correspondence between spiritual marriage, which is that of truth with good, and natural marriage, which is that of a man with one wife; and as we have studied correspondences, we have seen that the Church . . . cannot possibly exist with any but those who live with one wife in love truly conjugal; for the marriage of good and truth is the Church with man. Therefore all here say that the husband is truth, and his wife good; and that good cannot love any other truth than its own, neither can truth love back any other good than its own. If it did, the internal marriage which makes the Church would perish; and marriage would become external only, to which idolatry, and not the Church, corresponds. Therefore marriage with one wife we call sacrimony; but with more than one . . . we should call sacrilege. (Continued under MARRIAGE (OR CONJUGIAL) LOVE.)

77<sup>3</sup>. We said (to those who had lived in the Copper Age), Our business here is to be instructed about your marriages, as to whether they are monogamous or polygamous. They replied, What are polygamous ones? Are they not scortatory? . . . We have preserved the precepts concerning marriages from the Most Ancients . . . among which is the following:—Sons, if you want to love God and the neighbour, and if you want to be wise, and to be happy to eternity, we counsel you to live monogamists. If you recede from this precept, all heavenly love will flee from you, and therewith internal wisdom, and you will be banished.—We have obeyed this precept of our fathers, and have perceived its Truth, which is, that in proportion as anyone loves his consort alone, in the same proportion he becomes heavenly and internal; and that in the same proportion as anyone does not love his consort alone, in the same proportion he becomes natural and external . . . Hence it is that in this Heaven we are all monogamists . . .

78<sup>4</sup>. I asked (the man of the Iron Age) about the marriages of that city and region. He said, We do not live with one wife; but some with two or three, and some with many, because we are delighted with variety, obedience, and honour . . . Therefore here every husband in his own house has as it were royal majesty . . .

79<sup>5</sup>. We asked (those of the age of iron mixed with miry clay), What is your religion concerning marriages? . . . They said, What business have you here with marriages? marriages are marriages. . . We asked, Does not your religion teach that marriages are holy and heavenly? . . . They replied . . . Are they not works of the flesh and of the night? . . . What has conjugal love in common with religion . . .

80<sup>6</sup>. (The Angel said,) The human Conjugal, and religion, go together in every step. Every step from religion and into religion is also a step from the Conjugal and into the Conjugal, which is peculiar and proper to a Christian man. In answer to the question, What is this Conjugal? he said, It is the longing to live with one wife only; and this is possessed by a Christian man according to his religion.

—<sup>3</sup>. I afterwards grieved in spirit to think that marriages, which in the ancient eras had been most holy, had been so desperately turned into adulteries; and the Angel said, It is the same at this day with religion. Sig.

92. From these things it follows that a universal conjugal sphere proceeds from the Lord, and pervades the universe from its primes to its ultimates . . . The reason such a sphere of the marriage of good and truth proceeds from the Lord, is that this sphere is also that of propagation . . . and this is the same as the Divine Providence for the preservation of the universe by successive generations. (Continued under MALE.)

116. On the marriage of the Lord and the Church, and on its correspondence. Chapter.

121. That the spiritual offspring which are born from the marriage of the Lord with the Church are truths . . . and goods . . . Ex.

137<sup>3</sup>. We believed that (the first state of marriage was blessedness itself); but we afterwards perceived that it was a state of heat not tempered with light; and that it is tempered successively, as the husband is perfected in wisdom, and the wife loves it in her husband; and that this is effected through uses and according to them . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. But with men—homines—there is a perpetual influx of vernal heat from the Lord; and therefore they can be delicatized in marriage at all times (of the year).

139. That what is chaste and what is non-chaste are predicated of marriages, and of such things as are of marriage. Gen.art.

140. For the Conjugal has been inscribed on both sexes from inmosts to ultimates; and according thereto is the man as to his thoughts and affections; and thence, interiorly, as to the deeds and gestures of the body. Ex.

142. That the Christian Conjugal alone exists chaste. Ex.

147. That the chastity of marriage comes forth through the total renunciation of scortations from religion. Ex.

148. In every man from creation . . . there is implanted an internal Conjugal, and an external Conjugal; the internal one is spiritual, and the external one natural. Man comes into the latter first; and, as he becomes spiritual, he comes into the former. If therefore he remains in the external or natural Conjugal, the internal or spiritual Conjugal is veiled over, even until he does not know anything about it . . . Whereas if the man becomes spiritual, he then begins to know something about it; afterwards to perceive something of its nature; and, successively, to feel its pleasant, delightful, and delicious things . . . When this has taken place, the external Conjugal does indeed remain; but it is constantly chastened and purified from its dregs by the internal Conjugal; and this until the external one becomes as the face of the internal one, and derives its delight from the blessedness which is in the internal one. (Continued under LASCIVIOUS.)

154. That chastity cannot be predicated of those who believe marriages to be unchaste. Ex.

155. That chastity cannot be predicated of those who have renounced marriages, unless there remains in them the love of a life truly conjugal. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. They then choose a life either conjugal or extra-conjugal . . .

156. That the state of marriage is to be preferred to the state of celibacy. Ex.

[M. 156]. For the state of marriage is from creation, because its origin is the marriage of good and truth; because its correspondence is with the marriage of the Lord and the Church; because the Church and conjugal love are constant companions; because its uses are more excellent than the uses of all other things of creation . . . (and) because marriage is the fulness of man . . .

155<sup>a</sup>. Wives are . . . ardent zeals for the preservation of conjugal friendship and confidence.

156a. On the conjunction of souls and minds by marriage, which is meant by the Lord's words: 'They are no more two, but one flesh.' Chapter.

159. (Thus) conjugal conjunction is that of the will of the wife with the understanding of the man, and the reciprocal . . .

162. That this conjunction is effected successively from the first days of marriage . . . Ex.

— . The first heat of marriage does not conjoin; for it partakes of the love of the sex . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. When (friendship and confidence) conjoin themselves with the first love of marriage, conjugal love is effected, which opens the bosoms, and inspires into them the sweetnesses of love; and this deeper and deeper . . .

167. Conjugal cold is deeply seated in many men . . .

181. That these things cannot possibly exist except in the marriage of one man with one wife. Ex.

183<sup>3</sup>. Then some from that conjugal company said . . .

184. On the change of state of life with men and women by marriage. Chapter.

187<sup>2</sup>. Then the conjugal inclination accedes; which is that of a maiden for a youth, and of a youth for a maiden; and as the maidens in Heaven, equally as on earth, from their innate prudence conceal their inclinations to marriages, the youths there know no otherwise than that they affect the maidens with love . . .

190. That with both men and women the states of life before marriage are different from what they are after marriage. Ex.

191. That the states of life after marriage . . . are changed and succeed each other according to the conjunctions of their minds through conjugal love. Ex.

192. That marriages also induce other forms on souls and minds. Ex.

—<sup>a</sup>. This is the case in Heaven, because there are no marriages elsewhere; beneath Heaven there are only connubial [connections], which are made and broken off.

193<sup>2</sup>. Hence no one can ever love his consort truly conjugially who is in the conceit of his Own intelligence from the love of self.

199<sup>2</sup>. Some men said that conjunction with a woman before marriage is like conjunction with a wife after marriage; on hearing which the wives were very indignant, and said, There is no likeness whatever: the difference is like that between what is fatuous and what is real. (Continued under WIFE.)

200. That in the marriage of one man with one wife, between whom there is love truly conjugal, the wife becomes more and more a wife, and the husband more and more a husband. Ex.

201. The most perfect and noble human form is when, through marriage, two forms become one form; thus when two fleshs become one flesh, according to creation. . . The mind of the man is then elevated into higher light, and the mind of the wife into higher heat; and they then bud, flower, and bear fruit, like trees in springtime. . . From the ennobling of this form are born noble fruits, which in the Heavens are spiritual, and on earth are natural.

202. That the offspring born from a pair who are in love truly conjugal derive from their parents the Conjugal of good and truth . . . Ex. 203.

203. The Conjugal of good and truth is implanted from creation in the soul of everyone; for it is that which inflows into man from the Lord, and constitutes his human life. But this Conjugal passes into the consequents from the soul down into the ultimates of the body; and in both the latter and the former it is changed on the way by the man himself . . . sometimes into the opposite, which is called the Conjugal or Connubial of evil and falsity . . . 204.

209. Universals concerning marriages. Chapter.

212. These do not enter into marriages except also with the end of lasciviating . . .

213<sup>e</sup>. You husbands are able to confirm this from the first deliciousnesses of marriage, which are in their fulness, because the wife alone is then loved . . .

214<sup>2</sup>. Then the love makes this its friendship also conjugal . . .

216<sup>3</sup>. When they were in the idea of what is temporary, they said, There is no longer any marriage . . .

217. That wives love the bonds of marriage provided the men love them. Ex.

222. That there is a conjugal sphere which inflows from the Lord through Heaven into each and all things of the universe down to its ultimates. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. But the universal sphere of all is the conjugal sphere, because this is also the sphere of propagation . . .

223. That the conjugal sphere is received by the female sex, and through it is transferred into the male sex. Ex.

— . The intellectual form cannot of itself become heated with conjugal heat . . .

224. Is he not affected conjugially by whatever proceeds from his bride . . . and not, then, by what proceeds from others of the sex?

225. This conjugal sphere inflowing into the universe, in its origin is Divine; in its progress in Heaven with the Angels it is celestial and spiritual; with men natural; with beasts and birds animal; with worms merely corporeal; with plants it is devoid of life; and, moreover, in all its subjects it is varied according to their forms. Now, as this sphere is received immediately by the female sex, and mediately by the male sex; and as it is received according to the forms, it follows that this sphere, which in its origin is holy, can be turned in the subjects into a sphere which is not holy, and may even be inverted into an opposite one. The sphere opposite to it, is called, with such women, the meretricious sphere; and, with such men, the scortatory sphere; and as these men and women are in Hell, this sphere is thence. But this sphere is also of much variety. . . (Thus) the man who does not love his wife, receives this sphere from some other source than his wife; still it is the fact that even this is inspired by the wife, but without the man's knowing it, and while he grows warm.

229. For all marriages of love truly conjugal are provided by the Lord.

— How (these marriages) are provided in the Heavens, I have heard described by the Angels thus:— The Divine Providence of the Lord is most singular and most universal in relation to marriages and in marriages, because all the delights of Heaven spring from the delights of conjugal love . . . and therefore it is provided that conjugal pairs be born, and that they be constantly educated for their marriages under the auspices of the Lord, neither the boy nor the girl knowing it; and after the time has passed . . . they meet somewhere as by fate . . . and at once know, as by a kind of instinct, that they are mates, and, by a kind of dictate, think . . . the young man, that she is mine; and the maiden, that he is mine; and after this has been seated some time in the minds of both, they deliberately accost each other, and betroth themselves. It is said, as from fate, from instinct, and from dictate; and it is meant from the Divine Providence . . . For the Lord opens internal similitudes, so that they may see themselves.

234. On the causes of colds, separations, and divorces in marriages. Chapter.

236. For more than all other colds does conjugal cold reside in human minds; for the Conjugal itself is inscribed on souls, to the end that soul may be propagated from soul . . .

238°. This propagative or plastic force in seeds in the vegetable kingdom, and in souls in the animal kingdom, is from no other source than the conjugal sphere which perpetually emanates and inflows from the Lord . . . and from the effort of the good and truth therein to conjoin themselves into a one. This conjugal effort seated in souls is the original source of the existence of conjugal love . . .

240°. They are to be excused, because with such it is impossible to discriminate in thought embraces in marriages from those in scortations . . .

241°. Such marriages (as those in which one consort has religion and not the other) are dissolved of themselves.

242. When the spring of this love is closed, they come into a Conjugal which has a lower seat, and which is that of good with another truth, or that of truth with another good, than its own . . . Hence with the consort who is in the falsities of religion, cold has its inception . . .

244. There are as many colds as there are marriages of those who are in falsities of religion, in diverse religions, and in no religion.

246°. Hence come inclinations to enter into marriages with unequals, and to refuse marriages with equals; but still these marriages, after a certain time of living together, vary according to the similitudes and dissimilitudes contracted by heredity and education . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Marriages of such dissimilitudes are not unlike the conjunctions of diverse species of animals . . .

247°. Nothing stores up in itself conjugal cold more than scortatory love . . . It may be called conjugal cold itself.

248°. The difference between conjugal and servile friendship in marriages, is like that between light and shade . . .

249°. Hence it is that conjugal heat remains better and longer with those (who have employment) than with others.

250°. For with such the Conjugal is not of the spirit and the heart, but is only of the mouth . . .

254. The third cause of lawful separation is impotence before marriage . . . because the end of marriage is the procreation of offspring . . .

270°. This is conjugal cold. Ex. 294<sup>3</sup>. —<sup>4</sup>.

271. On the causes of apparent love, friendship, and favour in marriages. Chapter.

276°. As therefore the covenant of marriage is a covenant for life, it follows that (these appearances) are necessities.

278. The conjugal covenant is for life; and the derivative conjugal communion is inscribed on (them) . . .

279. That these appearances are conjugal simulations, which are laudable . . . Ex. 280. 281. 282. 284.

283°. By representative conjugal friendship.

284°. With spiritual men there is conjugal conjunction by the love of the children . . .

290. A friendship emulating conjugal friendship when they grow old.

292. That there are infernal marriages in the world between consorts who are interiorly the most deadly enemies, but exteriorly are like the most conjoined friends. Gen.art.

296. The determinations to marriage (of women) would be only from the inclinations of their love.

297. That the man ought to court and ask the woman concerning marriage with him, and not the woman the man. Ex.

299. Her judgment is as yet in ignorance about conjugal life.

303. That by betrothal the mind of the one is conjoined with the mind of other, so that marriage may become of the spirit before it becomes of the body.

304. That it is so done with those who think chastely about marriages . . . Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. But with those who do not think from religion about marriages and their holiness, there is a marriage of the body, but none of the spirit. If anything of the marriage of the spirit appears during the state of betrothal . . . it falls back to the concupiscences which are from the flesh in the will; and thus from the unchaste things there it lets itself down headlong into the body, and defiles the ultimates of its love with an alluring ardour; from which as in the beginning it was on fire, so its fire suddenly goes out, and passes away into the cold of winter; whence defect is accelerated. The state of betrothal with these answers hardly any other purpose than that they may fill their concupiscences with lasciviousness, and thereby contaminate the Conjugal of love.

[M.] 306. The beginning of the following state is to be inaugurated by the marriage, which is of the spirit and body together; for the spirit then enters into the body, and acts there . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. As marriage is not legitimate until after the wedding . . .

307. That before the celebration of the wedding the conjugal covenant is to be made in the presence of witnesses. Ex.

— . For after some initiations of marriage, the state which preceded betrothal returns by alternations . . .

308. That marriage is to be consecrated by a priest. Ex. The reason is that, regarded in themselves, marriages are spiritual, and thence holy; for they descend from the heavenly marriage of good and truth; and conjugal things correspond to the Divine marriage of the Lord and the Church; and hence they are from the Lord Himself; and are according to the state of the Church with the contracting parties.

310. That after the wedding the marriage of the spirit becomes also of the body, and thus full. Ex.

— . (Hence) it is that the minds or spirits are first to be united together as in a marriage before [they are united] with the body also; that is to say, that the marriages, when they become of the body, may be of the spirit . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. From these things let us now look at marriage. (Continued under MARRIAGE LOVE.)

—<sup>e</sup>. Consequently, if the marriage in the spirit is chaste, and partakes of the holiness thereof, it is the like when it is in its fulness in the body; and the reverse is the case if the marriage in the spirit is unchaste.

312. (The marrows are burnt up and consumed) if the man and woman precipitate marriage without order, by not looking to the Lord, by not consulting reason, by rejecting betrothal, and by complying with the flesh only . . .

313. That the states of the minds of both, proceeding in successive order, inflow into the state of marriage; yet in one way with the spiritual, and in another with the natural. Ex.

—<sup>c</sup>. Therefore, with the natural, the state of marriage is inwardly full of unchaste things; and there are as many colds as there are unchaste things; and there are as many obstructions of the inmost life as there are colds . . .

316<sup>3</sup>. [The statement quoted above, at M.229, concerning the way in which marriages are provided in the Heavens, is repeated here, and proceeds:] That conjugal pairs are born, and are educated for marriages, unknown to both, (the wise one) confirmed by the conjugal similitude visible in the faces of both; and also by the inmost and eternal union of the lower minds and of the minds, which are not possible, such as they are in Heaven, without having been foreseen and provided by the Lord.

—<sup>4</sup>. The wise one . . . added, further, In the veriest singulars with man, both male and female, there is the Conjugal; but a different Conjugal with the male from that with the female. In the masculine Conjugal there is what is conjunctive with the feminine Conjugal; and contrariwise; even in the veriest singulars. This he confirmed by the marriage in each person of the will and the understanding, which two act together into the veriest singulars of the mind and of the body; from which things it may be seen that the Conjugal is in every substance, even the least. This is evident from the compound substances which are made up of simple substances; as that there are two eyes, two ears, two nostrils . . . and within man two hemispheres of the brain, two ventricles of the heart, two lobes of the lungs . . . and, where there are not two, still they are divided into two . . . Ex.

317. On repeated marriages. Chapter.

318<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) the mind is kept balancing towards a second marriage, according to the degree of love in which it was in the former one. (Continued under MARRIAGE LOVE.)

319. That . . . it depends upon the state of marriage in which they had lived. Ex.

320<sup>2</sup>. The reason nothing hinders such from being able to contract repeated matrimonies, is that they have not had the essentials of marriage . . . Neither do they themselves think of marriages otherwise than naturally . . . and perhaps if their interior thoughts were clearly seen . . . there would not be found in them any distinction between conjugal conjunctions and extra-conjugal copulations . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. But it is to be known that marriages interiorly conjunctive can with difficulty be entered upon on earth, because the choice of internal similitudes cannot be provided by the Lord there as in the Heavens, because it is limited in many ways; as to equals in state and condition; within the region, city, or village where they live; and, moreover . . . the internals do not come forth until some time after marriage . . .

321. That those who had lived together in love truly conjugal do not want repeated marriage, except for reasons separate from conjugal love. Ex.

322. That there is one state of marriage of a youth with a maiden, and another of a youth with a widow. Ex.

— . The state of marriage of a youth with a maiden is the very initial state to genuine marriage. Des.

323. That so also there is one state of marriage of a widower with a maiden, and another of a widower with a widow. Ex.

— . A widower has already been initiated into conjugal life . . .

330<sup>4</sup>. If a woman wants to seem beautiful after marriage, in like manner as before it, she loves the men and not the man . . .

331<sup>e</sup>. If therefore you love your intelligence in yourselves, it becomes the receptacle of your love, and the love of what is your Own, as it does not endure an equal, never becomes conjugal; but . . . remains scortatory.

333. That except with one wife . . . there is no conjugal friendship, confidence, potency . . . Ex.

346. That with polygamists conjugal chastity, purity, and holiness are not possible. Ex.

368<sup>2</sup>. These, being spiritual, in their marriage look to union as the end; and, in this, spiritual rest and its pleasantnesses; and as they have rejected disunion from their lower minds, their spiritual jealousy is like a fire darting forth against the infesters.

376<sup>e</sup>. There are also scortatory marriages, in which, by mutual consent, the license of venery is granted to both, and yet they are civil to each other when they meet.

427<sup>e</sup>. In externals . . . the delight of adultery is as the delight of marriage. But after death . . . it is evident to sense that the evil of adultery is a ball of the concupiscences of evil, and that the good of marriage is a bundle of the affections of good . . .

428<sup>e</sup>. On the other hand, he who is in good and weds truth . . . confirms himself against adultery and in favour of marriage, and embraces a blessed conjugal life.

439. Hence it is that in the extremes scortatory caresses and conjugal caresses are perceived as alike, although in internals they are utterly unlike. That from this they are unlike in the extremes also . . . (is not felt by any) but those who are in love truly conjugal. Ex.

447<sup>e</sup>. For the love of the sex cannot become spiritual until it becomes conjugal . . .

449<sup>2</sup>. If an adulterer . . . enters the conjugal bed . . .

450. [Early marriages.]

—<sup>2</sup>. When they have grown up to the conjugal age . . .

452<sup>3</sup>. Fornication is light with those who prefer the conjugal state; (because the conjugal life is their purpose . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. When they come into the conjugal state.

453. All . . . look to adultery . . . who think of marriages as they do of adulteries.

456<sup>2</sup>. By which conjugal sports are bent into tragic scenes . . .

457. The Conjugal of one man with one wife is the jewel of human life, and the storehouse of the Christian religion. Ex.

459. That this Conjugal may be preserved with those who for various reasons cannot as yet enter into marriages, and who on account of salacity cannot regulate their lusts, if the love of the sex be confined to one mistress. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Thus is the lasciviousness of salacity . . . tempered by something which is as it were an analogue of marriage.

VOL. IV.

—<sup>e</sup>. These things are not said to those who . . . are able to enter into marriage as soon as they arrive at manhood . . .

466<sup>e</sup>. The love of pellicacy is kept separate from conjugal love by the man's not promising marriage to the mistress, and by his not holding out to her any hope of marriage.

466. That (this concubinage) is scortation, by which the Conjugal . . . is destroyed. Ex.

— . It is the deprivation of all faculty and inclination for a conjugal life, which is in Christians from birth. —<sup>2</sup>, Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. That this Conjugal is destroyed with a Christian by polygamous scortation . . .

469<sup>e</sup>. Who but a vile person can preserve the rights of the marriage bed, and spare the couch with a harlot?

472<sup>e</sup>. A clamorous demand for the conjugal debt, whereby the man becomes a cold stone.

478<sup>2</sup>. There were once assembled . . . from Europe some hundreds of those who excelled in cleverness, learning, and wisdom there; and they were questioned about the difference between marriage and adultery . . . and after consultation, all except ten replied that it is only the public law which makes the difference . . . They were then asked whether they saw anything of good in marriage, and anything of evil in adultery. They replied that they did not see any rational evil or good. On being questioned as to whether they saw anything of sin, they said, Where is it? Is not the deed alike? The Angels were astounded at these answers, and exclaimed, How gross and great is the stupidity of the age! On hearing this, the hundreds of the wise ones turned and said to each other with loud laughter, Is this stupidity? Can there be any wisdom which can bring conviction that to love another's wife merits eternal damnation?

479<sup>e</sup>. As all things of good and of evil are distinguished into genera, species, and so on, marriages are distinguished into the same, and in like manner their opposites, which are adulteries.

488. If the love of marriage conquers, it subjugates this love of adultery . . .

491. If the mind (takes its reasonings) from the higher region, which communicates with Heaven, it confirms marriages, and condemns adulteries; but if from the lower region, which communicates with the world, it confirms adulteries and makes light of marriages.

—<sup>e</sup>. It follows that the form of the human mind is according to the confirmations; being turned to Heaven if its confirmations are in favour of marriages; but to Hell if they are in favour of adulteries . . .

497. The love of marriage.

500<sup>2</sup>. Nine hundred (out of a thousand from the Christian world) say, Who does not know that the delight of adultery is supereminent to the delight of marriage? . . . What is marriage but allowable scortation? . . .

502. On the state of a virgin or undeflowered woman before marriage, and after marriage. Ex.

— . They (then begin) to love the conjugal life.

[M. 502.] They said that they had thought about marriage solely from the blessedness of mutual friendship and confidence with a consort, and not at all from the delight of any flame . . .

510<sup>2</sup>. For everyone has (spiritual life) according to the Conjugal implanted in him.

—<sup>e</sup>. Such do those become who . . . have rent and annihilated with themselves the human Conjugal.

515. On the correspondence of scortations with the violation of spiritual marriage. Chapter.

516. By spiritual marriage is meant the marriage of the Lord and the Church; and thence also the marriage of good and truth; and as this (spiritual) marriage is in each and all things of the Word, it is the violation of the Word which is here meant by the violation of the spiritual marriage . . . That the Word is this marriage. Ref.

517. As therefore the violation of spiritual marriage is the violation of the Word, it is evident that . . . when good is adulterated and truth falsified, this marriage is violated.

518. As this (spiritual) marriage corresponds to marriages on earth, it follows that the violation of this marriage corresponds to scortations and adulteries . . . These violations of the Word and the Church correspond to the forbidden degrees enumerated in Lev. xviii.

520. It follows that he who is in the spiritual marriage is also in happy natural marriage; and, on the other hand, that he who is in spiritual adultery is also in natural adultery; and conversely . . . Therefore the whole Hell is called an adultery, and the whole Heaven is called a marriage.

531. There are marriages in which conjugal love does not appear, and yet is; and there are marriages in which conjugal love does appear, and yet is not. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. The only thing which decides is the Conjugal, which is seated in the will of everyone, and is guarded in whatever state of marriage the man may be. This Conjugal is like a balance in which that love is weighed; for the Conjugal of one man with one wife is the jewel of human life . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. And for him to whom conjugal love is imputed, a marriage in Heaven is provided after death, whatever kind of a marriage he has had in the world.

T. 380. All the good and truth of the Church are propagated from the marriage of the Lord and the Church; thus all that which is essentially charity, and essentially faith, is from that marriage; but whatever of these two is not from it, is not from a lawful bed . . . thus is either from polygamous marriage, or from adultery . . .

619<sup>4</sup>. This sphere also invades men in the natural world, and extinguishes the conjugal torches between truths and goods . . .

D. 395. Delights, by a real transmission into others, can effect them; which derives its origin from the heavenly marriage. Hence the deliciousnesses of earthly marriages, and the communications between the consorts.

399. (Evil Spirits) induced on me a delicate feeling, which emulated . . . the feeling of conjugal deliciousness, so that scarcely any difference could be discerned.

1227. When (with women) the ardour and desire for marriage have ceased . . .

2722. That no effect in the universe can come forth without a passive and an active; thus without a marriage. Ex.

3384. The Jewish Church esteemed the conjugal debt as nothing. Ex.

3443<sup>e</sup>. All are allotted to their uses; some that they might be delighted with marriages . . .

3537. Granted that Adam was the first man, and that his sons and daughters might marry—conjugia jungere, still this does not take away the eternal Truth that such marriages are not allowable.

—<sup>2</sup>. (Granted) that it is better to marry—conjugia jungere—in adolescence than to have concubines previously: this does not take away the Truth that as society is constituted they cannot be contracted before they are able to bring up children.

3697. As marriages are for the sake of the propagation of offspring . . . whatever destroys or perverts marriages, and destroys propagation, is diabolical.

3778. I spoke to them about marriage: that marriages or conjugal love is the fundamental of all loves; (for) thence is the propagation of human society and consequently of the heavenly Societies; and therefore there has been given it a pleasure of the body which surpasses all other pleasures; for delights are adjoined according to the necessities of the ends; and conjugal love is more delightful and happy than any other love; insomuch that a good marriage is Heaven on earth; thus is celestial love, from which are all other loves . . . from which it is evident how sacred marriages ought to be held.

3794<sup>2</sup>. It was granted to insinuate that the primary bond of conscience is that of marriage. Ex.

3908. They who have lived unhappy in marriage in this: that they have lived in contempt, aversion, and hatred against their consorts; become unhappy in the other life also.

4076. On marriage.—He who does not live in the love of faith cannot live in the true love of marriage; and although he may seem to himself to live in the love of marriage, still it is nothing but a kind of adultery or lasciviousness. He loves his consort solely for the sake of cohabitation, the delight of earthly life, infants for the sake of ends in the world, and so on; for celestial things ought to inflow into conjugal love; (that is to say) the celestial things of faith. . . But still there are the delight of marriage and cohabitation in the other life, so that there may be initiation into upright Societies, which cannot be effected without it. Hence it follows that such as is the faith, such is the love of marriage.

4107. There are those in the other life who live in a so-called civil state, which is pleasant and sweet. Des. . . It is the state of those who in the world have lived happily and well in marriages, and have loved infants.

4124. That there are indefinite genera of the happinesses of marriage. Ex.

4192. What marriage and the derivative love are.—Marriage is such love that the one so loves the other that they want to be one, and that the one wants to give the other whatever is his. From this Mutual . . . comes forth the love of marriage. Therefore all other loves are derived from it . . . Hence it is evident that conjugal love is fundamental, and is Heaven itself.

4405. On marriages and adulteries.

4745. On infernal marriage. (See CHARLES XII., here, and at 4768.)

—<sup>2</sup>. Such marriages are those of all who subjugate their consort by obstinacy, and who afterwards live together in externals as it were in friendship, but in internals in deadly hatred. . . Such are permitted to hold each other in deadly hatred, until they feel such delight in that marriage, that they can almost be united as one; for each feels the delight of dominion in the other; and, as the one has contributed thereto with the other, it is this delight which is felt.

4784. Injecting the persuasive that adultery surpasses the Conjugal.

4963. Such . . . cause marriage to be separated.

5022. I spoke to (the Dutch) about marriage: that in proportion as the desire to exercise command increases . . . the delight of life decreases; and that in proportion as that delight decreases, the delight of life increases; for when the desire to exercise command decreases and vanishes, love itself . . . commands, and when love commands, the Lord God commands. Hence is the happiness in marriages.

5070. (On Spirits who wish to dissolve marriages. See LAST JUDGMENT, here.)

5179. On a mountain where is the Conjugal.

—<sup>2</sup>. When (their visitors) strip themselves, they at once perceive whether they have the Conjugal.

5180. A certain person who had faith in the letter of the Word supposed that he had the Conjugal, because he had lived sincerely with his wife, and had never been lascivious. As the Conjugal corresponds to the Word; for this is the Divine and heavenly Conjugal, he was brought to (that mountain) . . . On coming, naked, to those who were higher up, he was deprived of his senses . . . and so stood, like one half-dead . . . Such are they who believe the Word as to the sense of its letter, and do not know and have not imbued interior truths thence. De Conj. 69.

5643. When anyone, from the good of his will, wants marriage to be genuine . . . he loves the truths (which) agree with this good or will . . . and whenever he thinks about marriage, the internal sight falls upon such things, until they have been conjoined in the exterior and in the interior memory . . .

5832. On marriages and adulteries.—I saw a vast crew who had accounted adulteries as nothing . . . and all said that they are no longer men, but are like wild beasts, because they had put off the human nature by having burst asunder and profaned the society of marriage . . .

5996. On a cadaverous breast from the violation of marriage . . .

6027. On the marriage between the Empress of Russia and De la Gardie.*—They were together, and became acquainted with each other, and took a liking for each other. 2. Afterwards she was informed about his family, and went to the Society where they were . . . 3. Then first De la Gardie was divorced from his wife, with whom he had sometimes had intercourse; afterwards but seldom; but still he referred it to the Council, as to whether divorce could take place. These examined it, and found that there was no similarity in their affections; and thus they became divorced. 4. Afterwards the Empress . . . openly asked the counsel of many . . . She regretted what had taken place, but could do nothing with it . . . her husband was quite given up to drinking. 5. Afterwards the Empress came to speak to that Bishop in Lubeck, to whom she had been betrothed; but she found no pleasure in him, especially when there was seen beside him a woman with a beautiful face, who was his mistress . . . It was afterwards shown where he was now at home, which was down in Hell . . . through which the liking for him went away. 6. She afterwards spoke to one from Holstein and Mecklenburg . . . but she found dissimilarity, and would not know him; as she had also done in the world. 7. She afterwards travelled around, and went far away from her home; where . . . she did not know where she was at home, nor who she herself was. On the way Count de la Gardie met her, and accompanied her, each of them being then unknown to the other; and then again they took a liking for each other. He followed her round to a way which led homewards, when they accidentally came to separate. She travelled around a second time, when I did not see what took place. The third time she travelled the same way as the first time, and then also, of the Providence of the Lord, De la Gardie met her; and then they saw, as is wont to be the case, that the one was destined for the other, and they held each other dear, and were then brought home each one to his own Society. 8. The Empress came to preside over the best Society of the Russians, who have much love for her. The ex-Emperor Peter then took leave of that Society . . . De la Gardie also received a fine Society to preside over. 9. The last time she was accompanied by De la Gardie he came home to her palace, and it was then determined between them concerning their marriage; they having been together long enough. 10. When it had been determined, an Angel was sent from here up to Heaven, who was in beautiful white garments, in order to get a priest thence, to wed them, which took place in this way only: that he asked both if they consented, and when he had heard that [they did], he wished them the grace and blessing of God. Nothing more. This took place on the 5th of March 1762. He then drove to her with seven pairs of horses, splendid. 11. Afterwards congratulations were received; first, those of little children, who were brought from Heaven to speak to them, at which she became so affected that she went out into another room and wept because of the heavenly delight from their speech. When she came back there came eight older children who made a beautiful congratulation. When they went out, she kissed them all. Afterwards [came] grown-up persons, who had died as children, and had been educated in Heaven. Lastly came such persons from the Russian nation as had also been brought up in Heaven, and made their congratulation. 12. Lastly, short congratulations were heard from above from the Societies of Heaven, one after the other; [and which although short] still were beautiful in the order of the provinces there, and which were continued. . . to [the number] of from one to two or three hundred . . . and there were many who still wished to congratulate; but as it took so much time, many of them made a congratulation together . . . Music was also heard accompanying the affections of the children who had been there. 13. A repast was afterwards served, which was splendid, and at which thirty persons were present. 14. In the morning, after they had slept together, they sat down together in a chariot; and then I saw him changed, [wearing] the red ribbon of the knights; and then they went to his [home]; and, when they arrived, the house was changed into a beautiful palace with many rooms, at which he was quite astonished. They walked round: it was beautiful everywhere. Then they went upstairs, and found servants, who belonged to the Society . . . and there were several rooms in which there was as yet nobody; a kind of sign that the Society was to be increased. 15. Then some persons came in who were allowed to make representations, and who with beautiful representations represented the government. 16. Then they went to her [home] in the former place. 17. Their love grew so strong that she desired to become one with him as to the body also, which also took place; and they considered themselves well off in this, that it can be done when desired. They then seemed to be as it were lifted up, from above. They can thus be one, being two as to the body, but still with one life. 18. De la Gardie has been of such a mind, that he always used to speak of useful things discursively, and also carefully and in a lively manner; and still of many spiritually. Thus he was used to speak from reason, and not at all from the memory alone. 19. (See THEOLOGY, here.) 20. They then drove round in a chariot among the Society, in order to show themselves . . . 24. Then came Queen Ulrica with her husband to make them a visit. He first spoke to the Russian Empress, and was shown all politeness. Then first to De la Gardie, and then to the Russian Empress, Queen Ulrica made her speech; first simply, and then more and more interiorly, [all of which] was answered in order, and something further. 25. On the 25th of March both were in a state of innocence together; and they walked round and were seen by many round there as little children.

* Translated from the Swedish in the Spiritual Diary by Prof. C. Th. Odhner. (The Empress Elizabeth of Russia died in December 1761.)

6055<sup>e</sup>. The love of marriage opens Heaven; the love of adultery closes it.

6106. On marriage.—There was a woman with me sometimes who said and believed that it is impossible to love a consort long, because it becomes common . . . But she was answered that in Heaven . . . this Common becomes delicious . . . 6110<sup>g</sup>.

6110. On Marriage and Adultery. Treatise.

—<sup>14</sup>. Illustrated by the marriage of sound and speech.

—<sup>48</sup>. The prior state must by all means precede before marriage . . . without thought about the posterior state. Then there will be a happy and lasting marriage; but in proportion as there is of the posterior state together with it, in the same proportion it is deficient.

—<sup>78</sup>. With those who have a lascivious marriage . . . with whom the woman's love is not communicated to the man, it is the man's own affection which effects it. The man has a proper affection of his own which does not make one with the woman's affection, and therefore they both recede. . . (But) this affection of the man is soon consumed and burnt up. It is otherwise when the woman's affection inflows into the man's understanding, as is the case with the Angels . . .

—<sup>81</sup>. All things are reduced to marriage . . .

D. Min. 4643. (The filthy ideas of such whenever marriage is mentioned.)

E. 710<sup>25</sup>. The arcanum contained in the Lord's words to the Pharisees (Matt. xix. 3-12) (is this): There are marriages in the Heavens equally as on earth; but in the Heavens, marriages are of like with their like; for the man has been born to act from the understanding, but the woman from affection. (Continued under MAN—vir.)

—<sup>28</sup>. The reason the Lord afterwards spoke about eunuchs, was . . . because marriages with the Jewish nation . . . from the fact that they were in the falsities of evil, were not marriages, but adulteries, as understood in the spiritual sense, and therefore that nation was called by the Lord 'an adulterous generation.' (Continued under EUNUCH.)

—<sup>29</sup>. The marriage of the understanding of truth and good with the affection of truth and good, is in general from a threefold origin, and thence is in a threefold degree. In the highest degree it is the marriage of those who are called celestial; in a lower one it is between those who are spiritual; and in the lowest it is between those who are natural. Sig. and fully Ex.

817<sup>d</sup>. For marriages, such as are in the Heavens, derive their spiritual origin from the marriage of good and truth . . .

935<sup>2</sup>. The Sixth Precept . . . contains in special to have delight in adulteries, and undelight in marriages; and, in special, to think filthy things about such things as belong to marriage; for these things also are 'adulteries.'

981<sup>2</sup>. The delight of marriage is Heaven with man . . .

— The chaste love of marriage is the fundamental love of all heavenly and Divine loves; consequently . . . in proportion as a man is in the chaste love of marriage, in the same proportion he is in all good love; if not in act, still in endeavour.

— He who is in the chaste love of marriage, is in charity and in faith, and in love to God. The chastity of marriage also makes one with religion. (See these statements concerning the love of marriage contrasted with the opposite, under ADULTERY at this ref.)

—<sup>3</sup>. When the Church is at its end . . . the man of the Church, from influx from Hell . . . comes into the faith that marriages and adulteries do not differ in their essence, but solely as to order; when yet the difference between them is such as there is between Heaven and Hell.

983<sup>3</sup>. This conjunction (of two minds into one) is spiritual marriage, from which descends conjugal love; for when two minds are conjoined, so that they are as it were one mind, there is love between them. This love, which is the spiritual love of marriage, when it descends into the body, becomes the natural love of marriage. Everyone, if he will, may clearly perceive this: consorts who interiorly and mutually love each other, love each other mutually also as to their bodies . . .

—4. Now as the origin of conjugal love is the marriage of good and truth, because in its essence marriage is Heaven, it is evident that the origin of the love of adultery is the marriage of evil and falsity, which in its essence is Hell. The reason Heaven is marriage, is that all who are in the Heavens are in the marriage of good and truth; and the reason Hell is adultery, is that all who are in the Hells are in the marriage of evil and falsity. Hence it follows that marriage and adultery are as opposite to each other as are Heaven and Hell.

984<sup>2</sup>. Man cannot become the love which is the image or likeness of God, except through the marriage of truth and good . . . This union is quite impossible except through the marriage of two minds into one; for . . . the man has been created to be the understanding of truth, thus truth; and the woman has been created to be the affection of good, thus good. In them, therefore, is there the conjunction of good and truth; for conjugal love, which descends from this conjunction, is the veriest means for man's becoming the love which is an image or a likeness of God. For two consorts who are in conjugal love from the Lord, love each other mutually from the heart, thus from innmosts; and therefore although they are apparently two, still they are actually one. They are two as to their bodies, and one as to their life; which may be compared to the eyes, in that they are two as to organs, but one as to sight . . . and in like manner all the other pairs with man; (which) also relate to good and truth . . . It is the like with a husband and his wife between whom there is love truly conjugal: they are two as to their bodies, but one as to their life; and therefore in Heaven two consorts are not called two Angels, but one. From these things it is evident that man becomes a form of love, and thence a form of Heaven . . . through marriage. (Continued under ADULTERY, at 984<sup>3</sup>.)

985<sup>3</sup>. The reason the love of marriage is so holy and heavenly, is that it commences from the Lord Himself in the innmosts of man, and according to order descends to the ultimates of the body, and thus infills the whole man with heavenly love, and induces on him the form of the Divine love, which form is the form of Heaven, and is the image of the Lord. (Continued under ADULTERY.)

—4. As the members of generation, in both sexes, correspond to the Societies of the Third Heaven; and the love of consorts to the love of good and truth; therefore those members and this love correspond to the Word. The reason is that the Word is Divine truth united to Divine good proceeding from the Lord . . . from which also it is that in each thing of the Word there is the marriage of good and truth . . . From this also it is evident how holy and heavenly marriages in themselves are; and how profane and diabolical are adulteries.

986<sup>5</sup>. How holy marriages are in themselves, that is, from creation, may be seen from the fact that they are the seminaries of the human race, and (therefore) of Heaven . . . and as the end of the whole creation is the human race, and thence Heaven . . . and their procreation according to Divine order has been instaurated by marriages, it is evident how holy . . . they are . . . The earth could indeed be equally filled with inhabitants through fornications and adulteries, as through marriages; but not Heaven. The reason is that Hell is from adulteries, and Heaven from marriages. . . The reason Heaven is from marriages, is that marriage is from the marriage of good and truth; from which also Heaven in the whole complex is called a marriage.

—6. By marriages is meant where its love, which is called conjugal love, reigns.

— When the procreations of the human race take place through marriages in which reigns the holy love of good and truth from the Lord, then it is done on earth as in the Heavens; and the Lord's Kingdom on earth corresponds to His Kingdom in the Heavens. For the Heavens consist of Societies ordained according to all the varieties of celestial and spiritual affections . . . and there would be a like form on earth if the procreations there took place through marriages in which reigned love truly conjugal. Ex.

989<sup>2</sup>. It has been said that Heaven is from marriages, and that Hell is from adulteries. It shall now be told how this is to be understood. The hereditary evils into which man is born . . . are from parents . . . on account of the marriage of evil and falsity; from which comes forth the love of adultery . . . If the parents' love is the love of adultery, it is also the love of evil for falsity, and of falsity for evil . . . Hence it is evident that there is Hell in man from adulteries, unless he is reformed by the Lord through truths and a life according to them; nor can anyone be reformed unless he shuns adulteries as infernal, and loves marriages as heavenly. Thus, and no otherwise, is hereditary evil broken, and becomes milder in the offspring.

990<sup>2</sup>. It has been said that the difference between the love of marriage and the love of adultery is like that between Heaven and Hell. There is a like difference between the delights of these loves. (Continued at full length under DELIGHT-gaudium.)

991<sup>6</sup>. This, then, is infernal marriage. Ex.

992<sup>2</sup>. It has been said that the love of adultery . . . soon burns out, and is turned into cold . . . but it is the reverse with the love of marriage: this is a fire kindled from the love of good and truth, and from the delight of doing well; thus from love to the Lord and love towards the neighbour. This fire . . . is full of innumerable delights, which are as many as are the delights and blessednesses of Heaven . . . they are also multiplied with augments to eternity. The origin of these delights is from the fact that the consorts want to be united into one as to their minds; and that Heaven, from the marriage of good and truth from the Lord there, conspires into such a union.

[E.992]<sup>3</sup>. I will relate some things about the marriages of the Angels in Heaven. They say that they are in continual potency; that after the act there is never any lassitude, still less sadness; but alacrity of life and cheerfulness of the lower mind; that the consorts pass the night in one another's bosoms, as if they had been created into one; that effects are constantly open, so that they are never wanting when they will, because without these their love would be like the vein of a fountain stopped up; the effect opens this vein, and makes it perennial, and also makes conjunction so that they become as one flesh; for the Vital of the man adds itself to the Vital of the wife, and couples them. They say that the deliciousnesses of the effects cannot be described in the words of any language in the natural world, nor be thought by any ideas except spiritual ones, which however do not exhaust [the description]. De Conj. 66.

995<sup>e</sup>. The genuine Conjugal exists especially in the Third Heaven, because the Angels there are in love to the Lord, acknowledge Him as the Only God, and do His commandments . . . There is a conjunction of the Lord with them, and of them with the Lord; for they are in the Lord, because they are in good; and the Lord is in them, because they are in truths. This is the heavenly marriage, from which love truly conjugal descends.

1000<sup>5</sup>. That the man who in the world lives in love truly conjugal, after death comes into the heavenly marriage, which is that of good and truth, originating from the marriage of the Lord with the Church, is manifestly evident from the fact, that from marriages in the Heavens—although the consorts are consociated there in like manner as on earth—there are not born children, but instead of children goods and truths, and the derivative wisdom . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. From these things it may also be clearly seen that marriages on earth correspond to marriages in the Heavens; and that after death a man comes into the correspondence; namely, from corporeal natural marriage into heavenly spiritual marriage, which is Heaven itself, and the joy of Heaven.

1002<sup>3</sup>. What good results from chastity in marriages . . . The good works of chastity which concern the consorts themselves, are spiritual and celestial loves; intelligence and wisdom; innocence and peace; power and protection against the Hells, and against the evils and falsities thence; and manifold joys, and happinesses to eternity; all of which are possessed by those who live in chaste marriages. The good works of chastity which concern the offspring and posterity, are that so many and such great evils are not born into families; for the reigning love of the parents . . . is broken and made mild with parents who shun adulteries as infernal, and love marriages as heavenly. The good works of chastity which concern the heavenly Societies, are that chaste marriages are the deliciousnesses of Heaven; that they are its seminaries; and that they are its supports. They afford deliciousnesses to Heaven through communications; they are seminaries to Heaven through proliferations; and they are supports to Heaven through power against the Hells; for at the presence of conjugal love diabolical Spirits become furious, insane, and impotent of mind, and cast themselves into the deep.

1004<sup>3</sup>. Inmost union is like that of the soul and the heart; the soul of the wife is the man, and the heart of the man is the wife. The man communicates and conjoins his soul to his wife by actual love, it being in his seed; and the wife receives it with her heart. Hence the two become one; and then each and all things of the body of the one look to their Mutual in those of the other. This is genuine marriage, possible only between two; for it is from creation that all things of the man, both of his mind and of his body, should have their Mutual in the mind and in the body of the wife; and thence that the veriest singulars should mutually regard each other and want to be united; and from this looking and endeavour there comes forth conjugal love. All things in the body . . . are nothing else than corporeal natural forms which correspond to the spiritual form of the mind . . . Therefore when two minds act as one, the two bodies are potentially so united that they are no more twain, but one flesh. To will to become one flesh is conjugal love; and this love is such as is that will. This may be confirmed by a marvellous thing which is in the Heavens. There are consorts there who are in such conjugal love that both can be one flesh, and also are so when they will, and they then appear as one man. I have seen them, and have spoken to them; and they said that they have one life, and that they are like the life of good in truth, and the life of truth in good; and that they are like the pairs in man . . . They said that their life, thus conjoined, is full of Heaven, and that it is the very life of Heaven with all its infinite beatitudes; for the reason that Heaven also is such from the marriage of the Lord therewith; for all the Angels are in the Lord, and the Lord in them. They said further that it is impossible for them to think from any intention about a super-numerary woman or wife, because this would be to convert Heaven into Hell; and therefore when an Angel only thinks it, he falls from Heaven. They added that natural Spirits do not believe this conjunction of theirs possible, because with those who are merely natural there is no marriage from a spiritual origin, which is that of good and truth; but there is marriage from a natural origin. Hence neither is there any union of minds, but only a union of bodies from the lower mind lasciviating in the flesh . . .

1010<sup>6</sup>. In a word, all scortation which destroys the Conjugal, and extinguishes its love, is adultery, or of adultery.

1077<sup>2</sup>. In the Word there is the marriage of the Lord with Heaven and the Church; which also is reciprocal . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. It is this union which is called the marriage which is from creation in each thing of Heaven and in each thing of the world; whence comes the production and generation of all things. . . It is also from this, marriage that good and truth are not two, but one; and they are one when good is of truth and truth is of good.

66. They say that to look at a consort clothed takes away the idea of marriage . . .

67. In the Heavens beneath the Third all appear clothed, and blush at nakedness before the eyes of others, because it excites lasciviousness. With them marriage is not such deliciousness as it is in the Third Heaven. In the Ultimate Heaven there is also something of cold; but not as in the world.

69. They said that they live at home with male and female servants, who are all in marriage.

80. In the Christian world there are many of rank and family—and not so from the common people—who have assumed the principle that marriages are for the sake of offspring, and what does it matter if they are debauched by others. They laugh at the sanctity of marriage . . . Such were taken up from the Hells, to a great number, and were let into the state in which they had been in the world. They inquired where there were beautiful wives, and, when told, they rushed like madmen and furies, wanting to enter the houses; but in their blind heat they were carried into a place where the earth yawned, and the whole drove were brought into Hell.

A. 162<sup>2</sup>. With the Most Ancient Church, conjugal love was as it were Heaven . . . but when the Church declined, they no longer perceived happiness in conjugal love; but in delectation from a number, which is of the external man. This is called by the Lord 'hardness of heart.'

827. They who insidiate through conjugal love . . . are in the most filthy excrements, and are devastated until they become like bones, because they are among the deceitful . . . 5060<sup>3</sup>.

995<sup>2</sup>. No one is ever forbidden to enjoy the pleasures of the body; namely . . . the pleasures of conjugal love . . .

[A.995]<sup>3</sup>. For example: the pleasure of conjugal love, when it derives its origin from true conjugal love, indefinitely surpasses the pleasure not derived thence; so much so, that they who are in true conjugal love are in a kind of heavenly delight and happiness; for it descends from Heaven.

997<sup>2</sup>. For example: the delight of conjugal love, because from it is the seminary of human society, and, from this, the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens—which use is the greatest of all—has in it such a delight that it is heavenly happiness.

1798<sup>3</sup>. Adultery . . . destroys conjugal love and its debts.

1803<sup>3</sup>. For the viscera of generation, especially the maternal womb, represent and thus signify chaste conjugal love, and the derivative love towards infants. III.

1865<sup>e</sup>. The Lord, from whom inflows all conjugal love . . .

1907<sup>e</sup>. Conjugal love can never be divided. That which is divided among a number is not conjugal love; but is that of lasciviousness.

2039. There are three kinds of loves which constitute the celestial things of the Lord's Kingdom . . . Conjugal love is the principal of all; for in it is the end of greatest use, namely the propagation of the human race . . .

2524. From (the marriage of Divine good and Divine truth) comes . . . also conjugal love down to lower nature.

2618<sup>2</sup>. From the Divine marriage of good and truth . . . in the Lord is all conjugal love; and, through this, all celestial and spiritual love.

2727. What genuine conjugal love is, and what is its origin, is known to few at this day; for the reason that few are in it. Almost all believe that it is innate, and so flows forth from what they call natural instinct; and this the more because the Conjugal comes forth also with animals; when yet there is such a difference between conjugal love with men, and the Conjugal with animals, as there is between the state of a man and that of a brute animal.

2729. That genuine conjugal love is thence may also be evident from the fact that no one can be in it unless he is in the good of truth and truth of good from the Lord: and also from the fact that heavenly blessedness and happiness are in this love; and they who are in it all come into Heaven, or into the heavenly marriage: and also from the fact that when the Angels are discoursing about the union of good and truth, then in a lower sphere there is presented with good Spirits what is representative of marriage; but with evil ones, what is representative of adultery . . .

2730. Above all men in this Earth the men of the Most Ancient Church lived in genuine conjugal love, because they were celestial . . . But their descendants . . . began to love children, and not their consorts; for children can be loved by the evil; but a consort can be loved only by the good.

2731. I have heard from these Most Ancients, that conjugal love is such that it wants to be completely the other's, and this reciprocally . . . and also that the conjunction of minds is such that this Mutual and Reciprocal is in each and all things of the life; that is, in each and all things of affection, and in each and all things of thought: and therefore it has been instituted by the Lord that wives be the affections of good which are of the will, and the men the thoughts of truth which are of the understanding; and that there be a marriage thence such as there is between the will and the understanding, and between each and all things of them, with the man who is in the good of truth and the truth of good.

2732. I have spoken with the Angels about this Mutual and Reciprocal . . . and they said that the image and likeness of the one is in the mind of the other, and that they thus dwell together not only in each thing of life, but also in the inmost things of life; and that the love and mercy of the Lord can inflow into such a one with what is blessed and happy. They also said that those who in the life of the body have lived in such conjugal love are together and dwell together in Heaven as Angels; sometimes also with their children; but that there are very few at this day from Christendom; but all from the Most Ancient Church . . . and many from the Ancient Church. (Continued under MARRIAGE.)

2733<sup>2</sup>. I told him . . . that conjugal love descends from the Lord through Heaven; and that from this love, as from a parent, is derived mutual love, which is the support of Heaven.

2735. Genuine conjugal love is an image of Heaven; and, when it is represented in the other life, it is done by the most beautiful things which can ever be seen with the eyes, or apprehended by the mind. Examp. It was said that all the beauty in the other life is from conjugal love. Its affections and thoughts are represented by diamond auras sparkling as it were with rubies; and this with deliciousnesses which affect the inmosts of the minds; but the moment that anything of lasciviousness intervenes, they disappear. H.382.

2736. I have been instructed that genuine conjugal love is innocence itself, because it dwells in wisdom. They who have lived in conjugal love excel all in Heaven in wisdom; and yet when viewed by others they appear like little children in the flower and spring-time of age; and whatever then happens to them is a joy and happiness to them. They are in the Inmost Heaven, which is called 'the Heaven of innocence. Through this Heaven the Lord inflows into conjugal love; and Angels from that Heaven are present with the men who live in this love . . .

2737. With those who live in conjugal love, the interiors of the mind are open through Heaven up to the Lord; for this love inflows from the Lord through the inmost of man. Hence they have the Lord's Kingdom in them; and hence they have genuine love towards infants for the sake of the Lord's Kingdom; and hence they are receptive of heavenly loves more than others, and are in mutual love more than others; for this love comes thence as a stream from its fountain.

2738. (The difference between mutual love and conjugal love. See MUTUAL LOVE, here.)

2741. Good and truth are continually inflowing from the Lord with all, and consequently so is genuine conjugal love; but it is diversely received; and, as it is received, such does it become. With the lascivious it is turned into lasciviousness; with adulterers into adulteries; heavenly happiness is turned into unclean delight; thus Heaven into Hell.

2742. There exists with some a kind of resemblance of conjugal love, but still it is not it if they are not in the love of good and truth. It is a love which appears as if it were conjugal, but is from causes of the love of the world or of self; namely, that they may be served at home, that they may be in security; that they may be in idleness; that they may be waited on in illness and old age; or that the children whom they love may be taken care of. With some it is compulsory from fear of their consort; for their reputation; or on account of evils. With some it is the love of lasciviousness which induces (the appearance of it); at first this appears as if it were conjugal; for they then emulate something of innocence, sport like little children, and perceive joy as from what is heavenly. But in process of time they are not united more and more closely, as are those who are in conjugal love; but they are separated. Conjugal love also differs with the consorts; with one it may exist more or less, with the other little or nothing; and because it differs, to the one it may be Heaven, and to the other Hell. The affection and the reception determine these things. H.381.

2743. I saw a great dog like Cerberus... and was told that by such a dog is signified a guard lest in conjugal love one should pass from heavenly delight to infernal delight, or the reverse; for they who are in genuine conjugal love are in heavenly delight, whereas they who are in adulteries are also in a delight which appears to them to be heavenly, but is infernal. By the dog is thus represented that these opposite delights should be prevented from communicating. 5051<sup>2</sup>.

2744. I have been shown how the delights from conjugal love progress, this way towards Heaven, that way towards Hell. The progression of the delights towards Heaven was continually into more blessednesses and happinesses, until they become innumerable and ineffable... and this through the most perfect freedom... (which is) from conjugal love... I was then shown how the delights of conjugal love progress towards Hell, in that little by little they remove themselves from Heaven, and this also from apparent freedom, even until scarcely anything human remains in them. The Deadly and Infernal in which they cease... cannot be described. H.386.

3960. ('Zebulon,' or 'cohabitation')=in the supreme sense, the Lord's Divine Itself and Divine Human; in the internal sense, the heavenly marriage; and in the external sense, conjugal love. Ex. 4606<sup>2</sup>.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason why, in the external sense, 'cohabitation'=conjugal love, is that all genuine conjugal love comes forth from no other source than the heavenly marriage of good and truth; and this from the Divine marriage, which is the Lord as to His Divine Itself and Divine Human. rank. These goods are the first mediate goods of conjugal love. Afterwards there comes the conjunction of lower minds, in that the one wills as the other, and perceives delight in doing what pleases the other. This state is the second, and then the former things, although present, are not regarded. Finally there succeeds union as to celestial good and spiritual truth; namely, in that the one believes as does the other, and that the one is affected with the good with which the other is affected. When this state exists, both are simultaneously in the heavenly marriage, which is that of good and truth; thus in conjugal love; for conjugal love is nothing else; and then the Lord inflows into the affections of both as into one affection. This good is what inflows directly; whereas the former goods, which inflowed indirectly, served as means to introduce to this good.

4277. 'The thigh' = conjugal love, and thence all celestial and spiritual love, because these are derived from conjugal love as offspring from their parent.

4280<sup>4</sup>. Conjugal love is the fundamental love of all loves. Hence it is that those who are in conjugal love are also in celestial love—that is, in love to the Lord—and in spiritual love—that is, in charity towards the neighbour. Therefore, by conjugal love is meant not only this love itself, but also all celestial and spiritual love. These loves are said to be conjoined with natural good, when the internal man is conjoined with the external.

4403<sup>2</sup>. They who are at the loins (of the Grand Man) are they who are in conjugal love. 4779.

4434. For, in the internal sense, the things which belong to conjugal love involve spiritual conjunction, which is that of truth with good and of good with truth. (The reason of this is) that conjugal love derives its origin from the marriage of truth and good, and of good and truth. Refs. and III.

—<sup>2</sup>. As in this whole chapter it treats of conjugal love towards Dinah . . .

4632. So when I was thinking about conjugal love, those who were in the Hell where adulterers are, revolved nothing but flagitious and filthy things.

4823<sup>3</sup>. Conjugal love with the celestial originates from the conjunction of good with truth; and conjugal love with the spiritual, from the conjunction of truth with good. (Continued under MARRIAGE.)

4837. 'When he came to his brother's wife, and he destroyed to the earth' = what is contrary to conjugal love. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Moreover, when they are in genuine conjugal love, they are in the heavenly marriage . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. The representative of a Church could not be instituted (among the descendants of Jacob) by marriages, because they were in what is contrary to conjugal love.

4865. The reason is that genuine conjugal love descends from the heavenly marriage . . . 8809.

4871. 'A kid of the she-goats' = . . . innocence; and therefore a pledge of conjugal love—or a pledge of conjunction—for genuine conjugal love is innocence. 4885.

4918. 'The womb,' in the genuine sense, = the inmost of conjugal love in which is innocence; because in the Grand Man the womb corresponds to this love; and as conjugal love derives its origin from the love of good and truth, which is that of the heavenly marriage, and this marriage is . . . the Lord's Kingdom . . . therefore by 'the womb' is signified also the Church . . . 6433.

5051. (A quiet dream of some trees, one tall, the second lower, and two small.) At the same time a very pleasant rest, such as I cannot express, affected my mind. The angelic Spirits who had induced the dream told me that what I had seen signified conjugal love; the tall tree signifying the husband, the lower one the wife, and the two small ones the children. They said . . . that that very pleasant rest . . . was an indication of the pleasantness of peace enjoyed in the other life by those who have lived in genuine conjugal love. They added that such are they who belong to the province of the thighs next above the knees; and that those who are in a still more pleasant state belong to the province of the loins. It was also shown that there is a communication through the feet with the soles and heels. (This) is evident from that great nerve in the thigh which sends forth its branches not only through the loins to the members allotted to generation, which are the organs of conjugal love, but also through the feet to the soles and heels . . . D.2611.

—<sup>2</sup>. For conjugal love is heavenly, when a man lives contented in the Lord with his consort whom he most tenderly loves, and with his children. Hence he has in the world interior pleasantness, and in the other life heavenly joy.

5052. It is the Inmost Heaven through which the Lord insinuates conjugal love; those who are there being in peace above all others . . .

5060. Those who are in things contrary to conjugal love, who strike pain into the testicles . . . are those who insinuate through love . . . —<sup>3</sup>.

—<sup>2</sup>. By this was represented that they want to present themselves in chaste conjugal love . . .

6024<sup>3</sup>. 'The sons of Issachar . . .' = heavenly conjugal love and its doctrinal things.

6179. A binding from all power through that which is of conjugal love. Ex. and Sig.

6432. See BREAST—uber, here.

7038<sup>2</sup>. The greatest delight belongs to the sense of conjugal love, on account of its very great use . . .

7337<sup>e</sup>. Wholly pure within from chastity or from genuine conjugal love . . .

8850<sup>e</sup>. They who (in Jupiter) have lived happy in conjugal love, and have had the care of children, as becomes parents, do not die by diseases, but tranquilly, as in sleep.

8904<sup>2</sup>. The reason (of the signification of 'to commit adultery') is that conjugal love descends from the marriage of good and truth . . . The love which inflows from the Lord, and which is between good and truth in Heaven, is turned on earth into conjugal love, and this through the correspondence . . . Hence also it is that they who are not in the good and truth of faith cannot be in genuine conjugal love.

899<sup>8</sup>. When conjugal love descends from (the marriage of good and truth) it is Heaven itself in man. This is destroyed when the two consorts are unlike in heart from an unlike faith.

9325<sup>3</sup>. That love truly conjugal descends from (the marriage of good and truth) is known at this day to scarcely anyone, and perhaps scarcely anyone wants to acknowledge it . . . As love truly conjugal is thence, by 'births' and 'generations' are signified the things which belong to the new birth from the Lord . . .

9959. 'The linen breeches' = the external of conjugal love. Ex.

9960<sup>18</sup>. As conjugal love is the fundamental love of all celestial and spiritual loves, and thus comprehends them . . .

—<sup>19</sup>. But when the interiors are chaste, nakedness = innocence, because it = conjugal love ; for the reason that love truly conjugal, in its essence, is innocence.

9961. The extension of . . . the exteriors of conjugal love. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. It is said the extension of conjugal love from interiors to exteriors ; for . . . (Continued under EXTEND.)

—<sup>3</sup>. As to what concerns conjugal love in special, the extension of which is here treated of, this is the fundamental love of all loves ; for it descends from the marriage of good and truth in the Heavens ; and, as the marriage of good and truth is in the Heavens, and makes the Heavens, love truly conjugal is therefore Heaven itself with man ; but the marriage of good and truth in the Heavens descends from the conjunction of the Lord with the Heavens . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. Be it known, therefore, that by conjugal love is meant all celestial and spiritual love, for the reason . . . that love truly conjugal is the fundamental love of all loves. They, therefore, who are in it, are also in all the other loves of Heaven and the Church ; for it descends . . . from the marriage of good and truth in the Heavens, which marriage makes Heaven . . .

10167. The Doctrine of Charity and Faith.—Few know from what origin comes forth conjugal love. They who think from the world believe that it is from nature ; but they who think from Heaven believe that it is from the Divine there.

10168. Love truly conjugal is the union of two minds, which is a spiritual union ; and all spiritual union descends from Heaven. Hence it is that love truly conjugal is from Heaven, and that its first esse is from the marriage of good and truth there. The marriage of good and truth in Heaven is from the Lord ; and therefore in the Word the Lord is called 'the Bridegroom' and 'Husband ;' and Heaven and the Church, 'the bride,' and 'wife ;' and therefore Heaven is also compared to a marriage.

10169. From these things it is evident that love truly conjugal is the union of two as to their interiors, which are of thought and will, thus which are of truth and good . . . for he who is in love truly conjugal loves what the other thinks, and what the other wills ; thus he also loves to think as the other, and he loves to will as the other ; consequently to be united to the other, and to become as one man. This is what is meant by the Lord's words in Matthew : 'And the two shall be into one flesh ; wherefore they are no longer two, but one flesh' (xix. 4-6 ; Gen. ii. 23, 24).

10170. The delight of love truly conjugal is internal, because of the minds, and is also external thence, which is that of the bodies ; whereas the delight of love not truly conjugal is only external delight without internal, which is that of bodies and not of minds. But this delight is earthly almost as is that of animals, and therefore in time perishes ; whereas the former is heavenly, such as must be that of men, and is therefore permanent.

10171. No one can know what love truly conjugal is, and the quality of its delight, except him who is in the good of love and in the truths of faith from the Lord ; because . . . love truly conjugal is from Heaven, and is from the marriage of good and truth there.

10172. (Thus) love truly conjugal is never possible if there are a number of wives to one husband.

10173. That which takes place from love truly conjugal takes place from freedom both ways ; for all freedom is from love ; and both have freedom when the one loves that which the other thinks and that which the other wills . . .

10756. From this conjunction (of truth and good) descending into the body, comes forth conjugal love ; for all things which are of the lower mind are presented in some natural form—specie—in the body ; thus in the form—specie—of conjugal love when the interiors of two love each other mutually, and also from this love want to will and to think the one as the other, and thus to be together and to be conjoined as to the interiors which are of the mind. Hence does the spiritual affection which is of minds, become natural in the body, and clothe itself with the sense of conjugal love.

H. 281<sup>2</sup>. I have been informed that love truly conjugal derives its coming forth—existentiam—from innocence, because from the conjunction of good and truth in which are the two minds of the husband and wife. When this conjunction descends, it is presented under the form—specie—of conjugal love ; for the consorts love each other mutually, as do their minds. Hence there is a sporting as of infancy and as of innocence, in conjugal love.

369<sup>6</sup>. From these things may be evident what is the nature of the conjunction of minds which effects marriage and produces conjugal love in the Heavens ; namely, that it is that the one wills that his own things be [those] of the other ; and so reciprocally.

370. I have been told by the Angels that in proportion as two consorts are in such conjunction, in the same proportion they are in conjugal love, and at the same time they are in the same proportion in intelligence, wisdom, and happiness ; for the reason that Divine truth and Divine good—from which are all intelligence, wisdom, and happiness—inflows principally into conjugal love ; consequently, that conjugal love is the very plane itself of the Divine influx, because it is at the same time the marriage of good and truth. Ex.

[H.] 371. The reason the Divine which proceeds from the Lord inflows principally into conjugal love, is that conjugal love descends from the conjunction of good and truth; for . . . whether you say the conjunction of understanding and will, or the conjunction of good and truth, it is the same thing. The conjunction of good and truth derives its origin from the Lord's Divine love towards all who are in the Heavens and on earth. From the Divine love proceeds the Divine good, and the Divine good is received by Angels and men in Divine truths . . . Nothing, therefore, can be received from the Lord or from Heaven by anyone who is not in truths. Therefore, in proportion as the truths with a man are conjoined with good, in the same proportion is the man conjoined with Heaven and the Lord. Hence, then, is the very origin itself of conjugal love; and on this account it is the very plane itself of the Divine influx . . .

373. From these things it may now be seen whence is love truly conjugal; namely, that it is first formed in the minds of those who are in marriage; and that it descends thence and is derived into the body, and is there perceived and felt as love. Ex.

374. I have heard an Angel describe love truly conjugal and its heavenly delights in this manner:—that it is the Divine of the Lord in the Heavens—which is the Divine good and the Divine truth—united in two, inasmuch that they are not two, but as one. He said that two consorts in Heaven are this love, because everyone is his own good and his own truth, as to both mind and body . . . He deduced from this that the Divine is effigied in two who are in love truly conjugal; and as the Divine is effigied in it, so also is Heaven . . . and hence it is that all things of Heaven are inscribed on this love, and so many blessednesses and delights as to exceed all number. He expressed the number by a word which involves myriads of myriads . . .

376. From the things which have been said about the origin of conjugal love, it may be concluded who are in conjugal love, and who are not: that those are in conjugal love who from Divine truth are in Divine good; and that conjugal love is genuine in proportion as the truths which are conjoined with good are genuine. And as all the good which is conjoined with truths is from the Lord, it follows that no one can be in love truly conjugal unless he acknowledges the Lord and His Divine; for without this acknowledgment the Lord cannot inflow, and be conjoined with the truths which are with a man.

377. From these things it is evident that they are not in conjugal love who are in falsities, and not at all they who are in falsities from evil. With those who are in evil and in the derivative falsities, the interiors of the mind are closed up; and therefore there cannot be therein any origin of conjugal love; but beneath them, in the external man separated from the internal, there is the conjunction of falsity and evil, which conjunction is called the infernal marriage.

378. Neither is conjugal love possible between two who are of diverse religions, because the truth of the one does not agree with the good of the other, and two dissimilar and discordant things cannot make one mind out of two. Therefore the origin of their love does not derive anything from what is spiritual; and if they dwell and agree together, it is solely from natural causes. (Continued under MARRIAGE.)

379. Neither is conjugal love possible between one husband and a number of wives; for this destroys its spiritual origin, which is that out of two there should be formed one mind; consequently it destroys interior conjunction, which is that of good and truth, and which is that from which is the very essence of this love. Marriage with more than one is like an understanding divided among a number of wills; and is like a man attached not to one but to a number of Churches . . . The Angels say that to marry a number of wives is utterly contrary to Divine order; and that they know this from many causes, and also from the fact that as soon as they think about marriage with a number, they are alienated from internal blessedness and heavenly happiness, and they then become like drunken persons, because good is disjoined from its truth with them; and as the interiors which are of their minds, from mere thought with some intention, come into such a state, they clearly perceive that marriage with a number would close their internal, and would cause conjugal love to be displaced by the love of lasciviousness, which love withdraws from Heaven. They say, further, that man comprehends this with difficulty, because there are few who are in genuine conjugal love, and they who are not in it know nothing at all about the interior delight which is in that love, but only about the delight of lasciviousness, which delight, after a short cohabitation, is turned into what is undelightful; whereas the delight of love truly conjugal not only endures until old age in the world, but also becomes the delight of Heaven after death, and is then infilled with interior delight, which is perfected to eternity. They said also that the blessednesses of love truly conjugal can be enumerated up to many thousands, of which not even one is known to man, nor can be comprehended by the understanding by anyone who is not in the marriage of good and truth from the Lord.

380. The love of dominion of the one over the other completely takes away conjugal love and its heavenly delight; for . . . conjugal love and its delights consists in this, that the will of the one is that of the other, and this mutually and reciprocally. The love of dominion in marriage destroys this. Ex.

382. There is genuine conjugal love in the Inmost Heaven; because the Angels there are in the marriage of good and truth, and are also in innocence. The Angels of the lower Heavens are also in conjugal love, but [only] in proportion as they are in innocence; for, regarded in itself, conjugal love is a state of innocence; and therefore between consorts who are in conjugal love there are heavenly delights [which] before their lower minds are almost like the sportings of innocence, as among little children; for there is nothing which does not delight their minds; for Heaven with its joy inflows into each thing of their life. Therefore conjugal love is represented in Heaven by the most beautiful things. Examps. In a word, Heaven represents itself in conjugal love; because Heaven with the Angels is the conjunction of good and truth; and this conjunction makes conjugal love.

384<sup>2</sup>. That all who are in Hell are against conjugal love, has been given me to perceive from the sphere exhaling thence . . .

494<sup>2</sup>. If love truly conjugal has not conjoined them—which love is the conjunction of minds from heavenly love—after some delay they are separated.

C. J. 52<sup>o</sup>. The reason is that conjugal love is heavenly love, which is devoid of [the exercise of] command.

77<sup>2</sup>. Concerning marriage (the Africans) said that they are indeed allowed by their law to marry a number of wives, but that still they marry one; because love truly conjugal is not divided; and, if it is divided, its essence, which is heavenly, perishes; and it becomes external and thence lascivious, which in a short time becomes vile, according to the diminution of potency; and finally, with the loss thereof, becomes loathsome. Love truly conjugal, which is internal, and derives nothing from lasciviousness, remains to eternity, and increases in potency, and in the same degree in deliciousness.

P. 144<sup>2</sup>. From debauchery with the will (the understanding) cannot see that conjugal love is the spiritual celestial love itself, which is the image of the love of the Lord and the Church, from which also it is derived; and thus that in itself it is holy, is chastity itself, purity, and innocence; and that it makes men loves in form; for the consorts are able to love each other mutually from inmosts, and thus to form themselves into loves: and that adultery destroys this form; and, with it, the image of the Lord.

—<sup>3</sup>. Moreover, the love of adultery communicates with the lowest Hell; whereas love truly conjugal communicates with the Inmost Heaven.

R. 359. 'From the tribe of Zebulon were sealed twelve thousand'—the conjugal love of good and truth also with those who will be in the Lord's New Heaven and New Church. . . By 'Zebulon,' here, is signified the conjugal love of good and truth . . . The conjugal love of good and truth which is here signified by 'Zebulon,' is the conjugal love of the Lord and the Church. The Lord is the good of love itself, and He gives the Church to be the truth from this good; and 'cohabitation' takes place when the man of the Church receives in truths the good from the Lord. There is then effected with the man the marriage of good and truth, which is the Church itself . . .

M. Title. The Deliciousnesses of Wisdom concerning Conjugal Love.

19. That morning, there was sung (in Heaven) the affection of conjugal love; the sweetness of which so affected . . . the hearers that they perceived a blessed pleasantness implanted in their joys, which elevated and renewed them.

37. That . . . with those who come into Heaven . . . conjugal love (is the principal love which remains after death). Gen.art.

—<sup>2</sup>. Regarded in itself . . . conjugal love is nothing else than (the longing and derivative effort) for conjunction into a one. For the male and the female man have been so created, that from being two they are able to become as one man, or one flesh; and when they become one, then, taken together, they are a man in his fullness . . . Now as this Conjunctive lies inmostly hidden in each thing of the male, and in each thing of the female; and as the faculty and longing for conjunction into a one is in each thing, it follows that the mutual and reciprocal love of the sex remains with men—homines—after death.

38. It is said, the love of the sex, and conjugal love, because the love of the sex is different from conjugal love. The love of the sex is with the natural man, whereas conjugal love is with the spiritual man. The natural man loves and desires only external conjunctions, and the pleasures of the body therefrom; whereas the spiritual man loves and desires an internal conjunction, and the happinesses of the spirit therefrom; and these he perceives to be possible with one wife, with whom he can be perpetually more and more conjoined into a one; and the more he is thus conjoined, the more he perceives his happiness ascending in a like degree, and constant to eternity . . . Hence, then, it is, that it is said that conjugal love remains after death with those who come into Heaven . . .

42. A voice was heard from Heaven . . . saying, We have perceived, and we now see, that you have meditated about conjugal love; and we know that as yet no one on earth knows what love truly conjugal, in its origin and in its essence, is . . . and therefore it has pleased the Lord to open the Heavens to you, in order that illustrating light and the derivative perception may inflow into the interiors of your mind. With us in the Heavens, especially in the Third, our heavenly deliciousnesses are principally from conjugal love; and therefore . . . we will send down to you a pair of consorts, in order that you may see. . . (These) said, We are consorts. We have lived blessedly in Heaven since . . . the Golden Age, and perpetually in the same flower of age in which you see us to-day . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. I perceived that they represented conjugal love in its life and in its adornment; in its life in their faces; and in its adornment in their garments . . . The husband appeared of the age intermediate between adolescence and young manhood. From his eyes darted forth a sparkling light from the wisdom of love; from which light his face was as it were inmostly radiant, and from the irradiation thence his skin in its extremes as it were flashed; whence his whole face was one resplendent comeliness. He was dressed in a garment reaching down to his feet, beneath which was a garment of a hyacinthine colour, girt about with a golden girdle, upon which were three precious stones, two sapphires at the sides, and a fire-stone in the middle. His stockings were of resplendent linen, in which threads of silver were interwoven, and his shoes were all of silk. This was the representative form of conjugal love with the husband.

—<sup>4</sup>. But with the wife it was as follows. Her face was seen by me, and was not seen. It was seen as beauty itself, and it was not seen, because this beauty was inexpressible. For in her face there was a resplend-ence of flaming light, such as is possessed by the Angels in the Third Heaven, and this light dimmed my sight. She said, What do you see? I replied, I see nothing but conjugal love, and its form; but I see, and I do not see. Hereupon she turned herself sideways from her husband; and then I could examine her more intently. Her eyes sparkled from the light of her Heaven, which . . . is derived from the love of wisdom; for the wives in that Heaven love their husbands from their wisdom and in their wisdom; and the husbands love their wives from that love and in that love towards themselves; and thus they are united. This was the origin of her beauty, which was such that it would be impossible for any painter to imitate and present it in its form; for there is no such lustre in his colours . . . Her hair was arranged in becoming order according to the correspondence with her beauty; and in it were inserted flowers of diadems. She had a necklace of fire-stone, from which hung a rosary of chrysolites; and her bracelets were of pearls. She was arrayed in a scarlet mantle, beneath which was a crimson stomacher, fastened together in front with rubies. But, what surprised me, was that the colours varied according to her aspect towards her husband, and according thereto sparkled sometimes more and sometimes less; in mutual aspect more, and in sideways aspect less.

[M. 42<sup>o</sup>. When the husband was speaking, he spoke at the same time as from his wife; and when the wife was speaking, she spoke at the same time as from her husband; for such was the union of their minds, from which speech flows. Then also did I hear the tone of conjugal love, which within was simultaneous; and also that it proceeded from the deliciousnesses of a state of peace and innocence. At last they said, We are recalled, . . . and then again they appeared to be conveyed in a chariot . . . by a paved way between flower-beds, from which rose olive-trees, and trees full of oranges; and, when they were near their own Heaven, maidens came to meet them, who received and led them in.

43. After this an Angel appeared to me from that Heaven, holding in his hand a parchment, which he unrolled, saying, I have seen that you were meditating about conjugal love. On this parchment there are arcana of wisdom concerning that love which have not as yet been disclosed in the world . . . But I predict that no others will appropriate to themselves that love than those who are received by the Lord into the New Church . . . The Angel then let down the unrolled parchment, which a certain angelic Spirit took, and laid upon a table in a certain chamber, which he instantly locked, and held out the key to me, and said, Write.

—<sup>8</sup>. The three novitiates . . . asked whether there is a like love between consorts in the Heavens as on earth. The two angelic Spirits replied that it is exactly like it. And as they perceived that they wanted to know whether there are the like ultimate deliciousnesses there, they said that they are exactly alike, but much more blessed, because angelic perception and sensation are much more exquisite than human . . . and what is the life of that love except from the vein of potency? When this vein fails, does not that love fail and grow cold? Is not this virtue the very measure, the very degree, and the very basis of that love? Is it not its beginning, support, and completion? It is a universal law, that primes come forth, subsist, and persist from ultimates. So also [is it with] this love; and therefore unless there were ultimate deliciousnesses, there would not be any deliciousnesses of conjugal love.

—<sup>9</sup>. The novitiates then asked whether offspring are born from the ultimate deliciousnesses of that love there; and, if not, of what use they are. The angelic Spirits replied, that no natural offspring are born, but spiritual offspring. And they asked, What are spiritual offspring? They replied, By means of the ultimate deliciousnesses, two consorts are more united in the marriage of good and truth, and the marriage of good and truth is the marriage of love and wisdom, and love and wisdom are the offspring which are born from that marriage; and as, there, the husband is wisdom, and the wife is the love thereof, and as also both are spiritual, therefore no other than spiritual offspring can be conceived and begotten there. Hence it is that after the deliciousnesses the Angels do not become sad, as do some on earth, but cheerful; and this they have from the constant influx of fresh forces after the former ones, which renovate and at the same time illustrate; for all who come into Heaven, return into their vernal young manhood, and into the forces of that age, and so remain permanently to eternity.

46<sup>e</sup>. This effort is the love of the sex, which precedes conjugal love.

47<sup>2</sup>. If this love (of the sex) had been interiorly conjugal, or chaste, it remains after death conjugal, or chaste . . .

48. That conjugal love in like manner remains such as it had been interiorly; that is, such as it had been in interior will and thought with a man in the world. Ex.

— (Conjugal love contrasted with the Love of the Sex. See LOVE OF THE SEX, here.)

—<sup>2</sup>. At the beginning of marriage, the love of the sex appears as if it were conjoined with conjugal love; but in the progression of marriage they are separated; and then, with those who are spiritual, the love of the sex is exterminated, and conjugal love is insinuated; whereas with those who are natural the contrary takes place.

51<sup>e</sup>. The reason why (the intercourse between consorts in Heaven) is more delightful and blessed, is that when conjugal love becomes of the spirit, it becomes more interior and pure, and thence more perceptible; and all delight increases according to the perception; and it increases even until its blessedness is noticed in its delight.

52<sup>2</sup>. Therefore love and wisdom are the things which are born of marriages in the Heavens. It is said that these are born, because conjugal love perfects an Angel; for it unites him with his consort—consorte, whence he becomes more and more a man—homo; for . . . in Heaven two consorts are not two, but one Angel; and therefore through conjugal union they infl themselves with what is human, which is to want to be wise, and to love that which is of wisdom.

54<sup>s</sup>. For the sphere of perpetual celibacy infests the sphere of conjugal love, which is the very sphere of Heaven. The reason the sphere of conjugal love is the very sphere of Heaven, is that it descends from the heavenly marriage of the Lord and the Church.

55<sup>s</sup>. We have never yet found the common love of the sex chaste, except with those who from love truly conjugal are in continual potency; and these are in the highest Heavens. —<sup>7</sup>.

56<sup>s</sup>. The third assigned as the cause (of beauty in the female sex), that to women there has been given a perception of the deliciousnesses of conjugal love; and as their whole body is an organ of this perception, it cannot be otherwise than that the dwelling of the deliciousnesses of conjugal love with its perception should be beauty.

57. On Love Truly Conjugal. Chapter.

—<sup>1</sup>. Conjugal love is of infinite variety; it does not exist with one like what it is with another. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Still, no one can see the infinite varieties of this love . . . unless he first knows what is the quality of this love in its very essence and integrity; thus what was its quality, when, together with life from God, it was implanted in man . . . This is the reason why we here proceed to describe this love in its genuine essence . . . and as in that state it was truly conjugal, this chapter is inscribed, On Love Truly Conjugal.

58. That there exists a love truly conjugal which at this day is so rare, that its nature is not known, and scarcely that it is. Gen.art.

—<sup>1</sup>. That there exists such a conjugal love as is described in what follows, may be acknowledged from the first state of this love, when it insinuates itself and enters into the hearts of a youth and a maiden; thus with those who begin to love one only of the sex, and to long for her as a bride; and still more in the time of betrothal . . . and lastly in the wedding and the first days thereafter. Who does not then acknowledge and consent to the following [statements]: that this love is the fundamental love of all loves; and that into it have been collected all joys and all deliciousnesses from primes to ultimates? And who does not know that after this pleasant time these gladnesses successively pass away and depart, until at last they are scarcely felt?

—<sup>2</sup>. From these things it is evident that the primitive love of marriage emulates love truly conjugal, and presents it to view in a certain image. This is done, because then the love of the sex, which is unchaste, is cast forth; and, in place of it, the love of one of the sex, which is love truly conjugal, and chaste, is seated in [him].

59. That nevertheless love truly conjugal is so rare that its quality is not known, and scarcely that it is, is because the state of pleasantness before the wedding is afterwards turned into a state of indifference . . . Thus with most at this day that image of conjugal love is so [completely] abolished . . . that its quality is not known . . .

60. That the origin of this love is the marriage of good and truth. Gen.art.

61. That conjugal love proceeds from the marriage of good and truth . . .

62. That the correspondence of this love is with the marriage of the Lord and the Church. Gen.art.

—<sup>1</sup>. (This correspondence) is here mentioned to the end that it may be seen that conjugal love is celestial, spiritual, and holy; because it corresponds to the celestial, spiritual, and holy marriage of the Lord and the Church.

—<sup>2</sup>. This correspondence also follows from the origin of conjugal love in the marriage of good and truth . . . because (this) marriage is the Church with man . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Now as the Church is the Lord's because from the Lord, and as conjugal love corresponds to the marriage of the Lord and the Church, it follows that this love is from the Lord.

63. How the Church is formed . . . with two consorts, and, through it, conjugal love, shall be illustrated (below). Here, merely, that the Church is formed by the Lord with the man, and through the man, with the wife; and that after it has been formed with both, the Church is full; for there is then effected a full conjunction of good and truth, and the conjunction of good and truth is the Church.

—<sup>4</sup>. That the conjunctive inclination, which is conjugal love, is in a like degree with the conjunction of good and truth, which is the Church, will be confirmed in what follows.

64. That this love, from its origin, and from its correspondence, is celestial, spiritual, holy, pure, and clean, above every other love which is from the Lord with the Angels of Heaven and with the men of the Church. Ex.

—<sup>1</sup>. (The above-mentioned) two marriages, from which conjugal love descends as an offshoot, are very holinesses; and therefore if it is received from its Author, who is the Lord, holiness from Him follows, which continually decants and purifies it. If, then, there is in the man's will a longing and an effort for it, that love becomes perpetually clean and pure from day to day.

—<sup>2</sup>. Conjugal love is called celestial and spiritual because it exists with the Angels of Heaven; celestial, with the Angels of the highest Heaven . . . and spiritual with the Angels beneath that Heaven . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason why this love, regarded in its essence from its derivation, is holy and pure above every other love . . . is that it is as the head of all other loves.

65. That it is also the fundamental love of all celestial, spiritual, and the derivative natural loves. Gen.art.

—<sup>1</sup>. The reason conjugal love, regarded in its essence, is the fundamental love of all the loves of Heaven and the Church, is that its origin is the marriage of good and truth; and from this marriage proceed all the loves which make Heaven and the Church with man. The good of this marriage constitutes love, and the truth of it constitutes wisdom; and when love accedes to wisdom, or conjoins itself therewith, then love becomes love; and when wisdom in return accedes to love, and conjoins itself therewith, then wisdom becomes wisdom. Love truly conjugal is nothing else than the conjunction of love and wisdom. Two consorts between whom . . . is this love, are the effigy and form of it . . . Now as two consorts are this love in effigy and form, it follows that every love which proceeds from the form of the love itself is a resemblance of it; and therefore if the conjugal love is celestial and spiritual, so also are the loves which proceed from it . . . and therefore the conjugal love is like a parent, and all the other loves are as the offspring. Hence it is that from the marriages of the Angels . . . are generated spiritual offspring, which are of love and wisdom . . .

[M.] 66. The like is clearly evident from the creation of men into this love, and from their formation from it afterwards. (Continued under MALE.)

68. That into this love have been collected all joys and all deliciousnesses from primes to ultimates. Gen.art.

— Now as conjugal love is the fundamental love of all good loves, and as it has been inscribed on the veriest singulars of man . . . it follows that the delights of it surpass the delights of all loves, and that it delights these loves according to its presence and . . . conjunction with them; for it expands the inmosts of the mind and at the same time the inmosts of the body, as the delicious current of its fountain flows through and opens them.

—<sup>2</sup>. That into this love have been collected all delights from primes to ultimates, is on account of the surpassing excellence of its use . . . and as this use was the end of ends of creation, it follows that all the blessednesses, happinesses, delights, pleasantnesses, and pleasures, which could possibly be conferred upon man by the Lord the Creator, have been collected into this His love.

—<sup>e</sup>. Each of (the five senses) has delights with variations according to its specific uses. What [then must be the delight belonging] to the sense of conjugal love, the use of which is the complex of all other uses?

69. I know that few will acknowledge that into conjugal love have been collected all joys and deliciousnesses from primes to ultimates; for the reason that love truly conjugal, into which they have been collected, is at this day so rare that its quality is not known, and scarcely that it is . . . for they are in no other conjugal love than what is genuine . . . The Angels have said that the inmost deliciousnesses of it, which are of the soul, and into which first inflows the Conjugal of love and wisdom . . . from the Lord, are imperceptible . . . because they are at the same time [those of] peace and innocence; but that the same in their descent become more and more perceptible; in the higher things of the mind as blessednesses, in the lower things of the mind as happinesses, in the breast as delights from these; and that from the breast they diffuse themselves into each and all things of the body; and finally unite themselves in ultimates in the deliciousness of deliciousnesses . . . They say also that the varieties of these deliciousnesses in the souls of the consorts; and from their souls in their minds; and from their minds in their breasts, are infinite, and also eternal; and that they are exalted according to the wisdom with the husbands . . .

70. But that no others come into this love, and are able to be in it, than those who approach the Lord, and love the truths of the Church, and do its goods. Gen.art.

— The reason no others come into this love than those who approach the Lord, is that monogamous marriages . . . correspond to the marriage of the Lord and the Church, and because they originate from the marriage of good and truth; (from which) it follows that love truly conjugal is from the Lord, and is for those who approach Him directly . . . (and also that) conjugal love is with a man according to the state of the Church with him.

71. The reason no others can be in love truly conjugal than those who receive it from the Lord—who are they who approach Him directly, and live the life of the Church from Him—is that this love, regarded from its origin, and from its correspondence, is celestial, spiritual, holy, pure, and clean above every love which is with the Angels of Heaven and with the men of the Church; and these its attributes cannot possibly exist, except with those who are conjoined with the Lord, and by Him are consociated with the Angels of Heaven. For these shun extra-conjugal loves . . . as the lakes of Hell; and in proportion as the consorts shun these conjunctions, even as to the lusts of the will and the derivative intentions, in the same proportion is this love purified with them, and successively becomes spiritual; first while they live on earth, and afterwards in Heaven.

—<sup>2</sup>. With men, no love can ever become pure, nor with Angels, thus neither this love. But as the intention which is of the will is primarily regarded by the Lord, therefore in proportion as a man is in this, and perseveres in it, in the same proportion he is initiated into the purity and holiness of it . . .

— The reason no others can be in spiritual conjugal love, than those who are such from the Lord, is that Heaven is in it; and the natural man, with whom this love derives its pleasure solely from the flesh, cannot approach Heaven, nor to any Angel, nor even to any man, in whom is this love; for this love is the fundamental love of all celestial and spiritual loves. (From experience.)

72. The reason those come into this love, and can be in it, who love the truths of the Church, and do its goods, is that no others are received by the Lord; for these are in conjunction with Him, and consequently can be kept in this love by Him. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. From these things the conclusion is evident that those are not endowed by the Lord with love truly conjugal who only know the truths of the Church . . .

73. That this love was the love of loves with the Ancients who lived in the Golden, Silver, and Copper Ages. (Des. in Memorable Relations. 75, et seq.)

74. These six Memorable Relations . . . concerning conjugal love, reveal what was the quality of this love in the first eras; and what it was after them; and what it is at this day; from which it is evident that this love has successively receded from its holiness and purity, even until it has become scortatory; but that still there is hope of its being brought back again to its primeval or ancient holiness.

75. Once, while I was meditating on conjugal love . . .

—7. I saw their tabernacle as it were overlaid with gold . . . (and the man said,) It is in consequence of a flaming light . . . while there is conversation about conjugal love ; for the heat from the Sun . . . at such times bares itself, and tinges the light . . . with its colour . . . and this takes place because conjugal love in its origin is the sport of wisdom and love ; for the man was born to be wisdom, and the woman to be the love of the man's wisdom. Hence are the deliciousnesses of that sport in conjugal love ; and, from it, between us and our wives. We have clearly seen in our Heaven for thousands of years that as to abundance, degree, and virtue, these deliciousnesses are excellent and eminent according to the worship with us of the Lord Jehovih from whom inflows that heavenly union, or that heavenly marriage, which is that of love and wisdom.

76. In a room adjoining the bridal-chamber there were many designs on the walls, and little images as it were cast of silver (which were) pictures and forms representative of the many qualities, predicates, and delights of conjugal love . . . We (then) saw as it were a rainbow on the wall . . . (in which) the crimson passed through the hyacinthine, and tinged the white with a deep blue ; and this flowed back through the hyacinthine into the crimson, and raised it into a kind of flaming beam. . . The crimson, from its correspondence, signified the conjugal love of the wife ; the white, the intelligence of the husband ; the hyacinthine the beginning of conjugal love in the perception of the husband from the wife ; and the deep blue, with which the white was tinged, the conjugal love then in the husband. That this colour flowed back through the hyacinthine into the crimson, and raised this is as into a flaming beam, signified the conjugal love of the husband flowing back to the wife.

78<sup>5</sup>. I said, Where then is conjugal love, which out of two souls makes one, and conjoins minds . . .

—8. On the way . . . we drew conclusions concerning the circle and the progression of conjugal love ; concerning its circle, that it had passed from the east into the south, from the south into the west, and from the west into the north ; concerning its progression, that it had decreased according to its circulation ; namely, that in the east it had been celestial, in the south spiritual, in the west natural, and in the north sensual ; and also that it had decreased in a like degree with the love and worship of God ; from which things this conclusion is made : that in the first era this love was like gold, in the second like silver, in the third like brass, and in the fourth like iron ; and that at last it ceased to be. Then said the Angel . . . Nevertheless I am nourished with the hope that this love will be resuscitated by the God of Heaven . . . because it is resuscitable.

79<sup>9</sup>. We asked (the so-called wise ones of the Age of Iron and Clay) whether they knew, or were able to know, that there exists the conjugal love of one man with one wife, into which are collected all the blessednesses, happinesses, 'delights, pleasantnesses, and pleasures of Heaven ; and that this love is from the Lord according to the reception of good and truth from Him, thus according to the state of the Church.

—10. On hearing this, they turned away, and said, These men are insane . . . What has conjugal love in common with religion, and with inspiration from God ? Is not this love with everyone according to the state of his potency ? Is it not equally with those who are outside the Church as with those who are within it ? . . . Has not everyone the strength of this love either from what is hereditary, or from health, or from temperance of life, or from the heat of the climate ? It can be strengthened and stimulated also by medicines. Is it not the like with beasts, and especially with birds which live in pairs ? Is not this love carnal ? and what has that which is carnal in common with the spiritual state of the Church ? Does this love, as to its ultimate effect with a wife, differ at all from the love as to that effect with a harlot ? Is not the lust similar, and the deliciousness similar ? Therefore it is injurious to deduce the origin of conjugal love from the holy things of the Church.

—11. On hearing this, we said to them, You reason from the burning heat of lasciviousness, and not from conjugal love. You are quite ignorant as to what conjugal love is, because it is cold with you. From what you have said we are confirmed [in the belief] that you are from the Age which is named from . . . iron and clay . . . for you make conjugal love and scortatory love one thing. Do these two cohere any more than iron and clay ?

81<sup>e</sup>. On hearing and understanding these (Glorifications of the Lord by the Heavens) . . . I went home in joy ; and there I returned out of the state of the spirit into the state of the body, in which latter state I committed to writing what I had seen and heard : to which I now adjoin this :—That conjugal love, such as it was with the Ancients, will be resuscitated by the Lord after His Advent ; because this love is from the Lord alone ; and is with those who are made spiritual by Him, through the Word.

83. On the Origin of Conjugal Love from the Marriage of Good and Truth. Chapter.

— . There are both internal and external origins of conjugal love, and the internal ones are many, and likewise the external ; nevertheless, there is but one inmost or universal origin of all ; (which is) the marriage of good and truth. The reason no one has heretofore deduced thence the origin of this love, is that it has lain hidden that there is any union between good and truth . . .

92. That from the influx of the marriage of good and truth from the Lord, there is the love of the sex, and there is conjugal love. Ex.

93. The reason conjugal love also is thence, is that this sphere inflows into the form of wisdom with men and Angels ; for . . . in proportion as a man grows in wisdom, in the same proportion is his form perfected ; and this form does not receive the love of the sex, but the love of one of the sex ; for with her it can be united to the inmosts, in which is Heaven with its felicities : and this union is conjugal love.

[M.]95. But that conjugal love (differently from the love of the sex) is of the internal or spiritual man ; and that this is proper to man. Ex.

— . The reason conjugal love is of the internal man, is that the more intelligent and wise a man becomes, the more internal or spiritual he becomes, and the more is the form of his mind perfected ; and this form receives conjugal love ; for he perceives and feels in this love a spiritual delight which is inwardly blessed ; and, from this, a natural delight, which derives its soul, life, and essence from the former.

97. That with man, conjugal love is in the love of the sex as a gem in its matrix. Ex.

98. That the love of the sex with man is not the origin of conjugal love ; but that it is its first ; thus it is like an external Natural in which is implanted an internal Spiritual. Ex.

— . The subject here treated of is love truly conjugal, and not the common love which is also called conjugal, and which with some is nothing but the limited love of the sex. But love truly conjugal exists solely with those who earnestly desire wisdom, and who thence progress more and more into wisdom. These the Lord foresees ; and for them He provides conjugal love ; which love does indeed begin with them from the love of the sex, or rather by means of it, but still it does not originate in it ; for it originates in the proportion in which wisdom advances and comes forth into the light with it ; for wisdom and this love are inseparable companions.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason conjugal love begins through the love of the sex, is that before a consort is found, the sex is loved generally, and is regarded with a loving eye, and is treated with civil morality ; for a young man is in choice ; and then from the implanted inclination to marriage with one, which lies concealed in the adytum of his mind, his external is softly warmed. Further ex.

99. That when conjugal love has been implanted, the love of the sex inverts itself, and becomes the chaste love of the sex. Ex.

— . For when conjugal love comes to its origin, which is in the interiors of the mind, it sees the love of the sex . . . behind itself . . . and thus as something which it has passed by and left . . .

100<sup>e</sup>. Therefore there are two goods, one internal and the other external, which conjoin themselves with the truth with the husband, and cause him to be constantly in the understanding of truth, and the derivative wisdom, through love truly conjugal.

102<sup>2</sup>. When the interiors of the rational mind have been opened, the man becomes a form of wisdom ; and this is the receptacle of love truly conjugal.

—<sup>e</sup>. Moral wisdom shuns . . . lasciviousness especially, which contaminates its conjugal love.

103<sup>2</sup>. The wise in the kingdoms of Europe (summoned in the Spiritual World) to come and solve the secret concerning the origin of conjugal love, and [that] of its virtue or potency.

104. The Spaniards stated) that the origin of con- jugal love is from the Most Ancient people in the Golden Age ; and, with them, from the creation of Adam and his wife. This is the origin of marriages, and, with marriages, the origin of marriage love. As concerns the potency of marriage (or conjugal) love, we derive it from the climate . . . Besides, what is marriage love but heat . . .

105. (The Dutchmen stated,) We . . . have agreed that the origin of marriage (or conjugal) love is the same as the origin of marriages, which have been decreed by the laws to restrain the concupiscences to adulteries which are connate with men . . . The case is the same with the potency of this love, in that this depends upon chastity . . . for with him who loves his consort alone, it is reserved for one, and is thus . . . as it were concentrated, and then it becomes noble . . . One of us five, who is a priest, has added predestination as a cause of this potency . . .

106. (The Italians stated,) We have seen this to be the principal cause of the origin of marriage (or conjugal) love, that it is the same as the origin of marriage, because this love did not come forth before ; and it came forth because when anyone desperately loves a maiden, he wants with soul and heart to possess her . . . and as soon as she promises herself, he regards her as one's Own regards one's Own. That this is the origin of marriage love, is clearly evident from the fury of every man against his rivals . . . Three of us have prevailed against two [in declaring] that the potency with a consort is from some license with the sex. They said that they know from experience that the potency of the love of the sex prevails over the potency of marriage love.

107. (The Englishmen stated,) We have come to the decision that the origin of marriage love and that of the love of the sex is the same, because the former is from the latter ; only that the love of the sex is unlimited . . . whereas marriage love is limited . . . and constant ; and that this love has therefore been decreed and established by the prudence of human wisdom, because otherwise . . . no society could exist . . . The potency of marriage love we deduce from the continual permanence of the health of the body . . .

108. (The Poles stated,) . . . We have seen and confirmed no other origin of marriage love than this : that every man, from incentives and consequent incitements which are concealed in the adytum of his mind and body, after indulging in various lusts of his eyes, at length fixes his mind and inclination on one woman of the sex . . . and from this time his heat goes from flame to flame, until at last it becomes a conflagration : in this state the love of the sex is banished, and instead of lust marriage love takes place . . . The origin of marriage love is therefore from this first ardour before the wedding ; and from this is its potency, (which) after the wedding . . . lasts with . . . decrease and increase, even to old age, by means of moderations, and by bridling the lusts . . . for lust precedes wisdom.

109. (The Germans stated,) We . . . have agreed on two causes of the origin of marriage love ; one of which is the right education of children, and the other is the distinct possession of inheritances. We have assumed these two, because they look to the same goal, which is the public good; and this is obtained, because infants conceived and born from marriage love become one's Own; and these, in consequence of the love storge being heightened by the consideration that they are legitimate, are educated to be heirs of all their parents' possessions, both spiritual and natural. . . There is the love of the sex, and there is marriage love. The latter appears as if it were one with the former; but it is distinctly different; neither is the one love near the other; but is within it; and what is within is more excellent than what is without; and we have seen that from creation marriage love is within . . . and therefore when marriage love is set free from its shell, which is the love of the sex, it glitters before the Angels like a gem . . . This takes place because on marriage love is inscribed the well-being of the whole human race . . . The origin of its potency is the setting free and separation of marriage love from the love of the sex, which is effected by the husband by means of wisdom, and by the wife by means of the love of the husband's wisdom; for the love of the sex is common [to men] with beasts, and marriage love is peculiar to men. Therefore in the proportion in which marriage love is set free and separated from the love of the sex, a man is a man and not a beast; and a man acquires potency from his love, as a beast does from his.

110. (The Frenchmen stated,) We . . . have exhilarated our thoughts and derivative judgments from our meditation about marriage love. Who is not exhilarated from it; for while this love is in the mind, it is at the same time in the whole body. We judge of the origin of this love from its delights . . . The delights of marriage love are felt in their origins as blessednesses, happinesses, and felicities; in their derivations as pleasantnesses and pleasures; and in their ultimates as the deliciousness of deliciousnesses. There is therefore the origin of the love of the sex when the interiors of the mind, and thence the interiors of the body, are opened for the influx of these delights; but the origin of marriage love was when the primitive sphere of this love, through betrothals, ideally promoted them. . . The potency of this love arises from the capacity of this love of passing, with its vein, from the mind into the body. . . We also deduce the virtue of the potency from the stock . . .

111. (The Danes stated,) . . . We . . . have not discovered the real origin of marriage love, because it lies deeply concealed in the sanctuaries of the mind. The most consummate wisdom cannot . . . reach this love in its origin. . . We have contemplated this love beneath its origin, and have seen that in the minds it is spiritual, and is like the fountain of a sweet vein there, from which it flows down into the bosom, where it becomes delight, and is called bosom love, which, regarded in itself, is full of friendship, and full of confidence, from the full inclination to mutuality; and that when it has passed through the bosom, it becomes generative love. When a young man is revolving these things in his thought . . . they kindle in his heart the fire of marriage love; which fire, being the primitive of this love, is its origin. We acknowledge no other origin of its potency than that love itself; for they are inseparable companions; but still they are such that sometimes the one precedes, and sometimes the other. When the love precedes . . . both are noble, because in this case the potency is the virtue of marriage love; whereas if the potency precedes . . . both are ignoble, because in this case the love is of the carnal potency . . .

112. (The Swedes stated,) We . . . have distinguished between the spiritual, the natural, and the carnal love of the sex; and by the spiritual love of the sex we have understood love truly conjugal, because this is spiritual; by the natural love of the sex we have understood polygamous love, because this is natural; and by the merely carnal love of the sex we have understood scortatory love, because this is merely carnal. When we had carefully examined love truly conjugal . . . we clearly saw that this love is possible only between one male and one female; and that from creation it is heavenly and inmost, and is the soul and father of all good loves, having been inspired into our first parents, and being inspirable into Christians. It is also so conjunctive that through it two minds can become one mind . . . 113. As to the origin of the potency of love truly conjugal, we surmise that it comes forth from a similitude of minds, and from unanimity; for when two minds have been conjugally conjoined, their thoughts spiritually kiss each other, and these inspire into the body their virtue or potency.

113. There were standing behind . . . some strangers from Africa, who cried out to the natives of Europe, Permit one of us also to give his opinion on the origin of conjugal love, and on that of its virtue or potency . . . He said, You Christians deduce the origin of conjugal love from love itself; but we Africans deduce it from the God of Heaven and earth. Is not conjugal love a chaste, pure, and holy love? Are not the Angels of Heaven in that love? Is not the universal human race . . . the seed of that love? And can so supereminent a thing derive its existence from any other source than God Himself, the Creator and Supporter of the universe? You Christians deduce conjugal virtue or potency from various rational and natural causes; but we Africans deduce it from the state of man's conjunction with the God of the universe. This state we call the state of religion . . . for when the love is from this state, and is stable and perpetual, it must needs produce its own virtue, which is like it . . . Love truly conjugal is known only to those few who are near God; consequently the potency of this love is known to no others . . . As he said these words, they all rose, and behind the golden table on which lay the tiara there appeared a window . . . and through it was heard a voice, saying, The African is to have the tiara.

127. That there is a correspondence with conjugal love, semination, procreation, the love of infants, and with the like things in marriages and from them. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Conjugal love corresponds to the affection of genuine truth, its chastity, purity, and holiness; semination corresponds to the potency of truth; procreation corresponds to the propagation of truth; and the love of infants corresponds to the protection of truth and good . . .

130. That conjugal love is according to the state of the Church—because it is according to the state of wisdom—with man. Gen.art.

[M.130]<sup>4</sup>. The wisdom of life . . . is the wisdom which is meant by the wisdom with which conjugal love binds itself; for it binds itself therewith by shunning the evil of adultery as the pestilence of the soul, of the commonwealth, and of the body; and as this wisdom springs from the spiritual things which are of the Church, it follows that conjugal love is according to the state of the Church . . . By this is also meant . . . that in proportion as a man becomes spiritual, in the same proportion is he in love truly conjugal . . .

131. That as the Church is from the Lord, so also is conjugal love from Him. Ex.

137. When I was in meditation about conjugal love, there appeared afar two naked infants with baskets in their hands and turtle-doves flying round them; and when they came nearer they appeared . . . to be adorned with garlands . . . but when they approached nearer they . . . appeared as two human beings in the first flower of their age, clothed in mantles and tunics of refulgent silk, in which were interwoven flowers . . . and . . . there breathed through them from Heaven a vernal heat, with a fragrant odour . . . They were two consorts from Heaven . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. They said . . . Thus from afar was represented our conjugal love . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. We have now been consorts for ages, and constantly in (this) flower of our age. Our first state was like that of a maiden and a youth when they marry; and we then believed, that that state was the very blessedness of our life. (Continued under MARRIAGE.)

—<sup>4</sup>. The reason there breathed on you a vernal heat, is that in our Heaven, conjugal love and that heat act as one . . . In heaven, where there is vernal heat, there is love truly conjugal; for the reason that what is vernal is nowhere else than where heat is equally united with light . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. The man (then) gave me his right hand, and conducted me to houses where there were consorts in the like flower of their age . . . and he said, These wives who are now seen as maidens, were in the world old women; and their husbands, who are now seen as youths, were there decrepit old men; and they have all been restored by the Lord into this flowering age, because they have mutually loved each other, and from religion have shunned adulteries as enormous sins. And he said, No one knows the blessed delights of conjugal love except him who rejects the horrid delights of adultery; and no one can reject these delights except him who is wise from the Lord; and no one is wise from the Lord unless he does uses from the love of uses.

139. For love truly conjugal is chastity itself . . . From this it is evident that it is the purity of conjugal love which is called chastity. Still, there is a marriage (or conjugal) love which is not chaste, and which is yet not unchastity; as [that] between consorts who for various external reasons abstain from the effects of lasciviousness so far as not to think about them. Nevertheless, if this love has not been purified in their spirits, it is not chaste. Its form is chaste; but it has not a chaste essence in it.

141. The reason what is chaste is predicated only of (monogamous marriages) is that with them conjugal love does not reside in the natural man, but enters into the spiritual man, and successively opens to itself a way to the spiritual marriage itself, which is that of good and truth . . . For this love enters according to the increments of wisdom, (which are) according to the implantation of the Church by the Lord . . . This cannot be done with polygamists, because they divide conjugal love; and this love, when divided, is not unlike the love of the sex . . .

142. For love truly conjugal keeps equal pace with the state of the Church in man.

143. That love truly conjugal is chastity itself. Ex.

144. That all the deliciousnesses of love truly conjugal, even the ultimate ones, are chaste. Ex.

— The deliciousnesses of this love ascend and enter Heaven, and on the way pass through the delights of the heavenly loves in which are the Angels of Heaven; and they conjoin themselves with the deliciousnesses of their conjugal love.

—<sup>2</sup>. I have heard from the Angels that they perceive these deliciousnesses to be exalted and infilled with themselves when they ascend from chaste consorts on earth; and on the question being put, for the sake of the bystanders who were unchaste, as to whether [this is the case as to] the ultimate deliciousnesses also, they signified assent by nodding, and said silently, How can it be otherwise? Are not these (the deliciousnesses of love truly conjugal) in their fulness?

145. That with those who are made spiritual by the Lord, conjugal love is more and more purified and made chaste. The reasons are, 1. That the first love . . . partakes somewhat of the love of the sex; thus of the ardour proper to the body not as yet mitigated by the love of the spirit. 2. That from being natural, man successively becomes spiritual . . . and as wisdom and its love increase with consorts, so is the conjugal love purified with them . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. 3. As spiritual wisdom is such in itself that it grows warmer and warmer with the love of being wise . . . and as this is effected as it is perfected as it were by defecations, castigations, rectifications, intensifications, decantations, and sublimations . . . it is evident that conjugal love, whose parent is wisdom, is in like manner made successively more and more pure; thus chaste.

146. But it is to be known that conjugal love which is quite chaste or pure is not possible with men or Angels; there is still something not chaste or not pure which adjoins or subjoins itself to it; but this is of a different nature from that from which comes what is unchaste; for with the former the chaste is above and the non-chaste beneath; and there is as it were a door on hinges interposed by the Lord, which is opened by determination, and is carefully prevented from standing open, lest the one should pass into the other . . .

147. That conjugal love is purified and rectified according to the renunciation of scortations, is seen by everyone from common perception . . . (But) the confirmations are, that conjugal love becomes cold as soon as it is divided, and this coldness causes it to perish; for the heat of unchaste love extinguishes it; because two opposite heats cannot exist together. . . . When, therefore, the heat of conjugal love removes and rejects the heat of scortatory love, conjugal love begins to grow pleasantly warm; and, from a sense of its deliciousnesses, to bud and effloresce. . . . from the vernal temperature of the light and heat from the Sun of the Spiritual World.

148<sup>3</sup>. (The Angels) compared the external Conjugal from the internal to noble fruit. . . . and to a granary whose store is never diminished, but is constantly being renewed in proportion as it is drawn upon. But they compared the external separated from the internal to wheat in a winnowing shovel; for when it is cast forth all around, the chaff only remains, which is dispersed by the wind. So is it with conjugal love, unless what is scortatory is renounced.

151<sup>o</sup>. Eunuchs so made, being both men and women, cannot possibly regard conjugal love any otherwise than as a phantasy. . . .

152<sup>o</sup>. (Such) cannot have an idea of chaste heat in relation to conjugal love.

155. (For) after a vow of perpetual celibacy, conjugal love is cast out.

—e. When (these celibates) feel the sphere of conjugal love in Heaven, they become sad and anxious. . . .

156. Because the Church and conjugal love are constant companions.

155a. One morning very sweet singing. . . . awoke me. . . . I perceived that it was the affection of the deliciousnesses of conjugal love which was being sung by wives in Heaven. . . . I rose, and looked forth into the Spiritual World; and in the east. . . . there appeared as it were a Golden Shower. . . . I went forth. . . . and asked an Angel. . . . whether he saw a golden shower descending from the Sun.

—<sup>2</sup>. He replied that he saw one whenever he was in meditation about conjugal love. . . . That shower, said he, falls over a palace, in which are three husbands with their wives, who dwell in the midst of an eastern paradise. Such a shower is seen falling from the Sun over that palace because with them there resides wisdom concerning conjugal love and its deliciousnesses; with the husbands concerning conjugal love; and with the wives concerning its deliciousnesses. But I perceive that you are in meditation concerning the deliciousnesses of conjugal love; and therefore I will take you to that palace, and will introduce you. . . . The wives looked sharply into my eyes; and I asked why. They said, We can exquisitely see what is your inclination and derivative affection, and your thought from affection, concerning the love of the sex; and we see that you are meditating intensely, but still chastely, concerning it. What do you want us to tell you about it? I replied, Pray tell me something about the deliciousnesses of conjugal love. . . . This Angel. . . . told me that wives are the receptacles and sensories of them, because they are born loves. . . . They replied with a smile. . . . This is a wisdom deeply reserved in the hearts of our sex, and is not opened to any husband, except him who is in love truly conjugal. . . . Then the husbands said, Our wives know all the states of our minds. . . . they see, perceive, and feel whatever proceeds from our will. We, on the other hand, know nothing of what is with our wives. This has been given to wives, because they are most tender loves, and as it were ardent zeals, for the preservation of conjugal friendship and confidence, and thus of the happiness of life for both, which they provide for. . . . from a wisdom implanted in their love, which is so full of prudence that they. . . . cannot say that they love, but that they are loved. . . . If the least of such a thing were to escape from their mouths, cold would invade their husbands, and would separate from bed, chamber, and sight; but this takes place only with those who do not hold marriages to be holy, and who therefore do not love their wives from spiritual love. It is otherwise with those who love them. In the minds of the latter this love is spiritual, and from this in the body is natural. We in this palace are in this latter love from the former; and therefore we entrust the husbands with the arcana concerning our deliciousnesses of conjugal love.

—4. The wives said, We will open something. . . . Every man—vir—has five senses. . . . but we have also a sixth, which is the sense of all the deliciousnesses of the conjugal love of the husband; and this sense we have in the palms, when we touch the breasts, arms, hands, or cheeks of our husbands, especially their breasts; and also when we are touched by them. All the gladnesses and pleasantnesses of the thoughts of their minds, all the joys and delights of their lower minds, and the festive and cheerful things of their bosoms, pass from them into us, and form themselves, and become perceptible, sensible, and tangible; and we discern them as exquisitely and distinctly as the ear does the modulations of a song, or as the tongue does the flavours of delicacies. In a word, the spiritual delights of our husbands put on with us a kind of natural embodiment; and therefore we are called by our husbands the sensory organs of chaste conjugal love, and of its derivative deliciousnesses. But this sense of our sex, exists, subsists, persists, and is exalted in the degree in which our husbands love us from wisdom and judgment; and in which we in return love them from the same things in them. This sense of our sex is called in the Heavens the Sport of Wisdom with its Love, and of Love with its Wisdom.

—<sup>5</sup>. I asked the husbands, Have you a like sense of conjugal love? They replied, We have it in general, but not in particular. We have a general blessedness, a general delight, and a general pleasantness, from the particular ones of our wives; and this General, which we have from them, is like a serenity of peace. . . . Through the window there (then) appeared a swan standing on a branch of a fig-tree; and it spread its wings, and flew away. The husbands (then) said, This is a sign to us for silence about conjugal love. Return at intervals, and perhaps more things will be disclosed.

158. That conjugal love conjoins two souls and thence minds into a one. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. But, as the woman is from the man, and this conjunction is a species of reunion, it may be seen. . . .

that it is not conjunction into a one ; but an adjunction, close and near according to the love, and [amounting] to contact with those who are in love truly conjugal. This adjunction may be called a spiritual cohabitation, which exists with consorts who love each other tenderly, however distant in body.

[M.] 161. The reason why men receive the inspiration or insinuation of love from their wives, is that nothing of conjugal love, nor even of the love of the sex, is with men ; but only with wives and women. (Shown by experiment.)

162. That this conjunction (into a one) is effected successively from the first days of marriage ; and, with those who are in love truly conjugal, more and more deeply to eternity. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. When (friendship and confidence) conjoin themselves with the first love of marriage, conjugal love is effected, which opens the bosoms, and inspires into them the sweetnessness of love ; and this deeper and deeper in proportion as these two adjoin themselves to the primitive love ; and that love enters into them, and they into it.

167. That wives conceal this perception . . . in order that conjugal love . . . may be secured. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. Conjugal love would (then) be banished to such a degree that . . .

171<sup>3</sup>. These spheres . . . conjoin and disjoin the two consorts not only from without, but also from within ; and hence come all the differences and varieties of conjugal love.

172<sup>6</sup>. The applications and appropriations of the life of husbands with wives take place according to the conjugal love . . .

178. That those who are in love truly conjugal feel themselves to be a united man, and as it were one flesh. Ex.

— . For love truly conjugal does not exist with men on earth at this day . . .

179. That, regarded in itself, love truly conjugal is a union of souls, a conjunction of minds, an effort for conjunction in bosoms, and thence in the body. Ex.

— . The reason it is an effort for conjunction in the bosoms, is . . . that all things which are determined into the body from the soul and mind inflow first into the bosom ; and . . . in the bosom there is dominion over all things of the body ; for there are the heart and lungs ; and the heart reigns everywhere through the blood, and the lungs through the respiration . . . Therefore, when the souls and minds of the consorts have been united, and love truly conjugal unites them, it follows that this lovely union inflows into their bosoms, and through these into their bodies, and causes an effort for conjunction ; and this so much the more, because conjugal love determines the effort to its ultimates, in order to complete its happy pleasantnesses ; and as the bosom is midway, it is evident whence it is that conjugal love has obtained there the seat of its delicate sense.

180. That the states of this love are innocence, peace, tranquillity, inmost friendship, full confidence, and a longing of the lower mind and of the heart to make all good mutual ; and, from all these, blessedness, happiness, delight, pleasure ; and, from the eternal enjoyment of these, heavenly felicity. Ex.

— . The reason all these things are in conjugal love, and thence from it, is that its origin is the marriage of good and truth ; and this marriage is from the Lord ; and because love is such that it wills to communicate with another whom it loves from the heart . . . and infinitely more the Divine love . . . to man . . . and, as He has created . . . the man for the reception of wisdom, and the woman for the reception of the love of the man's wisdom, therefore from the inmosts he has infused into human beings conjugal love, into which love He might bring together all things blessed, happy, delightful, and pleasurable, which proceed and inflow, together with life, solely from His Divine love through His Divine wisdom ; consequently into those who are in love truly conjugal, because these alone are recipients.

183. There appeared to me in the eastern quarter a grove of palm-trees and laurels, set in spiral gyres . . . At the end of the ways I saw a garden, which formed the centre of the grove . . . the gates of which were opened by the keeper. I asked him the name of the garden, and he said, Adramandoni, which is, The Deliciousness of Conjugal Love. I entered, and behold olive-trees, with running and pensive vines between each two, and flowering shrubs beneath and between them. In the middle of it there was a grassy circus, upon which were seated husbands and wives, and youths and maidens, in pairs ; and in the middle of the circus the ground was elevated, where was a little fountain leaping high from the strength of its vein. When near the circus I saw two Angels, in crimson and scarlet, speaking with those who were seated upon the grass. They were speaking about the origin of conjugal love, and about its deliciousnesses ; and, as the speech was about that love, there was eager attention and full reception ; and consequently there was an exaltation as from the fire of love in the discourse of the Angels.

—<sup>2</sup>. They spoke first about the difficult investigation, and the difficult perception, of the origin of conjugal love ; because its origin is Divine celestial ; for it is the Divine love, the Divine wisdom, and the Divine use ; which three proceed as a one from the Lord, and thence inflow as a one into the souls of human beings ; and through their souls into their minds, and into the interior affections and thoughts there ; through these into the longings near the body, and from these through the breast into the genital region, where all the derivatives from the first origin are together ; and, together with the successives, constitute conjugal love.

—<sup>3</sup>. Then some of that conjugal company said to the Angels, We have heard that the origin of conjugal love is Divine celestial, because it is from the influx from the Lord into the souls of men ; and, as it is from the Lord, that it is love, wisdom, and use, which are the three essentials which together make one Divine essence ; and that nothing hut what is of the Divine essence can proceed from Him, and inflow into the inmost of man, which is called his soul ; and that these three are turned into analogous and corresponding things in their descent into the body. We therefore now ask, first, What is meant by the third proceeding Divine essential, which has been called use? The Angels replied, Love and wisdom, without use, are only abstract ideas of thought . . . but in use they are collected together, and there become a one, which is called a reality. Love cannot rest unless it is doing something . . . neither can wisdom exist and subsist unless it is doing something from love and with it; and to do is use . . . Love and wisdom with use not only make man, but also are man; nay . . . they propagate man. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. Those who were sitting on the grassy couches asked the Angels, Whence are the deliciousnesses of conjugal love, which are innumerable and ineffable? The Angels replied, They are from the uses of love and wisdom; (for) in proportion as anyone loves to be wise for the sake of genuine use, in the same proportion he is in the vein and potency of conjugal love; and in proportion as he is in these two things, in the same proportion he is in the deliciousnesses. Use effects this because [then] love through wisdom are delicatized together, and as it were sport like infants; and, as they grow up, they conjoin themselves in a generative manner, which is effected as it were by betrothals, weddings, marriages, and propagations; and these continually with variety to eternity. These things take place between love and wisdom inwardly in use. But in their beginnings these deliciousnesses are imperceptible; but they become more and more perceptible as by degrees they descend thence, and enter the body. By degrees do they enter from the soul into the interiors of the mind of man; and from these into its exteriors; and from these into the bosom; and from the bosom into the genital region. (—<sup>7</sup>.) In the soul these heavenly nuptial sports are not at all perceived by man; but from thence they insinuate themselves into the interiors of the mind under the form—specie—of peace and innocence, and into the exteriors of the mind under the form of blessedness, happiness, and delight; and into the bosom under the form of the deliciousnesses of inmost friendship; and in the genital region, from a continual influx even from the soul with the very sense of conjugal love, as the deliciousness of deliciousnesses. These nuptial sports of love and wisdom in use in the soul, in proceeding towards the bosom, become permanent, and present themselves sensible therein under an infinite variety of deliciousnesses; and, on account of the wonderful communication of the bosom with the genital region, the deliciousnesses there become the deliciousnesses of conjugal love; which have been exalted above all other deliciousnesses which exist in Heaven and in the world, for the reason that the use of conjugal love is the most excellent of all uses . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. The Angels added that they who are not, from the Lord, in the love of being wise for the sake of use, do not know anything about the variety of the innumerable deliciousnesses which are of love truly conjugal. For with those who do not love to be wise from genuine truths, but who love to be insane from falsities; and who, through this insanity, do evil uses from some love or other, the way to the soul is closed. Hence it is that the heavenly nuptial sports of love and wisdom in the soul, being more and more intercepted, cease; and, together with them, conjugal love ceases, with its vein, potency, and deliciousnesses.

—<sup>9</sup>. The hearers (then) said, We perceive that conjugal love is according to the love of being wise for the sake of uses from the Lord. The Angels replied that so it is; and then upon the heads of some there appeared chaplets of flowers . . . because they had understood more profoundly.

188. By the heat into which women are elevated, is meant conjugal love, because spiritual heat . . . in its essence is love; and, with women, it is love conjoining itself with the intelligence and wisdom in men; which, in its complex, is called conjugal love; and, by determination, becomes that love.

—<sup>2</sup>. But the elevation into a higher heat with women is an elevation into a chaster and purer conjugal love; and is constantly towards the Conjugal, which from creation lies hidden in their inmosts. Regarded in themselves, these elevations are openings of the mind; for the human mind is distinguished into regions . . . into (which) the mind of man is elevated as it is opened; with men through wisdom; and with women through love truly conjugal.

191. (For) conjugal love with consorts is not only various, but is also diverse. It is various with those who interiorly love each other; for with these it is by turns intermitted; and yet inwardly it is constantly permanent in its heat. But this love is diverse with those consorts who love each other only exteriorly. With these it is . . . intermitted, from alternate cold and heat. The reason of these latter differences, is that with the latter the body plays the leading part; and the ardour of this circumsfuses itself around, and snatches into communion with itself the lower things of the mind; whereas with the former . . . the mind plays the leading part, and carries the body into communion with itself. It appears as if the love ascends from the body into the soul, because as soon as the body catches the allurements, it enters through the eyes . . . into the mind; and thus . . . into the thoughts . . . But still it descends from the mind, and acts into the lower things according to their disposition; and therefore a lascivious mind acts lasciviously, and a chaste mind chastely; and the latter disposes the body, whereas the former is disposed by the body.

193<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) the woman was created out of the man by the transcription of his own proper wisdom . . . and the love of this was transferred from the man into the woman, in order to become conjugal love . . .

194<sup>2</sup>. The love of these two propria is turned into conjugal love, in proportion as the man cleaves to his wife; that is, receives her love.

199. A maiden (thus) becomes a wife, because in a wife there are things taken from the husband . . . A youth also becomes a husband, because in a husband there are things taken from the wife which exalt the receptibility of love and wisdom with him . . . But these things [are the case] with those who are in love truly conjugal.

200. Love truly conjugal conjoins two into one man more and more; and as a wife becomes a wife from and according to conjunction with her husband, and in like manner the husband with the wife; and as love truly conjugal lasts to eternity, it follows that the wife becomes more and more a wife, and the husband more and more a husband. The cause itself is that in a marriage of love truly conjugal, each becomes a more and more interior man; for this love opens the interiors of their minds; and as these are opened the man becomes more and more a man . . .

[M.] 202. That the offspring born from a pair who are in love truly conjugal derive from their parents the Conjugal of good and truth; from which they have the inclination and faculty, if a son, for perceiving the things which are of wisdom; and if a daughter, for loving the things which wisdom teaches. Gen.art.

204°. (Thus) is the end manifestly evident for the sake of which marriages of love truly conjugal have been provided by the Lord the Creator, and are still provided.

205. Those who lived in the Most Ancient eras live at this day house by house, family by family, and nation by nation . . . and scarcely any one of a house is absent. The reason is that there was love truly conjugal with them; and thence their offspring inherited inclinations for the Conjugal of good and truth . . .

207. That an Angel is alive according to the application of his mind from use, is manifestly evident from the fact, that everyone has conjugal love with its virtue, potency, and deliciousnesses, according to his application to the genuine use in which he is.

208. When I was in meditation about the arcana of conjugal love stored up with wives, there again appeared the Golden Shower; and I recollected that it fell over a palace in the east where there lived three conjugal loves . . . As if invited by the sweetness of the meditation upon that love, I hastened thither . . . (Continued under WIFE.)

209. There might be treated of . . . the elevation of natural conjugal love into spiritual conjugal love, and their conjunction . . .

210. That the sense proper to conjugal love is the sense of touch. Ex.

211. That with those who are in love truly conjugal, the faculty of being wise increases; but that with those who are not in conjugal love, it decreases. Ex.

— For love truly conjugal is with the consorts from wisdom and according to it . . . (Another reason is) that the sense of this love is touch, and this is common to all the senses, and is full of deliciousnesses; hence it opens the interiors of their minds, as it opens the interiors of their senses, and therewith the organicals of the whole body; from which it follows that those who are in this love, love nothing more than to be wise . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The spiritual deliciousnesses conjoined with natural deliciousnesses, which are the portion of those who are in love truly conjugal, make loveliness—amabilitatem, and the derivative faculty of being wise. Hence it is that the Angels have conjugal love according to wisdom; and increments of this love, and at the same time those of its deliciousnesses, according to the increments of wisdom; and that the spiritual offspring which are born from their marriages, are such things as are of wisdom from the father and of love from the mother, which they love from a spiritual storgé; which love adds itself to their conjugal love, and continually elevates it, and conjoins them.

212. The contrary takes place with those who are not in any conjugal love from not being in any love of wisdom. These do not enter into marriages except also with the end of lasciviating; and in this end there is also the love of being insane . . . That these are against conjugal love, is evinced . . . in the Spiritual World, (where) at the first scent of conjugal love they flee away into caverns . . .

213. That with those who are in love truly conjugal, the happiness of cohabitation increases; but that with those who are not in love truly conjugal, it decreases. Ex.

— (For) they who are in love truly conjugal mutually love each other with every sense. The wife sees nothing more lovely than the man, and the man nothing more lovely than the wife; nay, neither do they hear, smell, or touch anything more lovely; hence the happiness they have of cohabitation in house, chamber, and bed.

214. That with those who are in love truly conjugal the conjunction of minds increases, and, with this, friendship; but that with those who are not in conjugal love, the latter, together with the former, decreases. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason why this conjunction increases, as friendship conjoins itself with love, is that friendship is as it were the face, and also the garment of this love . . . The love which precedes friendship is like the love of the sex, which departs after the vow; whereas love conjoined with friendship remains after the vow . . . It also enters more interiorly into the bosom, friendship introducing it, and making it truly conjugal; and then the love makes this its friendship also conjugal, which differs exceedingly from the friendship of every other love; for it is full.

—<sup>3</sup>. With those who are not in conjugal love, the first friendship, which had been insinuated at the time of betrothal, and afterwards in the first days after the wedding, recedes more and more from the interiors of the mind; and from these it departs successively even to the cuticles; and with those who think of separation, it goes away completely; but with those who do not think of separation, the love remains in the externals, but it is cold in the internals.

215. That they who are in love truly conjugal continually want to be one man; but that they who are not in conjugal love want to be two. Ex.

— In its essence conjugal love is nothing else than that two want to be one; that is, that they want two lives to become one life. This will is the perpetual endeavour of this love, from which flow all its effectuations . . .

216. That those who are in love truly conjugal, in marriage look to what is eternal; but it is the reverse with those who are not in conjugal love. Ex.

— For in (love truly conjugal) there is eternity; and its eternity is from this: that this love with the wife, and wisdom with the husband, increase to eternity; and in the increase or progression the consorts enter more and more deeply into the blessednesses of Heaven

... and therefore if the idea of what is eternal were to be plucked away . . . it would be as if they were being cast down from Heaven. From experience.

—<sup>4</sup>. (Thus) if the idea of what is eternal drops . . . out of their thought, they are disunited as to conjugal love, although not at the same time as to friendship; for the latter dwells in externals, but the former in internals.

216a. That conjugal love resides with chaste wives; but that their love depends on their husbands. Ex. (See WIFE, here.)

221<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that a husband now recedes from conjugal love, and now accedes to it; and that the abundance is withdrawn in the one state, and is restored in the other.

223. That with the male sex there is not any conjugal love; but that it is solely with the female sex, and from this is transferred into the male sex, (is further proved by this) that the masculine form is the intellectual form, and the feminine the voluntary form; and the intellectual form cannot of itself become heated with conjugal heat; but it can be heated by the conjunctive heat of some one in whom this has been implanted from creation; consequently, it cannot receive that love, except through the voluntary form of woman adjoined to it; because the latter is also the form of love.

224. That where there is love truly conjugal, the conjugal sphere is received by the wife; and solely through the wife by the husband. Ex.

— . This may be known by a bridegroom and a newly-married husband. Is he not affected conjugally by whatever proceeds from his bride and newly-married wife; and not, then, by what proceeds from others of the sex? It is the like with those who live together in love truly conjugal. And as everyone, both man and woman, is encompassed by his own sphere of life, densely on the breast, and thinly on the back, it is evident whence it is, that husbands who are very fond of their wives, turn to them, and in the day-time regard them with a favouring look; and why, on the other hand, those who do not love their wives, turn away from them, and in the day-time regard them with a retracted look. By the reception of the conjugal sphere by the husband solely through the wife, is love truly conjugal Known and distinguished from spurious, false, and frigid conjugal love.

225. That where the love is not conjugal, the conjugal sphere is indeed received by the wife, but not by the husband through her. Ex. (See MARRIAGE, here.)

226. That conjugal love may exist with one of the consorts, and not at the same time with the other. Ex. (See MARRIED PARTNER, here.)

229. That for those who long for love truly conjugal the Lord provides similitudes; and that if they are not given on earth, He provides them in the Heavens.—For all marriages of love truly conjugal are provided by the Lord. . . How they are provided in the Heavens. (See MARRIAGE, here.)

— . For all the delights of Heaven spring from the delights of conjugal love, as do sweet waters from the vein of a fountain.

230. That according to the defect and loss of conjugal love, a man approaches to the nature of a beast. Ex.

— . The reason is that in proportion as a man is in conjugal love, in the same proportion he is spiritual . . .

— . It is the contrary if he is in what is opposite to conjugal love; for, in proportion as he is in this, in the same proportion he is natural; and a merely natural man is like a beast as to his cupidities, appetites, and their delights . . .

238. That the origin itself of conjugal love resides in the inmosts with man—that is, in his soul—everyone is convinced of from . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. This conjugal effort, seated in souls, is the source from which conjugal love originally comes forth.

— . (Thus) the origin of the Church, and the origin of conjugal love, are in one seat; and they are in a continual embrace.

—<sup>3</sup>. Man has been created so that he can become more and more interior, and thus be introduced or elevated nearer and nearer to that marriage (of good and truth); and thus into love truly conjugal; and this even so that he perceives the state of its blessedness.

239. From the things now said, it follows that where there is no religion there is no conjugal love either; and that where this is not, there is cold.

— . The general ignorance at this day concerning love truly conjugal . . .

240. As love truly conjugal is the fundamental love of all spiritual loves . . . it is evident that there is (with those who reject religion) an intrinsic hatred against it; and an intrinsic . . . love in favour of . . . adultery. Therefore, these, more than others, will ridicule this Truth: that everyone has conjugal love according to the state of the Church [with him]; nay, they will perhaps laugh aloud at the mention of love truly conjugal. . . Those who are such are chilled with cold as to conjugal love more than others. If they cleave to their consorts, it is only on account of some external causes . . .

243<sup>2</sup>. With those (who have goods conjoined with the falsities of their religion) some conjugal love is possible. But with those who have falsified with themselves the genuine truths of the Church, it is not possible. From the latter comes the reigning ignorance concerning love truly conjugal, or the negative doubt that it is possible.

247. That the second of the external causes of cold, is that conjugal love is believed to be one with scortatory love; except that the latter is not allowed by law . . . Ex.

248. Conjugal love regards as among its first things a union of wills, and the derivative freedom of what is pleasing; both of which are cast out of the marriage by a striving for pre-eminence . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. (After one has gained the victory over the other, both suffer cold) because there is no longer any conjugal love. . . In place of conjugal love there is heat from pre-eminence; but this heat is utterly discordant with conjugal heat; but it can agree exteriorly by means of lust. After this tacit agreement between them, it appears as if conjugal love had become friendship; but the difference between conjugal and servile friendship in marriages is like that between light and shade . . .

[M.] 249<sup>o</sup>. (With those who give themselves up to idleness) conjugal love is driven out into exile; (for then) the mind becomes stupid, and the body torpid; and the whole man becomes insensible to every vital love; especially to conjugal love, from which as from a fountain issue the activities and alacrities of life. The conjugal cold with these . . . is indeed the privation of conjugal love, but from defect.

252. As conjugal love is a conjunction of minds, if the mind of the one goes away from that of the other into what is diverse, this conjunction is dissolved; and, with this, the love vanishes. (See SEPARATION, here.)

254<sup>e</sup>. And yet the hope (of the procreation of offspring) nourishes and strengthens their conjugal love.

256<sup>e</sup>. With the Angels this commonness from what is constantly allowed, is the very deliciousness of the soul, and is the containant of their conjugal love; for they are continually in the delight of this love, and in its ultimates according to the presence of their minds not interrupted by cares; thus from the good-pleasure -placitis- of judgment with the husbands.

257. That (living with a consort from covenant and law seems to be compulsory, is a cause of cold) only with those with whom conjugal love is cold in the inmosts. . . With these, extra-conjugal love . . . is inwardly in heat; for the cold of the one is the heat of the other . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. It is the contrary with those who hold extra-conjugal love as accursed, and think of conjugal love as of what is heavenly and as Heaven . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Hence it is that (with these) everything which is of this love is felt as what is free . . . and I have heard from the Angels, that the freedom of love truly conjugal is the greatest freedom; because this is the love of loves.

260<sup>2</sup>. This being the case, it may be seen, that while conjugal love is in the mind, it is like itself in the body; and, as love is heat, that it opens, from the interiors, the externals of the body; but that, on the other hand, the privation of it, which is cold, closes up, from the interiors, the externals of the body. From these things is manifestly evident the cause why faculty with the Angels lasts to eternity, and the cause of the defect with men of cold.

261<sup>3</sup>. The universals of Heaven opposite to these are these three loves: the love of dominating from the love of use; the love of possessing the goods of the world from the love of doing uses by means of them; and love truly conjugal.

270. One morning on awaking from sleep my thought was deeply engaged on some arcana of conjugal love; and finally on this: In what region of the human mind does love truly conjugal reside; and thence in what does conjugal cold.

—<sup>3</sup>. An Angel stood by me, and said, The palace (which you have seen) represents the dwellings of conjugal love, such as are in human minds. Its highest part, into which the turtle-doves betook themselves, represents the highest region of the mind, where dwells conjugal love in the love of good with its wisdom; the middle part, into which the birds of paradise betook themselves, represents the middle region, where dwells conjugal love in the love of truth with its intelligence; and the lowest part, into which the swans betook themselves, represents the lowest region of the mind, where dwells conjugal love in the love of what is just and right with its knowledge. (—<sup>4</sup>.) The three pairs of birds also signify these things. The pair of turtle-doves signifies the conjugal love of the highest region; the pair of birds of paradise, the conjugal love of the middle region; and the pair of swans, the conjugal love of the lowest region. The like things are signified by the three kinds of trees round about the palace: the olives, palms, and beeches. . . In that palace there stand forth as it were effigied all the arcana of conjugal love.

—<sup>5</sup>. He (added), Love truly conjugal dwells in the highest region in the midst of mutual love in the chamber of the will, and also in the midst of the perceptions of wisdom in the chamber of the understanding; and they are consociated in bed in the bed-chamber in front, which is in the east. I asked, Why are there two chambers? He said, The husband is in the chamber of the understanding, and the wife is in the chamber of the will.

—<sup>6</sup>. I asked, As conjugal love dwells there, where does conjugal cold dwell? He replied, Also in the highest region; but solely in the chamber of the understanding; the chamber of the will being closed there . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. He wanted to recount still more things about conjugal love from its effigies in that palace; but said, Enough for this time. Inquire first whether these things are above the common understanding. If they are, what is the use of more? But if not, more will be disclosed.

272. See CONJOIN, here.

276. This proposition (that matrimony is to continue till the end of life) is adduced (to show) the necessity, utility, and Truth, that conjugal love, where it is not genuine, ought still to be affected, so that it may appear as if it were.

—<sup>2</sup>. As the covenant of marriage is for life, it follows that the appearances of love and friendship between the consorts are necessities.

278. That hence there are apparent love, apparent friendship, and favour between consorts. Ex.

281. Between two consorts, of whom one is spiritual, but the other natural . . . conjugal love with the spiritual one is heat, and with the natural one is cold. It is evident that heat and cold cannot be together . . . Hence it is that intestine love is not possible between consorts, one spiritual and the other natural; but that there can be a love emulative of intestine love on the part of the spiritual consort.

—<sup>2</sup>. But verily between two natural consorts intestine love is not possible, because both are cold. If they are warm, it is from what is unchaste. Nevertheless these can cohabit at home with separated lower minds, and can also fashion looks as of love and friendship to each other, however much their minds may be discordant with each other. With these, the external affections—which for the most part are those of wealth and possessions, or those of honour and dignities—can as it were be ardent ; and as this ardour induces the fear of the loss of them, therefore conjugal simulations are for them necessities . . . 282<sup>2</sup>.

282<sup>2</sup>. Besides many other ends from which the assumed favours as of conjugal love become more or less simulatory. There are also favours as of conjugal love outside the house, and none within the house . . .

283<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is evident that a simulation as of love truly conjugal, for the sake of peace and tranquillity at home, is a necessity, and also a utility.

291. Such rivalries (between consorts) flow from no other source than from no conscience concerning love truly conjugal ; and from no perception of sense concerning the blessednesses of this love. From the absence of these, instead of this love there is desire, which counterfeits this love . . .

293. I saw seven women sitting upon a Rose-garden at a certain fountain, drinking the water . . . They said, We are wives, and are conversing here about the deliciousnesses of conjugal love, and from much confirmation we conclude that these deliciousnesses are also the deliciousnesses of wisdom. (—<sup>2</sup>.) This we know from the correspondence of the wisdom in our husbands with the deliciousnesses of conjugal love in ourselves ; for the deliciousnesses of this love exalt and diminish themselves with us, and altogether qualify themselves, according to the wisdom with our husbands . . . (—<sup>4</sup>.) These two things (spiritual rationality and spiritual morality) our husbands call the wisdom which in general operates love truly conjugal. We have heard from them also the cause : that through this wisdom there are opened the interiors of their minds and thence of their bodies, where there comes forth a free passage from primes down to ultimates for the vein of love ; on the afflux, sufficiency, and virtue of which depends and lives conjugal love. The spiritual rational and moral wisdom of our husbands—in special as to marriage—has for its end and scope to love the wife alone, and to put off all concupiscent for other women ; and, in proportion as this is effected, in the same proportion is this love exalted as to degree and perfected as to quality ; and in the same proportion also do we feel more distinctly and exquisitely the deliciousnesses in ourselves which correspond to the delights of the affections and pleasantnesses of the thoughts of our husbands. (—<sup>5</sup>.) I afterwards asked whether they know how the communication is effected. They said, In all conjunction through love there must be action, reception, and reaction. The delicious state of our love is acting or action ; the state of wisdom of our husbands is receiving or reception, and is also reacting or reaction according to the perception ; and this reaction is perceived by us with deliciousnesses in the bosom according to the state constantly expanded and prepared to receive those things which in any relation-ratione-cohere with and proceed from the virtue with our husbands ; thus also with the extreme state of love with ourselves. (But) beware lest by the deliciousnesses which we have mentioned, you understand the ultimate deliciousnesses of this love. We never say anything about these, but about our bosom deliciousnesses, of which there is a perpetual correspondence with the state of the wisdom of our husbands. (Continued under WIFE, and WISDOM.)

—<sup>6</sup>. After these things, there appeared afar as it were a dove flying with a leaf of a tree in its mouth ; but, as it approached, instead of a dove there was seen a little boy with a paper in his hand ; and on coming up to us he held it out to me, and said, Read this before these Maidens of the Fountain. And I read these things, Tell the Earthdwellers with whom you are, that there exists love truly conjugal, the deliciousnesses of which are myriads, scarcely any of which the world as yet knows ; but it will know them, when the Church betroths herself to the Lord, and is married.

294. I again saw the seven wives . . . in a magnificent Rose-garden . . . round, with the roses forming as it were a rainbow ; (crimson, golden yellow, deep blue, and bright green, in circles, beginning from the outside) ; and within it a little lake of limpid water. The seven wives said . . . We divine that (this Rose-garden) represents the deliciousnesses of conjugal love.

—<sup>2</sup>. I said . . . I have told your discourse to the wives who stay in our region, and said to them . . . I now know that you have bosom deliciousnesses which originate from your conjugal love, and which you can communicate to your husbands according to their wisdom ; and that you are therefore continually looking at your husbands with the eyes of your spirit from morning to evening, and are studying to bend and lead their lower minds to be wise, for the sake of the end that you may secure these deliciousnesses . . . But to these things the wives of our region answered with laughter, saying, What is this ? . . . We do not know what conjugal love is. If there is any with our husbands, still there is not any with us . . . You will not see a sign of such love in our faces . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. To these things the wives sitting in the Rose-garden replied, Friend, you do not know the wisdom and prudence of wives, because they completely hide it from the men . . . in order to be loved ; for with every man who is not spiritually but only naturally rational and moral, there is cold towards a wife. This lies hidden with him in his inmosts. This a wise and prudent wife exquisitely and acutely takes note of, and conceals the same proportion of her conjugal love, and withdraws it into her bosom, and hides it there so deeply that not the least of it appears in her face, in the tone of her voice, or in her gesture. The reason is, that in proportion as it appears, in the same proportion the conjugal cold of the man pours forth from the inmosts of his mind . . . into his ultimates, and induces on the body a total frigidity, and a consequent effort for separation from bed and bed-chamber. (—<sup>4</sup>.) . . . Conjugal cold is from their insanity in spiritual things ; and everyone who is insane in spiritual things is inmost cold to a wife, and inmost warm to harlots ; and as conjugal love and scortatory love are opposite to each other, it follows that conjugal love becomes cold when scortatory love is heat ; and, when cold reigns with him, he cannot endure any sense of love, and thus not any afflatus of it, from his wife . . . (but) in proportion as his wife conceals it

... the man is revived and repaired by the inflowing meretricious sphere. Hence it is that the wife of such a man has no bosom deliciousnesses . . . but only pleasures. (Continued under WIFE.)

[M. 294]. Their husbands (then) came (and said), We have perceived in our souls—with which yours are united—that you have been speaking to this man about love truly conjugal: that its deliciousnesses are the deliciousnesses of wisdom; and also about scortatory love: that its deliciousnesses are the pleasures of insanity. The latter are the wild grapes which have a foul savour; the former are the clusters of a delicate flavour; and they confirmed the discourse of their wives; adding, that in externals the pleasures of insanity appear like the deliciousnesses of wisdom; but not in internals . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. After these things, the little boy came again with a paper in his hand, and held it out to me, saying, Read. And I read these things: Know that the deliciousnesses of conjugal love ascend to the Highest Heaven; and on the way, and there, they conjoin themselves with the deliciousnesses of all heavenly loves; and thus enter into their own happiness, which lasts to eternity. The reason is, that the deliciousnesses of this love are also the deliciousnesses of wisdom. And know, also, that the pleasures of scortatory love descend down to the lowest Hell, and on the way, and there, conjoin themselves with the pleasures of all infernal loves; and thus enter into their own unhappiness, which consists in the destitution of all the delights of the heart. The reason is, that the pleasures of this love are also the pleasures of insanity. . . . The Society from which the little boy was sent was a Society of the New Heaven, with which the New Church on earth will be conjoined.

299°. Extorted consent does not initiate the spirit, but it can the body; and thus turns chastity . . . into lust, whereby conjugal love is vitiated in its first heat.

300°. The reason these pledges are first favours, is that conjugal love promises for itself everlasting favour.

—<sup>3</sup>. As these pledges are stabiliments of conjugal love, presents after consent were received in use with the Ancients . . .

301°. (One of the reasons for betrothals is) that thus conjugal love may progress rightly from its first heat even to the nuptial flame. Consequently, 6. That conjugal love may progress and grow up in just order in its spiritual origin.

—<sup>v</sup>. As the initiations and progressions of conjugal love proceed in order, for the sake of their influx into effective love, which begins from the wedding, there are betrothals also in the Heavens.

302. That by betrothal both are prepared for conjugal love. Ex.

—, Besides . . . on love truly conjugal there has been inscribed this order: that it ascends and descends. It ascends from its first heat progressively upwards towards the souls with an effort after conjunctions there, and this by openings of the minds constantly more interior; and there is no love which attempts these openings more intensely, or which opens the interiors of minds more strongly and skilfully than conjugal love; for the soul of each one intends this. But at the same moments in which this love ascends towards the souls, it also descends towards the body, and thereby clothes itself. But it is to be known that conjugal love in its descent is such as it is in the height to which it ascends. If it is in height, it descends chaste; but if it is not in height, it descends unchaste. The reason is, that the lower things of the mind are unchaste, whereas its higher things are chaste; for the lower things of the mind adhere to the body, but the higher things separate themselves from them.

305. (By being conjoined corporeally within the time of betrothal) the order which has been inscribed on conjugal love perishes. For in human minds there are three regions . . . In the lowest reside all . . . lasciviousnesses . . . but in the highest region . . . there is conjugal chastity in its own love. Into this region is man elevated through the love of uses; and, as the most excellent uses are from marriages, through love truly conjugal. (Thus) it may be seen, that conjugal love, from the first beginnings of its heat, must be elevated out of the lowest region into the higher region, in order to become chaste; and that thus it may be let down from what is chaste through the middle and lowest regions into the body. When this is done, this lowest region is purified by the descending chasteness from its unchaste things. Hence the ultimate of this love also becomes chaste. Now if the successive order of this love is precipitated through conjunctions of the body before their time, it follows that the man acts from the lowest region, which from birth is unchaste. That thence begins and arises cold for marriage, and neglect with loathing for the consort, is known.

306°. The wedding is the entrance to a full separation of the love of the sex from conjugal love; which is effected when, through a full abundance of conjunction, there is effected a close devotedness of the love of the one to the love of the other.

307. The conjugal covenant is to be ratified before the nuptials are celebrated, in order that the statutes and laws of love truly conjugal may be known . . .

—<sup>o</sup>. In a word, the antenuptial covenant manifests the sacred obligations of love truly conjugal; it establishes them; and binds libertines to the observance of them.

309°. That (by the festivities of the wedding) they themselves may be introduced into the joys of conjugal love.

310°. Let us now look at marriage. When conjugal love conjoins the minds of two, and forms them into a marriage, it then also conjoins and forms their bodies to it; for . . . the form of the mind is also interiorly the form of the body . . . But the mind formed from conjugal love is not only interiorly in the whole body . . . but, over and above this, it is interiorly in the organs allotted to generation, which . . . are situated beneath all the rest of the regions of the body. In these are terminated the forms of the mind with those who are united in conjugal love; consequently the affections and thoughts of their minds are determined thither. In this differ the activities of minds [which are] from other loves : the latter do not reach thither. A conclusion is made from these things : that such as is conjugal love in the minds or spirits of two, such is it interiorly in these its organs.

311. That this is the order of conjugal love with its measures (or limits-modis), from its first heat to its first torch. Ex.

—<sup>o</sup>. Such as is the order of this love from its first heat to its first torch, such for the most part is it . . . in its progression afterwards ; for in this progression it unfolds itself . . . If (its first heat) has been chaste, its chasteness is strengthened in the progressions ; but if it has been unchaste, its unchasteness is augmented as it progresses, until it is bereaved of all the chasteness, in which, from the time of betrothal, it has been from without, and not from within.

312. That conjugal love precipitated without order and the measures thereof, burns up the marrows, and is consumed. Ex.

313<sup>2</sup>. But consorts after marriage are quite in ignorance about the successives, which, having been insinuated, are in their lower minds from the antecedents ; and yet it is these things which give form to conjugal love, and make the state of their minds, from which they act with each other.

316. The keeper said, I look at you that I may see whether the delight of peace which is in your face derives anything from the delight of conjugal love . . . The delight of this love, which he saw in my face, was because I was meditating about conjugal love . . . He therefore said to me that I might enter.

—<sup>2</sup>. (The wedding garden des.) I saw at the right side of it a company of young men, to whom all . . . hastened. The reason . . . was that they were discoursing about conjugal love ; and this discourse attracts to itself by a certain occult force the lower minds of all. (Continued under MARRIAGE.)

318. That after the death of a consort, again to contract matrimony depends on the preceding conjugal love. Ex.

— . Love truly conjugal is like a scale, in which are weighed the inclinations to repeated marriages. In proportion as the preceding conjugal love has approached to that love, in the same proportion the inclination to repeated marriage recedes ; but in proportion as the preceding love recedes from that love, in the same proportion the inclination to another marriage is wont to accede. The reason is obvious : that conjugal love is in a like degree a conjunction of the minds, which remains in the bodily life of the one after the decease of the other . . . But as the approach to this love is at this day rarely made, except for a few paces, the scale of the preponderance of the inclination for the most part rises to a level, and from this it wavers and tends over to the other side ; that is, to marriage.

—<sup>3</sup>. For in love truly conjugal there is the fear of loss ; and this loss is followed by grief ; and this grief and fear are in the very inmosts of their minds. Hence it is that in proportion as this love is in them, in the same proportion the soul inclines in both will and thought . . . to be in the subject with which and in which it has been.

—<sup>o</sup>. But, as said above, at this day this love is rare, and there are few who touch it with a finger ; and those who do not touch it, and still more those who recede far from it, as they had desired separation in the preceding married life, which was cold, so after death they desire conjunction with another woman or man.

320. That with those who have not had love truly conjugal, nothing hinders . . . their contracting repeated matrimony. Ex.

— . With those who have not had conjugal love, there is not any spiritual or internal bond, but only a natural or external bond . . .

321. That those who had lived together in love truly conjugal do not want a repeated marriage, except on account of reasons separate from conjugal love. Ex.

— . For (those who had lived in love truly conjugal) have been united as to their souls, and thence as to their minds ; and this union . . . is an actual adjunction of the soul and mind of the one to those of the other, which cannot be at all dissolved . . . 2. They have also been united as to their bodies through the reception by the wife of the propagations of the husband's soul, and thus through the insertion of his life into hers, through which a maiden becomes a wife ; and on the other hand through the reception by the husband of the wife's conjugal love, which disposes the interiors of his mind, and at the same time the interiors and exteriors of his body, into a state receptive of love, and perceptible of wisdom, which state makes him from a young man become a husband. 3. Because the sphere of love from the wife, and the sphere of understanding from the man, is constantly flowing forth ; and because it perfects the conjunctions ; and because it is around them with its pleasant breath-spiraculum, and unites them. . . 7. To these reasons shall be added this new thing : that by the death of one of them these two are not separated, because the spirit of the deceased one constantly cohabits with the spirit of the one not yet deceased ; and this even to the death of the other, when they again meet and reunite themselves, and love each other more tenderly than before, because they are in the Spiritual World.

322. For between (a young man and a maiden) conjugal love can proceed in its just order, which is from its first heat to its first torch ; and afterwards from its first seed with the young husband, and from the flower with the maiden wife ; and thus it can germinate, grow, and fructify, and introduce itself into these things mutually . . . But between a young man and a widow there does not exist a like initiation . . . (or) progression . . .

323. A widower has already been initiated into conjugal life ; and yet conjugal love perceives and feels its pleasantness and delight in mutual initiation . . .

324<sup>2</sup>. For there are infinite varieties with those who are in conjugal love . . .

331<sup>2</sup>. Therefore if the men love their Own intelligence, the intelligence cannot be united with its genuine love, which is with the wife ; and if the intelligence of the man is not united with its genuine love . . . the intelligence becomes insanity, from conceit; and conjugal love becomes cold . . .

[M.] 332. The reason why polygamous marriages are absolutely condemned by the Christian World, cannot be clearly seen by anyone . . . unless he has been previously instructed: That there exists love truly conjugal. That this love is not possible except between two. That it is not possible between two, except from the Lord alone. And that on this love has been inscribed Heaven with all its felicities. —<sup>2</sup>.

333. That love truly conjugal is not possible except with one wife, consequently neither are truly conjugal friendship, confidence, potency, and such a conjunction of minds that they are one flesh. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. That love truly conjugal is at this day so rare as to be generally unknown . . . and yet that it actually exists, has been demonstrated . . . Otherwise who does not know that such a love exists, which in excellence and pleasantness surpasses all other loves . . . That it exceeds the love of self, the love of the world, nay, the love of life, (shown from common experience).

—<sup>2</sup>. From this beginning of this love with many, who cannot rationally conclude that this love from its essence, dominates as supreme over every other love, and that the soul of the man is, then, in it . . . Who can see . . . any other cause than that he has devoted his soul and his heart to one . . . These things have been said, that you may acknowledge that conjugal love of such supereminence exists; and that it exists when one of the sex only is loved. What understanding . . . cannot deduce thence, that if a lover from his soul . . . constantly persists in love to that one, he will attain those eternal blessednesses which he has promised himself before consent, and promises in consent? That he also does attain them, if he approaches the Lord, and from Him lives true religion, has been shown above . . .

334. As love truly conjugal conjoins the souls and hearts of two, it is therefore united with friendship; and, through this, with confidence; and it makes both conjugal; which are so eminent above other friendships and confidences, that as the love is the love of loves, so also is this friendship the friendship of friendships; and in like manner the confidence. That [it is the same with] the potency also, there are many causes for . . . from which follows the enduring continuance of this love. That through love truly conjugal two consorts become one flesh, has been shown (above).

335. That thus the celestial blessednesses, the spiritual happinesses, and the natural delights, which from the beginning have been provided for those who are in love truly conjugal, are not possible except with one wife. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. These three regions (of the human mind) stand open with those who are in love truly conjugal; and the influx follows in order according to the openings. And as the pleasantnesses of this love are most eminent in the highest region, these are perceived as blessednesses; and as in the middle region they are less eminent, these are perceived as happinesses; and finally, in the lowest region, as delights . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason why all these felicities have been provided, from the beginning, for those who are in love truly conjugal, is that there is an infinity of all blessednesses in the Lord; and He is Divine love; and it is the essence of love that it wills to communicate all its goods to another whom it loves; and therefore, together with man, He created this love, and inscribed on it the faculty of receiving and perceiving these things. Who is so dull . . . that he cannot see that there is some love into which have been brought by the Lord all the blessed, happy, and delightful things which can ever be brought into it?

336<sup>e</sup>. That this love with its felicities is not given to any others than those who approach (the Lord), follows from this.

337. Consequently, that love truly conjugal is not possible, except with those who are of the Christian Church. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. That nevertheless love truly conjugal is rare in the Christian world, is because few there approach the Lord; and, among these, there are some who do indeed believe the Church, but do not live it . . . Nevertheless the Truth is valid, that love truly conjugal is not possible, except with those who are of the Christian Church. . .

340. That . . . with (the Israelitish nation) there was not the Christian Church, and thence neither was love truly conjugal possible. Ex.

341. That . . . as (the Mohammedans) do not acknowledge the Lord Jesus Christ . . . as the God of Heaven and earth . . . they cannot receive love truly conjugal. Ex.

344. The quality of the heat of the conjugal love of polygamists . . . has been perceived by me as the fetid heat of a bath.

345. The love (in polygamy) is . . . of the external or natural man, and thus is not conjugal love, which alone exists chaste. . . (For) divided love is not conjugal love; for this love is not divisible from one of the sex.

349. For love truly conjugal is from the Lord alone, and it cannot be given by the Lord to any others than those who know Him, acknowledge Him, believe in Him, and live the life which is from Him; and those to whom this love cannot be given know no otherwise than that the love of the sex and conjugal love are one . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. And the reason of the natural man is in mere thick darkness concerning love truly conjugal; and this love, in excellence, is spiritual.

350<sup>e</sup>. (Thus) the man who does not know . . . that the Lord has come into the world, and that He is God . . . is not in fault if he thinks no more of conjugal love than of the love of the sex; or because he believes polygamous love to be the only conjugal love.

353<sup>e</sup>. Therefore the wife continually draws to herself her man's conceit of Own intelligence, and extinguishes it with him, and vivifies it with herself, and thus turns it into conjugal love, and infills it with pleasantnesses beyond measure.

355<sup>e</sup>. (One of them who knew something about Heaven said,) It is not known there that there is any other love of the sex than conjugal love . . . and the husbands have a perpetual faculty of deliciating. . . The novitiate Spirits . . . said, You are speaking incredible things . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. A certain Angel from Heaven (then) said . . . I have now lived with my wife a thousand years, and all through those [years] in the like flower of age in which you here see me. This I have from conjugal love with my wife; and I can asseverate that I have had and do have that perpetual faculty . . . I will speak about this matter with you from reasons . . . In the (primeval) state, all the interiors of the mind were open even to the Lord, and thence they were in the marriage of love and wisdom . . . and as the good of love and the truth of wisdom perpetually love each other, they also perpetually want to be united; and when the interiors of the mind are open, this spiritual conjugal love flows down freely with its perpetual effort, and presents that faculty. (Further ex.)

—<sup>6</sup>. Besides, conjugal love is altogether like vernal heat . . .

—<sup>8</sup>. He said, further, I will not speak to you about the conjugal love implanted in males and females from creation, nor of their inclination to legitimate conjunction . . . nor that in proportion as man loves wisdom from the love of it, or truth from good, in the same proportion is he in love truly conjugal, and in its attendant virtue.

367. That the zeal of conjugal love is called jealousy. Ex.

— . For this love . . . is the head of all loves. The reason is that this love induces on the wife the form of love, and on the husband the form of wisdom . . .

368<sup>e</sup>. This description of jealousy has been given me from Heaven by those who are in spiritual conjugal love; for there are natural conjugal love, spiritual conjugal love, and celestial conjugal love. Concerning the natural and the celestial conjugal love, and their jealousy, we shall (now) speak.

369. For (monogamists) alone can receive spiritual conjugal love.

— . The conjugal love with polygamists is natural.

370. The quality of the jealous fire into which polygamous conjugal love blazes forth . . .

371. Just grief . . . lest conjugal love be divided, and thus perish. Ex.

372. In conjugal love there is implanted a fear lest it be divided, and a grief lest it perish, and . . . its zeal is like a fire against violation. Ex.

— . Jealousy has something in common with honour, which also is in conjugal love; for he who loves his consort, also honours her.

—<sup>2</sup>. Conjugal love protects itself through the understanding . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. For adulteries principally destroy conjugal love.

375<sup>2</sup>. (For) everyone has conjugal love according to the state of the Church with him . . . Therefore when, in place of the Lord, living and defunct men are approached and invoked, it follows that there is not a state of the Church with which conjugal love can act as one . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The intestine cupidity of revenge . . . completely inhibits the influx of conjugal love . . . and its delight, which is heavenly, it turns into the delight of revenge, which is infernal . . .

377. The reason jealousy for wives springs from the inmosts, is that conjugal love resides there. The reason it resides there, is that marriage—from its covenanted eternity . . . and also from the equality of the right . . . unites souls, and binds minds superiorly; and this binding and that union, once implanted, remain unseparated, whatever be the quality of the love . . . which ensues afterwards. Hence it is that an invitation to love by a wife chills the whole man from inmosts to ultimates . . .

384<sup>e</sup>. A flaming light, which is also the light of conjugal love, then infilled the house . . .

385. On the conjunction of conjugal love with the love of infants. Chapter.

— . But still the love of infants has been perpetually conjoined with conjugal love . . . The first end of conjugal love is the procreation of offspring; and the last end . . . is the procreated offspring.

387. That these two universal spheres (the sphere of procreating, and the sphere of protecting the things procreated) make one with the sphere of conjugal love, and with the sphere of the love of infants. Ex.

— . For procreation is the end, and conjugal love is the mediate cause . . .

389. The reason the spheres of procreating and of protecting the things procreated—or the spheres of conjugal love and of the love of infants—inflow into all things of Heaven and into all things of the world, from primes to ultimates, is that all things which proceed from the Lord . . . pass through the created universe down to its last ultimates. Ex.

393. (For) the sphere of conjugal love is received by women, and through women is transferred into men . . . It is the like with the love of infants, because this is originally from conjugal love . . . That on the conjugal love, into which women are born, has been inscribed the love of infants, is evident from . . .

401. The end, here, is the . . . love of procreating; the mediate cause through which, and into which, the end introduces itself, is conjugal love; the progressive series of efficient causes, is the loving, conception, gestation of the embryo . . . and the effect is the procreated child itself.

403. The love of procreating, and the consequent love of what has been procreated, are implanted in the conjugal love with women . . .

404. That with parents, conjugal love is conjoined with the love of infants through spiritual causes and derivative natural ones. Ex.

409. With the spiritual there is conjugal love; but not with the natural, except what is apparent and simulatory. That still the love of infants and conjugal love act as one, is because in every woman conjugal love has been implanted from creation; and, together with it, the love of procreating . . . Hence it is that in houses in which there is no conjugal love between the man and the wife, it nevertheless is with the wife, and through it there is some external conjunction with the man.

[M.] 423. On the Opposition of Scortatory Love and Conjugal Love. (Title.)

424. That the quality of scortatory love is not known, unless the quality of conjugal love is known. Ex. 425<sup>3</sup>.

425. That scortatory love is opposite to conjugal love. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. When (adulterers) perceive the sphere of conjugal love flowing down from Heaven, they instantly either flee away . . . or . . . become like furies.

426. That scortatory love is opposite to conjugal love, as the natural man, regarded in himself, is opposite to the spiritual man. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. For . . . regarded in itself, conjugal love is a spiritual love . . .

427. That scortatory love is opposite to conjugal love, as the connubial connection of evil and falsity is opposite to the marriage of good and truth. Ex.

429. That thence scortatory love is opposite to conjugal love, as Hell is opposite to Heaven. Ex. (Compare 497.)

430. That the uncleanness of Hell is from scortatory love; and that the cleanness of Heaven is from conjugal love. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. The appearances under which (the chaste delights of conjugal love in Heaven) are presented to be seen, are gardens and flowery fields; the odours whereby they are presented to be smelled there, are the scents from fruits, and the fragrances from flowers; and the forms of animals under which they are presented to be viewed, are lambs, kids, turtle-doves, and birds of paradise.

431. Whereas those who are in the modest and chaste delights of conjugal love are associated by the Lord with the like Angels from Heaven.

432. That scortatory love makes a man—homo—more and more not a man, and a man—vir—not a man; and that conjugal love makes a man—homo—more and more a man, and a man—vir. Ex.

434. That there is a sphere of scortatory love, and a sphere of conjugal love. Ex.

435. That the sphere of scortatory love ascends from Hell; and that the sphere of conjugal love descends from Heaven. Ex.

436. That the two spheres (of scortatory and of conjugal love) meet each other in both worlds; but that they do not conjoin themselves. Ex.

437. That between (the spheres of scortatory and of conjugal love) there is an equilibrium; and that man is in it. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. If (man's Rational) disposes itself to scortatory love, he turns his back to the Lord; if to (conjugal love), he turns his forehead and breast to the Lord . . .

440. That the delights of scortatory love begin from the flesh, and that they are of flesh even in the spirit; but that the delights of conjugal love begin in the spirit, and that they are of the spirit even in the flesh. Ex.

441. But the delights of conjugal love have nothing in common with the feculent delights of scortatory love . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. In the same degree (the spirit) perceives the delights of conjugal love as harmless and chaste; and at last as delicious and blessed. That the delights of conjugal love become also of the spirit in the flesh, is because after the delights of scortatory love have been removed . . . the spirit, being loosed from them, enters chaste into the body, and infils the bosoms with the deliciousnesses of its blessedness; and, from the bosoms, the ultimates also of this love in the body . . .

442. That the delights of scortatory love are pleasures of insanity; but that the delights of conjugal love are deliciousnesses of wisdom. Ex.

443. That the delights of conjugal love are deliciousnesses of wisdom, is because no others than spiritual men are in this love; and the spiritual man is in wisdom . . .

444<sup>3</sup>. As good and evil are opposites, there is an intermediate, and an equilibrium there . . . From this equilibrium the Lord draws all to Himself . . . It is the like with love, especially with conjugal love and with scortatory love . . . Every man who hears the Lord's voice, and follows from freedom, is introduced by the Lord into conjugal love, and into all its delights and happinesses; but he who does not hear, and follow, introduces himself into scortatory love; first, into its delights; afterwards into its undelights; and finally into its unhappinesses.

449. For fornication is not opposite to conjugal love, as is adultery. In fornication, conjugal love can be stored up within, as what is spiritual in what is natural . . . If fornication comes forth from the natural love of the sex, it can be wiped away, provided conjugal love is regarded, wished for, and sought, as the principal good. 452, Ex.

454. Each (kind of adultery) is estimated according to its opposition to, and consequent destruction of, conjugal love . . .

455. That the sphere of the lust of fornicating, such as it is in the beginning, is a middle one between the sphere of scortatory love and the sphere of conjugal love, and makes an equilibrium. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. If (he turns himself) to conjugal love, he turns himself to Heaven . . .

456. That care is to be taken lest conjugal love be destroyed through immoderate and inordinate fornications. Ex.

457. That (the Conjugal of one man with one wife) is the jewel of human life, is because the life of a man is such as is this love with him; for it makes the inmost of his life; for it is the life of wisdom cohabiting with its love, and of love cohabiting with its wisdom; and thence it is the life of the deliciousnesses of both. In a word, a man is a living soul through this love . . .

460. That pellicacy is . . . (to be) kept separate from conjugal love. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For the conjugal love with women acts as one with their virginity; and hence is the chastity, purity, and holiness of this love . . .

—<sup>0</sup>. Conjugal love (then) perishes.

466. Simultaneous concubinage . . . is scortation more opposite to conjugal love than common scortation, which is called simple adultery . . . because, in common scortation . . . there is not a love analogous to conjugal love; for it is only a burning heat of the flesh . . . and therefore this effervescing lasciviousness, if not done from what is purposed or from what is confirmed, and if the adulterer repents of it, derogates only some little from conjugal love. It is otherwise with polygamous scortation: in this there is a love analogous to conjugal love; for it does not cool down . . .

474<sup>2</sup>. These (causes) are fabricated by the men . . . when unchaste lusts have deprived them of conjugal love; and have infatuated them with the idea of its likeness to scortatory love.

475. That those who from causes legitimate, just, and really weighty, are in this concubinage, can be at the same time in conjugal love. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For . . . conjugal love, with marriage, is not separated; but is only interrupted; and love interrupted, and not separated, remains in the subject.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason this concubinage is only a veiling around of conjugal love, is that the love of concubinage is natural, and the love of marriage is spiritual . . .

480. For the conjugal love of a man with one wife, after the compact and the covenant, unites their souls. Adultery does not loose this union, because it cannot be loosed, but it closes it up; like one who stops up a fountain at its spring . . . and fills the cistern with feculent . . . waters. In like manner is conjugal love—the origin of which is a union of souls—beslimed and covered over through adultery; and when it is thus beslimed there rises up from below the love of adultery, which, as it increases, becomes fleshly; and this rises up against conjugal love, and destroys it. Hence is the opposition of adultery and marriage. 482.

482. That conjugal love, in this highest seat, is spiritual, holy, and pure, is for the reason that the soul of every man is from its origin celestial, and therefore it receives influx immediately from the Lord; for it receives from Him the marriage of love and wisdom . . . From this union of souls, conjugal love, which is there in its spiritual holiness and purity, flows down into the life of the whole body, and infils it with blessed delights, so long as its vein remains open; which is done with those who are made spiritual by the Lord.

—<sup>2</sup>. That nothing else than adultery closes up . . . this seat, origin, or fountain . . . of conjugal love, is evident from the Lord's words, that solely on account of adultery is it allowable to send away a wife, and marry another . . .

503. That virginity is the crown of chastity, and the token of conjugal love. Ex.

504<sup>2</sup>. After this door of conjugal love has been broken through, she . . . becomes a harlot.

509. That this lust (of varieties) utterly annihilates conjugal love with itself. Ex.

—<sup>0</sup>. (Thus) this lust is deadly to conjugal love; and, as conjugal love makes the inmost of life with man, it is deadly to his life . . .

510. Everyone has excellence of life according to his conjugal love; for this excellence conjoins itself with the life of the wife; and, through the conjunction, exalts itself; but as, with these, there does not remain a whit of conjugal love—and thence neither anything of the inmost of life—therefore their lot after death is miserable. Des.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason (they have no loins), is that the loins with men correspond to conjugal love . . .

511<sup>2</sup>. The cause of this is, that after conjugal love, and also scortatory love, have worn out by exercise . . . they want to be set on fire by absolute resistances.

514<sup>e</sup>. When these feel anything from conjugal love, they flee away . . .

523. On the imputation of both loves, scortatory, and conjugal. Chapter.

531. That thus conjugal love is imputed to everyone. Ex. (See MARRIAGE, here.)

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason is, that this love, in its steps, accompanies religion; and religion, because it is the marriage of the Lord and the Church, is the initiant and the inoculation of this love; and therefore conjugal love is imputed to everyone after death according to his spiritual rational life; and for him to whom this love is imputed, a marriage in Heaven is provided after death, whatever kind of a marriage he has had in the world.

—<sup>0</sup>. (Thus) we are not to conclude concerning anyone, from the appearances of marriages, nor from the appearances of scortations, as to whether he has conjugal love, or not. Therefore, 'Judge not, lest ye be condemned.'

534. I spoke with the Angels: that something further is being revealed in the world by the Lord. They asked, What is that? I said, Concerning love truly conjugal, and concerning its heavenly deliciousnesses. The Angels said, Who does not know that the deliciousnesses of conjugal love exceed the deliciousnesses of all loves? And who cannot see that into some love have been collected all the blessednesses, happinesses, and delights which can ever be conferred by the Lord; and that the receptacle of them is love truly conjugal, which can receive and perceive them to the full sense. I replied that they do not know this, because they have not approached the Lord, and lived according to His precepts by shunning evils as sins, and by doing goods; and love truly conjugal with its deliciousnesses is solely from the Lord, and is given to those who live according to His precepts; thus that it is given to those who are received into the Lord's New Church . . . To these things I added, that I am in doubt as to whether in the world at this day they want to believe that this love, in itself, is a spiritual love, and thence from religion; for the reason that they cherish concerning it only a corporeal idea. They then said to me, Write about it, and follow the revelation, and afterwards the Book written about it shall be let down by us from Heaven; and we shall see whether those things which are therein are received; and at the same time whether they are willing to acknowledge that this love is according to the religion with a man; [being] spiritual with the spiritual, natural with the natural, and merely carnal with adulterers.

T. 431. Every man is carried into these (domestic duties of charity) from some other love . . . a husband towards a wife, and a wife towards a husband, from conjugal love and according to it.

—<sup>2</sup>. But conjugal love, and love towards children, with their duties and exercises of duties, do not produce love towards the neighbour, as do the exercises of duties in employments . . .

Hist. Crea. iii. 1. As in this conjugal love . . .

iii. 7. In proportion to the impurity there was in the conjugal love . . .

Ad. 736. The dudaim were flowers . . . by which conjugal love is signified; thus, in the inmost sense, the love between the Messiah and the Church, which is likened to conjugal love . . . 737<sup>e</sup>.

3/5681. For all loves regard conjugal love as the principal; for such as is the conjugal love, such are all the other loves.

3/5682. What the conjugal love (of the Sons of Israel) involved, may be evident; namely, that they desired offspring solely for the sake of the command of the earth, and their own life in their posterity . . . Thus their conjugal love—from which they wanted to have offspring—was perverted . . .

3/5683. When there is such a thing in the conjugal love, there is such in the lying together; for this is only an act of that love . . .

D. 1070<sup>e</sup>. Thus bursting asunder conjugal love.

1201. The Inmost Heaven is that through which the Lord insinuates love truly conjugal. The beginning or origin of this love is from the Inmost Heaven; and also is through the midst of the lower Heavens . . .

1663<sup>2</sup>. He had thus put off all love truly conjugal . . . (Compare A. 2746.)

1683. On conjugal love, and [that] of parents towards children.—Whence is love truly conjugal, and whence the love of parents towards children, and the greater [love] towards grandchildren, no one knows . . . The beginning of it is manifest; namely, that the Lord loves all Angels, Spirits, and men as His; hence He has compared this love to conjugal love; and it is predicated of the Lord as the Bridegroom and Husband, and of the Church as the bride and wife. Without the Lord's love towards each and all, and its manifest influx into the inmost, and thus the more interior, human minds, there never could come forth any conjugal love, and consequently never any love of good, which is in various ways derived from conjugal love . . .

1992. One method in which good, almost unknown to the Spirits, is turned into evil with them, is that they who have loathed their wives, and have thence taken as it were a disgust, even for conjugal love, when anything of what is delicious . . . and which is of conjugal love, comes to them . . . it is at once turned with them . . . into what is contrary.

2611<sup>e</sup>. The other tree signified conjugal love.

2612<sup>e</sup>. They pertain to the province of conjugal love.

2613. For the nerves which are devoted to the province of conjugal love, are those which extend themselves from the thigh downwards to the heel.

2705. For every heavenly Society has been founded in conjugal love; from which are derived all good loves and affections . . .

— These are . . . completely against conjugal love . . . They induce the innocent, who can be imbued with conjugal love, to live afterwards in harlotry . . . Thus they are homicides of interior nature; for it is well enough known, that it is the first flower of love which inducts virgins into conjugal love . . .

2706. Such cupidities . . . are what are meant by the sins against the Holy Spirit; for the holiness of the Angels is founded in conjugal love, and in innocence . . . which are the beginnings of all spiritual and celestial loves . . . thus of the Societies in the Heavens . . .

2770<sup>e</sup>. Therefore (the brutes) also are affected with marriage (or conjugal) love.

3196<sup>2</sup>. Therefore also never in the universe is there such deliciousness as that of conjugal love; as is Known from the externals alone . . . and such conjugal love is Heaven on earth. (The reason ex.)

3208. It is a heavenly arcanum that conjugal love can, as to the appearance, so enter into Heaven, that [it can enter] to the inmost with a perception of the felicity . . . That the communication is also actually given, is because the Lord's life inflows through the Inmost Heaven . . . through the consequents, into the conjugal love of those who are kept such by the Lord; with whom it does not appear otherwise than that it enters from them into Heaven.

3316. (The influx of conjugal love and storgé with the degenerated descendants of the Most Ancient Church.)

3319<sup>e</sup>. Cruelty thus conjoins itself with such conjugal love.

3348<sup>e</sup>. Could he not in some measure deduce the quality of heavenly joy solely from conjugal love, which he has called . . . Heaven on earth . . .

3428, Pref. This is evident from conjugal love, which goes out in the proportion that the love of commanding enters. Conjugal love is the fundamental of all loves.

3440<sup>e</sup>. It was said to him . . . that conjugal love is the one only [love] from which . . . all other loves are derived . . .

3453<sup>e</sup>. That marriages are at last detested and abominated, and conjugal love, and also the whole female sex; consequently, all the loves thence derived; so that their life is at last a life of winter, and filthy.

3530. This can be seen in an image from true conjugal love . . .

3532<sup>2</sup>. The conjugal love (of the common people) was communicated to me; which was such that they mutually loved each other, as consorts; but it was simple . . . I spoke with them about conjugal love . . .

3534<sup>2</sup>. They insidiate especially against conjugal love; consequently . . . against spiritual and celestial things.

3599<sup>0</sup>. They suppose that (the wives and virgins lose nothing by scortating with them) when yet conjugal love is thus destroyed; thus all other loves; and consequently the felicities of eternal life.

3778. See MARRIAGE, here.

3794<sup>0</sup>. (For) conjugal love is the beginning . . . of all loves; and consequently of consociations. 3795, Ex.

3795<sup>0</sup>. (Thus) the bond of conscience is primarily founded in conjugal love. 3848.

3818. It appears as if beasts also partake of what is spiritual and celestial; [for instance] as to marriage (or conjugal) love . . .

3874<sup>0</sup>. Love towards a consort has with it that conjugal love is the principal of all loves; for genuine conjugal love has with it all Knowledges, not only concerning conjugal love, but also all others derived thence in order . . .

3875. And, as with the inhabitants of this Earth what is of conjugal love has been almost obliterated, it may be known especially from birds that conjugal love has with it all Knowledge . . .

3899. Thus conjugal love has been destroyed with them, and has become loathsome; and therefore they can rarely have offspring; and if they have them they do not love them; for this follows from the destruction of conjugal love.

3906<sup>0</sup>. (This may be known) from conjugal love . . . in that they love their consorts more than themselves . . .

3908. They who . . . have lived in conjugal love, have happiness in the other life also . . .

3910. They who are in phantasies, and in Falsities, provided they have held conjugal love to be holy, and have had conscience, especially in that, . . . are amendable in the other life . . .

3946. Conjugal love is nanseous to them . . .

3975. On the love of marriage.—I manifestly perceived that the joys and happinesses from conjugal love in the other life, as to its most general things, or universal genera, are indefinite . . .

4091. He could not possibly be in the sphere of Spirits who were in conjugal love . . .

4156. Conjugal love.—Conjugal love was represented . . . by diamond-like anras . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Conjugal love, from the heavenly marriage, thus from the Lord and His mercy towards the human race, is the principal and fundamental of all the loves into which the heavenly Societies are distinguished.

4175. On the beauty of conjugal love. (Continued under BEAUTY.)

4229. On conjugal love.—Conjugal love is the fundamental love of all mutual love. Mutual love is to will better for another than for self; but the conjunction of conjugal love is closer. One not only receives the highest happiness in this, that he gives himself wholly to his consort, and that they are united in mind as one; but it is also the love of the preservation of the whole human race. It is the Lord's mercy towards the universal human race which inflows into conjugal love; thence with consorts, into their conjugal love, [inflows] the love of procreating offspring, and the love towards offspring itself . . .

4350. On conjugal love.—It was perceived . . . that with those who are in true conjugal love the interiors are opened towards Heaven and the Lord; for it is an affection which is from the Lord alone, who inflows through the inmost . . . from which [also] is love towards infants; and, as he is thus apt to receive heavenly loves, he also receives mutual love towards the neighbour; for it follows from genuine conjugal love as from a certain fountain.

4399<sup>0</sup>. He who is delighted with the praises of his wife has a formal affection; conjugal love itself is the essential affection . . .

4408. On conjugal love.—Conjugal love, or that between two consorts who love each other, is the inmost of all loves; and is such that consort sees consort in his lower mind and in his mind; so that each consort has the other in himself; that is, that the image, nay, the likeness of the husband is in the mind of the wife, and the image and likeness of the wife is in the mind of the husband; so that the one sees the other in himself; and they thus cohabit in their inmosts . . . De Conj. 42.

4409. The love of lasciviousness . . . does not enter into the mind; it remains in externals; and it was insinuated that such love is for the most part confounded with conjugal love . . . In such matrimony (as exists between a husband and a number of wives) there never can be conjugal love; (nor) with those who love others outside of marriage; for conjugal love is such that he does not even admit thought about any other woman; nay, he abhors it; (for) in true conjugal love there is the inmost of conscience.

4436. In mutual love there is a certain derived likeness—species—of conjugal love, in that the one wills to be of the other, and so reciprocally, which is [a characteristic] of conjugal love. But [that] of mutual love is that the one wills to give all that is his to the other except his life, which [is what] conjugal love wills. Hence it may be evident that mutual love is derived from conjugal love.

4631. A Hell . . . where are those who insidiate against conjugal love, and study with unspeakable arts to separate lower minds; they attempt it also with those who have been united . . . 4638.

4719. On the spiritual and the celestial as to conjugal love.—With the spiritual, conjugal love begins from externals, thus from a certain lasciviousness; they love nakedness, and it excites them. At last, indeed, the externals vanish; but then conjugal love, in its effect, is wont to cease. It is otherwise with the celestial: with them, conjugal love begins from the internals; thus from a conjunction of lower minds; nor do they care for nudities, as in the warm zones. (Continued under CELESTIAL.)

4784. I passed through the Hell of those who by every method and study labour to pervert, invert, and extinguish the things which are of conjugal love, and to induce the things which are of adultery. They acted almost like Genii . . . 583o.

[D.] 5124<sup>2</sup>. Conjugal love cannot be described. Nothing enters into it which is lascivious; they do not at all know what this is. But conjugal love is the fundamental love; it is their Heaven; that is, the happiness of their life. This love cannot be at all described at this day; for, in the world, it is not separated from what is lascivious. This, or its opposite which is nothing of love, and foul, still adheres to it.

5954. On conjugal love.—I spoke with Spirits about marriage and its love . . .

—e. Those not in conjugal love are like swine . . .

5996<sup>e</sup>. Whence is the profanation of conjugal love . . .

6051<sup>2</sup>. Conjugal love descends from the marriage of good and truth . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. Through conjugal love, man receives the form of love, within and without; through adultery, the form of Hell; and heavenly love is implanted only through conjugal love.

—<sup>6</sup>. That conjugal love is the fundamental love of all loves; for, when a man becomes a form of love, he becomes an image of the Lord.

—<sup>7</sup>. Therefore the delights of conjugal love exceed in number and quality all other delights.

—<sup>8</sup>. That heavenly joy is founded upon this love in Heaven; and, in proportion as anyone is in it, in the same proportion he is in heavenly joy of every kind and degree.

—<sup>13</sup>. There is also a certain form of lying together, [which] being the effect of this love, when it is from what is chaste, delights Heaven in the highest degree; but on the other hand it afflicts them in proportion as it is from adultery.

6054<sup>e</sup>. The former deprive themselves of all the delight of marriage; thus of conjugal love; but not the latter.

6055. Continuation concerning conjugal love.—They who are in conjugal love are in such a state that they can have congress with their wife whenever they want. It is never wanting, because all things of their body are in this love; and after congress they are affected with cheerfulness, and never with sadness; so that they are vivified by it. But the contrary happens with those who are in adulteries.

—<sup>2</sup>. The husband's love depends on the wife's love. In proportion as the latter loves such things, in the same proportion does the husband. It is the contrary in love not conjugal. The reason is that they are one, and are conjoined as to the interiors . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. They who are in conjugal love feel exactly whether there is what is lascivious or not; for all lasciviousness is of adultery; whereas with those who are in conjugal love there is nothing of what is lascivious. This is felt by them most exactly. That sensation is from the interior; the exterior act is the like. With adulterers there is no sensation except what is exterior . . . when yet all spiritual delight is in the interiors, and is incomprehensible to those who are not spiritual. —<sup>7</sup>. 6110<sup>25</sup>.

—<sup>4</sup>. No one can be in conjugal love unless he is spiritual, and unless he acknowledges the Lord; for the supreme cause of it is from the marriage of the Lord with Heaven and with the Church . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. As the woman has been born the affection of truth and good, and the man the understanding of truth and good, it is evident that they have been conjoined as one; and that conjugal love continually unites them; and that thus they are loves, and images of the Lord.

—<sup>9</sup>. That Cerberus signifies that the delight of conjugal love shall not flow down into Hell. 6110<sup>26</sup>.

6096. Concerning conjugal love. The order (of the propositions).

6110<sup>3</sup>. How, through conjugal love, two consorts become one form of love. From the union of minds is effected the form of bodies.

—<sup>7</sup>. If a man concentrates his love upon his wife, by shunning adultery as sin, then the love, with its potency, increases daily; whereas if they take from this love and consume it with harlots, the conjugal love becomes like chaff, and dies.

—<sup>8</sup>. The Angels said that . . . this Common, while there is love truly conjugal, is the plane in which the deliciousnesses form themselves from the interior, as it were upon the plane of the rose . . . —<sup>75</sup>.

—<sup>16</sup>. Unless what is eternal, or an eternal conjunction, is thought of, she is not a wife but a concubine. From the idea of what is not eternal, conjugal love perishes.

—<sup>17</sup>. That the bond must be on this side and backwards—cis et retro, or anteriorly and posteriorly. If not, there is not conjugal love. The bond on this side and backwards (means) that the affection of the wife is in the understanding of the man, and that the understanding of the man is with the wife.

—<sup>22</sup>. That conjugal love is innocence itself from Adam.

—<sup>24</sup>. A wife and a virgin have beauty from chaste conjugal love; a man has wisdom.

—<sup>25</sup>. The reason (there is nothing lascivious in conjugal love) is that within conjugal love there is Heaven down to the ultimates; but within the love of adultery there is Hell; and the ultimates of both appear alike as to the delights; but still they are not; the differences are not felt except from conjugal love.

—<sup>27</sup>. Conjugal love continually has regard that two may be one, or one flesh. If conjugal love has not regard to this, it is the love of adultery. They can become one more [and more] to eternity.

—<sup>30</sup>. The Most Ancients, who were celestial, called conjugal love the principal of all loves; and also the delight itself of life . . .

—<sup>55</sup>. But the fear of conjugal love is lest the wife be injured . . .

—<sup>61</sup>. Love truly conjugal, in the beginning, is as the man—homo—is being reformed and then regenerated. It inverts itself; and, when it has been inverted, the man's love proceeds from the wife's love; and, such as is the latter, such is the former.

—<sup>69</sup>. But with those who are in conjugal love, the delights of this love are communicated; those of the wife to the man: there inflows of the wife into the sense of the husband; so that the very sensations and delights are mutually and reciprocally communicated . . .

—70. Conjugal love does not exist except with man.

D. Min. 4604. On conjugal love, and mutual love.—They who in the life of the body have lived in conjugal love, are together in the other life; for the reason that conjugal love is innocence; there is nothing of what is lascivious in it, although they appear naked to each other.

4605. Whereas they who have lived in some other marriage, in which there was not conjugal love, but lascivious love, are separated; for nothing of what is lascivious is tolerated in the other life. Still more are those consorts separated who have been averse to each other; and still more they who have lived in hatred.

4606. Conjugal love is such that it wants to be the other's, thus mutually.

4612. For instance: when anyone is in conjugal love, and takes up the principles that to love a consort is solely an obligation from the compact—if anyone confirms himself in this false principle, he then destroys conjugal love, and turns it into what is lascivious . . .

4628. On the love of marriage and of infants.—The men of the Most Ancient Church loved their consorts more than their children; their descendants loved their children more than their consorts. Conjugal love is heavenly, and therefore love begins from thence . . . Whereas even the worst can love their children and not their consorts . . . It is then the love of lasciviousness which reigns . . . Each moment there appears something like when they were first married . . . They are then like infants, and sport almost in like manner. But this love recedes if there is not conjugal love.

4629. Conjugal love is that the one wants to be the other's, altogether as one; and that it is the highest happiness not to be one's own, but the other's; and so reciprocally. It is such a conjunction of souls and minds, that the life of the one is the life of the other; thus reciprocally.

4641. They who are in conjugal love have what is reciprocal, and this in each and all things; so that the wife wants to be the husband's, and the husband the wife's; and this in each and all things of life, and in each and all things of affection, and in each and all things of thought.

4642. They who are in good and truth can be in conjugal love; but not others, although they suppose themselves to be; for conjugal love descends from the Divine marriage, which is that of good and truth, and of truth and good.

4643. They who have not been in conjugal love; or, if not married, in the marriage of good and truth . . . but in the contraries, cannot be in Heaven. Ex.

4771. Because he had lived in conjugal love in his own way . . .

4775. On infernal dust, and on those who are against conjugal love.

E. 618°. That conjugal love itself, spiritual and natural, will perish. Sig. 'The womb,' or 'belly,'= conjugal love spiritual; and 'the thigh'=the same natural.

710°. Because all the members devoted to generation, with both males and females,=conjugal love; and 'the womb,' its inmost . . . for it is the inmost of the genital members.

—27. The Israelites and Jews were natural . . . and they who are merely natural are also hard at heart, because they are not in any conjugal love . . .

— From this discordance, conjugal love, which is of truth and good, and the derivative Heaven and the Church with man, completely perishes; for, when the interior conjunction, which is that of minds and lower minds, is null, the marriage is dissolved.

—32. For the womb corresponds to the inmost conjugal love, which, in its essence, is celestial love; and, from this love, is produced spiritual good . . .

863°. From (the marriage of good and truth) is conjugal love; for the wife is the affection of good; and the husband is the understanding of truth . . .

949°. In proportion as (man) shuns adulteries—thus also unchaste and filthy thoughts—in the same proportion conjugal love enters, which is the inmost love of Heaven; in which love chastity itself resides.

983°. The origin of love truly conjugal is the Lord's love towards the Church . . .

986°. The love of marriage is represented in the Spiritual World as a virgin, whose beauty is such as to inspire into the beholder the deliciousnesses of life . . . Hence it is that in the Heavens the Angels have beauty according to the quality of the conjugal love with them . . . In a word, with the Angels of Heaven, according to the conjugal love is there life in their faces, in the gestures of the body, and in their speech . . . The delights of conjugal love are sensitively represented in the Spiritual World by the fragrances from fruits and flowers of various kinds.

991°. It has been said that conjugal love, which is natural, descends from the love of good and truth, which is spiritual; hence this Spiritual is in the natural love of marriage, as a cause is in its effect . . .

993°. That love truly conjugal contains in itself so many ineffable delights as to exceed numbers and words, may also be evident from the fact that this love is the fundamental of all celestial and spiritual loves; because through it a man becomes love; for from it consort loves consort as good loves truth, and truth loves good; thus, representatively, as the Lord loves Heaven and the Church. Such love cannot come forth except through a marriage in which the man is truth and the wife good. When man has become such love through marriage, he is then also in love to the Lord and in love towards the neighbour; consequently, in the love of all good, and in the love of all truth; for from man as love there cannot proceed anything except loves of every kind: hence it is that conjugal love is the fundamental love of all the loves of Heaven. Now, as it is the fundamental love of all the loves of Heaven, it is also the fundamental of all the delights and joys of Heaven . . . From these things it follows, that heavenly joys, in their order, and in their degrees, derive their origins and causes from conjugal love.

[E.] 995<sup>2</sup>. Love truly conjugal is from the Lord alone . . . because it descends from the Lord's love towards Heaven and the Church, and thence from the love of good and truth; for it is the Lord from whom is good, and it is Heaven and the Church in which is truth. Hence it follows that love truly conjugal in its first essence is love to the Lord. Hence it is that no one can be in love truly conjugal, and in its pleasantnesses, delights, blessednesses, and joys, except him who acknowledges the Lord alone; that is, the Trine in Him. He who approaches the Father as a Person by Himself, or the Holy Spirit as a Person by Himself, and these not in the Lord—these have not conjugal love.

996<sup>2</sup>. As love truly conjugal in its first essence is love to the Lord from the Lord, it is also innocence. Ex.

997<sup>4</sup>. As conjugal love in its first essence is love to the Lord from the Lord, and is thence also innocence, therefore also conjugal love is peace such as there is in Heaven with the Angels. Ex.

998<sup>4</sup>. Man has intelligence and wisdom (in both quantity and quality) according to the conjugal love with him. Ex.

1000<sup>4</sup>. They who are in love truly conjugal, after death, when they become Angels, return into their youth and adolescence . . . Each consort returns into the flowers and into the joys of their age, while conjugal love begins to exalt their life with new delights, and to inspire sports for the sake of procreation. Into this state, first exteriorly, and afterwards more and more interiorly to eternity, comes the man who had shunned adulteries as sins, and had been inaugurated by the Lord into conjugal love in the world. As they are always growing young interiorly, it follows that love truly conjugal is continually increasing and entering into its deliciousnesses and happinesses, which have been provided for it from the creation of the world; and which are the deliciousnesses and happinesses of the Inmost Heaven originating from the Lord's love towards Heaven and the Church; and thence from the love of good and truth together; from which loves is every joy in the Heavens. Further ex.

1001<sup>2</sup>. The Angels have all their beauty from conjugal love. Ex.

1004<sup>2</sup>. Love truly conjugal is not possible except between two. Ex.

— From this universal marriage (between good and truth) is the conjugal love between a husband and a wife; the husband has been so created as to be the understanding of truth, and the wife has been so created as to be the will of good . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. There are consorts there who are in such conjugal love that both can be one flesh. (Continued under MARRIAGE.)

1005<sup>0</sup>. In chaste marriages, the man's life, through the seed, adds itself to the life of the wife. Thence is the inmost conjunction from which they are not two, but become one flesh; and according to the conjunction thereby the conjugal love increases; and, with it, every good of Heaven.

J.(Post.) 339. Marriage is Heaven itself; because all there are in conjugal love, each in his own degree . . .

De Conj. 1. On the representation of conjugal love by the most beautiful things. Gen.art. (See DELICIOUS, here.)

2. As love truly conjugal in its origin is the pure deliciousness itself of the mind; and as this love is the fundamental of all loves; and as from love is all beauty with the Angels in Heaven; for love or the affection of love forms everyone . . . hence it is that all the beauty with the Angels in Heaven is from their conjugal love; for the inmost of life is thence, which shines through. I have seen an Angel who had been in pure conjugal love; he was from the Third Heaven; he had such beauty that the bystanders were rapt in admiration, saying that it was beauty itself in its own essence.

3. That love truly conjugal is such beauty and also such deliciousness, is from its first origin, which is the union of the Lord's Divine love with His Divine wisdom; and also the Lord's marriage with Heaven and with the Church; and the derivative marriage of good and truth with everyone. 113.

4. That in love truly conjugal there is nothing at all of lasciviousness. Ex.

— The internal of conjugal love is from the Lord, and thence from Heaven and from all its happiness . . . Every external derives its essence from the internal things; hence the external of conjugal love is not like the external of adultery. The external of conjugal love is full of all the deliciousnesses of Heaven; and the delight of Heaven which is in this love expels all the delight of Hell. Hence these two delights, in the external form, are, from their internals, utterly unlike. Moreover, the Angels manifestly perceive from the sphere of the love of two consorts, whether there is in it what is lascivious, and also the quality and quantity thereof; and in the same proportion they remove themselves from them. The reason (they do so) is that the lasciviousness of adultery communicates with the Hells; whereas the chastity of marriage communicates with Heaven.

5. That love truly conjugal is chastity itself.

6. That conjugal love is innocence itself.

7. That conjugal love is love to the Lord.—All who are in love truly conjugal are in love to the Lord; for the reason that it descends from the marriage of the Lord with the Church. Hence it is that they who are in the Third Heaven . . . are in love truly conjugal. Love truly conjugal is not possible except from the Lord.

20. Through conjugal love a man receives the form of love in mind and thence in body; thus the form of Heaven.

21. Conjugal love is the fundamental love of all heavenly loves; and it is an image of Heaven; thus of the Lord.

22. Heavenly joy is founded upon conjugal love.

27. Conjugal love communicates with the Heavens; and the organs of generation have correspondence with the Third Heaven, especially the womb. The congress from conjugal love also communicates.

28. This love originates from the sole influx of the Lord through the Third Heaven.

30. Conjugal love increases in potency and effect to eternity, inasmuch that it is love as to all potency and effect; hence the life of their lower mind.

31. No one can be in conjugal love, unless [he is] spiritual through combat against evils and their falsities; and unless he acknowledges the Lord [and] His Divine.

34. Conjugal love depends upon the wife's love; and such is the husband's love, in reciprocation; and the wife's love does not depend on the husband's love. Ex. It is the reverse with those who are not in conjugal love.

40. Through conjugal love the interiors of the mind are opened; because the influx into it is from the Lord through the Third Heaven. Hence the man becomes receptive of all heavenly loves, and also Truths.

41. In conjugal love is the inmost of conscience.

42. On conjugal love with the Angels.—They said that it is the inmost of all loves; and that it is such that consort sees consort in his lower mind and in his mind; inasmuch that his spiritual image is there; and thence that consort has consort as it were in himself; and that this is cohabitation in the spiritual sense... Hence they have delicious conjunctions.

60. On the torment of those who are from Hell from the influx of conjugal love. Ex.

63. On those who insidiate against conjugal love. Ex.

66. That love truly conjugal is naked. Gen.art.

— The Angels of the Third Heaven are they who are in the heavenly marriage more than all others; for they are in love to the Lord, and thence in the conjunction of good and truth. Hence, also, more than all the other Angels, they are in conjugal love, and in innocence and chastity. They walk with a cincture round their loins when out of doors, but without a cincture when at home; and yet in their nakedness they regard a consort as a consort; nor is there anything of what is lascivious in it. They say that to look at a consort clothed takes away the idea of marriage; and, wonderful to say, nakedness does not excite or instigate; yet it is as the external bond of conjugal love. In lecto jacent copulati sicut sunt creati, ac ita dormiunt, dicunt quod non possent aliter, quia ipse amor conjugalialis, qui perpetuus est copulati. Thus also is communicated the life of the one with the life of the other; and the life of the husband becomes appropriated to the wife; so that it is as we read of Adam when he saw Eve his wife: 'Behold my bone and my flesh;' and also that 'they were naked, and did not blush;' that is, there was no lasciviousness... See E.992<sup>3</sup>.

71. That conjugal love descends from the marriage of good and truth.—From much experience it has been made known to me that no one has conjugal love unless he is in the love of truth from good, and in the love of good through truth; that is, in the heavenly marriage; and that he cannot be in any mutual love of good and truth, unless... he shuns adultery... For heavenly things must inflow into conjugal love... 114.

72. That conjugal love makes man to be love. Ex.

73. The exploration of Spirits through conjugal love. Ex.

105. The Inmost Heaven, through which the Lord insinuates conjugal love...

108. It is sufficient to know that love truly conjugal has immediate communication with the Third Heaven... Its acts; as kissing, embraces, and many more... delight that Heaven...

113<sup>e</sup>. Therefore, the union of minds from good united to truth from the Lord is conjugal love itself.

119. With those who live in conjugal love the interiors of the mind are opened through Heaven even to the Lord...

120. Genuine conjugal love is not possible except between two...

382a<sup>e</sup>. As there are not nuptials in the Heavens, two consorts there are not called husband and wife; but the consort of the other, from an angelic idea of the conjunction of two minds into one, is called by a word which signifies what is one's own mutual reciprocally.

494<sup>2</sup>. This is a general thing (after death): that consort meets consort, and that they mutually congratulate each other. They also stay together; but longer or shorter according to their delight of cohabitation in the world. But still, if love truly conjugal has not conjoined them... after some delay they are separated. But if the minds of the consorts had been in disagreement with each other... they break out into open enmities, and sometimes fight together; and nevertheless they are not separated, until they enter the second state (of man after death).

45. On the state of married partners after death. Chapter. De Conj. 50, Gen.art.

47a. That two consorts for the most part meet after death, recognize each other, consociate, and for some time live together; which takes place in the first state; thus while they are in externals as in the world. Ex.

48a. But that successively, as they put off externals, and enter into their internals, they perceive in what love and inclination they had been mutually towards each other; and thence whether they are able to live together or not. Ex.

49. That if they are able to live together, they remain consorts; but if they are not able, they separate from each other; sometimes the man from the wife; sometimes the wife from the man; and sometimes both from each other. Ex.

50. That there is then given to the man a suitable wife, and to the woman a husband in like manner.—The reason is that no other consorts can be received into Heaven, so as to remain there, than those who have been interiorly united, or are able to be united, as into a one; for there two consorts are not called two, but one Angel. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. If (the consorts) are external inclinations, and not at the same time internal ones, the very house, or place, separates, rejects, and drives them away.

51. That consorts enjoy like intercourse as is in the world, but more delightful and blessed; yet without procreation . . . in place of which they have spiritual procreation, which is that of love and wisdom. Ex.

54. All those consorts who are merely natural, are separated after death. The reason is, that with them the love of marriage is cold, and the love of adultery warm. Nevertheless, after separation they sometimes consociate as consorts with others; but after a short time they recede from each other, which is often done repeatedly; and at last the man is delivered over to some harlot, and the woman to some adulterer, which is done in an infernal prison, where promiscuous scortation is forbidden . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Consorts, of whom one is spiritual and the other natural, are also separated after death; and to the spiritual one a suitable consort is given; but the natural one is relegated to places of lasciviousness . . .

66. From which it is evident, that two consorts are the very forms and effigies of the marriage of love and wisdom . . . —<sup>e</sup>.

77<sup>4</sup>. In proportion as anyone loves his consort alone, in the same proportion he becomes heavenly and internal; and in proportion as anyone does not love his consort alone, in the same proportion he becomes natural and external . . .

101. That two consorts are the form (of the marriage of good and truth) in their inmosts; and thence in the sequents therefrom, as the interiors of their mind are opened. Ex.

137. They were two consorts from Heaven. Des. (See MARRIAGE LOVE, here.)

—<sup>3</sup>. We have been consorts for ages . . .

—<sup>7</sup>. Where there were consorts in the like flower of age . . .

144. When they ascend from chaste consorts on earth.

158<sup>2</sup>. Spiritual cohabitation . . . exists with consorts who love each other tenderly, however distant in body.

171. The inclinations of consorts towards each other are from (these spiritual spheres).

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence two consorts who differ in their lower minds, and disagree in their affections, lie in bed turned away from each other . . .; and . . . two who agree in lower minds and affections, lie turned towards each other.

—<sup>3</sup>. The spheres . . . conjoin and disjoin two consorts not only from without, but also from within . . .

177<sup>e</sup>. Therefore two consorts are there called two, when they are named as husband and wife; but one, when they are named as Angels.

178. The body . . . blunts and absorbs the sensation that the two consorts are a united man . . .

— From those who have lived for ages with their consorts in Heaven, I have heard . . . that they feel themselves to be thus united, the husband with the wife, and the wife with the husband, and each in the other . . . mutually and reciprocally; as also in the flesh, although they are separated. They said that the cause of this rare phenomenon on earth, is that the union of their souls and minds is felt in their flesh . . . (for) as the soul and mind adjoin themselves closely to the flesh of the body . . . it follows that the union of the soul and mind with a consort is felt in the body also as one flesh.

191. The states of life with consorts after marriage. Ex.

192<sup>e</sup>. In general, married partners have an interior comeliness of face; for the man derives from the wife the lovely redness of her love, and the wife from the man the bright lustre of his wisdom; for two consorts there are united as to their souls; and besides, there appears in both a human fulness.

193<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that no one can ever love his consort truly conjugially who is in the conceit of Own intelligence from the love of self.

216<sup>2</sup>. The state of consorts in Heaven, when the idea of what is eternal is cut out of their minds. Ex. (See MARRIAGE, here.)

226. That conjugal love may exist with one of the consorts, and not at the same time with the other.—For one may from the heart devote himself to chaste marriage, and the other not know what chasteness is; one may love the things of the Church, and the other the things of the world only; one as to the mind may be in Heaven, and the other in Hell; hence with one there may be conjugal love, and not with the other. The minds of these, as they are turned contrarily, are inwardly in collision with each other; and if not outwardly, still the one who is not in conjugal love regards his consort from the covenant as a loathsome old thing.

227. That there are various similitudes, and various dissimilitudes, both internal and external, with consorts. Ex.

— The external ones appear, but not the internal ones, except after times of cohabitation, to the consorts themselves; and, by indications, to others. (Continued under LIKENESS.)

241. When conjugal love is banished, cold ensues; but this is with the consort of no religion... (This) cold... descends from the soul into the body even into the cuticles, from which at last he cannot bear to look his consort directly in the face, nor to accost him in a communion of respirations, nor except with a voice of retracted tone; nor to touch him with the hand, and scarcely with the back; not to mention the insanities which, from that cold, creep into the thoughts... which is the reason why such marriages are dissolved of themselves. Moreover, it is known that an impious person holds his consort cheap; and all who are devoid of religion are impious.

242. Hence, with the consort who is in falsities of religion, there commences a cold, which is intensified as he goes away into what is diverse from the other. Once... I entered a house where there were staying consorts of diverse religion... The Angels said, We cannot remain with you in that house, because the consorts there are in discordant religion. This they perceived from the internal disunion of their souls.

245. I will add an arcanum which is from Heaven: that between the disjoined souls of two, especially of married partners, conjunction is effected in a middle love, and otherwise there would not be effected conceptions with men.

248. That the third of the external causes of cold is a striving for supereminence between the consorts. Ex.

278. That hence is apparent love, apparent friendship, and favour between the consorts. Ex.

283. As it is important for those in authority to... provide (for) order in a composite Society, so with consorts in their singular one. But this order is not possible if the husband and wife are dissident in lower minds... and therefore, to preserve order... necessity demands that the master and mistress agree, and make one; and if, on account of the difference of their minds, this cannot be done, it is necessary and also becoming that it be done by means of representative conjugal friendship.

287. That (conjugal simulations) are for the sake of various favours expected from the consort, or from his relations... Ex.

288. These blemishes are (therefore) buried in silence by the other consort.

— The excusations of such things... are causes of the simulation of love and friendship with a consort.

289. Between consorts who from various causes are discordant in minds, there are alternate dissidences and confidences, estrangements and conjunctions; nay, quarrels and... reconciliations...

290. That if favour does not cease with the wife, when faculty ceases with the man, there may be a friendship emulating conjugal friendship when (the consorte) become old. Ex.

— The primary of the causes of separation of lower minds between consorts, is favour failing with the wife [on] faculty ceasing with the man... for in like manner as heats communicate together, so also do colds. That from the defect of love with both, friendship ceases; and, if the destruction of the family affairs in the house is not feared, favour also, is evident... If, therefore, the man tacitly imputes the cause to himself, and the wife still perseveres in chaste favour towards him, a friendship may thence result, which, as it is between married partners, appears like love emulating conjugal love. That a friendship as if of that love is possible between aged consorts, experience testifies from...

291. That various species of apparent love and friendship are possible between consorts, of whom one has been subjugated, and consequently is subject to the other. Ex.

— After the first time of marriage have passed, there arise between married partners rivalries about right and Power: about right, in that according to the statutes of the covenant made there is equality, and each has dignity in the offices of his function; and about Power, in that superiority is insisted on by the men in all things of the house, because they are men; and inferiority for the women, because they are women. Such rivalries... flow from no other source than from no conscience concerning love truly conjugal... (Therefore) instead of this love there is desire... (and) from this desire... flows forth a striving for Power, which is in some from the delight of dominating; in some it has been implanted by artful women before the wedding; and to some it is unknown. The men who are in this striving... reduce their wives either into their rightful possession, or into compliance with their mastery, or into slavery... But if the wives are in this striving... they reduce their husbands either into an equality of right with themselves, or into compliance with their mastery, or into slavery; but as with wives... there remains desire which counterfeits conjugal love, which is restrained from the law and from fear of legitimate separation, if they extend their Power beyond what is right... they lead a consociate life with their husbands...

292. That there are... infernal marriages between consorts who interiorly are the most deadly enemies, and exteriorly are the most conjoined friends. Ex. (See WIFE, here.)

306. On (the wedding) day... they put on the state and name of consorts, and partners of the bed.

313. But consorts after marriage are entirely in ignorance about the successives...

316. (Two novitiate consorts receiving their friends, seen.)

319. After the death of a consort...

[M.] 320. Hence it is, that the Natural separated from the Spiritual with two consorts, does not effect any conjunction of minds, and thus of wills; but only a conjunction of some of the external affections . . .

355<sup>7</sup>. The Angel . . . said, You know that while you were in the virtue of love, you loved your consorts . . . But you do not know that we in Heaven do not love our consorts from that virtue; but that we have the virtue from the love; and, as we perpetually love our consorts, that virtue is perpetual with us . . . Does not he who perpetually loves his consort, love her with the whole mind and with the whole body? for the love turns all things of the mind and all things of the body to that which it loves; and, as this is done reciprocally, it conjoins them so that they become as a one.

371. See JEALOUSY, here. 373. 375<sup>2</sup>.

375<sup>2</sup>. Heat for harlots, and ice for the consort.

379. Jealousy is one thing with consorts who love each other spiritually, and another with consorts who love each other naturally; it is one thing with consorts who are dissident in lower minds, and another with a consort who has put his consort under the yoke . . .

405. That the love of infants is one thing with spiritual consorts, and another with natural ones. Ex.

409. That hence it is that there is this love (of infants) with consorts who mutually love each other; and also with consorts who do not love each other at all. Ex.

D. 3316. The love of a consort had perished (with the descendants of the Most Ancient Church), and had remained in love towards offspring . . .

4076. He loves his consort solely for the sake of cohabitation, etc.

4408. So that each consort has the other in himself. (See MARRIAGE LOVE, here.) De Conj. 42.

4638<sup>e</sup>. In the life of the body they did not tolerate that married partners should live together in love.

6051<sup>12</sup>. Thus to love a consort is to do what is good before the Lord; for this is to love the Lord so from chastity. It communicates with the Heavens, and delights the souls of the Angels to such a degree that it cannot be believed. De Conj. 26.

6110<sup>65</sup>. Christian Spirits cannot endure the sphere of nudity between married partners; and then flee away.

D. Min. 4612. (The idea that) to love a consort is solely an obligation from the compact . . .

4628. They can be averse to their consorts, and love their children; and can be with a consort and not love at all; which is what is inverted. It takes place for the sake of the education of the infants, etc. . . and if there are no infants, they repudiate (their consort) at heart.

4679. The delight which married partners have in lying beside each other. (See LIE-cubare, here.)

E. 984<sup>2</sup>. For two consorts who are in conjugal love from the Lord, love each other mutually and reciprocally from the heart; thus from inmosts; and hence, although they are apparently two, still they are actually one; they are two as to hodies, and one as to life . . .

992<sup>3</sup>. The consorts (there) pass the night in each other's bosoms, as if they had been created into one . . . De Conj. 66.

993<sup>2</sup>. From it consort loves consort as good loves truth . . .

998<sup>4</sup>. This appears manifestly from the Angels in the Heavens; these, separated from their consorts, are indeed in intelligence, but not in wisdom; whereas when they are with their consorts, they are also in wisdom; and, what I wondered at, in proportion as they turn their faces to their consort, in the same proportion they are in a state of wisdom; for, in the Spiritual World, the conjunction of good and truth is effected through aspect; and the wife there is good, and the man there is truth; therefore, as truth turns itself to good, so is truth vivified.

1004<sup>4</sup>. There are consorts there who are in such conjugal love that both can be one flesh. (Continued under MARRIAGE.)

D. Love xii<sup>3</sup>. Delights are those with a consort, etc.

D. Wis. xi. 5. Faithfully to love a consort (a general use).

De Conj. 52. They who (after death) cannot wait for the other consort, whether male or female, are meanwhile conjoined with another like one; but there is then given the perception that it is the same consort whom they had had in the world. But this is loosed—because there had not been betrothals and nuptials—when the real consort comes thither; for then, from their cohabitation in the world, the one consort well knows the other; and those who want, remain with their own.

Mars. Mars.

A. 7171. The planet Mars appears to the left in front (in the same direction as Jupiter, but nearer).

7358. On the inhabitants and Spirits of the planet Mars. Gen.art. 7475. 7620. 7742. U.85. D.1539. 3251.

— The planet Mars appears . . . to the left in front, at some distance in the plane of the breast; and thus outside the sphere where are the Spirits of our Earth.

7359. Spirits thence came to me, and applied themselves to my left temple, and there breathed speech on me; but I did not understand it. . . It was like a very soft aura. . . It entered through the Eustachian tube into the brain. When the afflatus arrived there, I understood their speech . . . I observed that when they were speaking with me they moved the lips with me, and also the tongue a little. Ex. D.1541, Ex. 3488, Ex.

7360. (Thus) the speech of the inhabitants of Mars is . . . not sonorous; but almost tacit, insinuating itself into the interior hearing and sight by a shorter way; and (is therefore) fuller and more perfect . . . Moreover the very affection of the speech is represented with them in the face, and its thought in the eyes; for, with them, thought and speech, and also affection and face, act as one. They account it nefarious to think one thing and speak another; or to will one thing and show another in the face. They do not know what hypocrisy is, or what fraudulent simulation and deceit are.

7362. The respiration of the Spirits of Mars . . . is interior, proceeding from the region of the chest towards the navel, and thence rolling itself upwards through the breast, with an imperceptible breath towards the mouth. (Thus) they are of a celestial genius, and not unlike those who belonged to the Most Ancient Church in this Earth. D.1543. 3490. —a.

[A.] 7363. They are not under commands-imperii; but are distinguished into societies greater and less; and therein they consociate with themselves such as agree in lower minds; and this they know at once, from the face and speech . . . they are then friends at once; but they are not averse to the rest; for there is no aversion, still less hatred. They also said that their consociations are delightful; and that they speak together about those things which are taking place in the Societies, especially about those which are taking place in Heaven; for many of them have manifest communication with the Angels who are in Heaven. . . They are so consociated, that their societies, taken together, through that Earth, represent a general angelic Society; for the societies there are all various, but the Lord conjoins them all by the heavenly form . . . D.1540. 1542.

7364. Those who, in their societies, begin to think wrongly, and thence to will wrongly, are dissociated. They leave them alone by themselves, whence they pass their time outside the society, very miserably, in rocks or elsewhere; for they no longer care for them. Some societies try to compel such to repentance by various methods; but when this is done in vain, they dissociate themselves from them. Thus do they guard against the creeping in of the cupidity of dominion and of the cupidity of gain . . . Everyone there lives content with his own goods, and everyone with his own honour, in that he is styled just and a lover of the neighbour. This delight and tranquillity of the lower mind would perish, unless those who are thinking evilly and willing evilly were cast out, and unless, prudently and severely, they went to meet the love of self and the love of the world in their very beginnings in those with whom they are. D.1548.

7475. The Spirits of Mars appear to themselves as men such as they had been in the world; on which account they also appear similarly to others . . . When I wondered at this, they said that they cannot appear otherwise, because, when they had lived in the world, they had known that they were Spirits clothed with a body; and because they had then thought but little about their body, and only about the life of their spirit in the body. Hence, when they come into the other life, they are almost unaware that the state of their life has been changed; and as they then also think about the life of their spirit, in like manner as in the world, they therefore then appear like themselves. All Spirits are indeed in the human form, but not in so prominent a one as that in which are the Spirits of Mars; for with them the idea remains such as they had had in the world. D.3251.

7476. The Spirits of Mars are among those Spirits who are best of all from the Earths of the world of this sun. They are as to the most part celestial men . . . When represented as to their quality, they are represented with the face in Heaven and the body in the World of Spirits; and those who are of their Angels, with the face to the Lord and the body in Heaven.

7477. They acknowledge and adore our Lord more than other Spirits. They say that He is the Only God; and that He rules both Heaven and the universe; and that all good is from Him. They said that it is the Lord who leads them; and that He often appears with them in their Earth.

7478. Once, when the Lord was named, I saw that those Spirits humbled themselves so inmosty and profoundly, that it cannot be described. For in their humiliation they had the thought that they from themselves are in Hell, and that thus they are utterly unworthy to look to the Lord, who is the Holy itself. They were so profoundly in this thought from faith that they were as it were outside of themselves; and in this they remained upon their knees, until the Lord elevated them, and then as it were drew them out from Hell. When they thus emerge from humiliation they are full of good and of love, and thence of joy of heart. When they are thus humbling themselves, they do not turn the face to the Lord; for this they then dare not do; but avert it. The Spirits who were around me said that they had never seen such humiliation. D.3252.

7479. I have spoken with some from that Earth concerning the faith of those who are there. They said that there they believe that there is nothing but what is filthy and infernal with them, and that everything good is the Lord's. Nay, they said, further, that from themselves they are devils, and that the Lord draws them out from Hell, and continually withholds them.

7480. I have been instructed that the Spirits of Mars relate to something which is interiorly in man; and in fact to the intermediate between the Intellectual and the Voluntary; thus to thought from affection; and those who are the best of them, to the affection of the thought. Hence it is that their face acts as one with their thought; nor can they simulate before anyone.

7481. As they relate to this in the Grand Man, that middle province which is between the cerebrum and the cerebellum corresponds to them . . . On this account, when they were near me, I sensibly apperceived a retraction of the anterior part of the head towards the occiput; thus of the cerebrum towards the cerebellum. D.3489, margin.

7482. Once, when the Spirits of Mars were with me, and were occupying the sphere of my mind, there came Spirits from our Earth, and wanted to infuse themselves also into that sphere. But the Spirits of our Earth then became as if insane; for the reason that they did at all agree with it; for the Spirits of our Earth regard themselves and the world; thus, in idea, they are turned to themselves: but the Spirits of Mars regard Heaven; thus the Lord and the neighbour; and hence they are, in idea, turned from themselves . . . But there then came angelic Spirits of Mars, at whose coming the communication was taken away; and so the Spirits of our Earth receded. D.3331.

7483. An inhabitant of that Earth was presented to me. His face was like the face of the inhabitants of our Earth; but the lower region of the face was black; not from a beard, which they have not; but from a blackness in place of it. This also is from correspondence. That blackness extended itself as far as beneath the ears on both sides. The higher part of the face was yellowish, like the face of the inhabitants of our Earth who are not quite fair. D.1545.

7485. They are clothed there in garments which they prepare from the bark fibres of certain trees; and which have such a consistence that they can be woven, and also conglutinated by a kind of gum which is among them. D.1547.

7486. Besides other things, they also said that they know how to make fluid fires there, from which they have light in the times of evening and night. D.1550.

7620-7622. Continuation concerning the Spirits and inhabitants of the Earth Mars.—I saw a certain very beautiful flaming thing. It was of various colours; crimson; also reddish from bright white; and these colours sparkled beautifully from the flame. I saw also a certain hand . . . to which (this flaming thing) adhered . . . Then the hand with the flaming thing was removed to a distance, and, where it stood still, there was a lucidity, (in which) the hand receded; and then the flaming thing was changed into a bird, which at first had like colours to those of the flaming thing . . . but they were successively changed . . . The bird flew round about; at first round my head, then forward into a kind of narrow chamber; and, as it flew forward, so did its life recede more and more, and at last become stony; being then first of a pearly colour; afterwards dark; but, although devoid of life, it still flew. (7621.) While that bird was flying round my head, and was still in the vigour of its life, a Spirit was seen who was rising up from beneath through the region of the loins to the region of the breast. He wanted to take away that bird . . . He strongly persuaded (the Spirits around me) that the Lord was with him . . . (and then they) no longer prevented him from taking away the bird; but as Heaven then inflowed, he could not retain it, but presently let it go free out of his hand. (7622) . . . The Spirits . . . knew that a flaming thing=celestial love and its affections; that a hand . . . =life and its power; changes of colours, the varieties of life as to wisdom and intelligence; in like manner also a bird, with the difference that what is flaming=celestial love and the things of that love, and a bird spiritual love and the things of this love . . . and that the changes of colour, and at the same time of life, in the bird, even until it became stony=the successive varieties of spiritual life as to intelligence. They knew also that the Spirits who ascend from beneath, through the region of the loins to the region of the breast, are in a strong Persuasive that they are in the Lord; and thence believe that all things which they do—even evil and wicked things—they do with the Lord's will. But still they could not know . . . who were meant by this appearance. At last they were instructed from Heaven that the inhabitants of Mars were meant; that their celestial love, in which many still are, was signified by the flaming thing which adhered to the hand; and that their wisdom and intelligence were signified by the successive variations of colours; and that the bird at first . . . signified their spiritual love; but that that bird's becoming as it were stony and of no life, and of a dark colour, signified the inhabitants who had removed themselves from the good of love, and are in evil, and yet believe that they are in the Lord. D.3246-3250. 3874-3876.

7743. The inhabitants of Mars are in celestial love . . . (but) that many at this day are beginning to recede from this celestial love, and solely to love Knowledges, and to place celestial life in these alone, was represented by that bird's being changed into a stony one; for by a bird is signified spiritual life; (and) by its being turned into a stony one, is signified the life of Knowledges without love, which is no longer spiritual life, but cold life as it were stony, into which there does not inflow anything from Heaven. And that they still believe that they are in the Lord, like those there who are in the life of celestial love, was signified and shown by the Spirit who rose up, and wanted to take away the bird. 7748-7750.

7743a. By the stony bird was also represented the inhabitants of that Earth, who by a foreign method transmute the life of their thoughts and affections into almost no life. 7744, Ex. (The Spirit of the longitudinal sinus.)

7745. While I was in conversation with this Spirit, certain Spirits introduced themselves to the front part of the head . . . and he gave place to them. (They) conversed together; but (no one) understood what they were saying. . . They were Spirits from the Earth Mars, who were skilled to speak together thus. (This way of speaking ex.) I was further instructed that the inhabitants of the Earth Mars who place celestial life in Knowledges alone . . . have fashioned such speech; yet not all; and that when these become Spirits, they retain it. These are they who were in special signified by the stony bird . . . D.3881. 3882. 3883.

7746. The Spirits of Mars acknowledged that this was what they were speaking together about . . . D.3884.

7747. Afterwards the Spirits of Mars inflowed from above into my face. The influx was felt as a thin striped rain; which was a sign that they were not in the affection of truth and good . . . They then (told me) that the inhabitants of their Earth speak together similarly. They were then told that this is evil, because they thus obstruct internal things, and recede from them to external ones, which they also deprive of their life . . . D.3885-3889.

10585. (The Spirits of the Fourth Earth) proceeded a little to the left in front, even to the Earth Mars; and there strove to emerge; which was also done, but with difficulty. Ex. D.3268.

D. 1539. On the inhabitants of the Earth Mars. Gen.art.

— Spirits appeared in front to the left, who were said to be from the Earth Mars; and who said that they were holy; not that they were holy; but that their holiness was the Lord . . .

1543. The Spirits of Mars constitute that in man which is called thought. 1549. 1558a<sup>e</sup>.

1550a. A Spirit of Mars with me, a Subject of others, drew back towards the occiput the higher anterior part of the head, signifying that thus is the thought with them, [being] not of their cerebrum or of their will, but [being] drawn back . . . to the cerebellum, so that they do not act from their will, but from the fear of the Lord . . .

[D.] 3250. It has been insinuated that if the inhabitants of Mars should not remain in their state, which with us is called the state of perfection—integritatis—, others will succeed from a New Earth, who would be like them; for, when one perishes, the other succeeds; for there cannot be anything wanting; so does the Lord provide.

3260<sup>e</sup>. It was said that this was in the Earth Mars.

3352. I was shown by communication what is the nature of the adoration of the Lord by the inhabitants of Mars, which is so great and profound, and [attended] with such amazement, and at the same time with such full delight, that it cannot be described.

3488. Concerning the best Spirits, of another Earth [Mars], like those of the Primitive or the Moravian Church, Gen.art.

3881<sup>e</sup>. I perceive that the inhabitants of Mars have induced such a speech upon themselves, because they are in thoughts, and have receded from affection, in which they were at first, so that they speak in like manner; thus from thought, and not from affection, which is the pearly bird.

3882. But the forms of the inhabitants of Mars are still more subtle, because their speech is of the lips, and is thus much fuller than the speech of words.

3892. It was perceived and said to a good Spirit of Mars . . .

3893. An angelic Spirit of Mars with me . . .

A. 9930<sup>11</sup>. Hence to those who were fighting against evils and falsities, and were overcoming, crowns were assigned; and therefore also the crowns of martyrdom were ensigns of command from the Lord over evils.

R. 103. As the martyrs wished it, after death crowns were given them, by which was signified the reward of victory. These still appear in their crowns in Heaven, as has been given me to see.

112. 'In the days in which Antipas My faithful martyr, who was killed among you . . .' (Rev. ii. 13) = when all Truth has been extinguished . . . By 'a martyr' is signified the confession of the Truth, the like as by 'a witness,' because, in the Greek language, 'martyr,' and 'witness,' are one word.

300. As temptations are spiritual combats, which the martyrs endured, therefore crowns were given them as ensigns of victory.

D. 1325. They are unwilling to admit into Heaven any except martyrs . . .

3187. On martyrdoms.

— Some have pretended that because they were martyrs, and adorned with the crown of martyrdom, they were to predominate over others; to whom it has been given to say . . . that those who place merit in these things, and thus desire to predominate in Heaven, are not the true martyrs, because such a thing is not heavenly . . . Besides . . . there are many kinds of martyrdoms, as those of the Quakers, and others; so that every heresy can have its martyrs; for they who persuade themselves are willing, nay desire, to undergo death for their persuaded things, whatever phantasies they are. In monasteries . . . how many martyrizations are extant . . . And it was also given to say that many have undergone torments, dangers, and death for the sake of women . . .

E. 137. 'Antipas My faithful martyr'=those who are held in hatred on account of the acknowledgment of the Divine Human of the Lord . . .

358<sup>2</sup>. The like is signified by the crown of the martyrs, because they had been in affliction, and were faithful even unto death, and had also been in temptations, and had overcome. Crowns were also given them after death; but, lest they should arrogate to themselves honour therefrom, and should thus contract conceit, they cast them from off their heads.

394<sup>2</sup>. He who does not know from revelation who (the souls under the altar) are, will opine that only the martyrs are meant; when yet the martyrs are not meant; but all those who had suffered persecution and had been infested by those who had been in the former Heaven.

Mary. Maria.

A. 1460. The exteriors with Him were human from Mary His mother.

C. J. 66. Mary the Lord's mother once passed by, and was seen (in Heaven) above the head in white clothing (as of silk); and then she stayed a little and said that she had been the mother of the Lord, and indeed that He was born from her; but that having become God, He had put off the human from her; and that therefore she now adores Him as her God; and that she is unwilling for anyone to acknowledge Him as her son, because in Him everything is Divine. T.102<sup>2</sup>. 827. D.5834. 5992. De Dom.31. J.(Post.)68.

L. 35<sup>4</sup>. In other places, Mary is called His 'mother'; but not from His mouth.

R. 294<sup>11</sup>. You call Mary the mother-genitricem-of God; consequently you acknowledge that she bore God; that is, the Divine Human . . .

—<sup>11</sup>. A monk . . . said that he could think of the Divine Human in relation to the most holy virgin Mary, the god-bearer. T.111<sup>12</sup>.

M. 119<sup>2</sup>. By these words is meant, that the Lord did not acknowledge Mary as His mother; but the Church; and therefore He called her 'Woman,' and 'the mother' of the disciple.

466<sup>3</sup>. In the same proportion (a Christian polygamist) at heart acknowledges the Lord . . . as the son of Mary, and not at the same time as the Son of God.

T. 92. This has been effected through the Human which He assumed through the virgin Mary . . .

— He is called the Son of God, the Son of Man, and the Son of Mary; and by . . . the Son of Mary is properly meant the Human which He assumed . . .

That by the Son of Mary is meant what is merely human, is manifestly evident from the generation of men, in that the soul is from the father, and the body from the mother . . .

94. In modern Christian Churches it is a general thing to call our Lord the Saviour the Son of Mary, and rarely the Son of God, unless they then understand the Son of God born from eternity. The source of this is that the Roman Catholics have sanctified Mary above the rest, and have set her over all their saints as a goddess or queen; when yet the Lord, when He had glorified His Human, put off everything of His mother, and put on everything of the Father . . . From this general thing in the mouth of all, that He is called the Son of Mary, many enormities have inflowed into the Church . . . (which) are, that the idea of Divinity in relation to the Lord perishes, and, with this, all that which has been said in the Word concerning Him as the Son of God; then, that through this there enter Judaism, Arianism, Socinianism, Calvinism such as this was in the beginning; and, at last, naturalism; and, with this, the frantic madness that He was the son of Mary by Joseph; and also that He had His soul from the mother . . . Let everyone, both clergyman and layman, consider with himself as to whether he has conceived and cherishes any other idea about the Lord, as the son of Mary, than as of a mere man.

—<sup>4</sup>. These things take place while a man regards the Lord God the Redeemer and Saviour as the mere son of Mary; thus as a mere man.

102. It is believed that the Lord as to the Human not only has been, but also is, the son of Mary; but in this the Christian world hallucinates. That He has been the son of Mary is true; but that He is so still is not true; for by the acts of Redemption He put off the human from the mother, and put on the Human from the Father . . . (as) may be seen from this: that He Himself has never called Mary His mother. Ill. . . Thus did the Lord not call her 'mother,' but 'woman;' and He gave her to John as a mother. In other places she is called His 'mother;' but not from His own mouth.

342<sup>3</sup>. He who does not believe this; but only that He is the son of Mary; implants in himself various ideas about Him which are hurtful and destructive of his salvation.

E. 205<sup>o</sup>. Hence it is that He was not the son of David, as neither was He the son of Mary . . .

710<sup>31</sup>. The leaping in the womb at the salutation of Mary, represented joy from the love of the conjunction of good and truth . . .

768<sup>3</sup>. By 'the woman' (Gen.iii.15) the Papists understand Mary and the worship of her . . .

1055. With those who are of Babylon, (the Word) is acknowledged as Divine on account of . . . the historicals about Mary, etc.

Ath. 150. That which was born from Mary, the Lord . . . expelled.

Mass. Missa.

J. 56°. The worship (of the Babylonians there) consists in masses, as in the world, which are performed in a language not common to Spirits; but composed of high-sounding words, which strike a holy external and tremor; and which are not at all understood.

P. 257°. To prevent (the profanation of all things of the Word and of the Church) the Lord by His Divine Providence took care that they should . . . place holy worship in masses not understood by the common people . . .

R. Pref. III. (The doctrinals of the Roman Catholics) concerning masses, quoted.

792°. The external affections in which they are while they are hearing masses . . . are merely natural, sensuous, and corporeal . . .

795°. Is this not solely for the sake of masses, which they call sacrifices propitiatory, most holy, pure, with nothing but what is most holy in them; by which they infuse holiness into the bodily senses of men, and at the same time infuse light into all things of faith and spiritual life; and this for the reason that in the thick darkness they may dominate and acquire gain?

T. 159°. For a like reason the Roman Catholics cry out their masses in the Latin idiom . . .

H. 219. In every house (in Heaven) there is a master and there are domestic servants; the master loves the servants, and the servants love the master; whence from love they serve each other mutually; the master teaches how men ought to live, and tells what is to be done; the servants obey, and perform their offices.

W. 249°. For the natural man is a servant, and the spiritual man is a master and lord.

T. 10. A house (would fall to pieces) unless (it depended upon) one master.

131. In like manner . . . a servant is united to his master by doing those things which are agreeable to his will . . .

Matrimony. Matrimonium.

Matrimonial. Matrimonialis.

A. 471<sup>6</sup>. The reason why everyone contracted matrimony within the families. Ex. 483<sup>3</sup>.

865<sup>6</sup>. The celestial man (therefore) abhors matrimony with a number.

3024<sup>6</sup>. The reason why they were not to contract matrimones with the daughters of the Canaanites. Ex. 5998.

3914. When what is matrimonial is meant, (it)= conjunction.

9002. Matrimony, which is here meant by 'betrothal,' in the spiritual sense, is the conjunction of the life of one with that of the other. According to Divine order, it is conjunction of life from the truths of faith with life from the good of charity. Hence is all spiritual conjunction, from which as from its own origin natural conjunction comes forth.

M. 49. (The limited choice that there is in contracting matrimony).

274. That there are external affections according to which matrimones are commonly contracted in the world. Gen.art.

275. But if the internal affections which conjoin minds are not in them, the matrimones are dissolved in the house. Gen.art.

276. Still, matrimones in the world are to continue to the end of life. Gen.art.

277. In matrimones in which the internal affections do not conjoin, there are external ones which simulate internal ones, and consociate. Gen.art.

282. For a spiritual man coupled in the matrimonial covenant with a natural one, intends nothing else than amendment of life . . .

318. That after the death of a consort again to contract matrimony depends upon the preceding conjugal love. Ex. 319, Ex.

320. That with those with whom there has not been love truly conjugal, nothing stands in the way of their contracting repeated matrimony. Ex.

D. 3190. With him who rejects all the matrimonial duty . . . when adultery is committed, Heaven is closed; because the matrimonial duty involves the Divine Heavenly, and the love of heavenly things; still more with a woman than with a man.

3613<sup>6</sup>. There are obscenities of speech, of thought, and of life (in Christian countries) which cause matrimones to become vile, which yet are for the sake of the propagation of the human race.

3899. (On women who nauseate matrimones.)

Matter. Materia.

Material. Materialis.

Materially. Materialiter.

Materialized. Materialatus.

See under IDEA, and SUBSTANCE.

A. 880<sup>3</sup>. In every work of charity the work itself is nothing except a material something . . .

995. In themselves, corporeal and sensuous things are nothing except things material, inanimate, and dead . . .

1025<sup>2</sup>. The material, worldly, and corporeal ideas which man has when he reads the Word, with the Angels become spiritual and celestial ideas. Examp.

1072. The thought of man is nothing but what is earthly, corporeal, and material; because it is from earthly, corporeal, and material things, which constantly adhere; and in which the ideas of his thought are founded and terminated . . .

1408<sup>2</sup>. So the historicals of the Word, and also all the several words in it, are general, natural, nay, material, vessels, in which are spiritual and celestial things.

1472<sup>2</sup>. In the same proportion, scientifics close themselves towards the Lord, and become material.

1526<sup>2</sup>. In what great light are they who are withdrawn from material ideas in spiritual things.

1645<sup>e</sup>. The Angels care nothing for the rest, which are ideal and material.

1876. The names of men, kingdoms, cities, which are in the Word, in like manner as the words of human speech, perish at the first threshold, when they ascend; for they are earthly, corporeal, and material things, which the Souls who come into the other life successively put off . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The Spirits . . . could not pronounce (one word of human language), because these words are grossly material; so that they were below their sphere . . .

1953<sup>2</sup>. The first ideas, which are taken up from the objects of sight, are material; as they are also called.

1955<sup>e</sup>. Abstractedly from material ideas . . .

2657<sup>2</sup>. The ideas of the corporeal memory . . . are relatively very material.

3741<sup>e</sup>. Thought and will . . . are spiritual and celestial; but the forms or substances which receive them . . . are material . . .

3745<sup>e</sup>. So that the things which are corporeal and material with man, are there celestial and spiritual.

4364<sup>4</sup>. The body through the material eyes can see the things in the world, and can act through the material muscles . . . Still, there is something which thinks and wills interiorly, whose material instrumental or organ the body is . . .

4408. The imagination . . . the ideas of which are called by philosophers material ideas . . . The ideas of (thought) are called immaterial . . . 6987<sup>3</sup>.

4411<sup>e</sup>. In the eye, this (truth) is presented materially . . .

4659<sup>2</sup>. The body is what is material annexed to it . . .

4901<sup>3</sup>. The lower thought, the ideas of which are called material.

5102<sup>2</sup>. The Angels do not see the faces of man in the material form . . .

5559. Those with whom . . . the material things there obey spiritual things . . .

6200. The material ideas of thought have (then) appeared to me as if in the midst of a kind of wave . . . Thus it appeared as material. 6201.

6486<sup>e</sup>. When building a palace, he first heaps up material of every kind . . .

6697<sup>2</sup>. The Earths are . . . bodies of earthly matter, because they reflect the lumen of the sun.

6809<sup>e</sup>. (The Spirits of Mercury) said that it is no delectation to them to look at material, corporeal, and earthly things; but only real ones . . . They relate to the memory of things abstracted from material and earthly things. 6921.

6811. But merely material things carry the lower mind downwards . . .

6814. As the speech of words is material, they are averse to it . . . Their memory . . . is not of images purely material . . . For the thought which is above the imagination requires for objects things abstracted from material things.

6816. The Spirits of our Earth . . . care for material, worldly, corporeal, and earthly things.

—<sup>e</sup>. The Spirits of Mercury (say) that they love the products from material things.

6921. For material things are like heavy things, which induce slowness . . . for they carry the mind downwards, and immerse it in earthly things, and thus remove it from the Spiritual World, whence is all clear-sightedness.

6924<sup>e</sup>. In their place they present words, which are forms of material things.

7253. The Spirits of Venus . . . relate to the memory of material things which corresponds to the memory of immaterial things . . .

7381<sup>2</sup>. For man has formed his ideas from the things which are in . . . grosser nature; that is, from the things which he has seen and touched with the sense in the world and upon the earth, which are material. The ideas of the interior thought with man, although above material things, are still terminated in material things; and, where they are terminated, there they appear to be; thence does he perceive what he thinks.

9127<sup>4</sup>. In which light, the material things which are in the thought from the body disappear.

10216. These names . . . are among material things . . .

10316. They said (that if they saw through my eyes) they would see nothing but earthly and material things; from which they remove their thoughts as much as they can.

10582. Still, it is false with them; for they have a material and earthly idea about the truth, and not at the same time a spiritual and celestial one; and every material and earthly idea, if there is not light from Heaven in it, swarms with fallacies. Examp.

—<sup>3</sup>. When they think about God, they think materially; and therefore either deny God, or . . .

10604<sup>2</sup>. But the ideas of thought which man comprehends, and which fall into words, are natural, and by the learned are called material; but the interior ones are called spiritual, and by the learned immaterial . . .

10758<sup>2</sup>. But this idea . . . is changed into a material idea about his earthly body . . .

H. 432<sup>2</sup>. As what is material is not alive . . .

453<sup>2</sup>. The eye, in so far as it sees in the world, is material; and what is material sees only what is material . . . and therefore when the Material of the eye is veiled over and deprived of its co-operation with the Spiritual, Spirits then appear in their own form . . .

N. 39. The man whose Internal is with the External in the light of the world, thinks not spiritually but materially; for he thinks from such things as are in the nature of the world, all of which are material. To think spiritually is . . . also to see the qualities of things and to perceive their affections, abstractedly from matter; whereas to think materially is to think, see, and perceive them together with matter, and in matter; thus relatively grossly and obscurely.

U. 38. For in the other life everyone . . . speaks materially in proportion as he had not believed in God.

L. 35<sup>2</sup>. The human from the mother, which was in itself like the human of another man, and thus material, He put off . . .

—<sup>10</sup>. As His body was now not material, but Divine substantial, He came to the disciples when the doors were closed; and, after He had been seen, He became invisible . . .

W. 5<sup>2</sup>. But He can create from substances and matters so formed that they can receive heat itself and light itself; comparatively as the sun of the world cannot produce germinations on the earth through its heat and light immediately; but from the matters of the soil . . .

65. Ultimates are . . . each and all things of the mineral kingdom, which are matters of various kinds . . .

158<sup>2</sup>. (Otherwise) the earths . . . could not have subministered the matters through which man comes forth and subsists.

207<sup>2</sup>. (These) are successive compositions . . . from the simples, which are their first substances or matters.

229. It is delivered by some that there is a substance so simple . . . that out of it . . . composite things come forth, and at last the substances which are called matters . . .

287<sup>2</sup>. In so far he becomes a man after the death of the material body.

302. That the atmospheres, which are three in each world . . . in their ultimates cease into substances and matters such as are in earths. Gen.art.

— . The atmospheres . . . at last become so compressed and inert, that . . . they are substances at rest; and, in the natural world fixed, such as are in earths, and are called matters. From this origin of substances and matters, it follows, First: That these substances and matters are also of three degrees. Secondly: That they are held together in connection by the ambient atmospheres. Thirdly: That they are accommodated to the production of all uses in their forms.

305. That in the substances and matters from which are earths there is nothing of the Divine in itself; but that still they are from the Divine in itself. Gen.art.

—<sup>e</sup>. From this sphere (which encompasses the Lord), by continuation from the Sun by means of the atmospheres, have arisen the substances and matters from which are earths.

307. That all uses . . . receive forms from the substances and matters such as are in earths. Gen.art.

310. For the substances and matters from which are earths are the ends and terminations of the atmospheres which proceed as uses from the spiritual Sun . . . It follows that thence there is in them a perpetual endeavour to produce forms of uses . . . It is said that this endeavour and quality are in earths; but the meaning is that they are with those substances and matters from which are earths; whether they are in earths, or are exhaled from earths in the atmospheres . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That there is such an endeavour and quality in the substances and matters of earths, is manifestly evident from the fact, that seeds of every kind, opened by means of heat even to their inmost, are impregnated by very subtle substances, which cannot be from any but a spiritual origin, and thereby they are in the power of conjoining themselves with use, from which is their Prolific; and then, through conjunction with matters from a natural origin, they can produce forms of uses . . .

311. The atmospheres in ultimates become such forces, by which the substances and matters such as are in earths, are actuated into forms, and are held together in forms, both within and without.

313. The first forms (of the mineral kingdom) are the substances and matters from which are earths, in their leasts; the second forms are congregations from these . . .

315. The heat, light, and atmospheres of the natural world only open seeds . . . and put upon them the matters which fix them.

[W.315]<sup>e</sup>. The image of creation is spiritual; but in order that it may appear and perform use in the natural world, and may stand fixed and be lasting, it must be materialized; that is, filled full with the matters of this world.

340. It is the Spiritual . . . which produces the forms of plants and animals . . . and packs them with matters from the Earth, in order that they may be fixed and constant forms.

344<sup>2</sup>. He said that if that bird were infilled in its leasts with corresponding matters from the Earth, and were thus fixed, it would be a durable bird . . .

370. The very forms of the members, organs, and viscera . . . are fixed through substances and matters such as are in earths, and from earths in the air and ether. This is effected by means of the blood. Therefore, in order that all things of the body may subsist in their formation, and thus be permanent in their functions, man is to be nourished with material food . . .

388. The material form, which is added and superinduced in the world, is not a human form from itself; but it is from those things added and superinduced that man is able to do uses in the natural world; and also to take with him from the purer substances of the world a certain fixed containant of spiritual things . . .

419. This love (of self and the world) is corporeal natural, and may be called material.

P. 29. It is otherwise in the natural world, in which all are material . . . There are spaces . . .

R. 504. When the Lord is thought of as a material man . . .

611<sup>5</sup>. His meditation then appears from afar as a horse . . . miserable and dead in proportion as he meditates on the Word materially. —7.

—<sup>6</sup>. The boys then asked, What is it to meditate spiritually and materially upon the Word? The master replied . . . Everyone who thinks about God solely from Person, and not from Essence, thinks materially. He also who thinks about the neighbour solely from form, and not from quality, thinks materially. And he who thinks about Heaven solely from place, and not from the love and wisdom from which Heaven is, likewise thinks materially.

—<sup>7</sup>. This is the reason why they who think about the Trinity . . . materially, cannot, from the ideas of their thought, which is material, do otherwise than from one God make three.

— To think of His Essence from His Person, is to think materially of His Essence also . . . As the ancient Gentiles thought materially about God, and also about the attributes of God, they invented . . . as many as a hundred. Know ye that the Material does not inflow into the Spiritual, but the Spiritual into the Material. . . And therefore he who cherishes a material idea about God, and also about the neighbour and Heaven, cannot understand anything in (the Word).

M. 31<sup>2</sup>. As a natural or material man sees a natural or material man; but not contrariwise; on account of the difference between the Substantial and the Material; which is like the difference between the Prior and the Posterior . . .

— This natural or material man was to it as a covering, or as exuviae . . .

207<sup>5</sup>. You had cherished an idea of the Spiritual abstracted from the Material; and that which was abstracted from the Material appeared to you as nothing . . . Here, all things are substantial and not material; and material things derive their origin from substantial ones. We, who are here, are spiritual men, because we are substantial and not material . . .

235<sup>2</sup>. To clothe spiritual things with adequate garments, that is, with matters, to operate ultimate ends in nature.

269<sup>2</sup>. The love of the world . . . is a material love; the love of self . . . is a corporeal love.

328. Substantial things are the beginnings of material things.

I. 1<sup>2</sup>. It is according to order that . . . the Spiritual should inflow into the Material . . .

16<sup>4</sup>. The atmospheres of the natural world derive from their origin that they are material.

T. 24<sup>5</sup>. That Jehovah God from His Sun . . . also produced the natural world, and all its natural things, which are also innumerable, but material.

75<sup>3</sup>. Hence all things which come forth here, are material, and are called natural.

79<sup>7</sup>. For there they were in a material body . . . (and) a material man sees himself and all his companions . . . For the Substantial is the Primitive of the Material.

— Is distinct as the Substantial is from the Material . . .

92. Everything material man has, is from the mother.

160. Men . . . must be in a natural material body.

280<sup>8</sup>. You (in the Spiritual World) are substantial, and not material; and substantial things are the beginnings of material things. What is matter except a congregation of substances? . . .

281. But not in a material body; but in a substantial body, which before their senses appears as if it were material, although it is not.

569. When the material body has been taken away . . .

709. Natural and sensuous ideas, which are material, corporeal, and carnal, about the Lord's flesh and blood.

793<sup>2</sup>. The difference . . . is that a man in the natural world is clothed with a material body, in which, within, is his substantial body; and a . . . material man sees a material man; but a substantial man cannot see a material man, nor a material man a substantial man, on account of the difference between the Material and the Substantial . . .

798. Before, he had been . . . also in a material body, which clothed the substantial one round; and the material body had been rejected . . .

Ad. 1457<sup>2</sup>. For in the air and ether there are floods of such parts . . . There are perpetual material beginnings, from which all composition is possible.

D. 2299. He perceived it materially . . . as small white lines, which is a sign that spiritual things are conceived materially; which, however, are not material things, because they are forces from substances. When therefore, those who want to enter from physics or philosophy into those things which are spiritual . . . the material ideas remain, which are thus represented in the other life.

2512. It was given me to see that in use there can be nothing material . . .

— For the Natural cannot be distinguished from the Material; as heat, moisture, dew, rain, which are natural.

2751. I spoke with Spirits about the corporeal or material things of man: that they are the ultimates of order . . . Whence is the memory of objects, which are material ideas . . .

2762. On the regeneration of the corporeal or material things of man or Spirit: how they are represented.

— As the corporeal and material things, which are the ultimates of man, are at last subordinated to the Lord's good pleasure . . .

2763<sup>e</sup>. Thus are represented the corporeal or material things of a regenerated man . . .

3022. As man is the ultimate of order, his ideas are thus terminated in . . . the material ideas of his memory . . .

3605<sup>e</sup>. They drew back the foot when places were thought of, a sign that . . . places and material things were the supports on which they stand.

3610. Hence it is evident that the ideas of Spirits are terminated in material things, the ultimates of order; and that when these are taken away they do not know where they are; and they disappear before they have fixed their ideas in other material things. So in the Word of the Lord . . .

3753. That Spirits terminate their ideas in material things. Ex.

— A remarkable example that they terminate their ideas in material things; without which they are absent. Des.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is evident in what way the ideas of Spirits are terminated in material things; and it was perceived . . . that such a thing was their foot . . . There are also Spirits who have my hooks . . . for their ultimate of order.

3852. I told them . . . that order is terminated in material things, which when some Spirits lose, they seem to themselves to have nothing on which to stand, so that they seem to themselves to lose their feet.

4143. On the material things of words. Ex.

— When I took, and inserted, one word which was not in my memory, there took place a change of Spirits. Other Spirits succeeded, and the others complained much . . . that thus they cannot be present . . . The reason was that Spirits had succeeded who indulge in words, or in the material things of speech; while the former ones [indulge] solely in thoughts. Thus . . . the former Spirits and the latter cannot be together . . . for they who inhere in the material things of the Word take away the faculty of thinking from those who want solely to think.

4184. The idea is dead, because material and closed with man.

4211. In the World of Spirits they have their ideas founded in material and corporeal things; and the ideas which are not material they still bound, and make them material . . .

4212. But the interior Spirits do not thus make their ideas material; but they make the things (or subjects) themselves material; and to the things so made they adjoin ideas . . .

5625. All the natural ideas there perish . . . thus material things perish . . .

5626. Hence it is that spiritual wisdom increases in proportion as it is removed from the material notion . . .

5787a. But they who are in externals (there) speak according to the nature of the thing in the world; and still they are understood, because there is correspondence. But this speech is therefore material.

5936. Women who think about religious things as men do, and speak much about them, and still more if they preach in meetings . . . become material . . .

6049. On the material idea with Spirits and Angels. Ex.

— All those who have not believed in the Lord by acknowledging His Divine, and have not lived according to the precepts of religion, in the other life think in the Material; thus they cannot think spiritually; that is, abstractedly from space, time, persons . . . (So with) Polhem and Wolff . . . they cannot do otherwise than think in the Material. It has been tried with them, that material things should be separated, but in vain. Hence it is that in the other life the same speak in the spiritual language, but still it is mixed with their vernacular . . .

E. 30. In Heaven . . . they call the thought about (the Lord's flesh and blood) material . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The Angels wonder that the man of the Church (should) think materially about the Lord and His flesh and blood. But . . . they were told that most, especially the simple . . . when they have approached the Holy Supper, have thought nothing about the flesh and blood . . . and that this is constantly provided by the Lord, for the reason that the man of the Church may then be in a spiritual idea, and not in a material one.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason a material eating is understood . . . in the doctrines, is that they have thought about the Lord's Human as about the human of another man . . . (and therefore) could not but think materially about His flesh and blood.

543<sup>3</sup>. The sensuous thought of man is that which is called material thought . . .

654<sup>2</sup>. After death, the thought with a merely natural man is indeed spiritual; but it is gross and devoid of intelligence of truth and affection of good; for it consists of corresponding ideas, which indeed appear as if material, but still are not material.

781<sup>4</sup>. For a natural man takes the ideas of his thought from earthly, corporeal, and worldly things, which in themselves are material; and, when the thought of a man is not elevated above these things, he thinks materially about spiritual things; and material thought, without spiritual light, derives all it has from the loves of the natural man and from their delights...

[E.] 1131<sup>2</sup>. And everything extended (in thought) is of matter.

—4. The light itself and the heat itself from the sun of the world are not material; but still they affect material substances...

1139<sup>e</sup>. Just as the light of the sun cannot be united to a subject of the Earth, and become material as it is; and in like manner the heat.

1207<sup>3</sup>. The reason the Spiritual can be clothed by the Material, is that all things which come forth in the nature of the world... are effects produced by the Spiritual as the cause; and effects act as one with the cause...

—4. For the sake of this end the sun of the world has been created; and, through the sun, nature; and, in the ultimate, the terraqueous globe, in order that there may be ultimate matters there, in which all the Spiritual may cease, and in which creation may subsist: to the end also, that the work of creation may there continually endure and be perennial...

1211<sup>4</sup>. Hence the matters in the earths of our Earth are fixed, and the germinations constant. But the matters or substances in the earths which are in the Heavens are not fixed, and thence neither are the germinations from them constant...

1218<sup>2</sup>. Pure love, from which all things in the Spiritual World come forth immediately, is immaterial; but pure fire, through which all things in the natural world come forth mediately, is material. Hence it is... that all things which come forth in the natural world, are, from their secondary origin, material; and material things are in themselves fixed, stated, and measurable; fixed, because they are permanent, however the states of men may be changed; as lands, mountains, and seas: stated, because they constantly recur by turns; as times, generations, and germinations: and measurable, because all things can be bounded; as spaces by miles... and ells, and times by days, weeks, months, and years. (Contrasted with the Spiritual World.)

—3. Not knowing that the things which they see and feel there, are not material, but substantial from a spiritual origin... But still I can asseverate that the things in the Spiritual World are more real than those in the natural world; for the deadness which accedes to the Spiritual in nature does not make realness, but diminishes it...

J. (Post.) 267<sup>2</sup>. Colours are not material, as neither is light... In the world neither the heat nor the light is material, but natural; and they inflow into matters... and therefore neither are the colours material, as they would be if they were to come forth from atoms of various colours.

323. It is to be known that all the things which have been enumerated (as lands, mountains, animals, etc.) are (there) not material, but spiritual; that is, that they are from a spiritual origin; and yet Spirits know no otherwise than that they are material...

—<sup>e</sup>. He, like others, knew no otherwise than that he was material, when yet he was spiritual. He was soon instructed that his material body... which had then invested his spiritual body, is buried.

De Verbo 3<sup>6</sup>. All the thoughts of man, with each of their ideas, derive something from... what is material...

—Hence these thoughts or ideas of thoughts are exceedingly limited and terminated, and are thus gross, and are to be called material.

—7. Therefore the speech of men partakes in each word of... what is material.

—<sup>9</sup>. All the Celestial inflows into the Spiritual; and the Spiritual into the Natural; and into the ultimate of this, which is corporeal and material, it ceases, and there subsists. Without such an ultimate—into which the intermediates may inflow—there is no subsistence...

D. Love viii. But the waters and the matters of the Earth are only the means of their generation and production.

D. Wis. viii<sup>6</sup>. The quality of the substances in the Spiritual World, relatively to the matters in the natural world, shall now be told. The substances in the Spiritual World appear as if they were material; but still are not; and, as they are not material, they are therefore not constant... But in the natural world there are matters, through which, and from which, procreations, and afterwards formations, can be effected...

xii. 5<sup>3</sup>. All things which appear in the natural world... are in like manner from a spiritual origin, but are at the same time from a natural origin. A natural origin has been added, in order that they may be at the same time material and fixed, for the sake of the end of the procreation of the human race, which is not possible except in ultimates...

Can. God iv. 8. Natural things are material; and these have come forth and subsist from spiritual things, as the Posterior from the Prior, or the Exterior from the Interior.

Coro. 11. Not a material man, as before; but a substantial man.

Matter. Sanies.

Life 110<sup>e</sup>. Hereditary evil thus shut in... after death... breaks forth like matter through an ulcer only exteriorly healed.

P. 278a<sup>5</sup>. All evil which does not appear... is like the matter in a wound which is not opened... 281<sup>2</sup>.

R. 681. By 'blood as of one dead,' or by gore and matter, is signified infernal falsity...

M. 149. Still, the unchastity lies within like the matter in a wound only outwardly healed.

T. 435<sup>2</sup>. If evil is in the internal man, and good in the external... the good in the external man is like a wound cured palliatively, within which there is putrescent matter.

E. 700<sup>21</sup>. The matter of the haemorrhoids=truth defiled.

Inv. 25. It would be like a palliative curing, a wound in which the matter remains and eats away the neighbouring parts. Orthodoxy is this very matter . . .

Mature. See under ADOLESCENCE.

Mature. Maturus.

Maturity. Maturitas.

Mature, To. Maturescere.

A. 2960<sup>c</sup>. The quality of the state of the man of the Spiritual Church when he is yet immature; when he begins to mature; and when at last he has matured. Des.

5117. 'The clusters thereof ripened grapes' (Gen. xl. 10)=the conjunction of spiritual truth with celestial good. 'To ripen'=the progress of regeneration even to the conjunction of truth with good; thus conjunction. . . Their conjunction in the Sensuous is circumstanced as is the ripening-maturitio-of clusters into grapes; for in the regeneration all truth tends to conjunction with good; before this, truth does not receive life. . . This is represented in the fruits of trees when they ripen. In unripe ones, which here are 'the clusters,' is represented the state when truth as yet predominates; but in the ripe ones, which here are 'the grapes,' the state when good has the predominance. The predominance of good is also represented in the flavour and sweetness which are perceived in ripe grapes.

7604. 'Because the barley was a ripening ear' (Ex. ix. 31)=that that good . . . stood forth, and looked downwards. . . 'A ripening ear'=that they stood forth . . . for those which are ripe stand forth in their ear and stalk, so that they fall downwards. Ex.

8851. They come to maturity more quickly than in this Earth . . .

10185<sup>3</sup>. Fruit corresponds to good itself, which, in proportion as it ripens like fruit, in the same proportion puts itself forth into works.

R. 649<sup>4</sup>. 'Because her grapes have ripened' (Rev. iv. 18)=that it is the last state of the Christian Church. The like is signified by 'the grapes of the vineyard having ripened,' as above by 'the harvest having dried up;' but 'the harvest' is said of the Church in general, and 'the vineyard' of the Church in particular.

M. 187<sup>2</sup>. An age which is midway between mature and immature . . .

D. 4515. She was not yet ripe (for such a doom), which they found out by the fact that she hung like something aerial, and which was carried to and fro.

Maul. (An Englishman.) D.4827.

Mausoleum. Mausolaeum. T.676<sup>2</sup>.

Me. Me.

A. 6981. 'In me' (Ex. iv. 10) is a formula of asseveration that so it is; and therefore it=what is certain. 6995.

H. 556. What is this to me?

Meadow. Pratum.

A. 3220. When the Angels have discourse about the things which are of intelligence and wisdom, and about perceptions and Knowledges . . . the influx thence into the corresponding Societies of Spirits, falls into the representations of such things as are in the vegetable kingdom; as into those of paradises, vineyards, forests, meadows with flowers . . . which surpass all the imagination of man. Hence it is that the things which are of wisdom and intelligence are described in the Word by 'paradises,' 'vineyards,' 'forests,' 'meadows;' and that, where these things are mentioned, such things are signified.

5201<sup>2</sup>. 'To pasture in a broad meadow' (Is. xxx. 23)=to be instructed abundantly.

—4. When there is discourse in Heaven about instruction, and about doctrine from the Word, then in the World of Spirits . . . there are represented to the sight green meadows with grass, herbs, flowers, and also flocks therein; and this with all variety according to the quality of the discourse . . .

6049<sup>2</sup>. 'A broad meadow'=the doctrine of truth . . .

9699. (In the First Earth) there appeared many meadows and forests . . .

10161. They said that (in the Second Earth) they have meadows, flower-gardens, forests . . .

M. 355. I saw in a certain meadow, men clothed in like garments to those of men in the world . . .

E. 644<sup>12</sup>. 'A broad meadow'=the Word through which is Divine influx and spiritual nourishment . . .

730<sup>28</sup>. 'Meadows' (Ps. lxxv. 13)=those things which are of the spiritual mind and thence of the rational.

Meal. See FLOUR.

Meals. See SUPPER.

Means. See under MEDIUM.

Measure. See under METHOD - modus.

Measure. Choinix.

A. 3941<sup>8</sup>. 'A measure of wheat for a penny'=that love is so rare; 'three measures of barley for a penny'=that charity is so.

R. 315. 'A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny' (Rev. vi. 6)=because the estimation of good and truth is so little, that it is scarcely any. These things are signified, because by 'a measure,' which was both a measure-mensura-and the quantity measured, is signified quality.

E. 374. 'A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny'=that the genuine good of the Church with them is as nothing, and also the genuine truth of the Church; as is evident from the signification of 'a measure,' which was the measure-mensura-for wheat and barley with the Greeks, and which =the quality of the estimation; for by measures-mensuras-in the Word . . . is signified the quality of a thing as to good and as to truth.

Measure. Mensura.

Measure, To. Metiri, Mensurare.

Measurement. Mensuratio.

Measurable. Mensurabilis.

A. 576. Here, (Ezek.xlv.10-14), it treats, by means of measures (the 'ephah,' 'bath,' 'homer,' and 'cor') of the holy things of Jehovah, by which are signified the kinds of holy things . . .

602. The remains with him are described by measures ('cubits') (Gen.vi.15).

648. That the numbers and measures in the Word=celestial and spiritual things . . . Ill.

— The measurement of the New Jerusalem, and of the New Temple.

3104<sup>2</sup>. 'Weight' is predicated of good ; and 'measure,' of truth. Ex.

3405. 'He found in that year a hundred measures' (Gen.xxvi.12)=abundance. . . 'A measure'=the state of a thing as to truth.

3858<sup>3</sup>. This number, 'the measure of a man, that is, of an Angel'=the state of truth and good. 'Measure'=state.

4482. In the Word, the things which are described according to measures, in the internal sense do not signify measures, but such things of state ; for measures involve spaces . . . (Therefore,) lengths, breadths, and heights, which belong to measured space,=such things as are of state.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is evident, that the things which are of measures, and which are limitations of space . . . in the spiritual sense are those things which determine the states of the affections of good and of the affections of truth.

5658. Weights and measures are (frequently) mentioned in the Word ; but, in the internal sense, they do not=weights and measures ; but weights=the state of a thing as to good ; and measures, the state of a thing as to truth.

5708. 'By five measures' (Gen.xliii.34)=that it was much increased . . . 'Measures'=the states of truth from good.

7984<sup>3</sup>. Everyone who is either damned or saved, has a certain measure, which can be infilled ; the evil, who are damned, have a certain measure of evil and falsity ; and the good, who are saved, have a certain measure of good and truth. This measure is infilled with everyone in the other life ; but some have a greater measure, and some a less. This measure is acquired in the world through the affections which are of the love ; the more anyone had loved evil and the derivative falsity, the greater is the measure he has acquired ; and the more anyone had loved good and the derivative truth, the greater is his measure. The limits and degrees of the extension of this measure, in the other life manifestly appear, and cannot be there transcended ; but they can be infilled, and also actually are infilled ; namely, with goods and truths with those who have been in the affection of good and truth ; and with evils and falsities with those who have been in the affection of evil and falsity. Hence it is evident, that this measure is the faculty of receiving either evil and falsity, or good and truth, which has been acquired in the world. Sig.

—<sup>e</sup>. That everyone's measure is infilled, the Lord also teaches in : 'Give, and it shall be given unto you ; good measure, pressed, shaken, and running over, shall they give into your bosom' (Luke vi.38). From these things it is now evident what is meant by a full state.

8468. 'An omer' is mentioned only in this chapter ; elsewhere 'a homer,' which was a measure containing ten ephahs . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. 'A homer' is predicated of good, because it is a measure of wheat and barley ; in like manner 'an ephah ;' whereas 'a bath' is predicated of truth, because it is a measure of wine ; and, as it is also a measure of oil . . . 8540.

8473. 'They measured with an omer' (Ex.xvi.18)=the power of the reception of good.

8533. That it may be a measure for those who are of that Spiritual Church . . . Thus a measure of how much good this Church possessed. Sig.

— As to the measure or degree of good belonging to a Church, it is to be known that goods in the other life are as to quality, and as to quantity ; and that they are defined with everyone when he lives in the world ; they are defined according to the quality and quantity of everyone's faith and charity in the life . . . The quantity and quality of the good possessed by everyone and by the Church, is represented by the weights and by the measures in the Word . . .

8750<sup>2</sup>. In the other life, all things are measured by progressions of state, and their successive changes from beginning to end, as in the world by times.

8988<sup>4</sup>. By 'to measure,' and 'a measure,' is signified the state as to truth . . .

9487<sup>2</sup>. By 'the measuring' of the New Jerusalem as to length, is signified the quality of the good ; and as to breadth, the quality of the truth.

9603. 'One measure for all the curtains' (Ex.xxvi.2)=a like state of the thing ; (for) 'a measure'=the state of a thing as to truth . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. That 'a measure'=the state of a thing as to truth, and also the state of a thing as to good, is evident from the places in the Word where it treats of the measurements of the New Jerusalem, and also of the New Temple. . . By their measures are signified states as to truth and as to good. Ill. and Ex.

— The 'measure of a man, that is, of an Angel'=that such was the state of the Church and of Heaven as to the goods of love and the truths of faith ; for 'a man'=the Church ; and 'an Angel'=Heaven . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. The like is signified by the measurement in Zechariah ii.1,2 . . . and also in Ezek.xl.-xlii. . . Unless the measurements there signified the states of a thing as to truth and as to good, such things would never have been mentioned.

— By 'to measure,' in general, is signified the states of truth and good. Ill.

9643<sup>2</sup>. The measures of the earth (Job xxxviii.5)=states of good and truth.

10123<sup>2</sup>. 'To measure' (Rev.xi.1)=to Know the quantity and quality of truth and good ; and therefore it is not only said, 'Measure the temple and the altar,' but also 'those adoring in it' . . . 'To measure'=to Know the state of a thing as to truth and good. Ref.

10136<sup>a</sup>. The 'ephah' and 'hin' were measures; and by measures is signified the quantity of the thing which is being treated of; by an 'ephah,' which was a measure of fine flour, of wheat, and of barley, the quantity of good; and by 'a hin,' which was a measure of wine, and of oil, the quantity of truth.

10179. Equally from both, is signified by 'its length a cubit, and its breadth a cubit;' thus by the measure being equal; because by the measures in the Word, a thing is determined as to its quantity and quality; and the determination is made by the numbers.

10262. 'A hin,' which was a measure of liquids, here, of oil, = the quantity of the conjunction.

—<sup>2</sup>. Two measures, which were in holy use, are mentioned in the Word; one for liquids, which was called 'a hin;' and the other for dry things, which was called 'an ephah.' By the hin were measured oil and wine; and by the ephah, meal and fine flour; the measure hin . . . was divided into four; but the measure ephah was divided into ten. Ex. and Ill.

—<sup>4</sup>. There were other measures besides, which were in general use, both for dry things and for liquids; the measures for dry things were called 'the homer,' and 'the omer;' and the measures for liquids, 'the cor,' and 'the bath;' the homer contained ten ephahs, and the ephah ten omers; and the cor contained ten baths, and the bath ten lesser parts; concerning which, see Ex. xvi. 36; Ezek. xlv. 11, 13, 24. But in Ezekiel, where it treats of the New Temple, there stands forth another division of the ephah and of the bath. The ephah and the bath are there not divided into ten, but into six; and the hin there corresponds to the ephah; as is evident in xlv. 13, 14, 24; xlv. 5, 7, 11, 14. The reason is that it does not treat there about celestial good and its conjunction; but about spiritual good and its conjunction; and, in the Spiritual Kingdom, the numbers twelve, six, and three, correspond, because by them are signified all things; and, when predicated of truths and goods, all things of truth and good in the complex.

H. 73<sup>a</sup>. 'The measure' = its quality. S. 43<sup>a</sup>.

307<sup>a</sup>. By 'the measure of the wall 144 cubits, which is the measure of a man, that is, of an Angel,' the Angels understand all these protecting truths in the complex, and their quality.

349. Those who have had little affection and longing, receive little; but still as much as they can receive within that degree. But those who have had much affection and longing, receive much. The degree itself of the affection and longing is as the measure, which is increased to the full; more, therefore, to him who has a great measure; and less to him who has a small one. The reason it is so, is that the love—to which belong the affection and the longing—receives all that which is in agreement with itself; therefore, in proportion as is the love, in the same proportion he receives. This is meant by the Lord's words: 'To everyone who hath shall be given, that he may have more abundantly' (Matt. xiii. 12; xxv. 29); 'Into the bosom shall he given good measure, pressed, shaken, and overflowing' (Luke vi. 38).

N. 1<sup>a</sup>. By 'measure' is signified the quality of the thing as to truth and as to good. Refs.

W. 73. The space in nature is measurable, in like manner the time. The time is measured by days, weeks, months, years, and ages; and a day by hours; a week and a month by days; a year by the four seasons; and ages by years. Nature derives this measurement from the apparent circumgyration . . . of the sun of the world. But it is otherwise in the Spiritual World . . .

P. 334. Each Angel is perfected according to the degree of the affection of good and truth in which he was when he went away from the world. It is this degree which is being perfected to eternity. That which is beyond this degree is outside the Angel . . . and that which is outside of him cannot be perfected within him. This is meant by 'the good measure, pressed . . .'

R. 133. By 'a balance in the hand,' is signified the estimation of truth and good; for all the measures, as well as the weights, in the Word, = the estimation of the thing which is being treated of. That measures and weights = such things, is evident from (the writing on the wall, Dan. v.).

—<sup>2</sup>. That the quality of truth and good is signified by measures and by scales in the Word. Ill.

485<sup>a</sup>. By 'to measure' is signified to Know.

486. 'Arise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and those who adore in it' (Rev. xi. 1) = the Lord's command that he should see and Know the state of the Church in the New Heaven. . . 'To arise and measure' = to see and to Know. 'To measure' = to Know and scrutinize the quality of the state.

—<sup>3</sup>. That 'to measure' = to Know and scrutinize the quality, is because by 'a measure' is signified the quality of the thing or state. This is signified by all the measures of the New Jerusalem . . . Further ill.

904. 'A golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof' (Rev. xxi. 15) = that there is given by the Lord to those who are in the good of love, the faculty of understanding and knowing the quality of the Lord's New Church as to doctrine, and its introductory truths, and as to the Word from which they are. . . By 'to measure' is signified to Know the quality of a thing; thus to understand and know. —<sup>2</sup>, Ill.

907. 'And he measured the city with the reed unto twelve thousand furlongs . . .' (ver. 16) = that there was shown the quality of that Church from doctrine . . . By 'to measure with the reed' is signified to Know the quality of the thing; and as the Angel measured it before John, there is signified to show it so that he might Know.

909. 'And he measured the wall of it, a hundred and forty-four cubits' (ver. 17) = that it was shown what is the quality of the Word in that Church; that from it are all its truths and goods.

910. 'The measure of a man, which is of an Angel' (id.) = the quality of that Church, that it makes one with Heaven. By 'the measure' is signified the quality of the thing.

D. 181. Their imaginations were entirely concerned about mensurations . . .

D. Min. 4791. Spirits who are infernal are rather long in the World of Spirits, and there exercise their wickednesses, for the sake of tempting Spirits, and this even until the measures of their evil are infilled. . . At last, when the measures are infilled, they endure more grievous, and at last the most grievous, penalties, and this in a rather long series, on the way to Hell, by many repetitions; and, at last, they are cast into Hell.

E. 220<sup>o</sup>. By 'to measure' is signified to explore its quality.

280<sup>13</sup>. 'The measure' = the quality.

304<sup>42</sup>. 'The stone,' here, = truth; and the measure, good.

373. For all the measures and weighings which are mentioned in the Word = the estimation of the thing which is being treated of as to good and as to truth; the numbers added determine the estimation as to its quality and quantity . . .

— The measures in the representative Church were many; as the omer, the homer, the ephah, the bath, the hin; and there were besides balances, and scales . . . and by the latter, in special, are signified the estimations of the thing as to truth; and therefore the weights . . . were stones or of stone.

—<sup>4</sup>. By the measures, here, (Is. xl. 12) are described the just ordination and estimation of all things in Heaven and in the Church according to the quality of the good and truth. The measures here are, 'the handful,' 'the span,' 'the triental,' 'the scales,' and 'the balances.'

374. See MEASURE = choinix — here.

—<sup>9</sup>. 'The measured wheat, and the designated barley, and the designated spelt' (Is. xxviii. 25) = to apply good and truth to the use of life.

429. Number and measure are mentioned in many places in the Word . . . (by which) in the spiritual sense is meant the quality of the thing which is being treated of. The quality itself is determined by the numbers which are expressed . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Spiritual things are not numbered and measured; but still they fall into numbers and measures when they fall out of the Spiritual World, or out of Heaven where the Angels are, into the natural world, or into the earth where men are.

430<sup>4</sup>. A 'City' is measurable; and therefore the spiritual things of that Church are designated by the measures in numbers.

— It is said that 'the measure 144 cubits was the measure of a man, that is, of an Angel.' What this involves, no one can know, unless he knows that by 'the measure,' in the spiritual sense, is signified the like as by 'the number;' namely, the quality of the thing which is being treated of . . .

627. For by 'to measure,' is signified to explore; and by 'the measure,' the quality of the thing. Hence, by 'the reed,' by which the temple and the altar were measured . . . or by the reed of measure, is signified the method of exploring the quality . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. That it was a reed by which the measurement was effected, is because by 'a reed' or cane, is signified Divine truth in the ultimate of order . . . and by truth in the ultimate of order . . . is effected all visitation or exploration. Ex.

628. For in the Spiritual World there are no distances which are constant and thence measurable, as in the natural world . . .

629. 'Arise, measure the temple of God, and the altar, and those who adore in it' = that he should explore the quality of the Church as to the reception of Divine truth and Divine good, and thence as to the worship of the Lord. 'To measure' = to explore a thing as to its quality.

—<sup>2</sup>. That 'to measure,' in the spiritual sense, does not signify to measure, may be evident from the fact that it was commanded to measure not only the temple and the altar, but also those adoring in it—and also that 'to measure the temple and the altar' involves something which is signified by their measures, thus which is signified by their length, breadth, and height—for 'to measure those who are adoring in the temple' cannot be said, unless 'to measure' = to explore their quality, or the quality of the thing.

—<sup>3</sup>. That 'to measure' = to explore the quality of a thing, and also to designate it, may be evident from the places in the Word where 'to measure,' and 'measures' are mentioned. III.

— (Thus) 'to measure' these things does not mean to measure them, but to designate the quality of the thing which is designated by each of the things measured . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. There are only three things which are measured; namely, breadth, length, and height; and by the breadth is signified the truth of the Church; by the length, the good of the Church; and by the height, both as to degrees . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. 'To measure the temple or house' = to thoroughly investigate and explore of what quality is the Church as to truth and as to good . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. 'To measure Jerusalem' (Zech. ii. 2) = to explore that New Church, and thence to know what its quality and quantity will be.

—<sup>9</sup>. 'He stood and measured the earth' (Hab. iii. 6) = exploration then of the quality of the Church. 'To measure' = to explore.

—<sup>10</sup>. The ordination of all things in the Heavens from Own power by means of Divine truth, is signified by 'Who hath measured the waters in His handful . . . ' (Is. xl. 12) . . . By 'to measure the waters' is signified to designate Divine truths.

—<sup>13</sup>. That by 'to mete—metiri,' and 'to measure—mensurare' is signified to designate and to determine the quality of a thing, and also to explore it, is because by 'a measure' is signified the quality of a thing, or quality. That this is signified by 'a measure,' may be evident from the following places. III.

—<sup>14</sup>. That the spiritual affection which is called charity will remain after death according to its quantity and quality, is meant by 'With what measure ye measure it shall be measured again to you;' and that this quantity and quality will be infilled to eternity, is meant by 'the measure being superadded to you who hear;' and that 'there shall be given into the hosom good measure, pressed, shaken, and overflowing.' 'Measure,' there, is the quantity and quality of the affection or the charity, which will be augmented to eternity within or according to the degree of it in the world.

—<sup>15</sup>. 'Not given by measure' (John iii. 24) = above all the quantity and quality of men, consequently what is infinite . . . From which it follows that 'measure,' here, also = quality . . .

—<sup>16</sup>. 'Make known to me, Jehovah, mine end, the measure of my days what it is' (Ps. xxxix. 4) = that he may know the state of his life and its quality; thus what quality of life would remain with him.

—<sup>17</sup>. As 'measures' = the quality of a thing, it is evident what is signified by 'the house of measures' (Jer. xxii. 14); by 'the portion of measures' (Jer. xiii. 25); and also by 'men of measures' (Is. xlv. 14). By 'measures,' there, is signified quality in all the complex.

—<sup>e</sup>. By these measures and by these weights is signified the estimation of a thing according to the quality of the truth and the good. Ill.

727<sup>13</sup>. 'They shall eat bread by weight . . . and drink waters by measure' (Ezek. iv. 16) = a defect of good and truth, and thence of power to resist evils and falsities.

951<sup>4</sup>. By the measurement of the Temple, is there described the New Church as to its quality; the numbers of the measures = this.

A. 2177. The meat-offering consisted of fine flour mixed with oil, and made into cakes.

— To these sacrifices was adjoined also the meat-offering, which . . . consisted of fine flour, mixed with oil, to which frankincense also was added, and likewise a libation of wine. These things represented . . . similar things to the sacrifices, but in a lesser degree; thus the things which are of the Spiritual Church, and also which are of the External Church.

—<sup>3</sup>. As regards the meat-offering, its nature is described, and how it was prepared into cakes, in a whole chapter in Moses (Lev. ii), and also in Num. xv., and elsewhere. The law of the meat-offering is described in these words in Leviticus: . . . 'This is the law of the meat-offering; that the sons of Aaron bring it before Jehovah to the faces of the altar, and he shall take from it his handful from the fine flour of the meat-offering; and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincense which is upon the meat-offering, and shall burn it upon the altar; an odour of rest, for a memorial to Jehovah; and the residue thereof Aaron and his sons shall eat; the unleavened things shall be eaten in a holy place; in the court of the Tent of the Assembly they shall eat it; it shall not be baked fermented; I have given it their part of my fiery things; the holy of holies is it' (vi. 14-17) . . . That 'they should take a handful,' represented that they should love with all their forces . . . 'Fine flour,' 'with oil,' and 'frankincense,' represented all things of charity; 'fine flour,' the Spiritual thereof; and 'oil,' the Celestial; 'frankincense,' what is thus grateful . . . That it was 'unleavened,' or 'not fermented' = that [it should be] sincere, thus from a sincere heart, and devoid of things unclean. That 'Aaron and his sons should eat the residue,' represented the Reciprocal of man, and appropriation, thus conjunction through love and charity; and therefore it was commanded that they should eat it in a holy place; and hence it is called 'the holy of holies.' These were the things which were represented by the meat-offering . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. The meat-offering is further treated of, as to what its nature ought to be in relation to each kind of sacrifice, and also in what way it was to be baked into cakes; and also what quality of one was to be offered by those who were being cleansed; and also on other occasions (in) Ex. xxix. 39-41; Lev. v. 11-13; vi. 14-21; x. 12, 13; xxiii. 10-13, 16, 17; Num. v. 15 et seq.; vi. 15-17, 19, 20; vii. xxviii. xxix. passim. Fine flour made into cakes, in general represented the same as bread, namely, the Celestial of love; and meal, its Spiritual . . . The breads which were called 'the bread of faces' . . . were made from fine flour, which was prepared into cakes . . .

3881<sup>8</sup>. 'Sweet' was the worship from love, which is 'the meat-offering of Judah;' and the worship from the derivative faith, which is 'the meat-offering of Jerusalem' (Mal. iii. 4).

4262<sup>2</sup>. For all the sacrifices in general, of whatever kind, were called 'gifts;' but the meat-offerings, which were of bread and wine, or of cakes with a libation, in special; for 'a meat-offering,' in the Original Language, means 'a gift.'

4581<sup>4</sup>. To the sacrifices were added the meat-offering and the libation. The meat-offering, which consisted of fine flour mixed with oil, signified celestial good; or, what is the same, the good of love; 'oil,' love to the Lord; and 'fine flour,' charity towards the neighbour. But the libation (or drink-offering), which consisted of wine, signified spiritual good; or, what is the same, the good of faith. Both, therefore, the meat-offering and the drink-offering, [signified] the same things as the bread and wine in the Holy Supper.

—<sup>5</sup>. That these were added to the burnt-offerings and sacrifices, is evident (from) Ex. xxix. 38-41; Lev. xxiii. 12, 13, 18; Num. vi. 13-15, 17; xv. 3-5, 11; xxviii. 6, 7.

— Further, concerning the meat-offerings and drink-offerings in the various kinds of sacrifices, see Num. xxviii. 7-end; xxix. 1-end.

—<sup>6</sup>. That 'the meat-offering,' and 'the drink-offering,' signified these things, may also be evident from the fact, that love and faith make the all of worship; and that the bread, which is there fine flour mixed with oil; and wine, = love and faith, thus the all of worship, in the Holy Supper. Refs.

6377<sup>2</sup>. 'Bread' (in the Holy Supper) is the good of celestial love; and 'the wine,' the good of spiritual love. This may also be evident from the meat-offering and the drink-offering in the sacrifices; the meat-offering there signified the good of love, and the drink-offering the good of faith. The meat-offering consisted of such things as signified the good of love; and the drink-offering, from wine, which signified the good of faith. Moreover, the sacrifices themselves were called 'bread.'

[A.] 7356<sup>a</sup>. As the signification of 'an oven' [was derived] thence, therefore the bread which was fabricated for the sacrifices, and was called 'the meat-offering'—that which was fabricated in an oven—was distinguished from the meat-offering which was fabricated in a cooking-pot (or pan) (Lev. ii. 4, 5, 7). It was the diversities of the good of love which were signified by these things.

7978. The bread of cakes is distinguished from common bread in this: that by the bread of cakes is signified the good of love towards the neighbour, thus spiritual good; and by common bread is signified the good of love to the Lord, thus celestial good. This spiritual good was signified by the meat-offering, which was offered and burned with the sacrifice upon the altar; for the meat-offering was baked into cakes and into wafers—lagana. [The laganum was a kind of cake made of flour and oil.] Ill.

8159<sup>b</sup>. 'The meat-offering which they will bring to Jehovah' (Mal. iii. 4) is faith and charity.

8540<sup>c</sup>. That 'an ephah' = good, is evident from the places where it treats of the meat-offering, for which meal or fine flour was determined by the ephah. Ill. And the 'meat-offering' = good.

9475<sup>d</sup>. But the things which are of affection and thence of the heart, are signified by 'the meat-offering' (Mal. i. 11).

—<sup>e</sup>. Meat-offering and burnt-offering' (Deut. xxxiii. 10) = such things as are of the affection and the heart, and have relation to the goods of love.

9993<sup>f</sup>. That 'cakes' = the celestial [middle] in the internal man, is because they are in the second order; for in the first is 'the bread of unleavened things'; in the second are 'cakes mixed with oil'; and in the third are 'lagana anointed with oil.' These three were called the 'meat-offerings,' and were offered upon the altar together with the burnt-offerings and sacrifices. The way in which they were to be fabricated is described in Lev. ii.; and the way in which they were to be offered, in various places . . .

9995<sup>g</sup>. As this is so, all the meat-offerings, which were fabricated in various ways, were made of fine flour mixed with oil. Ill.

10079<sup>h</sup>. Why it was appointed that not only the fat of the ram and its right flank were to be burned upon the altar, but also the breads, which were called 'meat-offerings,' when yet by the fat and by the flank good is equally signified as by the breads or meat-offerings . . . The reason was that sacrifices and burnt-offerings were not commanded, but permitted, and therefore there was not anything in them which was well-pleasing in the Heavens; and therefore the meat-offerings, which were breads, were also employed, and also libations of wine, in which there was what was well-pleasing; for 'bread' = all celestial good; and 'wine,' all its truth. Hence, too, it is that the sacrifices and burnt-offerings were called 'bread,' and also the meat-offerings or gifts; for, in the Original Language, 'meat-offerings' are 'gifts'

. . . Hence it is evident that it was also on account of this reason that the burnt-offerings and sacrifices were abrogated by the Lord, and the bread and wine retained. But it is to be known that the flesh of the sacrifice and of the burnt-offering in special signified spiritual good; but the bread of the meat-offering, celestial good; and that therefore not only flesh, but also bread was offered. 10137<sup>i</sup>.

10129<sup>j</sup>. As 'the bread,' and 'the meat-offering,' signified the good of love from the Lord to the Lord, which is celestial good, they also are called 'the holy of holies.' Ill. That the meat-offering, which was of unleavened bread, of cakes, and of unleavened lagana mixed with oil, = celestial good, or the good of love. Refs. —<sup>k</sup>.

10137. Here, ('wine') = spiritual truth corresponding to spiritual and celestial good, which is signified by 'fine flour mixed with oil.' For . . . where it treats of good it also treats of truth . . . Hence it is that when the meat-offering was offered, which was bread, there was also offered a libation which was wine. In like manner in the Holy Supper. Hence it is that by 'a libation of wine' is here meant truth corresponding to the good which is signified by the meat-offering, treated of just above.

—<sup>l</sup>. That the meat-offering which was bread = the good of love, and that the libation which was wine = the good of faith. Ill.

—<sup>m</sup>. Hence it is evident that the 'meat-offering,' and 'the libation,' = worship from the good of love and the good of faith.

—<sup>n</sup>. 'A meat-offering of the evening' (Ps. cxli. 2) = the good of love in the external man.

—<sup>o</sup>. 'A gift in oil' is a meat-offering.

—<sup>p</sup>. From these things it may be evident that the meat-offering, which was bread; and the libation, which was wine, = such things as are of the Church and Heaven; namely, heavenly food and drink; in like manner as the bread and wine in the Holy Supper. Ex.

—<sup>q</sup>. It may also be evident that each and all things which are said and commanded in the Word concerning the meat-offering and the libation, or concerning the bread and wine, contain within them Divine arcana; as, that the meat-offering was fine flour, upon which was oil, and also frankincense, and that it was wholly salted, and that it was unleavened or unfermented; and also that there was one mode—ratio—of its composition when a lamb was being sacrificed, another when a ram, another when a bullock; and also different ones in the sacrifices of guilt and of sin . . . In like manner there was a different mode of the wine in the libation.

—<sup>r</sup>. In the eucharistic sacrifices and burnt-offerings there was for every lamb a meat-offering of one tenth of an ephah of fine flour mixed with the fourth of a hin of oil; and wine for the libation, the fourth of a hin. For every ram, there was a meat-offering of two tenths of fine flour, and a third of a hin of oil; of wine for a libation, the third of a hin. For every bullock there was a meat-offering of three tenths of fine flour mixed with oil, the half of a hin; and of wine for a libation, the half of a hin. (Num. xv. xxviii. xxix). Ex.

—<sup>s</sup>. But in the sacrifices for confession, there was 'a meat-offering of unleavened cakes mixed with oil, of unleavened lagana anointed with oil, of fine flour puffed up cakes mixed with oil ; besides fermented cakes of bread' (Lev.vii.11,12). And in the sacrifices of guilt and of sin, there was a meat-offering 'of the tenth of an ephah of fine flour ;' but 'no oil and frankincense' upon it (Lev.v.11). The reason no oil and frankincense were put upon the meat-offering of the sacrifice of sin and of guilt, was for the reason that by 'oil' is signified the good of love, and by 'frankincense,' the truth of this good ; and by 'the sacrifice of sin and of guilt' is signified purification and expiation from evils and the derivative falsities, which were therefore not to be commingled with good and the derivative truth.

—<sup>12</sup>. Besides, concerning the meat-offering of Aaron and his sons on the day in which they were anointed, see Lev.vi.13-15. Concerning the meat-offering of the first-fruits of harvest, Lev.ii.14,15 ; xxiii.10-17. Concerning the meat-offering of the Nazarites, Num.vi. Concerning the meat-offering of jealousy, Num.v. And concerning the meat-offering of one cleansed from leprosy, Lev.xiv. And concerning the meat-offering baked in an oven ; concerning the meat-offering of the pan ; and concerning the meat-offering of the cooking-pot, Lev.ii.3-7. That no ferment should be in the meat-offering, nor any honey ; and that the meat-offering was to be wholly salted, Lev.ii.10-13. The reason no ferment or honey was to be in the meat-offering, was that 'ferment,' in the spiritual sense, is falsity from evil ; and 'honey,' external delight thus commingled with the delight of the love of the world, by which also celestial goods and truths ferment, and thus are dissipated : and that it was to be wholly salted, was for the reason that 'salt'=truth longing for good ; thus conjoining both.

10177<sup>11</sup>. 'A meat-offering,' etc.=the good of love.

—<sup>12</sup>. By 'a meat-offering' (Jer.xvii.26) is signified the good of love.

— Hence also it was that 'upon the meat-offering there was oil and also frankincense' . . . but not upon 'the meat-offering which was for sin,' nor upon 'the meat-offering of jealousy' . . . The reason they were not upon these meat-offerings, was because they were given for expiation from evils ; and so long as a man is in expiation, he cannot receive the good of love and the truth of faith ; for the evils stand in the way . . .

—<sup>13</sup>. As the good which is of love is not possible except together with the truth of faith . . . upon every meat-offering there was frankincense . . .

10206. 'Nor burnt-offering and meat-offering' (were to be offered on the altar of incense) (Ex.xxx.9)=no representative there of regeneration through the truths and goods of celestial love . . . 'A meat-offering'=celestial good, into which man is introduced through regeneration ; and also a representative of regeneration. Refs. . . For regeneration is one thing, and worship another. Ex.

10603<sup>3</sup>. For the sake of that nation, meat-offerings, etc., were commanded, and are therefore mentioned in the Word . . . as the most holy things of worship ; when yet these things were only conceded, because they had been first instituted by Eber, and had been quite unknown in the Ancient Representative Church.

R. 316<sup>3</sup>. By the meat-offering and the libation in the sacrifices, like things were signified. III. The meat-offering was of the fine flour of wheat ; hence it was in the place of bread . . .

E. 242<sup>9</sup>. 'To bring to Jehovah a meat-offering in justice' (Mal.iii.3)=the worship of the Lord from the good of charity.

— That 'a meat-offering'=the good of love and of charity. Refs.

324<sup>11</sup>. Worship . . . from celestial good is signified by 'a meat-offering' (Mal.i.11).

—<sup>14</sup>. As 'a meat-offering' signified the good of celestial love, and 'frankincense,' the good of spiritual love, therefore upon the meat-offering of fine flour were put oil and frankincense . . .

— The reason this meat-offering was instituted, was because 'fine flour'=genuine truth ; and, as this is from good—namely from celestial good and thence from spiritual good—therefore there were put upon it oil and frankincense ; 'oil'=the good of celestial love ; and 'frankincense,' the good of spiritual love ; in the internal sense, the one from the other. There were also other species of meat-offering, which were prepared with oil, by which the like was signified.

325<sup>2</sup>. 'Let . . . the lifting up of my hands [be] as the meat-offering of the evening' (Ps.cxli.2). . . The lifting up of the hands is called 'a meat-offering' . . . because the like is signified by . . . 'the lifting up of the hands' as by 'a meat-offering' . . . By 'a meat-offering' is signified celestial good, which is the good of love to the Lord ; thus . . . worship.

340<sup>17</sup>. 'A meat-offering,' which was bread, (Joel.ii.14)=good.

376<sup>23</sup>. Therefore it was commanded that, upon the altar with the sacrifices, they should offer also a meat-offering and a libation ; and the meat-offering was bread, and the libation wine ; by which things was signified the worship of the Lord from the good of love and the derivative truths ; for all worship is from these. —

—<sup>40</sup>. As by the meat-offering and the libation, which were bread and wine, is signified worship from the good of love and the truths of faith ; thence, in the opposite sense, by the meat-offering and the libation is signified worship from the evils which are of the love of self and from the falsities of faith ; which were signified by the meat-offering and the libation which were offered to idols and gods. III.

433<sup>12</sup>. That then 'sweet should be to Jehovah the meat-offering of Judah and of Jerusalem' (Mal.iii.4)=that then there will be accepted worship from the good of love to the Lord; the 'meat-offering of Judah' = this worship.

[E.] 444<sup>7</sup>. By 'the meat-offering' (Jer. xxxiii. 18) is signified worship from the good of charity towards the neighbour . . .

449<sup>3</sup>. 'Meat-offering and frankincense' (Jer. xvii. 26) = good and the truth of good in the natural man.

491<sup>2</sup>. By 'the meat-offering' (Is. xliii. 23), which was of fine flour, thus bread, is signified celestial good . . . —<sup>3</sup>.

—<sup>3</sup>. Therefore upon the meat-offering there was poured oil, and frankincense was put . . . and this for the reason that by the meat-offering there should be represented the conjunction of celestial good and spiritual good; for the oil signified celestial good, and the frankincense spiritual good.

—<sup>5</sup>. Where 'meat-offering and frankincense' are not mentioned, 'oil and frankincense' are mentioned, and 'gold and frankincense;' because by 'oil,' and 'gold,' in like manner as by 'the meat-offering,' is signified celestial good. III.

630<sup>5</sup>. By 'to eat these sanctified things in the court' (Lev. v. 9, 19) was signified to appropriate to themselves the goods of the Church which were signified by 'the meat-offerings' and those 'sacrifices.'

637<sup>14</sup>. By 'the meat-offering' (Joel i. 13) is signified the good of the Church . . .

661<sup>o</sup>. Therefore . . . also the meat-offerings and libations were called 'gifts.' III.

684<sup>40</sup>. 'The sacrifice' = worship from truths; and 'the meat-offering' (Dan. ix. 27) = worship from goods.

1153. 'Fine flour' = truth from a spiritual origin; and 'wheat' = good from a spiritual origin. . . The reason these signify worship also, is that from these was prepared the meat-offering, which, together with the sacrifices, was burnt upon the altar . . . For the meat-offerings were prepared with oil.

See under IMMEDIATE, and INFLUX.

A. 4211<sup>2</sup>. Conjunction is not possible with the Lord's Supreme Divine, but with His Divine Human; and through the Divine Human with His Supreme Divine. Hence it is . . . also, that He is 'the Mediator.'

4724<sup>2</sup>. Hence also the Lord as to the Divine Human is called 'the Mediator.'

5419. The general truths of the Church without mediation, Sig. . . The reason it is without mediation, is that they came without Benjamin, who is the medium.

6370<sup>o</sup>. This order is preserved by the Lord, both immediately, and mediately through the celestial Angels.

6574<sup>2</sup>. Then the Lord Himself immediately, and through the Angels mediately, is present, and resists, with those who are in temptation . . .

6804<sup>4</sup>. That the Lord as to the Divine Human is 'the Mediator;' and that no one can come to the Divine Itself, which is in the Lord, and is called 'the Father,' except through 'the Son,' that is, through the Divine Human, has been known in the Church . . .

6996. The Divine truth immediately proceeding from the Lord's Divine Human can be heard and perceived by no man, and not even by any Angel; and therefore, in order that it may be heard and perceived, there must be mediation, which mediation is effected by means of Heaven, and then by means of the Angels and Spirits with man. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. This being the case, it may be evident that the Divine truth proceeding from the Lord, in order to be heard and perceived, must pass to man by means of mediations. The last mediation is by means of the Spirit who is with the man, who inflows either into his thought, or by a living voice. —<sup>o</sup>.

6998. Moses represents the Lord as to the Divine truth which proceeds immediately from the Lord; and hence Aaron represents the Divine truth which proceeds mediately . . . from the Lord, which truth is the doctrine of truth and good. 7009, Ex. 8337, Ex.

7251. When (the Spirits of Venns) had lived in their Earth, they had believed in a certain highest Creator without a Mediator. These are they who are so vastated, and finally saved, when they have first been instructed . . . that the Lord is the Only God, the Saviour, and the Mediator. I have heard them confessing that without a Mediator they could never be saved, because they are filthy and unworthy.

7272<sup>2</sup>. Provided that before expiring they from apparent confidence would confess the mediation of the Lord . . .

8705. 'Thou shalt bring the words to God'=mediation and intercession; (for) 'to bring the words to God,' when said of the Divine truth,=to mediate with the Divine Itself and to intercede; for he who mediates and intercedes, brings the matter to him who renders aid. Mediation and intercession are of Divine truth, because this is proximately with the Divine good, which is the Lord Himself . . .

— . How the case is with the mediation and with the intercession of the Lord . . . shall be told. (Continued at full length under INTERCEDE.)

8728. Through (the Angels and the angelic Societies) the Lord mediately acts and rules men. Ex.

8729. 'A difficult word they shall bring to Moses'=mediation and intercession.

8735. (On those in Jupiter who call themselves the Lord's mediators. See JUPITER, here.)

8787<sup>2</sup>. For the truth from the Divine, which is represented by Moses, is that which mediates of the Divine with those who are of the Church; for, in order that conjunction may be effected . . . there must be mediation. Therefore, also, by Moses is represented the truth from the Divine below Heaven conjoined with the truth Divine in Heaven. This for the sake of mediation.

8805<sup>4</sup>. By Moses in this and the following chapters is represented truth from the Divine below Heaven conjoined with the truth Divine in Heaven, and thence mediating between the Divine in Heaven and the good into which truths are to be implanted, which is that of the Spiritual Church; thus mediating between the Lord and the people.

8864<sup>2</sup>. That the Divine Itself cannot communicate with the Angels in Heaven, and still less with men on earth, except through the Divine Human, has been known in the Churches from the Lord's words in the Evangelists, where He says that He is 'the Door,' that He is 'the Mediator,' that 'no one can come to the Father except through Him,' that 'no one knows the Father except Him,' and that 'no one has seen the Father,' not even any 'shape' of Him.

9414. 'Moses'=that which mediates between the Lord and the people; thus the Word as to its holy external; for this is what mediates. Ex. 9415. 9419. 9435.

9615<sup>e</sup>. The Lord inflows into all the Heavens both immediately and mediately; mediately, through the Inmost Heaven into the Middle one; and through the internal of this into its external.

10270<sup>2</sup>. Into celestial good . . . the Lord inflows from the Divine Human immediately: into spiritual good . . . the Lord inflows from the Divine Human, also mediately through celestial good; and into spiritual natural good . . . the Lord inflows from the Divine Human, again also mediately. It is said also mediately, because the Lord inflows into the goods of these Heavens not only mediately, but also immediately.

R. 484<sup>3</sup>. Why do you say access to God the Father for the sake of the Son? and why not to God the Father through the Son? Is not the Son the Mediator and Saviour? Why do you not approach Him as the Mediator and Saviour? Is He not God and Man? Who on earth ever approaches immediately any Caesar, king, or prince . . .

T. 135<sup>2</sup>. The leader of our Church . . . attributes to each (of the three Divine Persons) . . . His peculiar properties . . . which are not only creation, redemption, and sanctification; but also imputation, mediation, and operation. Is there not then . . . another who has redeemed us, and who also mediates? and a third who operates the mediated imputation? . . . Who does not know that the Son of God was sent by the Father into the world . . . and thus became the Expiator, Mediator, Propitiator, and Intercessor?

—<sup>3</sup>. Having heard these things, I was silent, but thought with myself, Oh what fatuity! They do not know anything of what is meant in the Word by 'mediation.' Then, by the Lord's command, three Angels descended from Heaven, and were associated with me, in order that I might speak from interior perception . . . in special concerning mediation, intercession, propitiation, and expiation, which are attributed by them to the Second Person . . . but not until He had become man, many ages after the creation, when these four means of salvation were not as yet in existence; and thus God the Father was not propitiated, the human race was not expiated, nor was anyone sent from Heaven who interceded and mediated.

[T.135]<sup>4</sup>. Then, from the injected inspiration, I spoke with them, saying . . . Hear what is meant in the Word by mediation, intercession, expiation, and propitiation. These are four predication of the grace of the one God in His Human. God the Father can never be approached, nor can He come to any man, because He is infinite, and is in His Esse, which is Jehovah; and if He should come to man from this, He would dissolve him . . . This is evident from . . . that 'no one can see Him and live' (Ex.xxxiii.20) . . . 'No one hath ever seen God, except the Son who is in the bosom of the Father' (John i.18; Matt.xi.27) . . . 'No one hath heard the voice of the Father, nor seen His shape' (John v.37). We do indeed read that Moses saw Jehovah face to face, and spoke with Him mouth to mouth; but this was done through an Angel. In like manner with Abraham and Gideon. (Therefore) God the Father was pleased to assume the Human, and in this to admit men, and thus to hear them, and to speak with them; and this Human is what is called 'the Son of God;' and this is what mediates, intercedes, propitiates, and expiates.

—<sup>5</sup>. I will therefore tell you what these four predication of the Human of God the Father signify. Mediation signifies that that Human is the intermediate, through which man can approach God the Father, and God the Father man, and thus teach and lead him in order that he may be saved; and therefore the Son of God, by whom is meant the Human of God the Father, is called 'the Saviour;' and, in the world, 'Jesus;' that is, 'salvation.' Intercession signifies perpetual mediation; for love itself . . . perpetually intercedes; that is, mediates, for those who do His precepts, whom He 'loves.'

D. 985. The Lord has no need of mediations, when so it is well pleasing to Him.

2966<sup>e</sup>. So that there is a certain continual mediation, or continual influx.

3314a. (Those from the Most Ancient Church) said that they cannot speak of the Lord . . . But when He was represented as the Mediator and Regenerator, then, almost half admitting it, they acknowledged it, because there were then celestial ideas, which gave perception.

6502. 'Joseph commanded his servants the physicians' (Gen.1.2)=preservation from the evils which hindered conjunction. . . 'Physicians'=preservation from evils. . . A. 3196. 'Isaac went out to meditate in the field' (Gen. xxiv. 63) = the state of the Rational in good. . . 'To meditate in the field' = its state in good; for 'to meditate' is the state of the Rational when it puts the mind on the stretch. . . Hence the ancient formula 'to meditate in a field' for to think in good, which belongs to a man not wived, when thinking about a wife. 3317<sup>o</sup>.

5172. There are some upright Spirits who do not think by meditation, and hence they think quickly and utter the things which arise in thought as it were without premeditation. They have interior perception, which is not made so visual by means of meditations and thoughts as it is with others. . . Such belong to the province of the thymous glands. . . D. 1048.

Ex. from experience.

W. 404<sup>3</sup>. But when a man is in the affection of understanding, and through this comes into the perception of truth, he is then in the thought of his spirit, which is meditation; which does indeed fall into the thought of the body, but the tacit thought; for it is above this, and views the things which are of the thought from the memory as beneath itself; for from these it either concludes, or confirms. But the affection of truth itself is not apperceived otherwise than as an effort of the will from something pleasurable which is within in the meditation as its life, and which is little attended to.

P. 34. Thus it is perceived how man meditates, perceives, and thinks; but not how their soul, which is the affection of good and truth, produces these things.

61. This is the reason that when a man is thinking alone from his spirit, which is the case when he is meditating with himself at home, he thinks from the affection which is of his love.

A. 105. 'In the midst of the garden' (Gen.ii.9)=in the will of the internal man.

200. The reason the tree of knowledge is here said to be 'in the midst of the garden,' but before, the tree of lives . . . is that 'the midst of the garden'=the inmost; and the inmost of the celestial man . . . was the tree of lives, which is love and the derivative faith; but of this man, who may be called a celestial spiritual man . . . 'the midst of the garden,' or the inmost, was faith.

218<sup>e</sup>. By 'the midst of the tree of the garden,' in which 'they hid themselves' (Gen.iii.8) is signified natural good: that which is inmost is called 'the midst.' 225.

1074. That 'the midst of the tent' (Gen.ix.21)=the principal thing of faith. . . 'The midst,' in the Word, =the inmost . . . Charity is the inmost; that is, the principal thing of faith and of worship; and is thus 'the midst of the tent.'

1276. In front are those of a middle sort.

1495. Without intellectual truths as media, the Celestial is violated. Ex. and Sig.

1702<sup>d</sup>. The interior man is middle between the internal and the external man . . . Without this middle, no communication is ever possible. The Celestial is distinct from the Natural . . . and unless there is a middle through which there is communication, the Celestial can never operate into the Natural . . . The interior or middle man is the rational man himself . . .

1736<sup>e</sup>. 'For My name is in the midst of him' (Ex. xxiii.21) . . . 'In the midst'=the inmost.

1831<sup>e</sup>. Therefore the middle space between the parts (Gen.xv.10)=that with man which is called perception, internal dictate, and conscience. The things which are above . . . are the Lord's; those below are with man.

1835<sup>d</sup>. When conscience is relaxed, there is no medium through which the Lord may inflow . . . But then a new medium succeeds and is formed, which is external, namely, through the fear of the law, etc.

1883. The man is reduced into a certain state which is middle between sleeping and waking . . .

2252. 'In the midst of the city' (Gen.xviii.24) . . . 'The midst'=within. 2261.

2310<sup>d</sup>. Thus the Word is a medium uniting Heaven and earth . . . 3476.

2936<sup>d</sup>. 'The middle' (of a field, etc.)=much; but the extreme or 'end'=little.

2940. 'Ephron sitting in the midst of the sons of Heth' (Gen.xxiii.10) . . . 'The midst,' or 'in the midst,' =what is primary, or principal, and also what is inmost. (This signification of 'the midst' is from the representatives in the other life. When there is represented anything good . . . the best is presented in the midst; and the decreases of good are presented by degrees from the midst; and, lastly, at the circumference, those things which are not good . . . The ideas of thought are also thus represented, and also affections, and all changes of state; so that things good or evil vary as to their situation towards the midst. This originates from the form of spiritual and celestial things, which is such.

2973<sup>d</sup>. In the Word passim 'the midst,' and 'the circuit,' are mentioned; as when it is treating of the Land of Canaan, then [that] was called 'the midst' where were Zion and Jerusalem; but 'the circuit,' where were the nations which were round about . . . These representatives derived their origin from those things which are in the Lord's Kingdom in the Heavens; there, the Lord as the Sun is in the midst . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. From this, then, it is, that 'the midst'=the inmost; and 'the circuit,' the outermost; and that the things which proceed in order from the inmost to the outermost are in such a degree of innocence, love, and charity, as they are distant. The like is the case in every heavenly Society; there, those who are in the midst are the best of that kind . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. These things are the like with man . . . the soul is in the midst or inmost; and the body is in the circuit . . .

3089<sup>e</sup>. Still, (falsities and evils) had served as means.

3209<sup>e</sup>. In order that the good of the Rational might inflow into the Natural, there must be a medium. The medium could be nothing else than a Natural which should partake of the Divine. This is represented by the elder servant of Abraham's house administering all things which he had.

3518<sup>d</sup>. After (natural good) has served as a means for this use, it is separated . . . Hence it is evident that the former delights . . . had served as means.

—<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is evident how natural or domestic good . . . may serve as a means for producing the good of the Natural . . .

3563<sup>e</sup>. For the Voluntary . . . admits many things which are of service for regeneration; it is like a sponge which draws in both clear and muddy waters; thus also such things as would otherwise be rejected, and which yet serve as means . . . 3570.

3570<sup>e</sup>. Some (of these things) serve as means for as it were digesting and tempering; some for opening and introducing . . .

3573<sup>d</sup>. These (conjunctions) can never come forth except through means provided by the Divine; and indeed through such as are quite unknown to man . . . But still all these means (or media) are disclosed in the internal sense of the Word.

3575<sup>e</sup>. This (truth) cannot be produced except through many means, which are the things which are here described by 'Esau' and 'Jacob' . . .

3603<sup>d</sup>. This (worldly love) is the means of his learning more things . . .

3702. So that man might be a medium uniting the Divine with the world of nature, and the world of nature with the Divine . . .

3902. It treats (in Gen.xxx.) of the conjunction of natural truth by media with spiritual good; and this in the order in which it is effected with the man who is being regenerated.

3913. 'Behold my maid-servant Bilhah'=an affirming medium which is between natural truth and interior truth; (for) 'a maid-servant'=the affection of the Knowledges which are of the exterior man; and as this affection is the medium for conjoining interior truths with natural or external ones, by 'a maid-servant' is here signified the affirming medium between them.

—<sup>2</sup>. When man is being regenerated, the internal man is to be conjoined with the external... These cannot be conjoined without media. Media are such things as derive something from the one part, and something from the other; and which cause that in proportion as the man accedes to the one, in the same proportion the other is subordinated. These media are the things which are signified by 'the handmaids'; the media on the part of the internal man, by the handmaids of Rachel; and the media on the part of the external man, by the handmaids of Leah.

—<sup>3</sup>. That there must be media of conjunction, may be evident from the fact, that from himself the natural man is not in any agreement whatever with the spiritual. Ex.

— The spiritual man... does not spurn dignities, provided that through them as through means he can be of service to the neighbour...

—<sup>4</sup>. Therefore in order that man may become spiritual, it is necessary that... ends for self and the world be put off, and ends for the neighbour and the Lord's Kingdom be put on. The former cannot possibly be put off and the latter put on, thus they cannot be conjoined, except through media. These media are the things which are signified by 'the handmaids'; and, in special, by the four sons born from the handmaids.

—<sup>5</sup>. The first medium is the affirming or affirmative of internal truth; namely, that so it is. Ex.

3925<sup>e</sup>. It here treats of the second general medium which serves for the conjunction of the internal man with the external.

3931. 'She took Zilpah her handmaid'=an affirmative medium conjoining... the external man with the internal.

3935<sup>e</sup>. The good of faith which is of the internal man, and the good works which are of the external man, and which correspond, are the third general medium ('Gad'), which must be acknowledged in faith and act, before a man can enter into the Lord's Kingdom...

3937<sup>e</sup>. The acknowledgment of another general truth ('Asher') which may serve as a medium of conjoining the external man with the internal.

3982<sup>2</sup>. In infancy and childhood, man learns many things for this sole use: that through them as through means he may learn more useful things; and sucsively, through these, things more useful still; until at last he learns the things which are of eternal life; and, when he learns these, the former things are almost obliterated. In like manner is man led when he is being born anew from the Lord by means of many affections of good and truth which are not genuine affections of good and truth, but are useful merely to apprehend these, and afterwards to imbue them, and (then) the former things are given to oblivion... because they had served only as means. So... with the collateral good which is signified by 'Laban'...

3993<sup>12</sup>. For deceit... puts evil in the midst...

—<sup>e</sup>. For the evils with which goods are mixed, and the falsities with which truths are mixed, are wonderfully disposed in order by the Lord; for they are not conjoined... but adjoined and applied, and indeed so that the goods with the truths are in the midst, as it were in the centre; and, by degrees to the circuits or circumferences, are such evils and falsities. Hence it is that the latter are illustrated by the former, and are variegated like white and black by the light from the midst or centre. This is heavenly order.

4024. 'Laban'=middle good, whereby the Natural has goods and truths.

4025. It here treats of the Lord, how He made His Natural Divine, and this from Own power, but still through media according to order.

4037. 'Maid-servants and men-servants'=mediate goods and truths; that is, natural ones themselves.

4038. What is meant by interior, middle, and exterior and external goods and truths...

4046. A number of Spirits appeared at a middle distance... From this I could conclude that they were of a middle sort; namely, that they belonged to both the province of the heart and that of the lungs...

4047<sup>e</sup>. Thence it was perceived that (the Spirits of the pia mater) can serve the Angels as mediums; for there are middle Spirits between the Heavens, through whom there is communication...

4063<sup>2</sup>. The concupiscences of the world must be put off, and the affections of Heaven must be put on; this is effected through innumerable media which are known to the Lord alone... but still each and all of them are manifested in the internal sense of the Word...

— As therefore the states of man's life are to be so much changed, it cannot be otherwise than that he is long kept in a certain middle good; namely, in a good which partakes both of the affections of the world and of the affections of Heaven; and unless he is kept in this middle good, he never admits heavenly goods and truths. This middle good is what is signified by Laban and his flock. But man is kept in this middle good no longer than until it has served this use... Tr.

—<sup>5</sup>. This comparison can only serve for knowing that delights are media; and that these are left when the man enters the following state... Nor does anyone arrive at this state, except through the media of regeneration, which are provided by the Lord alone; thus through the middle good... and when he has been brought to the state that he no longer has worldly, earthly, and corporeal things as ends . . . that middle good is separated.

[A.] 4065. Another good had indeed served the Lord as a means . . . but through this means He acquired those things by which He made His Natural Divine by His Own power. It is one thing to acquire something from a means, and another through a means. He acquired through a means, because He was born a Man . . . but not from a means, because He was conceived from Jehovah . . . For the Divine Itself has no need . . . even of that middle good, unless He had willed that all things should be done according to order.

4067<sup>3</sup>. These (Spirits) communicated with Hell; the man is in the midst of them . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. From these things it may now be evident how the case is . . . with the middle delights and goods, through which man is brought by the Lord from the state of the old man to the state of the new man; namely, that it is effected through angelic Societies, and through changes of them. Middle goods and delights are nothing else than such Societies, which are applied to man by the Lord, in order that through them he can be introduced to spiritual and celestial goods and truths; and, when he has been brought to these, those Societies are separated, and more interior and perfect ones are adjoined. Nothing else is meant by the middle good which is signified by 'Laban,' and by the separation of this good, treated of in (Gen.xxxi.).

4073<sup>2</sup>. When the Societies of Spirits and Angels which are in middle good recede; then new Societies accede which are in more perfect good. The state of man is altogether according to the Societies of Spirits and Angels in the midst of whom he is . . .

4088. The Societies which are in such (middle) good . . . are Societies of Spirits which serve for media and for communication.

4099. (As to) the goods and truths which are insinuated through a middle good; or (as to) the Societies of Spirits which serve for a middle good, (it is to be known that) the Societies of Spirits which serve for a middle good are in worldly things; whereas the Societies of Angels which serve for introducing the affections of truth are not in worldly but in heavenly things. These two Societies act with a man who is being regenerated . . .

4110. It now treats of the separation of the middle good which is 'Laban,' from the good thence procured, which is 'Jacob.'

—<sup>2</sup>. There are good Spirits, and there are Spirits of a middle sort, and there are evil Spirits, who are adjoined to man when he is being regenerated, to the end that he may be introduced by them into genuine goods and truths, and this by means of Angels from the Lord. . . The separation of these (Spirits) is effected diversely . . . The separation of the Spirits of a middle sort is effected through many means, even until they recede in freedom; for they are remitted into the state of their good . . . in order that they may therein perceive their delight and bliss; but as they had derived pleasure from a former consorting, they are sometimes brought back, and are sometimes remitted, even until they feel what is undelightful in tarrying longer; and thus they recede in freedom.

4136. How the case is with the separation of middle good from genuine good . . . namely, that it is effected in freedom . . .

4145. Collateral good, or that which does not inflow directly, is that good which has been called middle good; for this good derives very many things from worldly things which appear as goods, but are not goods . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Every man who is being regenerated is first in middle good; for the reason that this may serve for introducing genuine goods and truths; but this, after it has served that use, is separated; and he is brought to the good which inflows directly. Example.

—<sup>3</sup>. Beauty, agreement of manners, or the external application of the one towards the other, or an equal condition on both sides . . . are the middle goods, the first ones of conjugal love.

4151<sup>2</sup>. When the Societies of Spirits which are in middle good are in Society with the Angels, it then altogether appears to them as if the truths and goods of the Angels were their own . . . But when they are separated, they apperceive that it is not so. [Sig. 4186.]

4217<sup>3</sup>. Therefore the Word is a medium uniting man with the Lord; and, unless there was such a medium, Heaven could not inflow with man; for without a medium there would be no union . . .

4234. Jacob then represented middle good. (See JACOB, here.)

—<sup>3</sup>. Still less is it known, that when a man is being regenerated, truth is conjoined with good, distinctly in the Natural, and distinctly in the Rational, and these by innumerable media.

4243<sup>2</sup>. The case is this: truth cannot be implanted in good, except by media; which media have been treated of in the preceding chapters . . .

4286<sup>3</sup>. The external (in the Second Heaven) who are called 'Israel,' partake of the Natural; for they are middle ones between the Rational and the Natural.

4552<sup>2</sup>. But when a man does not suffer himself to be led by the Lord, but by evil, he is then in the opposite order; evil with falsities is then in the middle; and truths are rejected to the circumferences . . . This order is infernal.

4686. 'Binding sheaves in the midst of a field' (Gen. xxxvii.16) = those who teach from doctrine. . . 'The midst of a field' = interiorly in the Church; so are they who are in the faith of some charity; for 'the midst,' in the internal sense, = that which is interior, and that which is inmost. For in every Church there are those who are in its midst, or those who are inmost; and they are those who are in charity . . . With these the Lord is present . . . 4688<sup>2</sup>.

5131<sup>2</sup>. The end must take administering means . . . The cause also must take administering means . . .

These administering means are the things which correspond. (Fully quoted under END.)

5133°. For charity is the uniting medium . . .

5164. 'In the midst of his servants' (Gen.xl.20)= which are among those things which are in the exterior Natural. 'In the midst'=among them.

5344. 'The things which were round about it, he put in the midst thereof' (Gen.xli.48)=that the things which before were in the exterior Natural, he stored up in the interiors of the interior Natural. . . 'The midst'=the things which are within.

5354°. Regeneration . . . is effected from the first infancy up to the end of life, and afterwards in the other life to eternity, and this by Divine means, innumerable and ineffable . . . Of these means scarcely any are known at this time; for the reason that man does not suffer himself to be regenerated.

5356°. By means of temptations . . . evils with falsities are rejected to the sides . . . but goods with truths are in the midst . . .

5368°. The External obeys . . . when he regards corporeal and worldly things as means, and not as the end; and he regards them as means . . . when he loves the neighbour more than himself . . .

5398°. That when the Word is being read by man . . . the Angels may be in the delight of serving as media.

5411. The Spiritual of the Celestial which is the medium. Sig. and Ex.

— It is to be known that the Internal cannot have communication with the External, and conversely, unless there is a medium . . .

— A medium, in order to be a medium, must partake of both . . . The reason there must be a medium, is that the Internal and the External are most distinct from each other . . . The External dies when the medium is broken; and the External lives when the medium is between, in the same proportion . . .

5413. That with external things alone . . . the medium would perish. Sig.

— For the case with a medium is this. It comes forth from the Internal, and therefore it subsists from it; for it comes forth through the view of the Internal into the External from the affection and end of associating the External with itself. Thus that which is a medium is conjoined with the Internal, and from the Internal with the External; but not with the External without the Internal. Hence it is evident that that which is a medium, with the External alone . . . will perish.

5422. Non-conjunction because without a medium. Sig. and Ex.

— The like is the case with internal truths, when they are regarded from external truths without conjunction through a medium; those truths then appear altogether strange to the latter . . . For the latter, without conjunction through a medium, cannot regard the former otherwise than from the light of the world separated from the light of Heaven . . .

5427. From this light, which is truth from the Divine, appear each and all truths which are below . . . in the Natural; but not contrariwise, if there is not a medium . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. (So also) the Angels of a higher Heaven can see all things which are taking place under them in a lower Heaven; but not contrariwise, unless there is a medium. Moreover, there are middle Spirits, through whom communication is effected, forwards and backwards. On this account, those who are below, who have no medium, and still more who have no correspondence, when they look into the light of Heaven, see nothing whatever . . . This may be illustrated by this unique experience. There appeared to me a great City, where there were thousands and thousands of various things which were delectable and beautiful. I saw them, because a medium was given me; but the Spirits who were with me, because without a medium, could not see the least thing there; and it was said, that they who are not in correspondence, although there, nevertheless apperceive not a whit of what is there.

—<sup>3</sup>. (So with) the soul. This can see each and all things which are and are taking place in the exterior man; but not contrariwise, unless there is correspondence and a medium. Hence it is, that to the exterior man which is not in correspondence, the interior appears as nothing . . . Whereas when there is correspondence, then the exterior man also sees through a medium what is being transacted in the interior; for the light which the interior man has inflows through the medium into the light which the exterior man has . . . and illuminates it . . . Hence the exterior or natural man has intelligence and wisdom; whereas if there is not a medium, and still more if there is not correspondence, the interior man sees and perceives what is being transacted in the exterior, and in a certain fashion also leads it, but not contrariwise . . .

5428. When this glory of Heaven is looked at from natural light without a medium, and still more if there is not correspondence, it is by no means acknowledged. (Shown by exams.)

—<sup>2</sup>. They who think about angelic power . . . from natural light not illuminated by the light of Heaven, because without a medium, and still more if there is not correspondence, can form (only a natural) idea of it . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. Another example: He who looks at freedom from the Natural without a medium . . .

5432. It treats . . . of the truths of the Church, that they are to be appropriated to the Natural, and that they cannot be appropriated to it, except through influx from the Celestial of the Spiritual through a medium. . . . The medium is 'Benjamin.'

5461°. From these things it may be evident what is meant by that faith in the will ('Simeon') must be separated, before the medium ('Benjamin') was presented present.

5463. Until the medium is present. Sig. (For) 'Benjamin'=the medium . . . between the Celestial of the Spiritual and the Natural.

5482. For truth from the Divine ('Joseph') inflows through the medium into the good of faith, and through this into the truth of it . . . There is no other way of influx with a man who has been regenerated . . .

5527. For when conjunction has been effected through the medium . . . namely, that of the external man . . . with the internal . . . or, what is the same, when the man has been regenerated, then truths are continually being fructified from good . . .

[A.] 5530. The truths with a man are disposed and ordained into series; those which are most in agreement with the loves are in the midst; those which do not agree so well are at the sides; and, finally, those which do not agree at all are rejected to the last circumstances. Those which are contrary to the loves are outside of this series. Therefore, those which are in the midst are called consanguineous . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. With those who are in the loves of self and of the world, such things as favour these loves are in the midst . . . Whereas with the Angels there is a flaming beam in the midst from the good of celestial and spiritual love . . .

5542. That neither (the doctrine of truth nor the doctrine of good) would live, unless the medium . . . is conjoined. Sig. . . By these words Reuben confirms that it will be all over with the Church, unless there is a medium . . . (Otherwise) Reuben would never have said to his father that he should cause his two sons to die unless he brought Benjamin back.

5583<sup>e</sup>. For the medium must be conjoined through good. Sig.

5585. Not that there is no commiseration with the Lord . . . but that when there is no medium which conjoins, it then appears to the man as if there were no commiseration in the Lord. The reason is, that if there is no medium conjoining, there is no reception of good . . .

5586. Unless there is a medium with you. Sig.

— The medium which Benjamin represents is the medium between the Internal and the External, or between the spiritual and the natural man, and is the truth of good which proceeds from the truth from the Divine which is represented by Joseph; (and which) is called the Spiritual of the Celestial. The Internal of man and his External are most distinct from each other; for his Internal is in the light of Heaven, and his External in the light of the world; and, as they are most distinct, they cannot be conjoined except through a medium which derives from both.

5600<sup>e</sup>. It is this interior truth which is the medium between the truth from the Divine and the truth in the Natural.

5612. These things are said because there cannot be any good of the Church without the medium between the Internal and the External which is represented by Benjamin; for both the good and the truth of the Church inflow from the Internal through the medium into the External . . .

5639. The apperception by the Celestial of the Spiritual of the spiritual medium with the truths. Sig. and Ex.

— The reason it is here called a spiritual medium, is that the truths which are represented by the ten sons of Jacob were now to be conjoined with the truth from the Divine which is represented by Joseph; and this conjunction is not effected except through a medium which is spiritual; and therefore when this medium was apperceived, it immediately follows . . . 'Bring the men home . . .' by which is signified that they were to be introduced and conjoined because with a medium. 5643.

5686. As it is a medium, it comes forth from the Celestial of the Spiritual . . . as a father, and from the Natural as a mother; for it must derive from both in order to serve as a medium. Ex.

5688. For the medium with man is born after all; for when a man is being born spiritually . . . his Rational . . . is first regenerated by the Lord, and afterwards his Natural. The medium, therefore, as it derives from both . . . and as the medium cannot derive anything from the Natural, unless this too is made new, therefore the medium cannot be born except afterwards; and, indeed, according to the degree in which the Natural is regenerated.

5692. And as both the medium and the Internal proceed from the Celestial of the Spiritual . . . it is said, towards the Internal from himself.

5696. Mercy from love is towards the medium, because through it are regenerated those things which are beneath; but the Lord's mercy and love do not appear until conjunction has been effected through the medium . . .

5698. Perception of the conjunction through the medium with the truths in the Natural. Sig. and Ex.

5700<sup>e</sup>. But when scientifics are in inverted order, they are disposed into the form of Hell, and then the falsest are in the midst, and the things which confirm them are at the sides; but truths are outside . . .

5707. Good for the medium above the goods for the truths in the Natural. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason is that the medium is more interior . . .

5728. It treats in (Gen. xlv.) concerning the medium between the internal celestial man, and the external natural one: first, that the internal celestial man infilled the medium with spiritual truth from himself. . . The spiritual truth which was with the medium is Joseph's 'silver cup.' 5736.

5736. 'The mouth of the wallet,' when predicated of Benjamin, . . . = where the medium is adjoined to the Natural; for the medium, in order to be a medium, communicates with the External and with the Internal.

5816<sup>b</sup>. For unless this truth (of good) were subject to internal good, so that it has an influx of good thence into itself, there would be no reception of the mercy which continually inflows from the Lord through internal good; for there would be no medium . . .

5822. Unless there is together [with them] a medium conjoining. Sig. and Ex.

— The medium, in order to be a medium, must derive from both; namely, from the Internal and the External; otherwise it is not a medium conjoining. The medium which Benjamin represents, derives from the External or Natural, in that it is new truth there; for the new truth . . . is in the Natural . . . and this medium derives from the Internal . . . through influx; thus it derives from both.

5893. 'Two years the famine in the midst of the land' (Gen. xlv. 6)=the defect of good in the natural mind. . . It is said, 'in the midst,' because 'the midst'=the inmost, where good is.

5897. The middle and the inmost of the Church. Sig. and Ex.

— . It is said the middle, and the inmost, because that which is inmost with man—that is, in the Natural, where inmost and interior things are together—holds the middle. Ex.

5912<sup>o</sup>. The reason is that the conjunction of the Celestial Internal with the truths in the Natural is not possible except through a medium.

5920. Especially from the perception of the medium. Sig. and Ex.

— . As Benjamin represented the medium; and this medium was interior truth immediately depending upon the internal good which is 'Joseph,' therefore it had a clearer and more exquisite perception than the truths which were below, or which were external . . .

5926. Inmost conjunction with the medium. Sig. and Ex.

5955. That the medium had a fulness of truth from good. Sig. and Ex.

5956. The reason the medium had truth from the Natural, is because to be a medium it must derive from the Internal, and from the External. That it derives from the Internal, is meant by that the medium had a fulness of truth from good, which is signified by 'three hundred of silver;' that it derives from the External, is meant by much of truth from the Natural, which is signified by 'five changes of garments.'

5992<sup>3</sup>. Hence man is in the midst (between Angels and evil Spirits); and, as he is in the midst, he is in freedom to turn himself either to the one or to the other.

6028. From the middle in the Natural. Sig. and Ex.

— . 'Goshen'=the middle, that is, the inmost, in the Natural. By the middle, or inmost, in the Natural, is signified what is best there; for what is best is in the middle; that is, in the centre or inmost; around it on every quarter are goods disposed into the heavenly form, nearer and more remotely, according to the degrees of goodness from what is best in the middle. Such is the ordination of goods with the regenerate; whereas with the evil the worst things are in the middle . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. From the things which have been said concerning what is best in the middle . . . it may be evident what is meant by the communication of the good of the Church with the Celestial Internal from the middle in the Natural.

6052. When good with truths is in the middle or inmost . . . then the perverted scientifics . . . are cast out.

6068. That (the goods and truths of the Church) are in the middle in the Natural where scientifics are. Sig. and Ex.

— . (For) when the goods and truths which are of the Church . . . are acknowledged and received with faith in the Natural, they then hold the middle there. For those things which are directly under the view are in the middle; but those which are not directly under the view are at the sides; hence those which are in the middle appear clearly; but those which are at the sides, obscurely. Examp.

—<sup>e</sup>. So is the internal sight fixed upon the scientifics which are most in agreement with the truth and good in which the man is: these scientifics are then to him in the middle.

6285. 'Let them grow to a multitude in the middle of the land' (Gen. xlviii. 16)=extension from the inmost. 'The middle'=the inmost.

6435<sup>2</sup>. The external of the Celestial Kingdom coincides with the internal of the Spiritual Kingdom through the medium (or middle) which is called the Celestial of the Spiritual. Ex.

6911. 'Which I will do in the midst of it' (Ex. iii. 20) = which touch them directly. 'The midst'=that which is within; thus, that which touches directly . . .

7270<sup>2</sup>. The truth which proceeds immediately from the Lord . . . cannot possibly be received by any living substance which is finite . . . and therefore the Lord has created successives, through which as media (that truth) can be communicated . . .

7444. 'That thou mayest know that I Jehovah in the middle of the land' (Ex. viii. 22)=the apperception that the Lord alone is the God of the Church. . . 'The middle of the land'=where there are truth and good with those who are of the Lord's Church: the inmost is where there is truth from good: thus by 'the middle of the land' is signified the Church . . .

7480. The Spirits of Mars relate to . . . the middle between the Intellectual and the Voluntary; thus to thought from affection; and those who are the best of them, to the affection of thought.

7577. 'To walk in the middle (of the hail)' (Ex. ix. 24) = to be together; and indeed the cupidity of evil inmost.

7777. 'I will go out into the middle of Egypt' (Ex. xi. 4)=the presence of the Divine everywhere then. . . Everywhere is signified by 'the middle,' when it is predicated of the land; for 'to go out through the middle of Egypt,' is [to go] into the whole of it.

7819. He loves self and the world, but no otherwise than as the means to an end. . . For he loves self as a means to the end of being able to serve the Lord; and . . . he loves the world as a means for the sake of the end that he may be able to serve the neighbour. When, therefore, the means is loved for the sake of the end, it is not the means which is loved, but it is the end.

7859. 'His head upon his legs and upon his middle' (Ex. xii. 9)=from the inmost to the external . . . 'The middle'=the things which are still lower; as the things which belong to the belly and the intestines.

—<sup>3</sup>. By 'the middle' (of the paschal lamb) is meant the Natural still more exterior, or the Sensuous.

8885. Man's thought involves many things together . . . The things which come to manifest perception, are then in the middle, and thus are in the light of the internal sight . . .

8995<sup>4</sup>. His head is in Heaven when (the delights of the love of self or the love of the world) are for means to an end; for . . . the means to the end are of themselves not alive, but receive life from the end. Hence the means from the ultimate end are called the middle ends. Further ex.

[A.] 9164. When a man is in truth from good, then the truth which is of the greatest faith is in the middle . . .

— But when falsity steals into the place of truth, the order is inverted . . . and the falsities of evil occupy the middle.

9184<sup>2</sup>. He then regards the former things, which are the delights of gain and of honours, as means to that end. It is known that the means have no life from any other source than the end . . . So the delights of gain and of honours, when they have become means, have life from the life from Heaven . . .

9310. 'My name is in the midst of him' (Ex.xxiii.21) = that from Him is all the good of love and truth of faith. . . 'In the midst of him' = that which is in Him; thus also that which is from Him. Ex.

9324. 'I will remove disease from the midst of thee' (ver.25) = protection from the falsifications of truth and the adulterations of good.

9365<sup>e</sup>. For with them the doctrine of the Church is only a means to their ends; and in proportion as ends are desired, in the same proportion the means are loved, and are also believed.

9421. When Moses ascended to the mountain, he represented the external Holy of the Word, which is intermediate, or middle, between its internal Holy and the representative which is of the external sense.

9562. 'In the candelabrum' = the middle through which is conjunction, and from which are powers. . . Here, as there is meant the middle part from which the six reeds went forth . . . there is therefore signified the middle through which there is conjunction, and from which are powers.

9592. In (Ex.xxvi.) . . . there is represented the middle (or medium) uniting (the Second or Middle Heaven) and the Inmost Heaven, by the veil between the Habitation and the ark of the Testimony.

9604<sup>e</sup>. In the middle of (the things of man's right and left sides) there is the communication of good with truth, and of truth with good, whence is perpetual and constant conjunction.

9666. 'The middle stave passing in the middle of the boards from extremity to extremity' (Ex.xxvi.28) = the primary power from which are continued powers everywhere . . . 'The middle' = what is inmost and what is primary. Refs.

9670. 'Thou shalt make a veil' = the medium uniting (the Middle) Heaven and the Inmost Heaven; thus spiritual good with celestial good. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. These two Heavens . . . constitute one Heaven through middle angelic Societies, which are of such a genius that they can accede to the good of each Heaven. These Societies are what constitute the uniting medium which was represented by 'the veil.'

— To the middle Angels, who accede to each Heaven, and conjoin them, correspond the cardiac and pulmonary plexuses, through which is effected the conjunction of the heart with the lungs; and also the medulla oblongata, where the fibre of the cerebellum is conjoined with the fibre of the cerebrum.

9673<sup>2</sup>. Therefore there are middle angelic Societies, which are in celestial spiritual good, and in spiritual celestial good, through which (Societies) conjunction is effected. With these angelic Societies, these goods are not conjoined; but are distinct from each other. From these things it is evident that these Societies are guards to prevent the commingling of the two goods.

9686. 'Thou shalt make a hanging for the door of the Tent' = the medium uniting the Second or Middle Heaven with the First or Ultimate one. Ex. 9689.

9825. 'The robe' = the middle of the Spiritual Kingdom; thus the truth itself which is there. . . For this Kingdom is distinguished into three degrees; the inmost, the middle, and the external . . . For the inmost there communicates with the Celestial, and the external with the natural; and thus the middle derives equally from both . . . —<sup>2</sup>.

9873<sup>7</sup>. As 'the onyx,' and 'the sapphire' . . . signified the externals of the two Heavens, they were put in the middle of the three stones of the second and fourth rows . . . for the middle involves the whole . . .

9891. The conjunction and preservation of the middle part (of Heaven). Sig. and Ex.

9922. 'In the midst of them round about' (Ex.xxviii.33) = from the interior of the scientifics of good on every side. . . 'In the midst' = what is interior; thus 'in the midst,' when said of the hearing and perception of doctrine and worship . . . = from the interior . . . The reason the bells were placed in the midst of the pomegranates, was that scientifics . . . are recipients. . .

10153. 'I will dwell in the midst of the sons of Israel' (Ex.xxix.45) = the presence of the Lord and His influx through good in Heaven and in the Church. . . Therefore also it is said 'in the midst,' because by 'the midst' is signified the inmost; and the inmost is good. Refs.

10259<sup>e</sup>. Whereas 'aromatic cinnamon' and 'aromatic calamus' signified interior truths, which are middle ones; and from the last and the inmost there must be what is full; but from the middle ones as much as is correspondent; for middle things must be circumstanced correspondently to what is first and last.

10531. 'I will not ascend in the midst of thee' (Ex. xxxiii.3) = that nevertheless the Divine is not with the nation itself. . . 'In the midst of thee' = in its internal.

10627. 'Let the Lord go, I pray, in the midst of us' (Ex.xxxiv.9) = that the Divine may be within in it. . . 'In the midst' = within in it. Refs.

H. 43. The more perfect (Angels in a Society); that is, those who exel in good; thus in love, wisdom, and intelligence, are in the middle . . . They who are in the middle are also in the greatest light . . .

P. 109. The life's love . . . places a vicar beneath itself, which is called the love of the means; and enjoins upon it to beware . . . lest anything from its concupiscences should appear . . . 110°.

279°. For man is such that he can come from one affection into another . . . and thus from one middle into another. The affection of a man makes the middle while he is in it; for he is then in the delight and in the light of it.

283°. Evils are only removed . . . to the sides; and when they are there, and good is in the middle, the evils do not then appear; for whatever is in the middle is directly under the view, and is seen and perceived. But it is to be known that although good is in the middle, still man is not therefore in good, unless the evils which are at the sides verge downwards or outwards. If they look upwards or inwards they have not been removed; for they are still striving to return into the middle. They verge and look downwards or outwards when the man shuns his evils as sins, and still more when he is averse to them . . .

335. That the operation of the Divine Providence continually takes place through means from pure mercy. Gen.art.

— There are means and methods of the Divine Providence. The means are those from which man becomes man, and is perfected as to understanding and as to will. The methods are those through which these things are done. The means from which man becomes man, and is perfected as to the understanding, are called by the general term truths, which in the thought become ideas, and in the memory are called things, and which in themselves are Knowledges, from which are knowledges. All these means, regarded in themselves, are spiritual things; but as they are in natural things, they appear, from their covering or clothing, as natural things, and some as material things. These means are infinite in number, and are infinite in variety. They are more, or less, simple or compound; and they are more, or less, imperfect or perfect. There are means for forming and perfecting civil natural life; and also for forming and perfecting moral rational life; and also for forming and perfecting spiritual celestial life.

—<sup>2</sup>. These means follow in succession, one kind after the other, from infancy to man's last age, and after this to eternity; and as they succeed [one another] by growing, so do prior things become the means of posterior things; for they enter everything formed as middle causes; for from these every effect . . . becomes a cause. Thus do the posterior things successively become means; and as this takes place to eternity, there is no last or ultimate which is the close. Ex.

—<sup>4</sup>. As many also are the means through which man is formed and perfected as to the will; but these are called by the general term goods . . .

336. But the methods through which the Divine Providence operates into the means, and through the means, to form man and to perfect him, are also infinite in number and in variety . . .

R. 44. 'In the midst of the seven candlesticks one like the Son of Man' (Rev.i.13)=the Lord as to the Word, from whom are these things. . . 'In the midst'=in the inmost, from which those things which are around . . . derive their essence; here, their light, or intelligence . . . Ill. E.63.

417<sup>8</sup>. In the middle are those who are in the highest wisdom and intelligence . . .

431<sup>2</sup>. 'To be set in the midst'=all things thence.

482. 'In the midst of the throne' (Rev.vii.17)=in the universal Heaven; for 'in the midst'=in all and each, or in the whole.

529. 'In the midst of heaven' (Rev.viii.13)=in the universal Heaven, or all who are in the Heavens. 'In the midst'=in the Universal, and thus all.

555<sup>16</sup>. 'The middle of the house' (Deut.xxi.12)=the interiors, which are spiritual.

654<sup>8</sup>. 'In the midst of the land of Egypt' (Is.xix.19)=everywhere and in all things of the natural man.

659<sup>11</sup>. 'Their middle' (Ps.v.9)=interiorly.

684<sup>40</sup>. By 'the middle of the week' (Dan.ix.27) is not signified the middle of that time, but the inmost of the state with the Reformed; for 'the middle'=the inmost; and 'the week,' the state of the Church.

803<sup>2</sup>. iv. The reason is, that man is constituted in the middle between Heaven and Hell . . . 806<sup>3</sup>. 902<sup>2</sup>. 936<sup>2</sup>.

869<sup>e</sup>. 'In the midst'=everywhere.

922<sup>2</sup>. 'In the midst'=all (people), and everywhere.

957<sup>8</sup>. There is a clear idea with the Angels who are in the middle of the Societies of Heaven . . .

1014<sup>2</sup>. These two opposite spheres meet together in the middle between Heaven and Hell, and fight with each other. In this middle is man while he lives in the world . . .

1053<sup>2</sup>. There is another kind of profanation of holy things with those who have . . . the holy things of the Word, of the Church, and of worship, as means. It is according to Divine order that . . . domination be the means to promote the end; for when holy things are the end, and domination is the means, the Lord is worshipped . . . But when . . . holy things are the means, man is worshipped in the Lord's place. For means regard the end as servants their lord; and the end regards the means as a lord his servants.

—<sup>3</sup>. And the end conjoins the means with itself, so that they are as a one.

1086<sup>o</sup>. For when the Lord operates, He does not operate from primes through middle things into ultimates; but from primes through ultimates, and so into middle things . . .

1089. For the end selects the means, and applies them to itself; and means which are applied to the end, which is domination over the souls of men . . . cannot be truths . . .

1148<sup>o</sup>. Man lives in the middle between Heaven and Hell . . . 1162<sup>o</sup>. Coro.28<sup>o</sup>.

1185<sup>o</sup>. If (these things) are not ends, but means, they are blessings.

1187. As the end which is the love . . . through the understanding provides for itself means, through which it comes forth—the last end, to which the first end progresses through the means, is the end coming forth—exists, and this is the use,—it follows that the end loves the means when they perform this use; and that it does not love them if they do not perform it; and that then it rejects them, and through the understanding provides for itself others . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. For example: a priest whose principal end is the love of money . . . His means are the ministry, the Word, doctrine, learning, preaching from these, and through these the instruction of the men of the Church, and their reformation and salvation. These means are esteemed by him from the end and for the sake of the end; but still they are not loved . . . for it is the opulence which is loved, because this is the first and last end, and the former end is the all in the means. (Other examp.)

J.(Post.) 2. The Protestants were brought into the middle; and then appeared in this order: the English in the middle . . . The Swedes at the north and west in the middle.

135<sup>o</sup>. The good are separated from the evil; and the evil are in the middle; and then the middle subsides, and the circuit remains . . .

D.Wis. viii. 7. (A Spirit) takes with him from the inmost things of nature a medium between the Spiritual and the Natural, through which he is bounded, so as to be subsistent and permanent. Through this he has what is relative to the things which are in nature, and also what is correspondent to them. Through this also Spirits and Angels can be adjoined to and conjoined with the human race. For there is conjunction; and where there is conjunction there must also be a medium. That there is such a medium, the Angels know; but as it is from the inmost things of nature, and the words of languages are from its ultimates, it cannot be described except by abstract things.

Medulla Oblongata. Medulla oblongata.

A. 4325. The fibres (of the voluntary sense from the cerebrum, and of the involuntary sense from the cerebellum) conjoin themselves in the two appendices which are called the medulla oblongata and the medulla spinalis, and pass through them into the body, and form together its members, viscera, and organs.

9670<sup>o</sup>. To the middle Angels, who accede to each Heaven, and conjoin them, correspond . . . also the medulla oblongata, where the fibre of the cerebellum is conjoined with the fibre of the cerebrum.

W. 366<sup>o</sup>. This cortical or glandular substance makes the surface . . . also of the corpora striata, from which is the medulla oblongata; and makes the middle of the cerebellum, and also the middle of the spinal marrow.

D. 3607. In what way (the fluxions of the fibres) connect themselves with the fibres of the medulla oblongata.

D.Min. 4714<sup>o</sup>. The Spirits of the two provinces (of the cerebellum and of the cerebrum) are entirely and miraculously separated for the sake of the spiritual, when yet they make a one; as in man the cerebellum is separated from the cerebrum, but still they communicate, both in general, as in the medulla oblongata, and also in each of the fibres and nerves . . .

10547. 'He called it the Tent of the assembly' (Ex.xxxiii.7)=the external of worship, of the Church, and of the Word, in which are internal things. . . By 'the assembly' is signified where internal things are; for all internal things are together in external ones. By 'the assembly,' in the sense of the letter, is meant the assembly of the sons of Israel; but in the internal sense is signified the assembly of the truths and goods of the Church. . . And all celestial and spiritual things inflow into natural and worldly ones, and cease in them, and form and constitute them. Hence it is that the external is signified by 'the assembly.' Such is the case with the external sense of the Word. . . and also with the externals of the Church and of worship. . .

Megiddo. Megiddo.

R. 707<sup>2</sup>. Love from loftiness is meant by 'Megiddo' in the old Hebrew, as is evident from its meaning in the Arabic language. The like is signified by 'Hadradrimon in the valley of Megiddo' (Zech.xii.11). . . But what is signified there by 'the valley of Megiddo' cannot be seen, unless the series of the things . . . be disclosed by means of the spiritual sense. Ex.

—°. The like is also signified by 'Megiddo' (2 Kings xxiii.29,30; 2 Chron.xxxv.20-24); but in the spiritual sense.

E. 1010. It is believed that by 'Armageddon' is meant Megiddo, where Josiah king of Judah was slaughtered fighting against Pharaoh (2 Kings xxiii.29, 30; and also Zech.xii.11). But what is there signified by 'Megiddo' . . . is as yet unknown; and therefore it shall be told. By 'Armageddon' is signified the love of honour, of command, and of supereminence; and this love is signified also by 'Megiddo' in the old Hebrew language, as is evident from the meaning of this word in the Arabic language.

Mehujael. Mechujael.

A. 404. 'Irad begat Mehujael, and Mehujael begat Methusael . . . ' (Gen.iv.18). All these names = heresies derived from the first one which is called 'Cain.'

Melancholy. Melancholia.

Melancholic. Melancholicus.

A. 6202<sup>2</sup>. Such is the influx with those who from no cause are pressed with melancholic anxiety; and also with those who are in spiritual temptation . . .

8164°. There is also a third kind (of temptation), namely, melancholic anxiety, which derives its cause for the most part from an infirm state of the body or lower mind. In this anxiety there may be something of spiritual temptation, or there may be nothing of it therein.

H. 299. It has been given to know whence man has . . . the interior sadness which is called melancholy. (Fully ex. under ANXIETY, here.)

P. 141. No one is reformed in a state of sickness of the lower mind, because it takes away rationality . . . Such sicknesses are melancholies, etc. . . which are sometimes accounted as temptations, but are not; because genuine temptations have spiritual things for their objects . . . whereas these have natural things for their objects . . .

D. 1336. A certain person in the life of the body had been driven to despair by melancholy . . .

2400°. There must be other states . . . in order that man, when without fear, pain, or melancholy, may acknowledge those things which are truths of faith.

2779°. They would reject such, as simple and melancholy ones . . .

3625. Hence come the melancholies of many . . . for with those who are thus kept in thought about spiritual things, about the life after death, and about misfortunes, Spirits . . . infuse many things which belong to the memory, and hold them long, even to insanities and phantasies. And therefore those who are in solitude of life easily fall into such things; for they are dispelled by varieties, and thus by societies . . .

[D.] 5394<sup>o</sup>. They ought not to . . . go as it were melancholy; because such a thing has never been commanded.

5570. When a man is in interior joy, or in interior sadness and melancholy, it comes from no other source than from the influx of Spirits who are thinking and speaking against his loves, or with his loves. 5778.

6110<sup>52</sup>. Virgins who have imbued piety even to some melancholy, become sad wives . . .

Melancthon. Melancthon.

C. J. 47. I have spoken with Melancthon; and I then asked him in what state he was; to which he did not want to reply; and therefore I have been informed about his lot by others; which is that he is by turns in a chamber of rock full of crevices, and in Hell; and that in the chamber he appears clothed with a bear-skin on account of the cold; and that the new-comers from the world who want to come to him on account of the reputation of his name, he does not admit into his chamber—lacunar—on account of the uncleanness there. He still speaks about faith alone, which in the world he, above others, established.

T. 797. I have not spoken with Melancthon so often or so near as with Luther . . . because he could not approach me in the same way, inasmuch as he devoted his study so fully to justification by faith alone, and not to charity . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. I have heard that as soon as he entered the Spiritual World, a house was prepared for him like the house in which he had stayed in the world . . . In his chamber also all things were like: a like table, a like desk with compartments, and also a bookcase; and therefore, as soon as he came thither . . . he placed himself at the table, and continued to write; and this concerning justification by faith alone; and in like manner for some days; and nothing whatever about charity. When this was perceived by the Angels, he was asked through messengers why he did not write about charity also. He replied that in charity there is nothing of the Church; for if that were to be received as a kind of essential attribute of the Church, man would also ascribe to himself the merit of justification, and thence of salvation; and thus he would also bereave faith of its spiritual essence.

—<sup>3</sup>. When the Angels perceived this . . . they receded. A few weeks after this was done, the things which he had used in his chamber began to be obscured, and at last to vanish; until finally there remained nothing there except the table, the papers, and the ink-stand; and, moreover, the walls of his chamber appeared to be plastered with lime, and the floor to be covered with a yellow, brick-like material; and he himself in a ruder garment. When he wondered at this . . . he was told that it was because he had removed charity from the Church . . . As he . . . continued to write about faith as the one only essential of the Church . . . and to remove charity more and more, he suddenly seemed to himself to be under the earth in a certain workhouse . . .

and when he wanted to go out he was held back, and it was denounced to him that no other lot awaits those who cast charity and good works out of the doors of the Church. But, as he was one among the Reformers of the Church, he was by the Lord's command taken out thence, and was sent back into his former chamber . . . But still, from his confirmed ideas, he bedaubed the papers with the same error; and therefore he could not be guarded from being alternately let down to his captive comrades, and sent out again. When sent out, he appeared clothed in a hairy skin, because faith without charity is cold.

—<sup>4</sup>. He himself has told me that there was another chamber . . . adjoined, in which there were three tables, at which sat those like himself, who were also casting charity into exile; and that a fourth table also sometimes appeared there, upon which were seen monstrous things in various forms, by which however they were not deterred. He said that he spoke with these [persons], and that he was confirmed by them from day to day. But after some time he was smitten with fear, and began to scribble something about charity; but what he wrote on the paper one day, he did not see on the next; for this happens to everyone there when he commits to paper anything from the external man only . . . thus from compulsion . . .

—<sup>5</sup>. But after the New Heaven began to be instaurated by the Lord, from the light from this Heaven he began to think that perhaps he was in error; and therefore from his anxiety on account of his lot, he felt impressed upon him some interior ideas about charity. In this state he consulted the Word, and then his eyes were opened, and he saw that the whole of it was full of love to God, and of love towards the neighbour . . . From this time he was translated interiorly into the south towards the west, and thus into another house, from which he has spoken with me, saying that now his writing about charity does not vanish as before, but that it appears obscurely on the following day.

—<sup>6</sup>. At this I have wondered: that when he walks, his steps have a knocking sound, like the steps of those who go with iron shoes on a stone pavement. To these things must be added, that when any novitiates from the world entered his chamber to speak with him and to see him, he summoned one of the magical Spirits, who by phantasy could induce various becoming shapes, and who then adorned his chamber with ornaments and with flowered tapestry, and also as it were with a bookcase in the middle. But as soon as they went away, these shapes disappeared, and the former lime-plastering and emptiness returned. But this was when he was in his former state.

D. 5920. On Melancthon and the Persuasive . . .

— I have spoken with Melancthon . . . Melancthon has confirmed himself in faith alone, and would scarcely hear about charity and its good; and therefore his thought was full of such things, and he has thence acquired a Persuasive, which indeed is not a strong one, but still is such as extinguished the light of intelligence with others . . . and, as the species of his persuasion, which appeared snowy, was such, therefore when he could not vanquish some by reasonings about faith alone, he looked into them, and poured out his Persuasive into their eyes ; and thus they could not bring forth anything against him . . . He has also poured out such a Persuasive into us, and has tried in like manner to induce shade on the light of truth. J.(Post.)26.

5921. But . . . he was told that such a thing is persuasive ; and that in the Spiritual World it is entirely forbidden to speak from what is persuasive . . . To these things he replied that he knows how to present such a Persuasive ; and therefore, as it is forbidden, he has been brought hither and thither, in order that this Persuasive might be taken away from him ; but for some time he has been protected from those who were in a like situation with him, by their also having been separated from the rest. He came to me in his persuasion, and there exhaled from him as it were the stench of garlic . . .

5922. Melancthon afterwards remained some days, and behind to the left ; and he loved places whence his life was a little communicated ; and then it was evident that he had been a hypocrite ; for he induced on the temples and teeth of both sides a certain pain ; concerning which he spoke with some, who said that he has said that he loves a life of good, and that he lives it, when yet from the principle of his religion he has completely rejected it. It was said also that he has preached sometimes ; and that when [he did so] about faith alone, the Church does not want to hear such things ; and therefore he had desisted from preaching so.

5923. It was afterwards shown in what way he has prepared for himself communication with Heaven by the abuse of correspondences, in that in front upon his forehead he has extended something red . . . and that he has formed it variously. Having made communication by this, he has spoken with some there ; and has been reproved, because such a thing is magical. Besides like things ; and other like things in the air.

—<sup>3</sup>. He has himself said that he has ascended into that Heaven ; and that when he came thither, he saw nothing ; but that when his eyes have been opened, he has seen magnificent things ; but that he has been at once driven to descend ; which has been permitted, in order that he might know the nature of Heaven ; because he had thought about it.

—<sup>3</sup>. But after some days he began to act as one with the malevolent who were secretly infesting me, by instigating those who were above to persist in it ; and therefore he was then rejected to those who are in faith alone, and who dispute from falsities ; where there is the gnashing of teeth.

5926. I have spoken in the presence of Melancthon about faith alone . . .

6040. Concerning Melancthon and Luther.—A certain person came from the northern quarter near the west, from very far away there, where are the more cunning ones. He was a devil among the more cunning and malicious ones. When he walked, his walking was heard heavy, ponderous, like the walking of a bear ; and when he had been some days about me he did many things wickedly. I did not know who he was, but it has been disclosed. He came to Luther, in his chamber, and sat there opposite to him, and spoke with him, saying that he used to Know him, and that he had spoken with him in the world ; and he disclosed very many things which he had then spoken with him ; from which Luther knew that he was (Melancthon), and that he had spoken with him many things about faith alone without good works. Luther asked what was the nature of his lot now. He said that he is by turns in a chamber full of crevices, and in Hell under a judge. When he is in his chamber, that he is clothed in a mantle with a bear-skin within, which keeps him from the cold ; and sometimes he writes there many things . . . about faith alone ; and that sometimes he prays to God that he may write well ; and then the Angels dictate to him about the goods of charity ; but when he reads them over he understands nothing, and he therefore rejects them. But by turns he is in Hell under a judge ; there, like the rest there, he is in vile work. He has been in a great cupidity of punishing, and he has also treated many evilly. He has often been punished : I have heard the judge speaking about his punishment. He has great fear of the judge, because he is very powerful. J.(Post.)27.

6042. On Melancthon and Luther.—I have been told further that in his chinky chamber there are many things which are rude and sad ; and that when he sees with others who are writing that the things are more ornamental there, he asks the reason, and is told because they think of good works also ; and, when he hears this, he too wants to think about them ; but as he cannot, he prays to God for the ability, and there then inflows something from Heaven as it were dictated, which he writes ; but still, when he afterwards reads, he does not understand it ; and then still his chamber appears adorned with various things ; but presently they disappear. Many come to him from the earth, chiefly Englishmen ; but he does not admit them, on account of the unseemly things which are in his chamber ; but he finds out how by phantastic art to make appearances of seemly ones ; but these disappear while they are speaking ; and they appear as they are wont to do ; and therefore they go away, and do not return. (Continued under LUTHER.) J.(Post.)28.

6048. On Melancthon.—Melancthon went out of his prison, and spoke with a certain one who had read his writings ; and then Englishmen came, and also spoke with him, saying concerning faith alone that they do not know what it is ; and is it anything. They asked him what it was. He said that faith is to believe that God has sent His Son, and that He has suffered for our sins. They said that this is only what is historical. What besides ? He said that from that faith they have eternal life. They replied has he eternal life ? and he could reply nothing else than that he will have when all are saved. They said that the infernals are never saved. They said, besides, that they hear preachers about faith alone and about justification ; and that when they hear them, it sounds in their ears as if it might be wisdom . . . but when they go away, they still know nothing of what they have said, and do not comprehend it. J.(Post.)29.

6065. Melancthon was let out of his cell, and was driven to congregate those Spirits who in the world had confessed faith alone . . . (They are separated and instructed.) J.(Post.)30.

E. 1176<sup>2</sup>. Melancthonism (mentioned as a heresy).

J. (Post.) 210. I have spoken with Melancthon about faith alone: that he can see from reason alone that faith alone does not save; because every man is his own good and his own evil . . .

Melchizedek. Malkizedech.

A. 1657. The Lord's internal man in the interior man, or the Divine in the Rational, is 'Melchizedek,' from whom is the blessing after the combats. Tr.

1659<sup>2</sup>. It has been known within the Church that Melchizedek represented the Lord . . .

1724. 'And Melchizedek, king of Shalem, brought out bread and wine; and he a priest to God Most High' (Gen.xiv.18). 'Melchizedek'=the celestial things of the interior man with the Lord. 'King of Shalem'=a state of peace as to interior or rational things. 'Brought out bread'=celestial things, and the recreation thence. 'And wine'=spiritual things, and the recreation thence. 'And he a priest'=the Holy of love. 'To God Most High'=the internal man, who is Jehovah. 1725, Ex.

1725<sup>2</sup>. The celestial things of the interior man are all those which are of celestial love . . . These celestial things with the Lord's interior man, or the Lord's interior man as to these celestial things, is called 'Melchizedek.' The internal man was Jehovah Himself. The interior man, when purified after the combats of temptations, was also made Divine and Jehovah . . . But now, when it was in a state of the combats of temptation, and not as yet thus purified by the combats of temptations, and at last His interior man as to celestial things is called 'Melchizedek' (Ps.cx.1-5). 6148<sup>4</sup>.

—<sup>3</sup>. That this is the case, may be evident also from David, where in like manner it treats of the Lord's combats of temptations, and at last His interior man as to celestial things is called 'Melchizedek' (Ps.cx.1-5). 6148<sup>4</sup>.

1728<sup>2</sup>. If only Divine truth (were predicated of the Lord) no mortal could be saved . . . whereas Divine good, which is of mercy, elevates from Hell to Heaven. These are the things which . . . Melchizedek represented, as 'king of Shalem, and priest to God Most High.'

1732<sup>2</sup>. When the communication of celestial things (takes place), the interior man is called 'Melchizedek.'

1741<sup>2</sup>. The Spiritual of the Lord which was adjoined to the internal man is 'Abram the Hebrew;' but the Celestial which was adjoined to the internal man is represented and signified by 'Melchizedek.'

2015<sup>10</sup>. As (the Divine truth and the Divine good) with the Lord are conjoined, they were anciently represented by the royalty conjoined with the priesthood; as with Melchizedek, who was king of Shalem and at the same time Priest to God Most High. 6148<sup>4</sup>.

9809<sup>2</sup>. 'According to My word Melchizedek' (Ps.cx.4) =that His Divine Human is like [to the Divine good of the Divine love]. 'Melchizedek' is 'King of Justice;' thus Jehovah made justice through combats and victories.

S. 101<sup>3</sup>. That [such worship] was before the time of Abram . . . is still more evident from Melchizedek the king of Shalem; in that he brought out bread and wine . . . and that Melchizedek represented the Lord; for he is called 'priest to God Most High;' and it is said of the Lord in David, 'Thou a priest to eternity, according to the mode of Melchizedek.' Hence it said that Melchizedek brought out bread and wine, as holy things of the Church . . . and that Melchizedek could bless Abram; and that Abram 'gave him tithes of all.' T.715.

E. 179<sup>4</sup>. 'A priest to eternity according to the mode of Melchizedek'=that Divine good and Divine truth proceed from Him . . .

376<sup>27</sup>. By 'Melchizedek,' there, (Gen.xiv.) is represented the Lord as to Divine good and as to Divine truth; by him as a priest, Divine good; and by him as a king, Divine truth; and therefore he brought out bread and wine, because by bread is signified Divine good; and by wine Divine truth.

Melt. Liquefieri, Colliquefieri.

A. 8487. 'The sun waxed hot and it melted' (Ex. xvi.21)=that it vanished according to the degree of the increasing concupiscence. . . 'To melt'=to vanish.

E. 400<sup>7</sup>. 'The hills shall melt' (Nahumi.5) . . . As the love of self and of the world is meant, it is said 'melt' . . . for 'fire'=these loves; and 'to melt,' and 'be burnt up,'=to perish thereby. 741<sup>21</sup>.

405<sup>12</sup>. Concerning the evils of the loves of self and of the world, which are signified by 'the mountains,' it is said that 'they shall melt like wax before the fire' (Micah i.4); because 'fire'=those loves.

538<sup>g</sup>. 'Thou hast melted, O Philistia, the whole of thee' (Is. xiv. 31) = the vastation of the Church as to the truth of doctrine, and thence as to faith. 817<sup>9</sup>.

594<sup>4</sup>. 'The heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it' (Is. xix. 1) = (the destruction of) the natural man separated from the spiritual. (= the terror of the natural man on account of visitation. 654<sup>48</sup>.)

Member. Membrum.

See under GENERATION and GENITAL.

A. 1509<sup>g</sup>. In the other life they are useless members . . .

2853<sup>2</sup>. The Lord's Kingdom on earth consists of all those who are in good ; who, although scattered through the whole world, still are one, and as members constitute one body.

3624. On the correspondence of all the organs and members of both the interior and the exterior man with the Grand Man. Gen. art.

3986<sup>2</sup>. The Societies which constitute Heaven . . . form together one Heaven. They are circumstanced like the members and organs of the human body . . .

4206<sup>2</sup>. Like the life with man, (which) inflows and acts into the various sensory and motor organs of the body, and into the various members and viscera, and everywhere presents variety . . .

4280<sup>2</sup>. (This signification) is from the correspondences of all the members, organs, and viscera of man with the Grand Man.

4459<sup>6</sup>. He who is in the interior spiritual degree, regards intelligence and wisdom as a mediate end that he may be able to serve as a useful member in the Lord's Kingdom . . .

6115<sup>3</sup>. It is the more general Societies to which correspond the members, organs, and viscera in man . . .

7396. Empires and kingdoms are represented in Heaven as a man ; and the societies which are therein are represented as the members of that man ; but the king as the head . . . For the universal Heaven represents one man ; and the Societies there represent its members ; and this according to their functions.

7836<sup>2</sup>. The universal Heaven is one Society . . . The general Societies there, are as many as are the members, viscera, and organs in man ; but the special Societies are as many as the little viscera within each content VOL. IV.

of a viscera, member, or organ ; and the particular Societies are as many as are the lesser parts in these constituting a greater one. That it is so, is evident from the correspondences of man, and of his members, organs, and viscera with the Grand Man.

10062<sup>2</sup>. It is to be known that the ultimate or extreme of any member signifies the same as the whole member . . .

H. 65. As the whole Heaven relates to one man . . . therefore Heaven is distinguished into members and parts, like man ; and they are also named in the same way. Moreover, the Angels know in what member one Society is, and in what another ; and they say that this Society is in some member or province of the head ; this, in some member or province of the chest ; this, in some member or province of the loins ; and so on.

94. Therefore the Societies which are in any member there, correspond to the like member in man . . .

96. The correspondence of the two Kingdoms of Heaven with the heart and lungs is the general correspondence of Heaven with man ; but there is a less general one with each of his members, organs, and viscera. Ex. and Enum.

—<sup>e</sup>. The influx of Heaven is into the functions and uses of the members . . .

100. To the Third Heaven corresponds the Second one ; and to the Second Heaven corresponds the First one ; and this corresponds to the corporeal forms in man, which are called his members, organs, and viscera. Thus it is the Corporeal of man into which Heaven ultimately ceases . . .

R. 66. See CHURCH, here.

T. 372. It is known that the Church makes the Body of Christ ; and that everyone in whom the Church is, is in some member of that Body ; according to Paul (Eph. i. 24 ; 1 Cor. xii. 27 ; Rom. xii. 4, 5).

D. 1765. Let such beware, who are the media which disturb societies, and cause enmities and hatreds among the members of the society . . .

1004<sup>2</sup>. All things which are in the body, which are called members, viscera, and organs, are nothing else than natural corporeal forms corresponding to the spiritual forms of the mind. Hence each and all things of the body so correspond to each and all things of the mind, that whatever the mind wills and thinks, the body acts in an instant at its nod. When, therefore, two minds are acting as one, the two bodies are also so united potentially, that they are no longer two, but one flesh. To want to become one flesh is conjugal love . . .

Inv. 28. (The Grand) Man is distinguished into Societies, of which each relates to one member, or organ and viscera in man . . .

Such do those become who in the life of the body have merely babbled, and have thought nothing about what they said, and have loved to speak about all things. There are cohorts of them, and some of them relate to the membranes which cover the viscera of the body, and some to the cuticles which derive but little from what is sensitive; for they are only passive forces; and act nothing from themselves, but from others. It has been provided by the Lord that those to whom the Gospel could not come, but only religion, might also have a place in that Divine man—that is, in Heaven—by constituting those things which are called skins, membranes, cartilages, and bones; and that in like manner as others they should be in heavenly joy. For it does not matter whether they are in joy such as is possessed by the Angels of the highest Heaven, or in joy such as is possessed by the Angels of the ultimate Heaven; for everyone who comes into Heaven, comes into the highest joy of his heart; he cannot endure a higher one; for in that he would be suffocated. The Angel (then) let down the unrolled parchment, which a certain angelic Spirit took, and laid upon a table in a certain chamber, which he at once closed, and held out to me the key, and said, Write.

77<sup>e</sup>. He showed us . . . that the Second Age set down its writings upon parchments; and he brought a parchment, upon which were copied the canons of the primeval people from their tablets of stone . . .

294<sup>8</sup>. Again came the little boy with a parchment in his hand . . . and I read these words . . . (Compare M.293<sup>8</sup>.)

T. 34<sup>e</sup>. The reception of life in the ultimate degree

(may be compared to) the influx of light into . . . a transparent membrane.

335. I saw fatuous lights . . . some like parchments full of writing, which, being folded together again and again, at last appeared like falling stars, which in their descent vanished in the air. Ex.

577<sup>2</sup>. Hence a respiration of every membrane in the body. Thus the meninges of the brain, the pleura, the peritoneum, the diaphragm, and all the other [membranes] which cover the viscera, and which compose them within, act and are acted upon; and thus co-operate; for they are elastic; hence [their] coming forth and subsistence.

D. 1060. So also the membranes of the body, and also the muscular textures, are to be referred to the class of spiritual things.

1721. [On] those who constitute the interior membranes of the body; as the pleura. Gen.art.

1723. For the membranes are no otherwise, and perform no other use, than being passive forces; and they act that which the active forces infuse into them.

1725. For the interior membranes of the body are continued membranes of the head; as the pituitaries of the mouth, and thus the meninges of the brain . . .

1726. Such Spirits are very numerous; for the membranes of the body are spacious; and are continued around and upon all the viscera, and enter the same: thus it is now insinuated that the most part of (these Spirits) are women.

1730. They who constitute the thin membranes of the brains are similarly circumstanced in the Spiritual World . . . as are these membranes, which admit the sanguineous spirit to the interiors . . . and also invest the fascicles of the fibres or little nerves.

1741. With all those who constitute the externals of man there reign insanities, that is, phantasies . . . Such phantasies or insanities are very numerous . . . and therefore so long as they are in them, they constitute such things . . . especially the skins and the membranes, which act against internal things. The most part of such are from this our Earth; for our orb is now in externals, and almost commands internals; and, in proportion as it commands, in the same proportion it is tormented in the other life, even until such phantasies have been moderated, so that they constitute an equilibrium; nor are they before admitted to act such membranes; but are outside or below the grand body, namely, in the Earth of Lower Things, and in various places of Hell; from which they are taken out and elevated in order to constitute such things: in which, because there are also very many vexations there, while they are being perfected, they are advanced still more interiorly; thus into Heaven; for all the membranes go forth more perfect in proportion as they go to more and more interior things; nay, there exists nothing in the human body except from membranes; hence are the organic forms which are actuated by the blood and spirit, which also are organic forms, but active ones in respect to the others . . . The actives of life are called celestial things; the passives of life, spiritual things; and, as celestial things, or love, ought to rule spiritual things . . . so have these things been constituted in the body. But the influx of the one into the other, and the nature of it, may indeed be evident from the organic things of the body; but as it belongs to the vastest work, it can never be understood, except [as to] the things which are most general . . .

3419. That the whole Grand Man is organic, and relates to the purer and grosser membranaceous things of the body; and the Lord alone to the interior things . . . Ex.

6109<sup>3</sup>. They who constitute the middle of the sole (of the feet) make beautiful skins, which they sell, from which they make pretty little caskets.

Memorable. Memorabilis.

A. 10159. What is memorable . . .

H. 463<sup>2</sup>. I will add something memorable . . . R. 153.

R. 224. I will add this memorable thing. 255. 294. 341. 386. 463. 531. 611. 655, etc.

484. I will add three memorable things which happened in the Spiritual World. The first memorable thing was . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. The second memorable thing was this.

—<sup>7</sup>. The third memorable thing was this.

566. I will add these memorable things. 875.

961. I will add two memorable things. The first is this.

M. 1. I foresee that many who read . . . the memorable things after the chapters, will believe that they are inventions of the imagination; but I asseverate in Truth that they are not inventions, but have been truly done and seen; not seen in any state of lulling of the mind, but in a state of full wakefulness. For it has pleased the Lord to manifest Himself to me, and to send me to teach those things which will be of the New Church which is meant by 'the New Jerusalem' in the Apocalypse; for the sake of which end He has opened the interiors of my mind and spirit, from which it has been given me to be in the Spiritual World with the Angels, and at the same time in the natural world with men; and this now for twenty-five years. T. 851.

39<sup>e</sup>. In the memorable things which follow after the paragraphs or chapters of this Work.

42. I will subjoin two memorable things from the Spiritual World . . .

44. The second memorable thing.

55. I will add two memorable things. 103. 132. etc.

74. These six memorable things which are from the Spiritual World concerning conjugal love . . .

I. 19. I will subjoin this memorable thing . . .

B. 114. To these things shall be added two memorable things taken from the Apocalypse Revealed. 118.

T. 4. It is a memorable thing that the Lord . . . called together His twelve disciples . . .

12. To illustrate this I will adduce this memorable thing from the Spiritual World . . .

16. I will add one memorable thing . . .

25. I will add this memorable thing . . . 35. 48.

71. I will add three memorable things . . .

76. A first memorable thing.

77. A second memorable thing. (And so on.)

110. I will add these memorable things . . . 134. 159. etc.

851<sup>2</sup>. That such things as have been described in the memorabilia appear in the Heavens, may be evident from the like things which were seen and described in the Apocalypse . . . and in the Prophets. Enum.

Memorial. Memoralis.

A. 6888. 'This My memorial into generation, generation' (Ex.iii.15) = that (the Divine Human) is to be perpetually worshipped. 'A memorial' = that which is to be remembered; and, when predicated of the Divine, the quality in the worship . . . 'Memorial' is predicated of the quality of the Divine in worship, as to truth . . . That 'memorial' = the quality of the Divine in worship. III.

—<sup>e</sup>. 'Holy' is predicated of truth; worship thence is signified by 'the memorial of his holiness' (Ps.xxx.4; xviii.12).

7881. 'The day shall be to you for a memorial' (Ex. xii.14) = the quality of that state in worship.

8067. 'And for a memorial between the eyes' (Ex. xiii.9) = that it should be perpetually in the understanding; 'a memorial' = perpetual remembrance. It is said 'a memorial,' because in the Word this is predicated of the Intellectual.

8526<sup>e</sup>. That it is for a memorial. Sig.

8620. 'Write this memorial in a book' (Ex.xvii.14) = for perpetual memory. 'A memorial' = what is to be remembered, or what is in the memory.

E. 324<sup>7</sup>. 'That it be bread for a memorial' (Lev. xxiv.7) = that it be received and heard by the Lord.

Memory. Memoria.

Remember. Memini.

See under KNOW—scire, RECOLLECT, and REMEMBER.

A. 27. When he knows that there is an internal man and an external one; and that truths and goods inflow, from the Lord . . . through the internal man to the external—although it does not appear so—then these truths and goods, or Knowledges of truth and good, which are with him, are stored up in his memory, and are referred among scientifics; for whatever is insinuated into the memory of the external man, whether it be natural, or spiritual, or celestial, remains there as a scientific, and is produced thence by the Lord. These Knowledges are 'the waters gathered together to one place, and called seas.'

A.] 30<sup>2</sup>. First through faith of the memory, which is scientific faith . . .

268. It is the external man, or his affection and memory, in which are implanted the seeds of good and truth . . .

608<sup>c</sup>. Doctrinal things then succeeded, which were first apprehended by the external senses, from which the material ideas of the memory, and the derivative ideas of thought, were formed . . .

913<sup>e</sup>. The fructification of good, and the multiplication of truth, take place in the external man; the (former) in his affections; the (latter) in his memory. Sig.

984. The goods of charity and the truths of faith with one regenerated . . . as they are implanted through faith, or through the hearing of the Word, are first in his memory, which is of the external man. When he has been regenerated . . . the goods of charity put themselves forth in the affections which are of the external man; and the truths of faith in the memory; and in both they increase and are multiplied.

991. For scientifics are of three kinds: intellectual, rational, and sensuous. All are inseminated in the memory, or rather, in the memories; and in one regenerated they are called out thence by the Lord through the internal man.

1197. Being such, they could not do otherwise than make the Knowledges of faith things of memory; for the Knowledges of spiritual and celestial things . . . become no other than things of memory, when the man who is skilled in them is without charity. The things of memory are as things dead, unless the man is such that he lives according to them from conscience. When this [is the case] then the things of the memory are also simultaneous things of life; and then for the first time are they of use and salvation for him after the life of the body.

1408<sup>2</sup>. The things of the sense of the letter are like the things which are with man in his body, namely, the scientifics of the memory which are from sensuous things; which are general vessels . . .

1435. The ideas of thought are founded upon those things which have been impressed on the memory from sensuous things; and therefore scientifics are vessels for spiritual things . . .

1460. For . . . with the external man there are recipient vessels, which are called [those] of the memory. These are formed through Knowledges . . . with the inflowing and assisting of the internal man; consequently, Knowledges are learned and implanted in the memory according to the influx of the internal man. So also with the Lord when a child . . .

1469<sup>2</sup>. Whatever is in the memory of man is nothing less than [it is] truth . . . but truth is in these things as in vessels . . .

1637<sup>2</sup>. When (Spirits) are with man, the ideas of their thought fall into the words which are with the man [in his memory] . . . 1638.

1639. The speech of words . . . is the speech proper to man, and indeed to his corporeal memory; whereas the speech of ideas of thought is the speech of Spirits, and indeed of the interior memory, which is the memory of a Spirit. Men do not know that they have this latter memory, because the memory of particular or material things, which is corporeal, makes everything, and darkens the interior memory; when yet without the interior memory, which is proper to his spirit, man can think nothing. From this memory I have often spoken with Spirits; thus in their Own language; that is, by ideas of thought . . .

1798<sup>2</sup>. For what is doctrinal is only knowledge, which is of the memory . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. Are not known by the memory; but are in his heart . . . because they are in charity.

1900. The internal man . . . cannot have communication with the external . . . until recipient vessels have been formed, which are of the memory; which is effected through Knowledges and knowledges . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. But this life becomes by degrees more distinct, as the vessels of the exterior memory are formed through Knowledges, and the vessels of the interior memory through rational things. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. (Truths) in the organic forms of both memories are genuine vessels . . .

1901<sup>2</sup>. This intellectual truth . . . inflows . . . through an internal way . . . and constantly comes to meet the Knowledges which are insinuated through sensuous things and implanted in the memory . . .

1940<sup>2</sup>. When they inflow into the sensuous scientifics of the memory . . . Sig.

1980<sup>e</sup>. Many dissimilar dreams may be presented from . . . one origin; for the reason that those things which are in the memory and the affection of man are recipient vessels, in which ideas are varied and received representatively, according to the variations of their form, and their changes of state.

2249<sup>3</sup>. For nothing can ever be kept in the memory, still less enter into anything of thought, except through some idea, however formed . . .

2256<sup>2</sup>. All the good ever thought and done by a man . . . remains; and in like manner all the evil . . . They have been inscribed on his book of life; that is, on both his memories; and on his nature . . .

2268<sup>2</sup>. If the truths which are in the memories of a man, and in the thoughts of his mind, are without goods, they are like a city without inhabitants; thus are empty.

2284. Remains are . . . all the good and all the truth with a man, which lie stored up in his memories, and in his life.

2469. On the memory remaining with man after death; and the reminiscence of those things which he had done in the life of the body. Gen.art.

— . As yet it has been known to scarcely anyone that every man has two memories; one exterior, and the other interior; and that the exterior one is proper to his body, and the interior one to his spirit.

2470. While a man lives in the body he can scarcely know that he has an interior memory, because then the interior memory acts nearly as a one with his exterior memory; for the ideas of thought, which are of the interior memory, inflow into the things which are in the exterior memory, as into their vessels, and are there conjoined [with them]. Ex.

2471. These two memories are entirely distinct from each other. To the exterior memory, which is proper to man while he is living in the world, belong all the words of languages, also the objects of external sensuous things, and likewise the scientifics which are of the world. To the interior memory belong the ideas of the speech of Spirits, which are of the interior sight, and all rational things, from the ideas of which thought itself comes forth. That these things are distinct from each other, man does not know . . .

2473. The interior memory immensely excels the exterior one, and is circumstanced as are some myriads to one, or as what is lucid to what is dark; for myriads of ideas of the interior memory inflow into one of the exterior memory, and there present a general obscure something; hence all the faculties of Spirits, and still more those of Angels, are in a more perfect state; namely, both their sensations, and their thoughts and perceptions. The nature of the excellence of the interior memory over the exterior one, may be evident from examples. When a man remembers any [other] man whose quality is known to him from an intercourse of many years, whether a friend or an enemy, that which he then thinks about him is presented as one obscure thing; and this because he is thinking from the exterior memory. But when the same man has become a Spirit, that which he then thinks about him is presented as to all the ideas which he had ever taken up about him; and this because he is thinking from the interior memory. The like is the case with everything. The thing itself about which he knows many things presents itself in the exterior memory as one general something; but in the interior memory as to every single thing about which he has ever procured for himself an idea; and this in a wonderful form.

2474. All things whatever which a man hears and sees, and with which he is affected, are, unknown to the man, insinuated as to the ideas and ends into his interior memory; and they remain in it, so that not anything perishes; although the same things are obliterated in the exterior memory. Such, therefore, is the interior memory, that there are inscribed on it all the single, nay, the most singular, things, which the man has ever thought, spoken, and done, nay, which have appeared to him as a shade, with the most minute things, from his first infancy to the last of old age. The memory of all these things the man has with him when he comes into the other life; and he is successively brought into the recollection of them all. This is the Book of his Life, which is opened in the other life, according to which he is judged. . . All the ends, which to him had been in obscurity, and all the things he has thought, together with all things which he has thence spoken and done, to the smallest point of all, are in that book; that is, in the interior memory; and are open before the Angels as in clear day whenever the Lord grants permission.

2475. From much and daily experience through many years, it has been given to know, that after death man does not lose a whit of those things which have been in his memories, either exterior or interior; inasmuch that nothing so small and minute can be thought of which the man has not with him; so that after death he leaves nothing whatever behind him except the bones and flesh . . .

2476. But, as to his exterior memory, the case is this: that he has each and all things of it with him; but he is not then allowed to use this memory, but only the interior one. The reasons are many. The first is . . . that from the interior memory, in the other life, he can speak and have intercourse with all in the universe. The second is, that this memory is proper to a Spirit, and is adequate to the state in which he then is; for exterior things—that is, scientific, worldly, and corporeal things—are adequate to man, and correspond to his state while he is in the world and the body; but interior things—that is, rational, spiritual, and celestial things—are adequate and correspond to a Spirit.

2477. It was proposed to (the Spirits) to think and speak together [on the question] as to whether it is advantageous for Spirits to use the exterior memory. . . The Spirits who were for corporeal and worldly things confirmed this by many things . . . that thus they would have lost nothing, but after death would be men equally as they had been before; that thus they would have been able to come into the world through man; that the delight of life is in the exterior memory; and that in no other faculty or gift are there intelligence and wisdom; besides many other things . . . But others then thought and spoke from the opposite principle, knowing that what they said was true, because it was from Divine order. They said that if Spirits were allowed to use the exterior memory they would then be in the like imperfection to that in which they had been before when they were men; that thus they would be in gross and obscure ideas, in comparison with those which are in the interior memory; and thus they would not only become more and more foolish, but would also descend and not ascend; thus neither would they live to eternity; for to immerse themselves again into worldly and corporeal things would be to give themselves again into a state of death; also that if Spirits were allowed to use the exterior memory, the human race would perish; for every man is ruled by the Lord through Spirits and Angels; and if Spirits were to inflow into man from the exterior memory, man would not be able to think from his own memory, but from that of the Spirit; thus man . . . would be obsessed; the obsessions of yore were nothing else; besides many other things.

2478. In order that I might know how the case is that man could not think from his own memory if Spirits inflowed from the exterior memory, it has been twice or thrice permitted that this should be done; and I then knew no otherwise than that was mine which was not mine, but the Spirit's; and that I had thought those things before which I had not thought; and this I could not apperceive until they had receded.

[A.] 2479. A newly arrived Spirit was indignant because he could not remember more things which he had known in the life of the body, grieving on account of the delight which he had lost. . . . But he was told that he had lost nothing at all, and that he knows each and all things; but that in the other life it is not allowable to bring out such things; and that it is sufficient that he is now able to think and speak much better and more perfectly; without immersing his Rational, as before, in the dense, obscure, material, and corporeal things which are of no use in the Kingdom into which he has now come; and that those things which had been in the kingdom of the world had been left behind; and that he now has whatever conduces to the use of eternal life; and that thus and no otherwise can he become blessed and happy: thus that it is of ignorance to believe that in the other life intelligence perishes with the none-use of the corporeal memory; when yet the case is that in proportion as the mind can be withdrawn from sensuous and corporeal things, in the same proportion it is elevated to spiritual and celestial ones.

2480. As men after death are in the interior memory—which had been that of their Rational—hence it is that they who in the world had been pre-eminently skilled in languages cannot bring out one syllable of them; and they who had been pre-eminently in knowledges cannot bring out anything of their scientifics. . . . But whatever they have imbibed by means of languages and knowledges, because it has formed their Rational, they bring forth into use. The Rational thence procured is that from which they think and speak. He who has imbibed falsities by means of languages and knowledges, and has confirmed himself in them, reasons from nothing but falsities; but he who has imbibed truths speaks from truths. It is the affection itself which gives the life. . . .

2481. That. . . Spirits do not lose a whit of the things which belong to their exterior or corporeal memory; but that they have with them all things of it, that is, that they have with them the whole of it, although it is not allowed to bring forth from it the particulars of their life, has been given me to know from much experience; as may be evident from what follows:—Two whom I had Known in the life of the body, and who had been mutual enemies, met; and I heard one describing the genius of the other with many circumstances, and also the nature of the opinion he had had about Him, reciting a whole letter which he had written to him, and many things in series, which were particulars, and of the exterior memory; and which the other acknowledged. . . .

2482. I heard a certain one upbraiding another, in that he had kept back his money. . . . and this with the circumstances, which were of the exterior memory. . . . I also heard the other replying, and recounting the reasons why he had done it, all of which were worldly particulars.

2483. A certain female was let into the state in which she had been in the world when she had attempted a crime; and then every single thing of her thoughts, and of her conversation with another woman, came forth as in clear day.

—. A certain female of the crew of the Sirens, because she kept on denying that she had been such in the life of the body, was let into the state of the corporeal memory, and then her adulteries and flagitious things, which when she lived had been known to scarcely anyone, were opened, and were recited in series, almost to hundreds (with all the particulars) and all to the life as in open day; and so she was convicted. Such things are brought forth when anyone wants to exculpate himself. . . .

2485. A Spirit. . . whom I had not known in the life of the body, when I asked him whether he knew whence he was, did not know; but by means of the interior sight he was led by me through the cities where I had been, and at last through the city whence he was; and then through the streets and public places, all of which he knew; and at last into the street where he had dwelt; and, if I had known the houses, and how they were situated, I could have known his house too.

2486. That men have with them each and all things of the corporeal memory, could also very frequently be evident to me from those whom I had known in their life of the body, in that when I have spoken with them they have recognized each and all things which they had done in my presence, and which they had then spoken and thought.

—. From these and many other experiences, it has been given me to know for certain that man carries with him into the other life all things of the exterior or corporeal memory.

2487. Regarded in itself, the exterior memory is nothing else than an organic something formed from the objects of the senses—especially of the sight and the hearing—in the substances which are the beginnings of the fibres; and according to the impressions from them variations of form take place, which are reproduced; and these forms are varied and changed according to the changes of state of the affections and persuasions. The interior memory is in like manner organic; but purer and more perfect; formed from the objects of the interior sight, which objects are disposed in a stated series in incomprehensible order.

2488. I had supposed. . . that no Spirit could ever know the things in my memory. . . . But I can asseverate that the Spirits who are with man know and take note of the least things of his memory and thoughts; and this much more clearly than the man himself; and that the Angels know and take note of the ends themselves. . . .

2489. The things which are of the interior memory manifest themselves in the other life by a certain sphere, from which the quality of Spirits is Known at a distance. . . . This sphere comes forth from the activity of the things in the interior memory.

2490. With the interior memory the case is this: that there are retained in it not only each and all things which from his infancy the man has ever seen and heard, and the things which he has thought, spoken, and done; but also those things which he sees and hears, and which he thinks, speaks, and does, in the other life. But this takes place with a difference. Those who are in the persuasion of falsity and the cupidity of evil imbibe and retain all things which agree therewith; for they enter like water into sponges. All other things do indeed also flow thereto; but they are retained so lightly that they scarcely know that they are anything. But they who are in the faith of truth and the affection of good, retain all things which are true and good, and thence are continually being perfected. Hence it is that they can be instructed, and that they are instructed in the other life.

2491. There are Spirits . . . who have relation to the interior memory. These wander about in cohorts, and by wonderful methods elicit whatever others know; and whatever they hear they communicate to their own ones.

2492. The quality of memories is sometimes presented to view in the other life. . . The exterior memory is thus presented . . . as a callosity; the interior memory like a medullary substance such as is in the human brain. . . With those who in the life of the body have studied for the memory alone, and thus have not cultivated their Rational, their callosity appears hard, and inwardly striated. With those who have filled the memory with Falsities, it appears hairy and rough, and this from the inordinated heap of things. With those who have studied for the memory for the sake of the love of self and of the world, it appears conglutinated and indurated.

—<sup>3</sup>. With those who have wanted to penetrate into Divine arcana by means of scientifics, especially by means of philosophical things, and who would not believe until they had been persuaded by means of them, it appears dark, and is of such a nature that it absorbs the rays of light, and turns them into darkness. With those who have been deceitful and hypocrites, it appears as if it were bony and of ebony, and reflects the rays of light. But with those who have been in the good of love and the truth of faith, no such callosity appears, because their interior memory transmits the rays of light into their exterior one; in the objects or ideas of which—as in their basis, or as in their ground—the rays are terminated, and there find delicious receptacles; for the exterior memory is the ultimate of order, in which spiritual and celestial things are softly terminated and reside, when there are goods and truths there. H.466.

2493. I have spoken with the Angels about the memory of past things, and the derivative anxiety about future ones; and I have been instructed that the more interior and perfect the Angels are, the less do they care for past things, and think about future ones; and that thence also is their happiness. . . But although they do not care for past things, and are not solicitous about future ones, they still have the most perfect reminiscence of past things, and view of future ones; because in all their present there are both what is past and what is future. Thus they have a more perfect memory than can ever be thought of or expressed.

2494. When men who are in love to the Lord and in charity towards the neighbour are living in the world, they have with them and in them angelic intelligence and wisdom, but stored up in the inmosts of their interior memory; which intelligence and wisdom can never appear to them until they put off corporeal things. Then the memory of particular things . . . is lulled; and they are awakened into the interior memory; and successively afterwards into the angelic one itself. H.467.

2503<sup>2</sup>. Rational truths are interior, and scientific truths are exterior: these are distinct from each other exactly as are the two memories of man.

2520<sup>2</sup>. (This) may be evident from the ideas which a man cherishes concerning Divine arcana—there always adheres to them some idea from worldly things, or from things analogous to worldly things, through which it is retained in the memory, and through which it is reproduced into the thought . . .

2590<sup>e</sup>. Nevertheless the truths of faith with (those who are in evil) go no further than into the memory. They do not penetrate to the affection which is of the heart; and therefore also the truths of their memory are dissipated, and become null, in the other life.

2657<sup>2</sup>. But these things (of the first Rational) at that time go no further than a little above the ideas of the corporeal memory, which are relatively very material . . .

2750<sup>e</sup>. The things which (an adulterer against whom Heaven has been closed) speaks about (the things of love and faith), do not come from his interiors, but solely from his memory and mouth . . .

2831. Without an idea nothing remains in the memory, otherwise than as an empty thing . . . The idea itself, when confirmed by many things, causes it not only to inhere in the memory, and that it can be called out thence into the thought; but also that faith can be insinuated into it.

—<sup>10</sup>. It is celestial and spiritual love which disposes into order the scientifics which are of the exterior memory; whereas the love of self and of the world perverts the order, and disturbs all things which are there . . .

— . The things which are in the exterior memory, where scientifics are, relatively to the things which are in the interior memory, where rational things are, are in a thicket, or as in a dark forest. So long as man lives in the body, he cannot know how shady, opaque, and dark it relatively is there . . . But he will know in the other life, when he comes into those things which are of the interior memory, that in the exterior memory, which is proper to man while he is living in the world, there is nothing less than there is the light of wisdom and intelligence . . .

2875. But the truth of doctrine, or faith (is insinuated) through an external way, and is carried into the memory, being called out thence by the Lord in His own time and order, and conjoined with the affection of good . . .

3020<sup>2</sup>. The things which are in (the natural mind) are all scientifics; thus also all Knowledge of whatever kind ; in a word, each and all things which are of the exterior or corporeal memory . . .

[A.3020]<sup>3</sup>. But the rational mind is interior ; the cognitive things which are there are not open before the man, but are imperceptible while he is living in the body ; namely, each and all things which are of the interior memory . . .

3066<sup>2</sup>. For truths without affection do indeed flow to the ear as sound, but they do not enter into the memory. That which causes them to enter into the memory, and to inhere therein, is affection . . . 3336<sup>2</sup>.

3108<sup>2</sup>. But as soon as truth is initiated into his good, it is then appropriated to him. It then vanishes from his external memory, and passes into the internal one ; or, what is the same, it vanishes in the natural or external man, and passes into the rational or internal one . . .

3114<sup>2</sup>. The truths of the natural man are scientific truths ; namely, whatever are in his external memory. Sig.

3161<sup>2</sup>. So long as these doctrinal things are only in the memory, they are only scientific truths, and are not yet appropriated to the man as his ; but they are for the first time appropriated to him when he begins to love them for the sake of life, and still more when he applies them to life. When this is done, the truths are elevated from the natural memory into the Rational, and are there conjoined with good . . .

3175<sup>2</sup>. (Thus) man is not born into any truth, but must learn everything, and this through an external way, namely, that of hearing and sight : through this way truth must be insinuated, and implanted in his memory ; but so long as truth is there only, it is only knowledge . . .

3203<sup>2</sup>. At first they are . . . as infants ; the spiritual truths with them are scientific ; for when doctrinal things are learned and inserted in the memory they are nothing else ; but these are successively called forth thence by the Lord, and are implanted in the life ; that is, in good . . .

3316<sup>2</sup>. The first state of the man who is being regenerated, or with whom truth is being conjoined with good, is that first of all in his natural man, or in its storehouse, which is called the memory, there are heaped together doctrinal things of truth, without any stated order . . . These things are not reduced into order of themselves, but by the good which inflows into them . . . Tr.

3324<sup>2</sup>. Truths can indeed be stored up in the memory before (there is good to receive them), like seeds in a pod . . . but they do not become the man's unless the ground has been prepared . . .

3388<sup>2</sup>. For it is not sufficient for a man to know that it is so ; but he also wants to know what it is . . . in order that some confirmation may accede to the intellectual part . . . Otherwise, it may indeed be induced on the memory, but it remains there no otherwise than as a dead thing . . .

3402<sup>2</sup>. To know good and truth, or to keep them in the memory, and to utter them with the mouth, is not to have good and truth ; but to be affected with them from the heart.

3405<sup>2</sup>. For lower things are nothing but composites of higher ones ; as may be concluded from the memories with man, of which the interior one, being in a higher degree, so immensely excels the exterior one, which is in a lower degree.

3512<sup>2</sup>. Truths, like all other scientifics, are allotted their place in the memory which is of the natural man, according to the pleasant and delightful things which have introduced them ; as is evident from the fact, that when these pleasant and delightful things return, the things which have been introduced by them also return ; and, conversely, when the things are recalled, the delightful or pleasant things, to which they have been adjoined, are excited at the same time. 4205<sup>2</sup>.

3539<sup>2</sup>. For although man after death becomes a Spirit, he still has with him in the other life those things which are of his external man ; namely, natural affections, and also doctrinal things, and scientifics too ; in a word, the things which are of his exterior or natural memory ; for these things are the planes in which his interior things are terminated. As, therefore, these have been disposed, so do the interior things, when they inflow, become ; for they are modified therein . . .

3603<sup>2</sup>. In his first age, man knows the things which are in the Word only as far as the memory . . .

3679<sup>2</sup>. But Spirits and Angels do not think like man. Their thought is indeed terminated also in the Natural ; for they have with them all the natural memory and its affections ; but they are not allowed to use this memory. Still, although they are not allowed to use it, it serves them as a plane, or as a foundation, so that the ideas of their thought may be terminated there. Hence it is that the ideas of their thought are more interior. Ex.

3824<sup>2</sup>. Internal truths are said to be conjoined with the Natural when they are learned, acknowledged, and believed. In the Natural of man, or in the memory of this, there are truths both internal and external ; they are there as doctrinal scientifics ; but they are not conjoined until the man is affected with them for the sake of the use of life . . . 3843.

3843<sup>2</sup>. When (truths) are in the interior man, he then no longer acts from the memory, but from nature-indole ; so that at last they flow spontaneously into act ; for they are then inscribed on the man's interior memory ; and the things which come forth—prodeunt—from this appear as if they were innate ; as may be evident from the languages which a man has imbibed in his childhood ; and also from the faculty of reasoning ; and also from conscience. Hence it is evident that even the interior truths of doctrine are not conjoined with a man until they are of the life.

3911<sup>2</sup>. All good inflows from the Lord through the internal man into the truths which have been collected in the memory of the external man.

3913<sup>2</sup>. For example : that the Lord is the salvation of the human race. Unless this is made affirmative by a man, all those things which he has learned about the Lord . . . and which are in his natural memory among scientifics, cannot be conjoined with his internal man . . . thus neither can the affection inflow . . .

4018. The truths and goods which are learned, with which the man is not affected, do indeed enter into the memory, but adhere as lightly there as a feather to a wall.

—<sup>2</sup>. As to the things which enter into the memory, the case is this. The things which enter without affection fall into the shade of it; whereas those which enter with affection come into the light there; and (these) are seen and appear clearly and livingly at every excitation of a like thing; but not so those which lie hidden around in the shade. The affection which is of love is attended with this. Hence it may be evident, that all the implantation of truth, and its conjunction with good, is effected through affection; and that the greater the affection is, the stronger is the conjunction . . .

4038<sup>2</sup>. The things which enter through sensuous things store themselves up in the Natural as in a kind of receptacle, (which) is the memory.

—<sup>3</sup>. The things which elevate themselves thence towards the Rational store themselves up in the Rational also as in a kind of receptacle, (which) is the interior memory.

4247<sup>2</sup>. From the memory, which is like an internal eye, or internal sight, there is a like circle; namely, from this sight through the thought into the will; and from the will through the thought into act . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. (Thus) first of all the truths which are of faith are insinuated through the hearing or the sight, and are then stored up in the memory; and are thence successively elevated into the thought, and at last they inflow into the will; and (then) they proceed thence through the thought into act . . .

4266. So long as (scientifics, Knowledges, and thus doctrinal things) are in the natural or external man—that is, in his memory—and are not yet implanted in the spiritual or internal man, they are signified by ‘the droves given into the hand of the servants.’

4301<sup>2</sup>. In proportion as the man is affected with these things, in the same proportion he sees them, and in the same proportion he retains them in the memory; but the things which the eye sees from no affection are passed over, and are not inserted into the memory; thus neither are they conjoined with him . . .

—<sup>4</sup>. The like is the case with the understanding, which is the internal sight; its objects are . . . called truths. The field of their objects is the memory . . .

4337<sup>2</sup>. For so long as truth is in the memory only, it is called truth; but when it is in the will and thence in act, it is called the good of truth.

4408. For the objects of the world, which all derive something from the light of the sun, enter through the eye, and store themselves up in the memory; and . . . the things which are reproduced thence are seen within. Hence is the imagination of man, the ideas of which are called by philosophers material ideas. When these objects appear still more interiorly, they present thought . . .

4588. This is what is meant by . . . As the tree falls, so it lies . . . For man has with him in the other life all the Natural or the memory of the external man; but he is not allowed to use it there; and therefore it is there as a foundation plane, into which the interior truths and goods fall. If this plane is not receptive of the goods and truths which inflow from the interior, the interior goods and truths are either extinguished, perverted, or rejected.

4715<sup>o</sup>. For, with these, faith is only in the memory and thence in the mouth . . .

4901<sup>3</sup>. For man in each idea of his thought has something adjoined from time and space. Hence his memory and reminiscence; and hence also his lower thought, the ideas of which are called material. But this memory, from which are such ideas, is quiescent in the other life. They who are there are in the interior memory, and in the ideas of its thought. The thought from this memory has not times and spaces adjoined to it; but in their place states and their progressions.

— That man has an exterior memory, which is proper to him in the body; and that he has also an interior memory, which is proper to his spirit. Refs.

4925. As truth manifests itself—for it enters through the senses, and stores itself up in the memory of the external or natural man—therefore many have fallen into the error, that truth is the first-born . . .

5079<sup>2</sup>. For man, when he dies . . . has with him the memory of all things which he has done, spoken, and thought; and has with him all the natural affections and cupidities; thus all the interior things of the Natural. Its exteriors he has no need of . . .

5089<sup>2</sup>. Hence it is that those who are sensuous, and have applied themselves studiously to scientifics . . . can no longer be elevated from them . . . thus neither can their thought any longer be extended freely around the whole field of the things of the memory, and choose the things which agree, and reject the things which oppose, and apply the things which are in any connection . . . This is the reason why the learned believe less than the simple . . .

5094. Into the external or natural memory of man enter objects from the world through these sensuous things on the one side; and into it there enter objects through rational things on the other side. The latter separate themselves in that memory. The things which have entered through rational things place themselves more interiorly; but those which have entered through sensuous things place themselves more exteriorly. Hence the Natural becomes twofold; namely, interior and exterior. Rep.

5113<sup>7</sup>. The memory (of the Spiritual Church) is compared to ‘the wine of Lebanon,’ from the good of faith which has been implanted in the Intellectual.

5126<sup>3</sup>. In proportion as he does not do truths, the Rational is not opened; but still the Knowledges remain in the Natural, namely in its memory; thus as it were outside the house on the threshold.

5127<sup>o</sup>. From which he is in the faculty of thinking and speaking . . . about spiritual things from the formulae impressed on the natural or corporeal memory.

5130. ‘But remember me with thee’ (Gen. xl. 14) = the reception of faith . . . for to remember and recollect the Lord is from no other source than faith. Hence 'remember me with thee'=that he may receive faith. Ex.

[A.5130]<sup>e</sup>. For that which a man loves is what reigns ; but not that which he only knows and keeps in the memory.

5133. 'Make me remembered to Pharaoh' (ver.14)=communication with the interior Natural.

5135<sup>2</sup>. From infancy to childhood, and sometimes to the first adolescence, man imbues goods and truths through instruction from parents and masters ; for he then seizes on them and believes them simply. The state of innocence promotes [this], and inapts them into the memory ; but places them at the first threshold . . .

5157<sup>2</sup>. By sensuous things are meant those scientifics and those delights which have been insinuated through the five senses of the body into the memory of the man and into his concupiscences ; and which, taken together, constitute the exterior Natural, from which the man is called a sensuous man.

5212. The lowest truths, or the truths of the exterior Natural, are called scientifics, because they are in man's natural or external memory ; and because as to the most part they partake of the light of the world ; and thence can be presented and represented before others by forms of words ; or by ideas formed into words by means of such things as are of the world and its light. But the things which are in the interior memory are not called scientifics, but truths, in so far as they partake of the light of Heaven ; nor are they intelligible except by means of this light ; and they are utterable by means of forms of words, or by means of ideas formed into words, through such things as are of Heaven and its light.

5278. The reason 'to forget'=removal . . . is that such is the case with the memory and the derivative thought : the things of which the man is thinking are immediately under his view, and the things which are related to that subject present themselves in order around, even to the things which are not related, and which are the most remote, and which are then in forgetfulness. The things which are opposite are separated thence, and hang downwards . . . and equilibrate those which are above. This ordination is effected by means of the good which inflows . . .

5287<sup>2</sup>. In proportion as (a man's thought) regards the particulars of the memory, and remains therein, in the same proportion it does not perceive the quality of the things.

5376<sup>2</sup>. Thus, with these, truths are not drawn inwards, but are cast out of doors ; but still they remain in the memory, for the sake of ends in the world, devoid of life. This state is called 'desolation,' or 'vastation.'

5432. When (the truths of faith) are learned, they are apprehended and are committed to the memory, no otherwise than as are other scientifics . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. (Such) retain (truths) with themselves no otherwise than as they do all other scientifics ; they are only in their natural memory, and thence in the mouth.

5664a<sup>3</sup>. It is one thing to know the truths of faith, and another to believe them. They who only know them, place them in the memory like other things which are of any knowledge ; for these things a man can procure for himself without that influx (of truth). But these truths have no life . . . Hence it is that when he brings them forth he does so from the memory, and not from the heart. Whereas he who believes the truths of faith, brings them forth from the heart when he does so from the mouth ; for with him the truths of faith are so rooted, that they have root in the external memory, and grow thence towards the interior or higher things, like fruit-bearing trees . . .

5853. The Spirits which flow to a man enter into all his memory, and into all the knowledges of the memory which the man possesses. Thus they put on all things which belong to the man, inasmuch that they know no otherwise than that they are theirs . . . Hence it is that all things which the man thinks, they think ; and that all things which the man wills, they will ; and also conversely, that all things which those Spirits think, the man thinks ; and that all things which those Spirits will, the man wills ; for they act as one by means of the conjunction. But it is supposed on both sides that such things as are in them are from themselves . . . but this is a fallacy. 5855.

5858. Whatever Spirits think and speak from the memory of man, they suppose to be their own, and in themselves. If they are told that it is not so, they are exceedingly indignant. . . In order that they might be convinced that it is not so, they were interrogated whence they know how to speak with me in my vernacular tongue, when yet in the life of the body they had known nothing whatever of it . . . I also read before them the Hebrew language, which they understood as much as I, even infants . . . Hence they have been convinced that when they come to man they come into possession of all his knowledges . . . They have their own also ; but they are not allowed to bring them out ; for the reason that they may serve the man by what is his ; and for many other reasons ; and because there would be the greatest confusion, if Spirits were to inflow from their own memory. Refs. D.2401.

5859. Certain Spirits came to me . . . saying that they had been with me from the beginning, knowing nothing else ; but, as I demonstrated the contrary to them, they at last confessed that they had now come for the first time ; and because they had at once put on all things of my memory, they could know nothing else. Hence also it was evident, that the moment Spirits arrive, they put on as their own all the scientifics of the man ; also, that when a number of Spirits are present, they each put them on, and they each suppose that they are their own. Into this faculty comes man immediately after death. Hence, too, it is, that good Spirits in the heavenly Society into which they come, put on and possess all the wisdom which belongs to all in that Society . . .

5865<sup>2</sup>. A certain Spirit was let into a state of the body by this, that he thought from the sensuous things of the body, thus from the external memory ; and he was then seen by me as a black mass devoid of life. The same, when restored, said that he had supposed himself to be in the life of the body.

5881. In what order scientifics and truths are disposed in the memory of a man, the man does not know ; but, when the Lord pleases, the Angels know it. For it is a wonderful order : they cohere fascicularly ; and the fascicles themselves also cohere with one another ; and this according to the connection of the things which the man had taken up. These coherences are more wonderful than any man can ever believe. In the other life they are sometimes presented to view . . . The scientifics and truths are ordained into these fascicular forms solely by the loves of the man ; into infernal forms by the loves of self and of the world ; but into heavenly forms by love towards the neighbour and by love to God ; and therefore when a man is being regenerated . . . a commotion takes place among the truths ; for they are then differently ordained. Sig.

5893<sup>2</sup>. There must be truths in the natural mind, in order that good may be operated ; and the truths must be introduced by means of an affection which is of genuine love. All things whatever in man's memory have been introduced by means of some love ; and they remain conjoined there . . . (Then) if the affection is reproduced, the truths which have been conjoined with it come forth—prodeunt—at the same time ; and if the truths are reproduced, the affection itself with which they have been conjoined, comes forth at the same time. On this account, when a man is being regenerated . . . he is ruled through Angels by the Lord by this, that he is kept in the truths which he has impressed on himself as being truths, and thereby in the affection with which they have been conjoined . . .

6077<sup>2</sup>. The truths of faith in which there is not charity are nothing but scientifics ; for they are in the memory not differently from the other things which are there. But when the truths of faith are from clarity . . . they distinguish themselves from scientifics . . . This may be evident from the state of man after death : he can then rationally think and speak about the truths and goods of faith . . . but he can bring forth no scientifics from the memory : the latter are with him like things forgotten and obliterated ; although he has all things with him.

6192. When Spirits come to man they put on all things of his memory ; thus all things which the man has learned and imbued from infancy ; and the Spirits suppose these things to be their own ; thus they act with the man as if they were the man ; but they are not allowed to enter further with the man than to his interiors which are of the thought and the will ; but not to the exteriors which are of the actions and the speech ; for these come into act—actum consequuntur—through general influx from the Lord without the mediation of particular Spirits and Angels. . . Nevertheless (the Spirits) do not know that they are with man, for the reason that they possess all things of his memory, and believe that these things are not another's but their own ; and also for the reason that they may not injure the man . . .

6200. When I have been thinking, the material ideas of thought have appeared as it were in the midst of a kind of wave ; and it was observed that that wave was nothing else than such things as had been adjoined to that subject—res—in the memory ; and that the full thought appears thus to Spirits ; but that nothing else then comes to the man's sense than that which is in the midst . . . I likened that wave round about to spiritual wings, by which the subject which is being thought of is elevated out of the memory. Hence man has apprehension of a subject. That in that waving matter round about there were innumerable things which were in agreement with the subject, might be evident to me from the fact that the Spirits who were in a more subtle sphere knew thence all those things which I had ever known about that subject ; and that they thus fully imbibe and put on all things which belong to the man ; and the Genii . . . those things which belong to his loves. Examp.

6320. When the Angels inflow, they adjoin affections also, and the affections themselves contain innumerable things in them ; but of these innumerable things only a few are received by the man ; that is to say, those things which are applicable to those things which are already in his memory. All the other things of the angelic influx encompass them, and keep them as in their bosom.

6598. Therefore they who trust in others speak much from the memory, and thereby appear to themselves to be wiser than others. But they who can think above sensuous things—if the things which are in their memory have been ordained—are in the faculty of understanding and perceiving above others ; and this according to the degree of their view from what is interior.

6618. Certain Spirits gloried because they know all things. In the Grand Man these Spirits relate to the memory. But they were told that there are indefinite things which they do not know . . .

6696. There are Spirits who in the Grand Man relate to the memory. They are from the planet Mercury . . .

6808. The Spirits from the planet Mercury relate . . . to the memory ; but to the memory of things abstracted from earthly and merely material ones. D. 1415.

[A.]6809. They once came to me, and sought out the things which were in my memory. This Spirits can do very skillfully; for when they come to a man they see in his memory every single thing which the man knows. . .

—e. Hence it was evident that the Spirits of that Earth relate in the Grand Man to the memory of things abstracted from material and earthly things. Examp.

6811. With what avidity they seek after . . . the Knowledges of things such as belong to a memory elevated above the sensuous things of the body, might be evident to me from the fact that when they were looking into those things which I knew about heavenly things, they ran over all, and continually said that it was such or such a thing; for when Spirits come to a man they enter into all his memory, and excite thence the things which are in agreement with themselves; nay, as I have often noticed, they read the things which are there as from a book.

—<sup>2</sup>. Once, when I was writing something about things to come, and they were then afar off, whence they could not look into the things from my memory . . . they were very indignant . . .

6812. Hence it may be manifestly evident that the memory of Spirits is much more perfect than the memory of men; and also that the things which Spirits hear, see, and apperceive, they retain; and most of all such things as they are delighted with . . .

6814. Their memory, being of things, and not of images purely material, more nearly subministers its objects to the thought . . . Nevertheless the Spirits of Mercury excel but little in the faculty of judgment . . . D.1416.

6844<sup>2</sup>. Hence the things in the memory which are from sensuous things partake of the light and heat of the world, and but little of the light and heat of Heaven; and therefore they are the last things which can be regenerated . . .

6922. When (the Spirits of Mercury) came, they at once ran through the things which were in my memory. This all Spirits can do; and, as they are with man, they are in possession of all things of his memory. Refs.

6925. The Spirits of Mercury . . . wander through the universe. The reason is that they relate to the memory of things in the Grand Man, which is continually being enriched.

7039<sup>2</sup>. Such things as are of faith, with those who are not in charity, are only things of the memory; and they are in the memory under no other form than any other scientific . . .

7170<sup>c</sup>. (Thus) the Spirits of Venus, which are from that part of the planet, agree with the Spirits of . . . Mercury; and relate to the memory of material things, which agrees with the memory of immaterial things, which the Spirits of Mercury constitute. 7253.

7398. All things whatever which enter with man remain with him, especially those things which are received from affection. It is believed that the things which enter are completely obliterated and cast out when the man no longer remembers them. But they are not obliterated or cast out, but inhere, either in the interior memory, or in the exterior, among those things which have become familiar. For the things which become familiar are as it were natural, which flow spontaneously, and are not excited from the memory by sensible recalling. Examps.

7803. The Spirits who chastise apply themselves to the left side, and incline themselves towards the back; and when they are there they take out from the man's memory all the things he has done and thought; for this is easy to Spirits; for when they flow to a man they at once come into all his memory. Refs.

7935<sup>2</sup>. The truths of the Church in which they have been born, and which they have imbibed in childhood and afterwards, and have confirmed in life, and have thus made of faith . . . are seated in, as if they were inscribed on the interior memory . . .

8049. 'Remember' (Ex.xiii.3)=that it is to be recollected.

8516<sup>2</sup>. For the truths of faith lie in the memory of a man as in a field spread beneath the interior sight. The good from the Lord inflows through this sight, and chooses from them, and conjoins with itself, the truths which agree.

8620. 'Write this memorial in a book'=for perpetual memory. Ex.

—<sup>2</sup>. For everyone carries with him into the other life the memory of all his acts; thus the book of his life.

8622. 'To blot out the memory' (Ex.xvii.14)=to remove. Ex.

8623. 'Moses built an altar'=in the Holy of worship and of memory. Ex.

8628. (These) Spirits from our Earth . . . were those who had placed wisdom in such things as are of mere memory; as in languages . . .

8881. The truths of faith, in order to be of faith, and in order that they may live with man, also inflow from the Lord. They are indeed learned by man, and are stored up in the memory; but so long as the man does not will them, and thence does not do them, they do not become alive. But when they are brought forth from the memory, and, through the Intellectual, are insinuated into the will . . . and thence into act, they then become alive, and are of faith . . .

9034<sup>2</sup>. Truth from the literal sense of the Word is first learned by the man of the Church, which is general truth . . . This truth is received through an external way . . . and is stored up in the memory of the external man, where there are also various scientifics from the world. Afterwards, the things stored up in this memory are subjected to the sight or view of the internal man . . . which by choice calls forth the truths which agree with the good which inflows from the Lord . . .

9035. For the truths of the literal sense of the Word stored up in the natural memory of man form there as it were a field for the view of the internal man . . .

9043. The man who is being regenerated first imbibes from the doctrine of the Church or from the Word the things which are of faith and charity, which he then stores up among the scientifics in the memory which is of the external or natural man. Thence these are called forth into the internal man, and are stored up in its memory. . . This is the beginning of spiritual life with the man.

9149. Truths from good, and the corresponding scientifics in the memory. Sig. and Ex.

—'. 'To keep'=in the memory. Ex.

9150<sup>2</sup>. 'A house,' here, = the memory; because truths and scientifics are therein as in their house.

9154. It treats of truths and scientifics taken away from the memory.

9162. Truth and good, exterior and interior, and everything which is of their affection, in the memory. Sig.

—<sup>e</sup>. 'To be given to be kept'=to be stored up and kept in the memory.

9176<sup>2</sup>. Truths not conjoined, are those which are learned from others, and which do not enter further than into the memory, and remain there as scientifics . . .

9227<sup>2</sup>. The external way is through the hearing into the memory; and from the memory into his understanding . . . Through this way enter the truths which are to be of faith . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. And the things which are stored up in the memory, and which appear in the memory before the understanding, appear in the light of the world . . . whereas those which enter the will, or which become of the will, are in the light of Heaven . . .

9230<sup>2</sup>. For the memory and the understanding of man are like the courts; and the will is like the chamber . . .

9296<sup>3</sup>. Afterwards the Lord inflows through this good into the truths of doctrine of the Church which are with the man, and calls forth from the memory such things as serve for the use of life, and implants these in the good, and perfects it.

9298<sup>2</sup>. But the truths with the evil are not commingled with the falsities of evil with them so long as they are only in the memory, and serve as means to evil; for so long they are devoid of life . . .

9340<sup>3</sup>. Scientific truths are in the memory of man; and when they are taken out from it they come to apperception. But the interior truths of faith are the truths of life itself, and are inscribed on the internal man, from which (truths) but little appears in the memory.

9368. For persuasive faith is not within man, but stands out of doors, solely in the memory, from which it is taken out when it is being taught.

9386. So long as truths stick solely in the memory . . . they have not been impressed on the life . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. Man has as it were two books, on which have been inscribed all things which he has thought and done. These books are his two memories, exterior and interior. The things which have been inscribed on his interior memory remain permanently to all eternity, and are never blotted out. They are chiefly those things which have been made of the will . . . It is this memory which is meant by everyone's Book of Life.

9393. Before (truth is loved and done) it is indeed with the man in his memory; and is called out thence sometimes to the internal sight or the understanding; from which it again falls back into the memory . . . (But) when truth is called forth out of the memory into the understanding, and from the understanding enters the will, and from the will goes out into act, then the truth becomes of the man's life, and is called good.

—'. Worship from truth which sticks solely in the memory, and thence appears in the understanding, is not worship . . .

9394. 'He put (the blood) in basins'=with man in the things of his memory. Ex.

—'. Hence 'basins,' here, are such things—res—of the memory as contain in them Divine truths . . .

—'. All things which are learned and laid up in the memory, and which can be called out thence to the intellectual sight, are called scientifics; and in themselves are the things—res—which constitute the Intellectual of the natural or external man . . . But the internal sight . . . sees nothing in the fields or gardens of the things of its memory than those which are in agreement with the loves in which the man is, and also which favour the principles which he loves . . .

—<sup>3</sup>. But . . . those who think from the delights of heavenly loves . . . as their thought is led by the Lord through Heaven, see and choose out nothing else in the fields and gardens of the things of their memory than such as are in agreement with the delights of their loves, and which are in accordance with the doctrinal things of their own Church, which they love. With these, the things of the memory are like heavenly paradises; and are also represented . . . by 'paradises.'

—<sup>4</sup>. It is further to be known, that scientifics or the things of the memory, when they become of man's life, vanish from the exterior memory; as are wont to do the gestures, actions, speech, reflections, intentions; in general the thoughts and affections of man, when, by continual use or habit, they become as it were spontaneous and natural. But no other things become of man's life, than those which enter into the delights of his love . . .

—'. Concerning the exterior memory which is of the body; and concerning the interior memory which is of his spirit. Ref.

—<sup>5</sup>. The like is the case with the scientifics of the memory, which are also in like manner excited by the delight of the man's love . . . but through the medium of the intellectual part . . . And those which enter fully into the loves, and become spontaneous, and as it were natural, vanish from the exterior memory; but remain inscribed on the internal memory, from which they are never erased. Thus do scientifics become of the life.

9416<sup>3</sup>. The writing and the engraving on tables, in the Word, = those things which have been impressed on the memory and the life; and will thus remain permanently. Ill.

9544<sup>2</sup>. As Knowledges are of the memory of the natural man . . .

9723. 'Ashes'=such things in the natural or external memory of man as remain after the uses; and which are to be removed, so as not to prevent other things from succeeding, through which there may be uses again.

[A. 9723]. Scientifics are imbibed through hearing, seeing, and reading, and are laid up in the external or natural memory. These scientifics serve the internal sight . . . as a plane of objects, that it may thence select and elicit such things as may promote wisdom. For . . . the understanding . . . looks into that plane, or memory, which is beneath itself; and, from the various things therein, it selects and elicits such as agree with its love. These it summons to itself from beneath, and lays them up in its own memory, which is the internal memory. Hence is the life of the internal man, and his intelligence and wisdom. The case is the same with the things of spiritual intelligence and wisdom . . . these, having been laid up in the memory of the external man, in like manner serve as objects for the sight of the internal man . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. After the scientifics, or Knowledge of good and truth, have performed the above use, they as it were vanish from the memory. They are circumstanced as are the matters of instruction which from infancy have served a man as means for the perfecting of his moral and civil life. After they have performed this use . . . they perish from the memory, and remain solely as to their exercise or use. Examps.

9841. 'Thou shalt take two onyx stones' = the interior memory which is from the truths of faith which are from love. . . The reason they = the memory, is that there were engraved in them the names of the sons of Israel; and by the engraving in stones is signified the memory of things which are to remain permanently—like the engraving or writing of the Law upon the tables of stone, which = those things which have been impressed on the memory and life; and thus which are to remain permanently. The reason (of this) is that on the memory of man truths have been impressed, and things which have the appearance of truth, inasmuch that it is composed of such things.

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason the onyx stones, from the engraving in them, = the interior memory, is that the things which were inscribed . . . = spiritual truths . . . Moreover, the interior memory of man consists of such truths.

— . That man has two memories, exterior and interior; and that the exterior memory is natural, thus composed of such things as come forth in the world; but that the interior memory is spiritual, thus composed of such things as are in Heaven. Refs.

—<sup>3</sup>. The reason stones on which there is engraving = the memory on which truths have been inscribed, derives its origin from the representatives in Heaven. Men who . . . come into the other life, and carry with them truths of faith only in the natural or exterior memory, and not in the spiritual or interior memory, appear to themselves, when they go out, to be wandering among rocks of stone, and in forests; whereas they who carry with them truths of faith in the spiritual memory also, appear to themselves, when they go out, to be walking among hills which have been cultivated, and also in gardens. The reason is that the truths of the external or natural memory, which are scientifics, are of no life, unless they are at the same time in the interior or spiritual memory; for the things which are in this latter have been made of life; for the interior or spiritual memory is the book of man's life . . .

9846. The heavenly form of all the Truths in their order in the memory from the good of love . . . Sig. and Ex.

9918. These (doctrinal things from the Word) are scientifics, in so far as they are in the memory which is in the external or natural man. But when they enter into the memory which is in the internal or spiritual man, which takes place when the man lives according to them, then the doctrinals as to truth become of faith, and those as to good become of charity, and are called spiritual. When this is done, they almost vanish from the external or natural memory, and appear as it were innate, because implanted in the man's life . . .

9922<sup>2</sup>. All the things-res-of the external or natural memory are called scientifics. For there is an external memory, which is of things-rerum-in the natural world; and there is an internal memory, which is of things in the Spiritual World. Refs. The things which have been inscribed on the internal memory are not called scientifics, because they are things-res-of the man's life; but they are called the truths which are of faith and the goods which are of love. These are the things which must be within the scientifics. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. That scientifics are the things of the memory in the natural man. Refs.

9931. 'To engrave' = to impress on the memory; thus also on the heart; for that which is impressed on the interior memory, which is of the life, is said to be impressed on the heart; and . . . this remains to eternity . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The reason it is said to be impressed on hearts according to the heavenly sphere, is that the things which have been impressed on the memory, especially on the interior memory, which is the book of life, have been impressed according to the heavenly sphere (or form). Ex.

10057<sup>3</sup>. Therefore when man is being regenerated, the truths which must be of faith are insinuated through the hearing and sight, and are implanted in the memory of his natural man; from this memory they are drawn up into the thought which is of the understanding; and those which are loved become of the will . . .

10067<sup>9</sup>. Man imbibes truths from hearing through the hearing, and from reading through the sight, and lays them up in the memory . . . The man's love . . . through the understanding, looks into the things therein, and selects such thence as are in agreement with the love . . .

10124<sup>2</sup>. With those who are in the Celestial Kingdom, truth does not become knowledge, nor faith, nor conscience; but it becomes reception in the good of love . . . For it does not stick as knowledge in the memory . . .

10194. It resides solely in the memory . . .

10199<sup>8</sup>. The truths which are solely in the memory . . . are called relatively external truths . . . for they reside in the external man.

10227<sup>3</sup>. Nor do they see anything except the things which belong to others; not from reason, but from the Active of the memory.

10236<sup>2</sup>. Whereas the external Sensuous which is not common to man with brute animals, and still is an external Sensuous, is that which man has in the memory from the world . . .

10252<sup>2</sup>. In order that celestial good . . . may be born with a man . . . truths must be acquired from the Word, or from the doctrine of the Church which is from the Word. These truths obtain their first seat in the memory of the natural or external man. Hence they are called forth into the internal man by the Lord, which takes place when the man lives according to them; and in proportion as the man is affected with them . . . they are elevated still higher . . . and become there celestial good . . .

10295. That this worship is effected by means of spiritual truths, may be evident from the ideas . . . in which the man then is, (and which) are from his memory, and thence from the Intellectual; and the things which proceed thence are called spiritual.

—<sup>2</sup>. But as to the Divine worship from celestial good, this is not effected by means of confessions, adorations, and prayers, in the way in which it is effected with those who are in the Spiritual Kingdom; thus not by means of truths from the memory; but by means of truths from the heart, which act as one with the love itself in which they are; for the truths with them are inscribed on their heart; and therefore when they are doing the precepts from love, they do them at the same time from truths, without thought about them from what is doctrinal; thus without the calling forth of them from the memory.

10336<sup>3</sup>. 'To write the law upon the heart' = to implant Divine truth in the will . . . When this is done, Divine truth is no longer brought forth from the memory; but is perceived from the good of love itself . . .

10751. It was given to speak with those Spirits about their own Earth; for all Spirits know how to do this when their natural or external memory is opened by the Lord; for they have this memory with them from the world; but it is not opened except with the Lord's good pleasure. They said . . . that they appear to the inhabitants of their own Earth, and speak with them, as men; and that this is effected by this, that they are let into their natural or external memory, and thence into thought such as they had been in when they had lived in the world; and that the interior sight is then opened with the inhabitants . . .

10787<sup>2</sup>. They who receive truths first in the memory, and then in the understanding, and finally in the will, are they who are in faith . . .

H. 18. For the love with man as it were looks into and draws from the things of his memory all things which are in agreement . . .

25. The Angels in the Celestial Kingdom . . . receive Divine truths at once in the life; and not, like the spiritual ones, in previous memory and thought.

26. They do not lay them up in the memory, and then think whether they are so . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. But that is called truth which is of memory and thence of thought.

—<sup>3</sup>. But so long as truth is in the memory and thence in the thought, it does not become good, nor is it alive, nor is it appropriated to the man; because man is man from the will . . .

33<sup>2</sup>. But those who do not at once admit truths into the will; but into the memory, and thence into the understanding; and, from this, will and do them, are in the Middle or Second Heaven.

246. When Angels are speaking with a man they turn themselves to him, and conjoin themselves with him; and the conjunction of an Angel with a man causes both to be in like thought; and, as the thought of the man coheres with his memory, and the speech flows thence, they are both in the same language. Besides, when an Angel or Spirit comes to a man, and by means of turning to him is conjoined with him, he comes into all his memory, insomuch that he knows scarcely otherwise than that he knows from himself the things the man knows; thus also the languages.

256. No Angel or Spirit is allowed to speak with a man from his own memory, but from that of the man; for Angels and Spirits have a memory equally with men. If a Spirit were to speak with a man from his own memory, the man would know no otherwise than that the things which he then thought were his own, when yet they would be the Spirit's. It is like the remembrance of a thing which the man had yet never heard nor seen. . . Hence there was the opinion with some of the ancients that after some thousands of years they would return into their former life, and into all its acts; and also that they had returned. They concluded so from this, that sometimes there had occurred to them as it were the remembrance of things which they had never seen nor heard. This took place because the Spirits had in flowed from their own memory into the ideas of their thought.

271. The Angels of the Inmost Heaven do not lay up Divine truths in the memory . . . But the things which these Angels see with their eyes do enter into their memory, and about these they reason and speak.

278<sup>3</sup>. (They who are in a state of innocence) love nothing more than to be led by the Lord . . . Hence it is that the things which they hear from Him, whether it be by means of the Word, or by means of preaching, they do not lay up in the memory; but at once obey it . . . The will is their memory itself . . .

292. With every man there are good Spirits and evil Spirits . . . These Spirits are in the World of Spirits . . . When these Spirits come to a man they enter into all his memory, and thence into all his thought; the evil Spirits into those things of the memory and thought which are evil; and the good ones into those things of the memory and thought which are good. The Spirits do not at all know that they are with a man; but when they are there they believe that all the things which are of the man's memory and thought are their own; and neither do they see the man . . . (thus) they do not know that the things which they are thinking, and also which they are speaking together, are from him . . .

[H.] 298. The Spirits who are with a man—both those who are conjoined with Heaven, and those who are conjoined with Hell—never inflow with the man from their own memory and the derivative thought; for if they were to inflow from their own thought, the man would know no otherwise than that the things which were theirs were his own. But still there inflows with the man through them . . . affection (either of the love of good and truth, or of the love of evil and falsity).

304<sup>2</sup>. (Man's) exteriors which are in the natural world are all the things which are of his natural or external memory, and which are of the derivative thought and imagination . . .

345. Those who die as adults have a plane acquired from the earthly and material world, and they carry it with them. This plane is their memory and its corporeal natural affection. This remains fixed, and is then quiescent; but still it serves their thought after death as an ultimate plane; for the thought inflows into it. Hence it is, that such as is this plane, and in such a way as the Rational corresponds with the things which are there, such is the man after death. But infants who die as infants . . . have not such a plane; but they have a spiritual natural plane . . . and therefore they cannot be in such gross affections and the derivative thoughts . . .

348. But those are called the intelligent who do not commit Divine truths at once to life, but first to memory . . .

355. That they are such in the Spiritual World . . . may be concluded from the fact that then all the things which are in the natural memory . . . are quiescent; and only the rational things which are thence serve there for thought and for speech. For man carries with him all the natural memory; but the things which are there are not under his view, and do not come into his thought, as when he lived in the world; he can bring forth nothing thence, and set it in spiritual light, because they are not of that light. But the rational or intellectual things which a man has acquired for himself from the knowledges . . . square with the light of the Spiritual World . . .

356<sup>2</sup>. For the interior mind of man looks into the things—res—of the natural memory, and those things there which confirm, it as it were sublimates by means of the fire of heavenly love, and draws them up, and purifies them even into spiritual ideas . . .

423<sup>o</sup>. That which is solely in the understanding is indeed with a man, but not in him. It is only a thing of his memory; and a thing of knowledge in the memory . . .

461. That man after death is in all the memory, etc., in which he had been in the world . . . Chapter.

—<sup>3</sup>. He also carries with him the natural memory; for he retains all things whatever which he has heard, seen, read, learned, and thought in the world, from his first infancy up to the last of life. But as the natural objects which are in the memory cannot be reproduced in the Spiritual World, they are quiescent; as takes place with a man when he is not thinking from them; but still they are reproduced when the Lord pleases.

462a. That man has with him from the world all his memory, has been shown by many things. Examps.

—<sup>3</sup>. I have also heard from the memory of a certain one, when it was seen and surveyed by the Angels, what his thoughts had been for a month; one day after another . . .

463. When a man's acts are laid bare to him after death, the Angels . . . look into his face, and the search wanders through the universal body, beginning from the fingers of each hand. . . (For) as each thing of the thought and will have been inscribed on the brain . . . so also they have been inscribed on the universal body, because all things of the thought and will advance thither from their beginnings, and are terminated there as in their ultimates; whence it is that the things which have been inscribed on the memory from the will and its derivative thought, have been inscribed not only on the brain, but also on the whole man; and there they come forth in order according to the order of the parts of the body . . . From these things it may also be evident what is meant by 'the book of man's life' . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. To these things I will add something memorable concerning the memory of man remaining after death; by which I have been confirmed that not only the general things, but also the most singular ones, which have entered the memory, remain permanently, and are never obliterated. I have seen books with writings therein as in the world; and I have been instructed that they are from the memory of those who had written them; and that there is no word wanting there which was in the book which had been written by the same person in the world; and that thus there can be brought forth from the memory of another the most singular things of all, even those which he himself in the world had forgotten. The reason also has been disclosed; namely, that man has an external and an internal memory; an external one which is of his natural man, and an internal one which is of his spiritual man; and that each thing which a man has thought, willed, spoken, done, and also which he has heard and seen, has been inscribed on his internal or spiritual memory; and that the things which are there are never erased, because they have been at the same time inscribed on his spirit, and on the members of his body . . .

— (1.) (Refs. to passages on the subject of the memory.)

464. Although the external or natural memory is in man after death, nevertheless the merely natural things which are therein are not reproduced in the other life; but the spiritual things which have been adjoined to the natural ones through correspondences; which, however, when presented to sight, appear in a form altogether like (that in which they appeared) in the natural world . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. But the external or natural memory, in so far as concerns the things therein which partake of what is material, and of time and space, and of all other things which are proper to nature, does not serve the spirit for that use in which it had served it in the world; because a man in the world . . . has thought naturally; whereas in the other life . . . he thinks spiritually . . .

Hence it is that the external or natural memory, as to those things which are material, is then quiescent; and those things only come into use which the man has imbibed through them in the world, and has made rational.

— The reason the external memory is quiescent as to those things which are material, is for the reason that they cannot be reproduced; for Spirits and Angels speak from the affections and the derivative thoughts which are of their minds; and therefore they cannot utter the things which do not square with them.

—<sup>3</sup>. I have spoken with many who in the world had been believed to be learned from the fact that they knew the ancient languages . . . and who had not cultivated their Rational by means of the things written in those languages; and some of them were seen as simple as those who had known nothing of those languages; some stupid . . . I have spoken with some who in the world had believed that a man is wise in proportion as he keeps [things] in the memory, and has also enriched the memory with many things; and who have spoken from it almost alone; thus not from themselves, but from others; and who have perfected nothing rational by means of the things of the memory. Some of them were stupid; some silly . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. The Rational of man is like a garden . . . the memory is the soil; scientific truths and Knowledges are the seeds; the light and heat of Heaven make them productive . . .

469. Spirits and Angels have a memory equally with men; for there remains permanently with them whatever they hear, see, think, will, and do; and their Rational is also cultivated thereby; and this to eternity. Hence it is that Spirits and Angels are perfected in intelligence and wisdom by means of the Knowledges of truth and good equally with men. That Spirits and Angels have a memory, has also been given me to know by much experience; for I have seen called forth from their memory all things which they have thought and done, both in public and in private, when they have been with other Spirits; and also that those who had been in any truth from simple good have been imbued with Knowledges, and intelligence through them . . . But it is to be known that they are not imbued with Knowledges . . . further than to the degree of the affection of good and truth in which they had been in the world . . .

517. In the Heavens . . . Knowledges are not committed to memory, but to life; for the memory of Spirits is in their life; for they receive and imbue all things which are in accordance with their life, and (nothing else).

518<sup>2</sup>. But those with whom Knowledges were residing only in the memory . . . (on being taken up to Heaven were tortured).

563<sup>9</sup>. Therefore, in the other life, when it is no longer permitted that the things—res—of the natural memory should be reproduced, they are more stupid than others.

W. 255<sup>9</sup>. A sensuous man . . . differs from a beast only in this, that he can infill the memory with scientifics, and think and speak from them . . .

277<sup>2</sup>. All the affections of the man's love . . . constitute the first degree . . . all the perceptions of his thoughts make the second degree; and all things of the memory, or all the ideas of thought which are nearest to speech, taken out thence, present the third degree. From these things determined into act come forth works . . .

404<sup>3</sup>. He is then in the thought of his spirit . . . and looks at the things which are of thought from the memory, as beneath himself . . .

—<sup>6</sup>. This thought is the thought of wisdom; but the former is thought from the memory through the sight of the natural mind.

418. When they hear anyone speaking wisely, they believe him to be such; nay, he himself then believes the same; because when he is speaking and teaching in company, he thinks from the memory . . .

427<sup>2</sup>. They who are in celestial love have wisdom inscribed on their life, and not on the memory . . . But they who are in spiritual love have wisdom inscribed on their memory; and therefore they speak about Divine truths, and do them, from beginnings (or principles) in the memory.

P. 105. The internal of thought is from the life's love . . . The external of thought is from those things which are in the memory, and which serve the life's love for confirmations . . .

227. For man has an external or natural memory, and an internal or spiritual memory; on this memory have been inscribed each and all things which he has thought, spoken, and done from the will in the world . . . This memory is his book of life, which is opened after death, and according to which he is judged.

233<sup>7</sup>. That when a man is in evil, many truths can be . . . stored up in the memory, and yet not be profaned. Ex.

— When truths are solely in the understanding, and thence in the memory, they are not in the man, but outside of him.

—<sup>6</sup>. The memory of man may be compared to the ruminatory stomach of certain animals . . . So long as the food is there, it is not in their bodies . . . but as they take it out thence . . . it becomes of their life . . . But in the memory of man there are . . . spiritual meats, which are meant by truths, and which in themselves are Knowledges. In proportion as a man takes them out thence, by as it were ruminating them, in the same proportion his spiritual mind is nourished . . . T. 173.

R. 17<sup>4</sup>. For the thought and the memory do not inflow into the will, and through the will into act; but the will inflows into the thought and memory of the understanding, and acts.

[R.] 120. Those who are in the Third Heaven (have their wisdom) inscribed on their life, and not so much on the memory . . .

121°. Those who are in the Third Heaven do not speak about truths from any memory; but clearly see them when they hear others speaking about truths, especially while they are reading the Word. The reason is that they are in the marriage itself of good and truth.

123. Truths united to good are not inscribed on the memory with them, but on their life; and that which has been inscribed on the life alone, and not on the memory, does not appear to anyone, not even to themselves, except from the fact that they perceive whether it is true, and what truth is, when they are hearing and reading; for the interiors of their minds have been opened even to the Lord . . .

161. 'Remember therefore . . .' (Rev. iii. 3) = that it should come into thought . . .

M. 73°. I will publish these things as they have been shown me in a waking state of my spirit, and afterwards recalled into my memory by an Angel, and thus described.

133°. These things they confirmed by wonderful things which they recalled into their memory from things seen, heard, and read in the natural world.

252. Loss of memory (a cause of lawful separation).

446. When the understanding begins to become rational from itself . . . then that which is in the memory from parents and masters serves it as a plane. At that time a change takes place in the mind; it had previously thought only from the things which had been introduced into the memory, meditating upon them, and obeying them; but afterwards it thinks from reason [exercised] upon them; and then, under the guidance of the love, it disposes the things seated in the memory into a new order; and, in agreement with this, it begins its proper life . . .

B. 53. Therefore (these) dogmas enter the memory only; and not into any understanding above it; but only into confirmations below it.

55. The light from Heaven . . . inflows into human minds above the memory; but light from the world . . . below it.

T. 32°. The memory of man is their soil . . .

344. The states of faith of the New Church are . . . 3. Faith of the memory.

504°. Smoke from Hell . . . extinguished the lucidity above the memory . . . and, being ignited, it burned like a flame which illuminated the region of the mind below the memory . . . But with the other . . . a gentle flame flowed down from Heaven, which illuminated the region of his mind above the memory; and also that below it even to the eye.

814°. Hence (the Germans) devote themselves little to things of judgment; but to the things of the memory . . .

815. (Hence) they keep the spiritual things of the Church inscribed on the memory; and rarely elevate them into the higher understanding; but only let them into the lower understanding, from which they reason about them . . .

Ad. 925. Memory def.

D. 78 (Index). Spirits and Angels have not a memory born proximately from the senses of the body, but an interior one, which is rather a nature. They have a sensuous memory from the man with whom they are.

295. On the state of Souls after death, as to the memory.—Spirits suppose . . . that they enjoy all the memory such as they had in the life of the body; but . . . they have no memory of particulars, but a more interior memory, which is of the nature, on which are inscribed each and all things which they had ever thought and done in the life of the body; scientifics holding as it were the surface, and the things which had been of the affections making as it were the nucleus. . . It could not appear otherwise to Spirits than that they have retained all the memory of the life of the body, because they could speak from their nature, according to those scientifics which are with me, which they put on as if they were their own; thus they could not know otherwise than that it was their own memory . . . All the Spirits, when they came to me, could speak my vernacular. . . Of their own language they knew not a whit. Their nature—indoles—is in place of a memory . . . so that they know no otherwise than that they are acting from the memory. Moreover they are able to converse with each other . . . from the things which are in man . . . Hence also they can know no otherwise than that they are speaking from their own former memory . . . But it is to be well observed that each and all things are so directed by God Messiah that they cannot take any things from the memory of anyone than those which can serve for use . . .

353. That man enjoys a double memory: how this double memory perishes. — The memory which man properly calls the memory is the natural memory, because it is of the natural mind, and is the memory of particulars, or of material ideas which correspond to words. This memory perishes when man dies; his soul retains the faculty of reasoning and of understanding from a certain spiritual memory, or that of rational or immaterial ideas . . . This memory causes that a man after death knows no otherwise than that he is still in the life of the body; but as this memory has been born from the natural memory, it is replete with fallacies, and even disturbs and obscures, and, if left to itself, it perverts Truths. Therefore this memory also successively vanishes, insomuch that the Rational born thence perishes. But this memory is nevertheless retained so long, and is imbued with the Knowledges of truth, until it can be obliterated.

358. That the memory of particulars with the conceit thence is grievous at the first entrance into the other life. — Those who have much memory, and glory thence . . . this memory thus blown out is as it were hard, and adheres outside . . . creating a pain in the head . . .

771. He who indulges the memory only . . . in the other life understands very little as to what spiritual truth is . . . He remains permanently in his particular ideas, which form as it were a callosity with which his brain . . . is encompassed . . . Such a callosity is dissipated with difficulty, and indeed with pain . . . 807.

796. On the excitation by Spirits of those things which are in man's memory.

— They can excite from the memory of the man those things which are in agreement . . . because it corresponds to their cupidity, which acts thus secretly into the memory.

797. They can also as it were read in the memory of the man the things which are in the memory . . .

885. On the interior memory. 888. 889.

887. The memory of Spirits . . . is interior; but is not [a memory of] particulars, like that of man . . . But the memory of Spirits is interior, not Known to Souls . . .

889a. That there is an interior memory, and the quality of it, may be perceived from this, that in dreams—in which the memory of particulars is not so much excited as in wakefulness—a man is wont to be presented with all his features, with the whole condition of his body, his speech, as the same . . . which the man never knows from the memory of particulars . . . In like manner from faces we know their lower minds . . .

896. That Souls have the memory of particulars, when the same are represented to them spiritually.—Whenever any Soul who came to me who had been known to me in his life of the body, while he did not know that he was in the other life . . . then, while I represented to him by spiritual ideas . . . the persons, places, cities, houses, chambers, where he had been in the life of the body, or which he had seen, he then knows all these things . . . Thus particulars also can be recalled into the mind by others; but not from themselves; but from the man with whom he is. Thus also the same can know that he is in the other life . . .

1029. The external callosities are induced by means of the corporeal memory; for the more closely they inhere in this memory, the more solid and dense they are; whereas the things which do not stick in this memory are obliterated . . . by the more interior things which operate into them, and reduce them to their own form.

1050. They who inhere solely in the things of the memory of particulars . . .

1077. On the memory of particulars.—When man lives he does not know that there is any other memory than that of particulars; because he has not reflected upon those things which are of the interior memory; or that without an interior memory he could never reason. Still less has he reflected upon the more interior memory, without which man can never understand what is true and good. . . (Before the sight of Spirits) the memory of particulars can be as it were taken away, and the interior one can thus be open to the sight, like a softish snowy substance. . . Besides, Spirits know that they enjoy no memory of particulars, which is like a callosity, clinging together; nor is it permitted that this memory should come into use. . . Hence Spirits have so many privileges above men, which could never he if they spoke from that corporeal memory. But they speak from the interior one; and it then seems to them that they are speaking no otherwise than from their own memory of particulars; for they speak from the memory of particulars of men, coming into the whole possession of it, so that they can bring forth from his memory whatever he has thought and done.

1078. Moreover, those things which are philosophical, and which concern universals, also pertain to the memory of particulars; as also do spiritual and celestial Truths. It is only the apprehension—captus—of these things which pertains to the interior memory.

1079. The memory of particulars may be called the corporeal memory, or that of material ideas; the interior memory may be called the natural memory, or the spiritual natural memory; the more interior memory, the spiritual memory; that which is inmost is celestial, which is produced by the Lord alone . . .

1312. When this Truth is accepted, that a Spirit does not enjoy such a memory as a man . . .

1415. (The Spirits of Mercury treated of in connection with the subject of the memory.) 1416. 1418. 1420. 1455.

1438. Such Knowledges are to be so insinuated that they are not infixed in the memory from the will of man; for then their roots do not work deeply . . .

1662. That the memory of man remains entire in the other life.

— Souls know no other than that they have spoken from their own memory . . . but [it was] from the interior memory, through which are excited those things which are in the corporeal memory . . . It was given them to remember only those things which they could excite from my memory. Spirits, moreover, excite the things which are in my memory, and thus speak in agreement with their own life . . .

1757. That intellectual faith is only a thing of the memory. Ex.

1776e. They suppose that the things in my memory are their Knowledges. Thus they possess the man . . .

1932. So that there remains with them the memory which they had in the life of the body, but it is not allowable to exercise it . . . except when the Lord permits . . .

1938. Spirits at once come into possession of all things of the memory (of the man with whom they are).

1983. On the memory.—There is an interior memory, from which is excited the memory of material and corporeal ideas; and such a memory remains also with Spirits; from which, when the Lord pleases, are excited those things which had been in the memory of sensuous ideas. That there is such a memory, and that it is more perfect than the memory of the body, I have learned from many things; nay, that which the man supposes to be forgotten, is still in that memory . . . But, besides this memory, there is also a memory still more interior; namely, that of spiritual ideas . . . and it is this from which is excited that interior memory. By this spiritual memory Spirits much excel men . . .

1984. As a Spirit can speak when with a man . . . he can never know anything else than that he has the memory of sensuous things which he had in the life of the body.

[D.] 2010. In those (men) in whom there is what is closed, and more of memory, there is in the same proportion less of thought; but in those in whom there is what is open, and more of the interior memory, there is in the same proportion more of thought . . .

2019. Men enjoy a corporeal memory . . . not so Spirits.

2154. On the interior memory, and its influx into the exterior memory.—There is such an interior memory that there are inscribed on it each and all things which the man has done, spoken, and thought; and a more interior memory, which is rather to be called a nature-indoles. The most minute things of the ideas are there, so that there is not a whit which the man has thought from his first infancy to the last of his life which is not there . . . The Angels could recite word by word each single word, and that in their order, and each single idea in the ideas of the words, which I had written many years before; although I could not remember one series or line. 2155.

2188. That the Angels have no memory of past things, and no foresight of the future. Ex.

— Yet they seem to themselves to have memory, and to know all and innumerable things, because it is then given them by the Lord every moment. 2190.

2199. That memory also exists with Spirits.—The Spirits who have not been long with me . . . and those who have not been with me before, were quite ignorant whence they were, and what they had done. They suppose that they have not lived . . . Yet memory is sometimes conceded to them . . . by the Lord . . . 2200.

2251<sup>a</sup>. For it is not memory which operates with (Spirits), but it is the natural nature-indoles . . . But they suppose that they have a memory such as they had in the life of the body . . . because they put on the memory of the man.

2286. Nor have Angels such a memory, namely a memory of corporeal and merely material ideas . . .

2398. Therefore it is necessary for (evil Spirits) to be without a corporeal memory . . . for from themselves they rush into the worst things.

2467<sup>2</sup>. The nature of the darkness in such as have only a faith of the memory . . .

2593. When reflection is absent [nothing] comes into the memory . . . Although the human sight be poured round on thousands and thousands of objects, nevertheless the memory retains none of them upon which he has not had external reflection. In like manner when he is thinking: that on which he has had reflection the memory retains.

2594. But there is an interior memory in which everything is inscribed, whether he has reflected or not; so that there is not even the least thing which has ever reached the sight of the body, or the internal sense, [which is not] most accurately inscribed; consequently those things upon which the man does not reflect.

2608. They all speak my vernacular, and seem to themselves to know all those things which are in my memory, supposing that they are from themselves . . .

2752. Spirits can speak from man, from his outermost or material memory, and his natural memory, although the man does not at all know that so it is being done . . .

2755. That the memories of the exterior man, or their minds, are vessels of spiritual and celestial things, has also been provided by the Lord, so that no Spirit shall lose one whit of those things which are of his natural mind and memory . . . So that if the human race were to be deficient, Spirits could be let into a like state to serve as vessels . . .

2851. How evil Spirits have taken out from the ideas of my memory, each according to his own state and his own nature, those things which had ever been in such a composite idea . . . Some took remote, nay, more remote things . . . For with the ideas of the memory the case is this, that very many things, and indeed even foreign things, successively associate themselves . . .

2861. For there are genera and species of Spirits of similar faculty; and when like things are called forth in the memory of man . . . they suppose that they are the same (persons). Then all those things are called forth from the memory which represent those (persons), their words, speech, tone, gesture, and many things . . .

2915. Spirits, also, by means of lookings-intuitions—into me take out from my memory that which is a general view-intuitio . . .

2928. Sometimes there has appeared to them that which has been called forth from my memory, so that they had not heard it before; but the Spirits with me, who supposed themselves to be me . . . had called them forth as their own . . .

2939. That some Spirits do not at once put on the memory of the man; and some put on all of it. Ex.

2942. Spirits, when permitted, can bring forth many things from my memory, while I know nothing about it; thus can as it were read the things in my memory while I am awake, and while I am asleep . . . from which it may be concluded that [they can do] in like manner from the memory of other men, while they do not know, while it is permitted.

2967<sup>2</sup>. Having been reduced into his pristine form of an exterior Spirit . . . he remembered nothing of those things which had happened to him [when] in the form of an interior Spirit . . . From which it may be evident that interior Spirits, and Angels, while they become Spirits, do not know what has been transacted in Heaven; nay, that they had been Spirits or Angels.

2989. That if Spirits enjoyed the corporeal memory they could not be in a spiritual state. Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. The interior memory is as it were the interior faculty of bringing forth and viewing the particulars of the corporeal memory.

3022. As man is the ultimate of order, his ideas are terminated in his memory, or in the material ideas of his memory; and as all ideas are there terminated . . . a Spirit cannot suppose otherwise than that they begin in himself; when yet his ideas are in the ideas of the man in whom they are terminated . . .

3050. The speech of words . . . belongs to the corporeal memory ; but the speech of the interior memory is the true speech of Spirits. Ex.

3104. The reason why a Spirit knows no otherwise than that he is the man . . . is that he at once puts on all things of the man's memory, as if they were his own ; and he who puts on the memory of a man, puts on the man too . . . That they have put on my memory, completely, is evident to me from many experiences. But they do not possess the interior memory ; this is possessed by the Angels of the Lord who are ruling those Spirits who are below . . . When a man arrives at the point that his interior memory is ruled by the evil Spirits of the interior World of Spirits—which is never permitted—then the man can no longer live.

3129. Spirits are in a more perfect state than when they were men . . . which they have from this, that the memory of particulars is separated from them. If in the other life they were to think from this memory at the same time that they were with other Spirits, who are in ideas, the memory of particulars would be so burst asunder that it would be completely insane.

3143. Spirits retain in the interior memory the things which they hear, see, perceive, as men do in the exterior memory ; but they cannot recall these things ; but the Lord alone . . .

3230. Therefore the memory of particulars is never obliterated in the other life ; but what he has thought and spoken is not disclosed, except with the Lord's permission.

3234. Whatever Spirits hear they retain much more readily than men ; although they do not know that they retain them ; for thus is formed the interior memory, unknown to the man ; and the purer the Angels, the more readily and fully they retain them. A.6931.

3258. The internal sense to which the Spirits of Mercury relate, is such as is the memory, and indeed the memory of particulars ; but that of things, and not that of images ; for the memory of particulars contains visual images which belong to the imagination ; thus images of earthly and corporeal things ; and it also contains things—res, as laws, and the Knowledges of laws, and also those of faith ; as that there is nothing but evil with man. This part of the memory relates more nearly to the thought, because it subministers to the thought subjects for thinking more deeply . . . To such a memory do the Spirits of Mercury relate . . . 3265.

3259. Hence it may be quite clearly evident that the memory of Spirits and Angels is much more perfect than the memory of men ; and that they retain whatever they hear, see, perceive . . .

3277. (These inhabitants of another world in the starry heaven) relate to such a memory (of uses), because they thus come to the Knowledge of uses . . .

3280. They are, therefore, like the Spirits of Mercury, a memory not of scattered things—rerum, but a memory of uses continued progressively to the ninth use.

3718. (The Sirens) were with me in phantasy through the whole night, so as to occupy my memory . . .

3722. Such were able to excite from my memory all the venereal things which had been thought with me, even from infancy ; nor could it be resisted, and they told them to me aloud. Such is their art . . . that not only with man, but also with Spirits, they could simultaneously excite from their memory all their corporeal, and all their venereal things . . . For the efficacy of their sphere is such that it pervades even into the corporeal memory of Spirits, which is otherwise never permitted.

3740. Spirits have wondered that when they have spoken, they have at once received an answer. It was then perceived that the answer—thus the truth and good—which was in the memory of the man, is excited solely through the general [influx] which is from the Lord. It inflows through Heaven, so that unless there were an influx from the Lord, there would go forth no answer of truth and good from the memory. —e.

3775. The Spirit (of the Quakers) cannot speak otherwise than according to the doctrinal things of their memory ; for when Spirits are leading a man, they suppose themselves to be the man, and put on his memory, consequently the doctrinal things . . . It is a general law that a Spirit can bring forth nothing against their doctrinal things and persuasions, nor add anything from what is his own which is not in their memory.

3783. The reason Spirits cannot induce persuasions, is that they do not enjoy the corporeal memory, but put on that of the man. Moreover if Spirits retained the corporeal memory, they would completely obsess the man . . . Nor are Spirits allowed to have a memory of past things—this is proper to man—although there remain with Spirits each and all things which they have seen and heard ; but they are permitted to recall nothing from them ; nor can they ; the Lord alone sometimes grants that the things which they have seen and heard are recalled ; as, with some, that they have suffered, and how frequently.

3799. As this is diabolical . . . it is not permitted to remember it.

3962. On memory.—In the other life it is not allowed to use one's own memory, for the reason that everyone who brings forth past things from his own memory, is not only solicitous about future ones, and torments himself because present things are not such as past ones, but grieves in every state ; and then also . . . he wills nothing else than to live from himself ; for to live from one's own memory is as it were to live from one's self ; which is not allowed a Spirit ; but to a man more than a Spirit, for many reasons. A Spirit, therefore, as from the memory of the man he supposes himself to be the man, if he were to use his own memory he would then suppose that he was not the man, but himself ; and therefore, for the sake of the use that he may serve the man, he is not allowed to use his own memory.

3970. There are Spirits who want to have all things, and yet cannot determine themselves to possess anything . . . They ran through [all things] in my memory . . . but did not determine themselves to see any stated thing . . .

[D.] 4001. On the memory of Spirits.—If Spirits enjoyed the corporeal memory, no Spirit could be with man; for thus he would die; for there cannot be two memories acting simultaneously; unless they were to take away from the man his memory, and think from their own, and they were then to speak simultaneously, like the obsessed. Besides . . . the Lord alone wills to teach and lead man, which could never be done if there were anything of the corporeal memory in the Spirit.

4011. On memory.—A certain person was represented who in life had studied the memory only, and had placed all intelligence and wisdom in the memory, supposing that a man is wise in proportion as he keeps in the memory; when yet the contrary is the rather true, that a man is less wise in the proportion he keeps [things] in the memory. (The representation of him des.)

4015. Hence it is evident that with man the corporeal things must die, and also the corporeal memory; in order that the spirit may be presented.

4037. While man is in the life of the body he can be reformed; for he then enjoys the corporeal memory, in the vessels or ideas of which the interior ideas are founded. (Continued under IDEAS.)

—<sup>e</sup>. Confirming things then accede, which are all in the corporeal memory, where also are the Knowledges of faith.

4038. But in the other life they are not inrooted in the corporeal memory; for in the other life it is not allowed to use the corporeal memory; and therefore Spirits are not reformed there, but remain in the state in which they had been; only the filthy things and the falsities of the corporeal memory . . . are subdud by means of vastations and punishments, and become as it were dead . . . so that they may subserve for uses . . .

4041. The deceitful Spirits above the head . . . led the Spirits above me to speak . . . It was thought alone [by which they did this]; this is only a direction of the vessels of the memory, which caused them to speak as it were from themselves . . .

4042. That it was only a direction of the vessels of the memory was evident; so that while the vessels of the memory are being directed, the Spirit who is speaking cannot speak otherwise . . . Hence it is evident that there is a continual disposition of the vessels of man's corporeal memory; for, as the vessels are disposed, so do the Spirits speak; and so [it is that] those who are nearest cannot think otherwise; for the vessels of the memory are the planes into which the ideas are determined; which, if they are not adapted, cannot receive; and as they are adapted, so they receive. The ideas of the nearest Spirits are as it were bound to these.

4043. With those who are in faith the vessels of the memory are disposed by the Lord; with all, in what is general, by the Lord through the Angels; with a variation of the generals, otherwise the Angels cannot be present. The particulars of the generals are of the man or Spirits. Ex.

4044. These generals (as when a man is thinking and yet sees the things which he meets) come from the interior; the things which are interior appear in the corporeal memory as generals; no otherwise can [the Angels] inflow; for they dispose the corporeal memory in general as to the variations of its generals. But evil Spirits are as it were in a chain with the particulars of the memory with those who are thinking evil things; so that not only are the nearest Spirits in the chain, but also the more remote evil ones. It is a chain; for with those who are not in true faith the particulars are produced by evil Spirits; [whereas with those] who are in true faith, the Lord disposes, through the interiors, and through Heaven and the Angels, even the singulars.

4114a. There are with a Spirit two lives which he draws with him from the body, and which remain, as no corporeal memory is given him to use; namely, the life of persuasion, and the life of cupidities . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. When a Spirit is in persuasion, he then at once excites confirming things from the memory of the man . . .

4115. When a Spirit is in his life of persuasion, he excites all things whatever which are in the memory of the man which conform to his persuasion . . . I have sometimes wondered whence came such prudence, cunning, skill, and acumen in finding those things which they had never known. I supposed he had taken it from his corporeal memory; but it is not so, but from that of the man, which subverses them; the Spirit merely comes into his persuasions, and then the things which conform are at once excited.

4120. Only the Spirits suppose that the things which they speak are produced from their own corporeal memory.

4125. On the memory of Spirits.—If Spirits were permitted to be in the corporeal memory, they could not possibly be among other Spirits; for then evil Spirits would at once know whatever of evil they had thought and done . . . Thus they would produce from his memory nothing else than evils and falsities, and would thus continually infest him; therefore the Lord alone knows what a man has thought and done before he became a Spirit.

4167. As Spirits are not permitted to use the memory of particulars, there are interior memories which however cannot be called memories, but faculties of the memory of particulars, such as the man is if he is not thinking from the memory of particulars. Man often-times so thinks, but is unaware of it; although the memory of particulars is the plane from which [this is done]: but still the faculty of thinking is thence. Such are Spirits; thus more excellent than man. They are with man, so that they think from his memory, because they are faculties and powers; and they then know no otherwise than that they are the man, and that the man's particulars are theirs. This has been evident to me from very many experiences. I have spoken with them [saying] that so it is. They are indignant, and suppose that all the particulars which they speak are their own; but when it was demonstrated—as also by the fact that they speak in my language, and know all the languages which I know, and do not know those which I do not know—then being convinced they were silent. The memory of man is their ultimate plane. They were convinced also from the fact that it was said that if they were with the insane, they also were insane; that with the intelligent they were intelligent; and still they supposed that all things were their own. In a word, the life of beginnings (or principles) is with them, and according to this life they reason; and when this life inflows into the memory of man it excites the like things . . . The life of their cupidities excites the cupidities. These lives appear like instinct.

4168. I have spoken with Spirits about this, who complained that they had no reminiscence of the memory of particulars, although they have it, and yet are not allowed to bring it forth; as with a certain one who above others had been skilled in and had cultivated the Greek language; to whom it was said, What need is there of such things in the other life? Are they not merely the means for being intelligent? And when they have the reason [itself], what need is there of the means? But it is wonderful that even when their antecedent life is recalled into the memory—what they have done; and what they have said—they know this again just as if they excelled in the best memory; so that they have completely with them the memory of places, actions, sayings.

4195. Every Spirit, and still more every Society of Spirits, exhales a sphere which is from its principles . . . and when it acts into the memory of a man, it excites thence whatever is concordant: thus does the General of the Spirits excite, from the memory of the man, all the concordant particulars. Thence do Spirits speak, and suppose that it is from themselves; and they persuade the man that it is from him. When such a sphere reigns, then all the things which are excited, even the most false, appear as truths, and confirm . . . For as Spirits lack memory, there is a certain instinct as it were which acts.

4253. Concerning the instinct of Spirits, and their memory, and concerning love.—Spirits have not a particular memory, but another interior one, which is imperceptible. They have a certain instinct, which is such that they desire and want this or that thing according to their nature and state. When they desire or want, then all things in agreement or which conform are excited from the memory of the man. Such is their influx. (Continued under SPIRIT.)

4259. Memory after death: that Souls and Spirits do not know whom they have been.—Souls do not know whom they have been, except from others who have that idea: it is then excited; and so they know; but presently they do not know. I have spoken with Spirits, and said that if they knew whom they had been it would be the greatest injury to them; they would then be thinking about themselves; whence would come many evils: the love of self, merit: and so others would know [them], whence they would be their idols; [or] if their enemies, they would be exposed to their hatred and revenge; thus neither could they be perfected. But when they do not know whom they are, then they can be reformed and perfected; not knowing whether or not they had been poor, low, and so on.

4313. On the memory of Spirits.—I heard a certain one who spoke with another, both of whom I had known in the life of the body. He described the genius of the other, such as he had been, and what kind of opinion he had had about him; and also a letter which he had written; and many things in a series. The other acknowledged it and was silent. Hence it could be manifestly evident that Spirits have the memory of particulars, but that they are not allowed to bring forth things thence except when it is permitted by the Lord. He afterwards said that he knew still more things, and wanted to produce them; but he was not permitted.

4324. Concerning . . . memory.—It is not permitted to Spirits to be such towards each other as they had been in society in the body; namely in externals; as for instance in external simulated things of decorum . . . They are sometimes remitted into externals . . . and then they speak otherwise than as they think, and act otherwise than as they will . . . but at once when their externals are taken away they are no longer acknowledged (or recognized) . . . and their ends and loves are open . . . Hence neither is the memory of particulars conceded them.

4335. The memory of Spirits.—Spirits speak among themselves from no other memory than the interior one, which is their Rational when they are living in the body; whereas man, when he is in the world, speaks from the memory of the body. Hence it is that Spirits are able to speak among themselves; and that all Souls, of whatever land, region, or language, can have converse together. This speech is that which falls with me into the speech of words; which is not unlike the Rational with man, from which he thinks . . .

4342. On the interior memory, and the speech thence.—I have spoken with Spirits, that, when they are speaking together their language or speech, which is the universal of all languages, they cannot even produce the name of any man, nor a word of human language; but when they are speaking with me, this they suppose [to be] from themselves; but that it is from my corporeal memory, or that of particulars, where their ideas inflow into names and words. They affirmed [that they could do it], and tried among themselves to utter the name of Abraham; but they could not; for their speech is not of words, but of ideas . . . It was thence evident . . . that nothing whatever of a word, still less of the name of any man, kingdom, region, can pass to Spirits; but that it perishes with man; and that only the sense . . . [passes to them]. . . When Spirits [think] of any person, city, or the like, of which they have had an idea from the world, they only present the idea of it; that is, all the things which they have heard, or seen, or conceived about the man, kingdom, city; which idea is sometimes simultaneous, and sometimes is divided into many: hence their speech, and also a full perception. Thus have I also often spoken with Spirits . . .

4345. On the memory.—I asked a certain Jew, who supposed that he had memory—for they speak together as on Earth, and do not know that it is from the interior memory—I asked what his name had been, and whence he was. He thought, and said that he did not know and was indignant. But it was given to say to him that it is better not to know this, for many reasons. But of what quality [a person] is, whether good or evil, is known in the other life. From this is he known. 4385.

[D.] 4398. Concerning a waking sleep; that Spirits have not the memory of particulars.

— It was then given to observe the quality of the states of Spirits, namely that they have not the memory of particulars; and that therefore they conclude nothing from that, but from the persuasion which inflows. I also then concluded about some things in the same way, when yet I could conclude nothing from the memory of particulars; so that there was no reflection from particulars. I had been in such a sleep by some alternations before.

.4410. On memory.—It was said to a certain one who was indignant because he did not remember the things which [existed] in the life of the body . . . that it is sufficient that he can think much more and much better than in the life of the body; and can better understand each and all things which come up in the other life; for the things which are in the world have been left behind; and he is now in the other life, where he has everything requisite for the use of the other life . . .

4430. On the memory of particulars.—I heard a certain one enumerating to another, who was a Siren, the flagitious things which she had perpetrated in the life of the body, and this as to every word which had fallen from her, quickly, in order, without hesitation, by exciting the ideas to the life, with the circumstances, only in the speech of Spirits . . . It was thence shown that they have with them all the particulars of the memory, and lose not a whit, except the bones and flesh . . . To the Souls who had loved the corporeal memory, which they had lost, and who were grieving, it was shown that they have each and all things with them. But still they do not want their evils to be called out thence, and thus be open; for all their acts, thoughts, and ends would thus be open before others. On hearing these things, they do not want them to be open, and that the memory of particulars should be open.

4431. There are such Spirits as can call forth these things; [they are] from those who belong to Mercury, and relate to the lower interior memory and its sense. I was told that they are such among themselves; and that when it is permitted they are able thus to view the particulars of the memory of a Spirit. Hence it may be evident that an evil man pays in the other life for all his thoughts and acts; and if he supposes that he has not done evil, they are then called forth in order with all their circumstances, [and] with his acknowledgment.

4444. That all things which are of the memory, and the things which are of the derivative thought, are ideas, so that the things of the memory are nothing but ideas . . . may be concluded from speech from thought, in that the ideas fall into words.

4461<sup>2</sup>. Hence it was evident in what way things formerly done and said can be disclosed from the corporeal memory. He supposed that he had not been in Hell before; and therefore . . . he was shown where he had been . . .

4469. As concerns the nature—indolem—of Spirits, it now seems to be circumstanced like what is involuntary . . . and therefore the voluntary things which are especially of the exterior memory are hidden away, that is, they are not allowed to recall them into use. Those to whom it is permitted to recall them into use are unhappy; for they are permitted to descend into worldly and corporeal things, and thus again to be putrescent, and to suffer more direful things than others . . .

4488<sup>e</sup>. Man can in like manner conclude, but more obscurely, because he cannot recall all things into the memory . . .

4500. On memory. (Crimes disclosed there.) 4823.

4716. Man in the world reflects from the corporeal memory; but Spirits from the interior memory. When a man sees another, he reflects upon all those things which he has heard and has experienced concerning the person; and acknowledges as a friend and companion him with whom he has had converse . . . But not so Spirits. They acknowledge as a friend one who is like themselves; as an acquaintance, everyone who receives their ideas; but this with much variety; and this whether they have been acquainted or not. A man reflects upon the various things with which he may clothe himself . . . Neither do Spirits do this; garments are given them according to their state; and they do not know whence or when, nor do they care. A man knows of what quality is his house, his chambers, his courts, and many other things, and also his furniture. Spirits [know] indeed in like manner; but when they are changed, and when new ones are given . . . they rarely reflect whence they are, and when they [came]: but one Spirit differently from another. In like manner when he comes into another place, he does not know where he had been before; thus he does not reflect from the former to the latter, like man. In a word, the reflections are circumstanced according to the states in which they are; [both] with those who are in the other life, and with those who are in the world.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Angels think and act much more excellently than men, although they do not know the state of man, so as to be able to institute a comparison. The principal cause is that they have not the memory of past things as to such things as are external; but [only] as to such things as are internal, thus which are of faith and of eternal life. But whence and how these things are learned, they do not remember. In this they are like infants, who learn but do not know how.

4749. In the world (Ericus Benzelius) . . . despised all others in comparison with himself, except one who had excelled him in memory; he placed everything learned and wise in memory; he was in the doctrine of the Church from memory, and nothing from himself; and, being such, he was not allowed to contaminate his internal.

4765. On memory after death.—It happened that Spirits saw in my memory about a certain servant, that I had not given him what he ought to have . . . and still I had given him all things which I had stipulated.

When I told them this, they took out from my memory how often I have dreamed about it, and what I have dreamed . . . and also that I have given him his wages ; and yet I myself had completely forgotten this ; and besides they did the like with the servant. Hence it was manifestly evident to me that each and all things ; nay, the most singular things ; were inscribed on the interior memory, or the memory of the spirit, even the things which have been completely obliterated in the exterior memory.

5585. The speech of Spirits is natural ; it is from their interior memory, from which the ideas become words . . . which are the initiations of natural words . . .

5586<sup>1</sup>. This Spirit had no ideas, but only spoke from the interior memory, without ideas . . .

5587. I was instructed from Heaven that such things as are rational, and which they hear, (the celestial) never utter, nor can they utter them, because they have not a memory of those things other than that they know and perceive them when others speak about them ; and then they say or think, Yea, yea, or Nay, nay.

—<sup>v</sup>. Hence it might be evident to me that they have a memory such as is that of Spirits, which is exterior, from which they can also speak ; but not interior ; thus they do not speak with ideas . . .

5588. That thought which is speaking, or exterior, divided into ideas, presents the speech of Spirits ; and it is from the interior natural memory.

5589a. Therefore they speak similarly in the other life who are rational . . . and they who speak only from the memory of a thing . . .

5602. Whatever a man writes remains in the interior book of his memory, and is read before him.

5643. The truth of faith is received in the memory of man . . . The will, through the understanding . . . sees in the memory that this truth is in accordance with its own good . . . and then it looks into it, loves it, thinks it, and also . . . speaks it and acts it ; thus is good conjoined with truth in the natural memory, and then at the same time in the spiritual memory. Examp.

5702. They are esteemed as learned . . . because they have known how to speak from the memory as if from the Rational . . .

5851. (But) with the spiritual the things which they hear enter into the memory ; because the internals with them are not open. The things which enter the life perish from the memory, being as it were implanted and natural . . . That which enters only through the eye, enters into the understanding, and lays itself up in the memory ; whereas the things which enter through the hearing, enter into the understanding and at the same time into the life.

D. Min. 4550. Memory such as there is in the other life.—I have spoken with Spirits about memory, namely, that there is not language, thus the memory of words, nor the memory of knowledges such as are in the memory ; but whatever they have learned by means of languages and knowledges regarding what is fair and good. Thus neither theological things, in so far as they are in the memory.

4560. I have thought about some thing with an obscure idea . . . But the Spirits apperceived these things manifestly ; because they can as it were read those things which are more subtle with me in the memory, unknown to me.

4621. Man is unaware that he never has anything impressed on the memory of which he has not formed some idea.

4645. So long as man lives in the world . . . he has a corporeal memory, which grows, and in which are to be rooted the things which are of the interior memory . . . But this memory is exterior or corporeal, in which interior things are rooted. After death, man indeed has all his exterior or corporeal memory, or each and all things of it ; but this can no longer grow ; and, where it is not, a new concordance and correspondence cannot be formed ; and hence all things of his interior memory are there, and are terminated in his exterior memory, although he is not allowed to use this. From these things it may be evident what this means : that as the tree falls, it remains. Ex. 4646.

4738. On the interior memory.—The nature of the interior memory may be evident from this, that some seem to read in books, and to see and read each and all things there, just as in the life of the body . . . as in the World . . .

E. 8. With an Angel, that which he speaks continually inflows, and not into his memory ; but immediately into the understanding, and thence into words.

14<sup>2</sup>. As (the Angels of the Celestial Kingdom) receive these things at once into the life, and not first into the memory, they do not speak about the things of faith . . .

105. 'Remember therefore . . . '=the recollection of the former things.

— . They reside solely in the memory . . .

107. To think outside of one's self is to think solely from the memory ; for this is outside the man, as is the court through which we enter into the house . . . 227<sup>2</sup>.

193. Man has two states ; one, when he is thinking from his spirit ; and the other when he is thinking from the memory of his body . . .

—<sup>10</sup>. 'To lay aside the talent in the earth and in a napkin '=solely in the memory of the natural man.

240<sup>2</sup>. The reason the celestial Angels appear naked, is that they have no need to retain truths in the memory . . . But the reason the spiritual Angels appear clothed, is that they have truths inscribed on the memory . . . and the truths of memory and the derivative understanding are those which correspond to garments.

242<sup>4</sup>. To the stomachs (of birds and ruminants) corresponds the memory with man. This man enjoys in place of those stomachs, because man is spiritual. Into this he first collects spiritual foods, which are Knowledges ; and afterwards takes them out by as it were ruminating ; that is, by thinking and willing ; and appropriates them to himself . . . 290<sup>2</sup>.

403. The Knowledges . . . before the man becomes spiritual, are implanted in his natural memory . . .

434<sup>15</sup>. The memory of the natural man is only the entrance to him; nor is truth with him until he wills and does it . . .

556<sup>4</sup>. By 'the teeth' are properly signified those things which are solely in the memory and are brought forth thence; for those things which are in the memory of a sensuous man correspond to the bones and teeth.

569<sup>3</sup>. For every man has two memories; namely, a natural memory, and a spiritual memory. Man can think from both memories; from the natural memory when he is speaking in the world with men; but from the spiritual memory when from his spirit; and a man rarely speaks with another from his spirit; but only with himself; which is to think.

617<sup>16</sup>. There was a like thing with these Most Ancients . . . as there is with those who are in the Lord's Celestial Kingdom: if the latter imbue the natural man and its memory with the Knowledges of spiritual truth and good, and want to be wise from these, they become stupid; when yet they are the wisest of all in Heaven.

654<sup>63</sup>. In a word, man must first enrich the memory with Knowledges; afterwards, he must cultivate his understanding by their means; and finally his will. The memory is of the natural man; the understanding is of the rational man; and the will is of the spiritual man. This is the way of the reformation and regeneration of man. Rep.

659<sup>7</sup>. 'Whom thou rememberest no more, and who are cut off from thy hand' (Ps.lxxxviii.5)=those who are deprived of all truth and good.

675<sup>7</sup>. Those who procure for themselves nothing of intelligence are like the 'foolish virgins,' who possess truths solely in the memory, and not in the life: these are deprived of them after their departure from this world . . .

739<sup>4</sup>. The third or inmost degree is opened with those who apply Divine truths at once to life, and do not first reason about them from the memory, and thereby let them into doubt. This is called the celestial degree.

— But those who have received Divine truths only in the memory . . . remain natural; nay, become sensuous. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. For the men of the Celestial Church are such that they perceive all the truths and goods of Heaven by means of influx into their interiors . . . and have no need to learn them by a posterior way, and enrich the memory with them.

789<sup>6</sup>. To know, and thence to think and speak, are from the memory; but to will and act from love are from the life. Man can think and speak many things from the memory which are not from his life . . . but, when left to himself, he can think and speak nothing from the life which is not from his love; for the love is the life of everyone . . . whereas the memory is only the storehouse from which the life takes out what it thinks and speaks, and the things which serve the life to be nourished by . . . The worst can think and speak truths from the memory; but only the good from the life.

790<sup>6</sup>. In order that the spiritual mind may be opened and formed, it is necessary for it to have a storehouse, from which it may take [things] out; for, unless there were a storehouse for it the man is empty; and no Divine operation is possible into what is empty. This storehouse is in the natural man and its memory, in which everything knowable can be stored up, and thence brought out. In this storehouse for the formation of the spiritual man there must be truths which are to be believed, and goods which are to be done, both from the Word, and from doctrine and from preaching from the Word; these man must learn even from infancy. But all these things, in whatever abundance they may be, and even if they are from the Word, before the spiritual mind has been opened, are natural; for they are only knowledge. It is the thought from this storehouse which is called faith by those who separate faith from good works in doctrine and life.

—<sup>8</sup>. The spiritual mind is formed from those things which are in the memory of man from the Word. (The elevation of these from the memory ex.)

828<sup>3</sup>. With (the celestial Angels, truths) are not in the memory, whence is all speech, but in the life; and are thence in the understanding not as thought, but as the affection of good in its form, which does not descend into discourse . . . The reason they go naked . . . is that garments=truths investing good; and investing truths are in the memory, and thence in the thought; but with them truths are in the life, thus hidden . . .

831<sup>3</sup>. For the spiritual Angels first admit truths into the memory, and thence into the understanding, which is thus formed from them . . . But the celestial Angels do not admit truths first into the memory, but at once into the will . . . Hence the latter cannot speak about Divine truths . . . But the former speak Divine truths, because with them they are inscribed on the memory also; and thought from the memory speaks.

—<sup>4</sup>. But the spiritual Angels do not admit any truth into the memory . . . unless they see it . . .

832<sup>3</sup>. The reason the love becomes spiritual through truths from the Word in proportion as the man acknowledges them and sees them in the understanding, is that in man there are two memories, and thence two thoughts, with both the evil and the good, namely, an interior and an exterior one. Every man thinks with himself from the interior memory, when, being left by himself, he is led by his own love: this thought is the thought of his spirit. But man thinks from the exterior memory while he is speaking before the world . . . The things which man thinks with himself when he is thinking from the interior memory . . . are the things of his life, and become of his life . . . But the things which man thinks from the exterior memory, if they do not make a one with the thought from the interior memory, are not of his life, nor do they become of his life . . . and after death they are rejected.

1021. 'And great Babylon came into memory before God' (Rev.xvi.19)=that hitherto it has treated of the Church with the Reformed . . . and that it follows concerning the Church with the Papists . . .

1100<sup>23</sup>. It would (then) be the memory which had faith, and not the man . . . For the understanding is the man, and the memory introduces.

D. Verbo 3<sup>d</sup>. I have frequently been let among the spiritual Angels, and have then spoken with them spiritually, and that which I have spoken I have then retained in the memory. But when I returned into a natural state, in which is every man of the world, I then wanted to bring it forth from the previous memory, and describe it; but I could not; it was impossible; there were no possible words, nor even ideas of thought, by means of which I could express it. The spiritual ideas of thought and words were so remote from the natural ideas of thought and words, that they did not at all approach each other.

12. This is the way of all illustration in the Word, and is also the way of the reformation and regeneration of man. But it is necessary that the Knowledges of both spiritual and natural things should first be in the memory; for these are the provisions into which the Lord operates by means of the light of Heaven; and the fuller they are, and the freer from confirmed falsities, the more illustrated is the perception which is given, and the more determinate—certain—is the conclusion; for the Divine operation does not fall into an empty man. Examp.

771. 'The merchants' (ver. 11) (here)=the lower ones in order in their hierarchy, who minister, and make gain by holy things; here, their griefs . . . 767.

—<sup>2</sup>. Their wares=the holy or religious things by which they make gains.

772. 'The merchandise*' of gold, and precious stones, and pearls' (ver. 12)=that they no longer have these things, because they have no spiritual goods and truths, to which such things correspond. Their merchandise =no other things than those here mentioned . . . Before the Last Judgment the Babylonians had such things . . . But after the Last Judgment . . . all those things were reduced to dust and ashes . . .

783. 'The merchants of these things . . .' (ver. 15)=those who were enriched . . . by various dispensations and promises of heavenly joys. These 'merchants' mean both the higher and the lower ones in their ecclesiastical order who made gain by such things. Ex.

799. 'Thy great men were the merchants of the earth' (ver. 23)=that the higher ones in their ecclesiastical hierarchy are such, because by various and arbitrary rights, left to them in the statutes of the order, they traffic and make profit. E. 1190.

—<sup>2</sup>. The arbitrary rights, called 'traffickings,' are not their revenues and stipends, but they are dispensations by the power of the keys. Enum.

M. 287<sup>e</sup>. Engaged in work belonging to merchandise.

T. 317. Merchants (offend against the seventh commandment) who deceive in their wares, in weight, measure, and their accounts.

378. Compared to a ship laden with wares of the greatest value . . .

418<sup>2</sup>. Who loves a merchant except from sincerity?

D. 3711. Inquiry was made concerning those who are merchants solely, as in Holland, who despise dignities. It was said that these are such because they want to be esteemed above others from their riches and wealth.

3733. (The Quakers) said that holiness is to traffic. But it was given to say that to traffic is not holiness; but that they should traffic thus, or thus, consequently with uprightness and mercy; that then it is holiness.

5028. The need (of the Dutch) is to traffic . . .

5365. (Many seen sitting round a table who) all appeared like rich merchants . . . In external form they appeared good . . . but they were all successively cast down into desert places. Ex.

E. 141<sup>18</sup>. 'Her merchandise' (Is. xxiii. 18)=the vaunting of these things. . . Her merchandise . . . is 'holiness to Jehovah,' because it=the Knowledges of truth and good applied by them to falsities and evils; and by the Knowledges themselves, regarded in themselves, a man can be wise . . .

195<sup>8</sup>. It treats (in Ezek. xxvii.) of Tyre and her traffickings, and 'Tyre'=the Knowledges of truth and good, and 'trafficking,' and 'trading'=to acquire and to communicate these Knowledges.

—<sup>1</sup>. (Thus) 'the merchandise of Tyre' . . . does not mean merchandise, but everything of it means spiritual things which man ought to acquire, be imbued with, and communicate.

275<sup>4</sup>. 'The merchant of Sidon' (Is.xxiii.2)=one who acquires and communicates these Knowledges. 406<sup>11</sup>. 514<sup>5</sup>.

514<sup>2</sup>. 'Traffic'-mercatus, occurs. 840<sup>7</sup>.

— The doctrinal things themselves are meant by her wares.

543<sup>10</sup>. 'Merchants' (Nahum iii.16)=those who falsify, and then communicate and vaunt.

617<sup>11</sup>. 'The merchandise of Tyre' (Is.xxiii.18)=the Knowledges of good and truth of every kind.

840<sup>7</sup>. 'Tradings,' and 'merchandise' (Ill.) do not mean tradings and merchandise . . . but . . . 'the tradings'=the acquirings and the communications of truth and good; and 'the merchandise,' or 'wares,'=these Knowledges, which are multifarious.

978<sup>3</sup>. For example merchants. Their works are all evil so long as they do not regard and thence shun as sins unlawful gains and illicit usuries, and frauds and cunning; for such things cannot be done from the Lord, but from the man himself. And their works are worse in proportion as they know how skilfully and slyly to compose deceptive things from their internal, and to circumvent their companions. And their works are still worse in proportion as they know how to bring forth such things into effect under fallacious [appearances] of sincerity, justice, and piety. The more delight a merchant perceives in such things, the more is the origin of his works derived from Hell. If, however, he acts what is sincere and just in order to gain reputation, and, through reputation, wealth, inasmuch that he appears as if he acted from the love of sincerity and justice, and does not act what is sincere and just from affection, or from obedience to the Divine law, he is nevertheless interiorly insincere and unjust; and his works are thefts; for by means of the fallacious [appearance] of sincerity and justice he wants to steal. That this is the case is manifested after death . . . such a one then thinks and contrives nothing but tricks and robberies . . . and he betakes himself either into forests or into deserts . . . In a word, they become robbers.

—<sup>3</sup>. But it is otherwise with those merchants who shun as sins thefts of every kind, especially those which are more interior and hidden, which are done by means of cunning and deceit. Their works are all good, because they are from the Lord; for the influx from Heaven . . . to operate these [works] has not been intercepted by the above-mentioned evils. To these, riches do no harm; because riches with them are means for uses. Uses with them are tradings, by means of which they subserve their country and fellow-citizens. By means of riches they are also in a state to do the uses to which the affection of good leads them.

1104. 'The merchants of the earth were enriched from the faculties of her deliciousnesses' (Rev.xviii.3)=instruction in those things which are of Heaven and the Church, which derive [the fact that] they are delightful and are desired, from the love of dominating by means of the holy things of the Church, and also from the love of possessing the world through the same. 'Merchants'=those who procure for themselves the Know-ledges of good and truth from the Word; thus who teach or learn them; for, in the proper or natural sense, he is called a merchant who buys and sells merchandise;* and by to buy and sell is signified to acquire and to communicate; thus, in the spiritual sense, to learn and to teach; and by the merchandise* are signified the Knowledges of good and truth from the Word . . .

1139. 'Their wares' (Rev.xviii.11)=the falsities and evils of that doctrine and religiosity, by which they acquire gain, that is, honours and wealth . . . These wares, being of Babylon . . . are those which are meant by 'the meretricious wares,' which are the falsifications and adulterations of good and truth.

1141. 'Merchandise* of gold and silver' (ver.12)=the goods and truths of the Word, of doctrine, and of the Church in general all profaned by them; thus all the evils and falsities in general by which their gains are acquired . . .

1145<sup>3</sup>. 'The merchandise* of which they shall make a prey' (Ezek.xxvi.12)=the Knowledges of good.

1162. 'The merchants of these things who were made rich by her' (Rev.xviii.15)=all those who have gained wealth and honours from that religiosity, and thus the goods of opulence and eminence, which are things happy and magnificent. (For) 'merchants'=those who procure for themselves such things as are signified by 'wealth' in the Word.

D. Wis. xi.4. A merchant (does uses daily) by trading.

Mercury. Mercurius. (The metal.)

See QUICKSILVER.

J. (Post.) 58. He appeared to the Angels like metallic mercury.

Mercury. Mercurius. (The god.)

D. 5953. There appeared to me a Spirit with a little wing at the left side of his head; and they said that those sometimes appear so who are sent from one to another with letters or messages. Hence it was evident whence the ancients derived [the custom] of feigning a wing at the head of Mercury, who was their messenger between the gods.

Mercury. Mercurius. (The planet.)

A. 6696. There are Spirits who in the Grand Man relate to the memory. They are from the planet Mercury. They are allowed to wander about, and to acquire for themselves Knowledges of the things—rerum—which are in the universe; and they are also allowed to pass outside the world of this sun into others.

6807. On the Spirits of the planet Mercury. Gen. art. 6921. 7069. 7170. U.9. Chapter. D.1415. 1441. 3233. 3256.

6808. The Spirits from the planet Mercury relate to . . . the memory, but to the memory of things—rerum—abstracted from earthly and merely material things.

6809. They once came to me, and inquired into those things which were in my memory . . . and, among these things, into the cities and places where I had been. I noticed that they did not want to know about the temples, palaces, houses, streets ; but only the things which I had heard done in those places, and also the things which were of government there, and those of the genius and manners of those who were there, and the like things. . . I asked them why they passed by the magnificent things of the places . . . They said that it is no delight to them to look at material, corporeal, and earthly things ; but only at real ones. D.1416.

6810. In their own Earth they care nothing for earthly and corporeal things, but for the statutes, laws, governments, of the nations there ; and also for the things which are of Heaven ; which are innumerable. . . Many of the men of that Earth speak with Spirits, and thence possess Knowledges of spiritual things, and of the states of the life after death ; and thence also they have a contempt for corporeal and earthly things . . .

6811. See MEMORY, here.

—<sup>2</sup>. Because I would not read these things in their presence they were very indignant ; and, contrary to their wonted manner, wanted to inveigh against me, saying that I was the worst [of men], and like things ; and, in order to show their anger, they induced a species of contraction attended with pain on the right side of my head. . . And, as they had done evil, they withdrew themselves still further away ; but yet stood still, wanting to know what I had written about future things. Such is their desire for Knowledges. D.3256. 3257.

6812. The Spirits of Mercury, above all other Spirits, possess the Knowledges of things—rerum ; both those which are in the world of this sun, and those which are outside it in the starry heaven ; and the things which they have once acquired they retain, and also recall them to mind as often as the like things occur.

6813. When the Spirits of Mercury come to other Societies, they explore from them the things which they know, and (then) they depart.

— From their Knowledges, the Spirits of Mercury are more conceited than others ; and therefore they have been told that although they know innumerable things, there are nevertheless infinite things which they do not know ; and that if the Knowledges with them were augmented to eternity they cannot arrive at even an acquaintance with the generals. They were told that they have conceit and elation of mind ; and that this is not becoming. But they replied that it is not conceit, but only a glorying from the faculty of their memory. Thus can they excuse their blemishes.

6814. They are averse to the speech of words, because it is material ; and therefore I was able to speak with them no otherwise than by a species of active thought. Their memory, being of things . . . more nearly sub-ministers its objects to the thought ; for the thought which is above the imagination requires for its objects things—res—abstracted from material things. But although it is so, nevertheless the Spirits of Mercury excel but little in the faculty of judgment. They are not delighted with the things which are of judgment and of conclusions from Knowledges ; for bare Knowledges are their delight. D.1455. 1458.

6815. It was granted to insinuate to them, as to whether they want to do any use from their Knowledges . . . But they replied that they are delighted with Knowledges ; and that to them Knowledges are uses. D.1429.

6816. The Spirits of Mercury are completely different from the Spirits of our Earth ; for (the latter) do not care so much for things—res ; but for material, worldly, corporeal, and earthly things ; and therefore the Spirits of Mercury are not able to be together with the Spirits of our Earth ; and therefore, wherever they meet them, they flee away ; for the spiritual spheres which exhale from them both are almost contrary. The Spirits of Mercury are wont to say that they love the products from material things ; and that they do not want to look at the sheath, but at things—res—bared of the sheath ; thus at interior things. 6928. D.1434.

6921. As (the Spirits of Mercury) love to know things—res—abstracted from material things, they are more ready and quick than other Spirits in clearly seeing, thinking, and speaking. . . How ready these Spirits are may be evident from the things which follow.

6922. There appeared a rather bright white flame blazing gladsomely . . . (which) signified the coming of Spirits of Mercury more ready than the rest. When they had come they at once ran through the things which were in my memory . . . but I could not apperceive the things which they were observing, on account of their readiness. I heard them saying presently, that it is such a thing. As to those things which I had seen in the Heavens and in the World of Spirits, they said that they knew them before. I perceived that a multitude of Spirits consociated with them was at the back, a little to the left, in the plane of the occiput. (Other exams., 6923. 6924.) D.1419. 1426.

6925. The Spirits of the Earth Mercury do not stay in one place, or within the sphere of the Spirits of one world, but wander through the universe. The reason is that they relate to the memory of things in the Grand Man, which must be constantly enriched. . . If they meet Spirits who love material things . . . they shun them ; and betake themselves where they do not hear such things. From this it may be evident that their mind is elevated above sensuous things ; and thus that they are in interior lumen. This, too, it was given actually to perceive when they were near me, and were speaking with me. I then observed that I was led away from sensuous things, insomuch that the lumen of my eyes began to be dulled and become obscure. D.1454.

6926. The Spirits of that Earth go by cohorts and phalanxes ; and, when they have been congregated, they form as it were a globe ; thus are they conjoined by the Lord in order to act as a one ; and in order that the Knowledges of each one may be communicated to all ; and the Knowledges of all to each. D.1455a.

— Once, when they appeared very remote from me, they . . . said that now they have been congregated together ; and that now they are going outside of the sphere of this world into the starry heaven, where they know that there are such as do not care for earthly and corporeal things ; but for things—res—abstracted from them ; with whom they want to be. It was said that they themselves do not know whither they are going ; but that under the Divine auspices they are carried where they can be instructed concerning such things as they do not yet know, and which are in agreement with the Knowledges which they have. It was also said that they do not know how they meet the companions with whom they are conjoined; and that this also is done under the Divine auspices. D.1456.

6929. When the Spirits of Mercury were with me while I was writing and explicating the Word as to its internal sense . . . they said that the things I was writing were very gross, and that the expressions almost all appeared as if material. But it was given to reply that the men of our Earth see the things which have been written as subtle and elevated, and many of them they do not apprehend . . . They asked whether such can become Angels; to which it was given to reply that those become Angels who have lived in the good of faith and of charity; and that then . . . they are in light above that in which are the Spirits of Mercury . . . D.3240.

6930. There was sent me by the Spirits of Mercury a long, uneven paper, stuck together out of a number of papers, which appeared as if printed . . . I asked whether they have such among them; but they said that they have not; but that they know there are such papers on our Earth. They did not want to say more. But it was given to perceive that they were thinking that in this Earth the Knowledges of things-rerum-were such; thus separate from the man himself, except when the man kept his eye, and thus his mind, on such papers. They were thus mocking the men of this Earth among themselves, as if they knew nothing except from papers. But they were instructed how the case is with this. After some time they returned, and sent me another paper also as if printed . . . but not so stuck together and untidy; but decent and neat. They said that they had been further informed that on this Earth there are such papers and books thence. D.3262. 3263.

6931<sup>e</sup>. The Spirits of Mercury, however, are continually increasing in the knowledge of things-rerum, but not in the derivative wisdom; because they love Knowledges, which are means; but not uses, which are ends.

7070. As the Spirits of Mercury relate to the memory of things-rerum-abstracted from material things, therefore when anyone speaks with them about earthly, corporeal, and merely worldly things, they are utterly unwilling to hear; and, when they are compelled to hear about them, they then transmute them into other things, for the most part into things contrary, in order to avoid them.

7071. I was allowed to represent to them meadows, fallow lands, gardens, woods . . . The meadows and fallow lands they bedimmed, and filled them with snakes, by representations; the streams they blackened . . . and when I asked them why they did so, they said that they do not want to think about such things; but about real ones, which are the Knowledges of things-rerum-abstracted from earthly things, especially of such things as come forth in the Heavens. D.1422. 1423.

7072. I afterwards represented to them the larger and smaller birds . . . At first they wanted to change them; but then were delighted with them, and quiesced.

The reason was that birds=the Knowledges of things-rerum . . . D.1430.

—<sup>2</sup>. I was afterwards allowed to represent to them a very pleasant garden full of torches and lamps. They then stayed . . . for the reason that torches with lamps =the Truths which shine from good. Hence it was evident that they could be kept looking at material things provided that there is at the same time insinuated the signification of them in the spiritual sense . . . D.1431.

7073. I have besides spoken with them about sheep and lambs; but they did not want to hear such things; because these things were perceived by them as earthly. The reason was that they did not understand what innocence is, which lambs signify . . . They only knew it as a word. The reason is that they are affected with Knowledges only, and not with uses . . . D.1442.

7074. Some of the Spirits of the Earth Mercury came to me, having been sent by others, in order that they might hear what was going on with me. One of the Spirits of our Earth told them to tell their [people] that they should not speak anything else than the truth; and that they should not, as they are wont, object things opposite, to those who interrogate them . . . But the cohort from which those Spirits had been sent out, which was remote, replied that . . . from continual use they cannot do otherwise. They said that they do the same when they are speaking with the men of their own Earth; but this is not from any intention to deceive them, but that they may thus inspire a longing to know; for when they object things opposite, and hide the thing-res-in a certain manner, the desire to know is then excited . . . D.1459.

7075. I asked them how they instruct their inhabitants. They said that they do not instruct them as to how the thing is circumstanced; but still they insinuate some apprehension of the thing-rei, in order that the desire to know may thence be nourished and increase; for if they were to give answers to all things, the desire would perish. They added that they object things opposite for this reason also, that the Truth may afterwards appear better; for all Truth appears relatively to the opposite things. D.1427.

7076. It is a custom of theirs, not to tell anyone the things which they know; but still they want to know from all the things which they know. But they communicate all things to their own Society, inasmuch that the things which one knows all know; and the things which all know, everyone there knows.

7077. As the Spirits of Mercury are such, and yet abound in Knowledges, they are in some species of conceit. Hence they suppose that they know so many things that it is scarcely possible to know more. But they have been told by the Spirits of our Earth that they know not many, but few things; and that the things which they do not know are relatively infinite . . . In order that they might know that it is so, it was granted that a certain angelic Spirit should speak with them, and should tell them in general what they do know and what they do not know; and that the things which they do not know are infinite; and also that to eternity they cannot know even the generals of things*rerum*. He spoke by means of angelic ideas, much more readily than they; and as he disclosed what they know, and what they do not know, they were struck with amazement. I afterwards saw another Angel speaking with them . . . He enumerated very many things which they do not know; and afterwards spoke with them by means of changes of state, which they said they do not understand. He then told them that every change of state contains infinite things; and so also does every least thing of it. When they heard this, as they had been in conceit on account of Knowledges, they began to humble themselves. The humiliation was represented by the letting down of their volume downwards . . . but the volume appeared as if caved in at the middle, and elevated at the sides . . . (which) signified . . . that those who appeared elevated at the sides were not as yet in any humiliation: and I saw that the volume was separated; and that those who were not in humiliation were relegated towards their own orb; the rest remaining. D.3238.

—e. As the Spirits of the planet Mercury shun the Spirits of our Earth on account of the material things in which they are, and as they had asked whether such can become Angels, they now received the reply, that the Angel who had spoken with them was from this Earth.

7078. The Spirits of Mercury do not appear in a fixed quarter, nor at a fixed distance; but appear now in front, now to the left, now a little at the back. The reason is that they are allowed to wander through the universe to procure for themselves Knowledges . . . Their planet is presented to Spirits at the back . . .

7170. The Spirits of Mercury appeared at the left, in a globe, and then in a volume extending itself a long way . . . They bent themselves towards the right, and, by revolving themselves, approached the Earth Venus, to its quarter away from the Sun; but when they came there, they said that they did not want to be there, because they were evil; and therefore they bent themselves round to the other side of that Earth, which looks to the Sun; and then said that they wanted to stay there, because those who are there are good. When this had taken place, I felt in the brain a remarkable change, and a strong operation thence. From these things it was given to conclude, that the Spirits of Venus who are on that side of the planet, are in accordance with the Spirits of the planet Mercury; and that they relate to the memory of material things—rerum—which agrees with the memory of immaterial things—rerum, which is constituted by the Spirits of Mercury. Hence a stronger operation was felt from them when they were there. D.1443. 1448.

7171. Mercury appears at the back, a little towards the right.

7172. Spirits of our Earth asked (the Spirits of Mercury) in whom they believed. They replied that they believed in God. But when they asked further about the God in whom they believed, they did not want to say, because it is according to their custom not to reply to questions directly. But then in their turn the Spirits from the Earth Mercury asked the Spirits from our Earth in whom they believed. The latter said that they believed in the Lord God. The Spirits of Mercury then said that they perceived that they believed in no God, and that they have the custom of saying with the mouth that they believe . . . The Spirits of Mercury have an exquisite perception, from the fact that by means of perception they are continually exploring what others know . . .

7173. Certain Spirits knew from Heaven that a promise had once been made to the Spirits of the Earth Mercury that they should see the Lord; and therefore they were interrogated by the Spirits around me, as to whether they remembered that promise. They said that they remembered it; but that they do not know whether it had been promised so that they should have no doubt about it. . . The Sun of Heaven then appeared to them . . . on seeing which they said that that was not the Lord, because they did not see a face. . . Then suddenly the Sun appeared again, and in its midst the Lord encompassed with a solar circle. On seeing this, the Spirits of Mercury profoundly humbled themselves, and subsided. D.1446. 3292.

7175. After some time there was shown me one woman of the inhabitants of the Earth Mercury. She had a beautiful face, but it was smaller than those of the women of our Earth; she was more slender, but of equal height. Her head-dress was of linen, put on not with art, but still becomingly. I also saw a man from that Earth, who also was more slender in body than are the men of our Earth. He, who appeared, was clothed in a garment of a dim azure, closely fitted to the body, without folds and prominences to and fro. But that the inhabitants of that Earth think little about their body, was evident to me from the fact, that when they . . . become Spirits, they do not want to appear as men . . . but as crystalline globes. The reason they want so to appear, is that they may remove from themselves material ideas; and, moreover, the Knowledges of immaterial things—rerum—are represented in the other life by crystals. D.1432. 3237. 3262.

7176. There were also shown me the shapes of their oxen and cows; which did not indeed differ much from those in our Earth; but were smaller, and in a certain way came near the shape of stags and hinds. D.3262.

7177. They said that (the sun of the world appears) large; and that it appears larger there than from other Earths, they said that they were able to know from the idea of other Spirits about the sun. They said, further, that they have a medium temperature, neither too hot, nor cold. Ex.

9106. See SATURN, here.

10710. On account of such a method of thinking and speaking, the Spirits of (the Fourth) Earth . . . cannot be together with the Spirits of the Earth Mercury, because the latter stay in the proximate use.

U. 38. The Spirits of Mercury came to a certain Spirit from our Earth, who when he lived in the world had been very celebrated for his learning—it was Christian Wolff—wanting to be informed by him about various things—rerum. But when they perceived that the things which he said were not elevated above the sensuous things of the natural man, because in speaking he was thinking about honour ; and that he wanted, as in the world . . . to put together various things into series, and from these again and continually to conclude other things, and thus to concatenate many things from such, which they did not see or acknowledge to be true . . . calling them the obscurity of authority, they desisted from interrogating him, merely asking, How is this called ? How is that called ? And, as he replied to these things also by means of material ideas, and by no spiritual ones, they receded from him.

D. 1417. (The Spirits of Mercury) do not attend to the things—res—which are represented by . . . corporeal and worldly things, as did the men of the Ancient Church . . . but they want to apprehend merely the Knowledges of things—rerum—separated from such things . . . Hence, too, their readiness.

1418. Therefore they are called Knowledges, or rather they are internal senses . . .

1421. They said that they knew the things which I had seen in the Heavens ; and I told them that they perhaps think that they know them, and yet do not know them ; because the things which a Spirit perceives in a man, from his memory, he supposes that he knows, and has known ; but still I perceived that in the plane of the occiput behind, a little to the left, there was a multitude of them who perceived this at the same time, and that they are able to have such Knowledge, because they attend solely to things—res—and thus to interior things . . .

1422. When I asked from what Earth they were . . . they did not want to say, nor that they had been clothed with a body ; for they did not want to think that they had been on any Earth, or had been clothed with a body ; because it is adverse to their principles to think anything, still less speak anything, about corporeal and earthly things.

1424. Such also is their life in their Earth, that they care nothing for earthly and corporeal things ; but for the things which are outside of them ; as for the things which are in Heaven ; so that they speak with Spirits, and they instruct them about the things which are in Heaven . . . And therefore also when they excited many things from my memory, they said that it was such a thing ; and thus affirmed it ; not knowing that I am in the body.

1425. When . . . I represented to them the planets which are called Mercury and Venus, they led the vision to the planet Venus ; but I could perceive that they wanted to conceal something ; and thus that they were from the planet nearest the sun, where there are such, and are thus delighted with Knowledges ; which was also given me to perceive from their proximity to the sun : namely, that they are such as generally constitute the internal senses ; and thus those things which are of the internal senses, which are Knowledges.

1428. When I was speaking with them by means of the internal sense, they perceived more things than I . . .

1432. A certain man from their inhabitants was shown me. He was not unlike the men of our Earth, and was clothed with a garment of a dim azure colour, by which is signified their lower mind—around the arms, almost as with us, with such sleeves as are worn in England, instead of cuffs.—Whether their men are thus clothed I do not know, or whether their lower minds are [thus] represented. This only : that when I afterwards represented to them such a man, in such a garment, they said that they had known them or us.
VOL. IV.

1433. They are now continually endeavouring to change the Knowledges, or the things which are being here written about them, into other things ; for they do not want me to know anything which they know ; but they want to know all things from others ; nor have they ever enough. They said that Knowledge is so indefinite that it can never be exhausted ; for they are always learning many things, and still there are indefinite things which they do not know.

1445. The reason they encompassed the Earth Venus, is because thus the more interior things can be communicated with external ones, through the interior senses ; otherwise no communication is possible . . .

1455. They cannot be called the internal memory, because there is in them the faculty—or the internal sense gives the faculty—of thinking. . . They suppose that they are thought rather than the internal sense . . . but they have not the faculty of judgment, but are simply delighted with Knowledges. But still they can also be called simply thought ; for the interior sense is not devoid of thought ; whereas thought and judgment differ much. They are not the thought of judgment ; because they do not conclude concerning the use and the end, and from the end.

1455a. When they are speaking, or when a Spirit speaks that which they are thinking, they are then moved altogether as it were in a great volume ; and in fact with such a great wave that my right foot as it were undulated, and the earth on which it stood ; which signifies that man cannot live with the understanding without the internal sense ; for, as the foot walks, it signifies to live with the body.

1457. But it is to be observed that wherever they are in the universe, they still operate thus, as the internal sense ; neither place nor distance has any effect. . . Nor are they allowed to operate as if present, except into those who are to speak with Spirits, and who can thus be absent from the operation of the sensuous ideas of the body.

1458. They also acknowledge the Lord . . . but only from the fact that they are Knowledges ; for in thinking they do not go more interiorly until they arrive at the spiritual state. But although they abound in Knowledges, they can be reduced to faith with more difficulty than others ; for they are not delighted with judgment, or with the faculty of judging ; for thus, as they now say, they are disturbed ; and when only thinking about it they perceive trouble.

1558a<sup>e</sup>. The Spirits of the Earth Mercury are Knowledges.

3233. Again have I by means of intermediate Spirits heard the Spirits of Mercury, who spoke in a volume so rapidly that the Spirit could scarcely utter it . . .
T

But it was not their speech, but only the thought of the interior sense or memory, which, falling into the speech of the intermediate Spirit, was so rapid. In like manner the perception of the things which were thought from these, which they perceived so readily, that at once . . . they judged what their quality was, saying, This is so; this is not so; thus the quality. Thus their judgment was almost instantaneous . . . This is memorable: that their thought was brought to me in such a volume, that the Spirits above me undulated quickly, like an atmosphere; and also that the cogitative undulation did not fall towards the left eye, although they were at a considerable distance to the right.

[D.] 3236. Nevertheless the Spirits of this Earth spoke with them by angelic ideas, and told them much more readily what they do not know, and what they know, and very many things more rapidly than they; so that I perceived them to acknowledge . . . that thus they were not anything relatively . . .

3237. They did not admit that they were represented as men; but as crystalline globes.

3239. The internal sense is such that it is delighted only with the Knowledges of things-rerum, and not with anything beyond; and therefore also as there are things still more interior, which are of uses, they do not care so much for these . . . Hence too it is that they are in conceit; and, as they are in conceit, the life of ends and uses cannot inflow into them so much until this conceit is taken away from them. It is this conceit which has done most of the things treated of in the description; for they have despised others in comparison with themselves. Those who are in humiliation have now confessed, with some weeping, that the Lord is their only Lord. They have afterwards acknowledged that [that which they know] scientifically, it has been given them to know intellectually also; for they do not worship any other; but, as they esteem themselves above others, they do not care [for Him.]

3258. As to the internal sense to which the Spirits of Mercury relate, it is such that it is the memory, and indeed the memory of particulars, but of things-rerum, and not of images; for the memory of particulars contains visual images, which belong to the imagination . . . and it also contains things-res; as laws, and the Knowledges of laws, and also those of faith . . . This part of the memory relates more closely to thought . . . To such memory do the Spirits of Mercury relate; and, what is wonderful, they know so many things which come forth in Heaven and Hell, and which are of things-rerum, that one cannot sufficiently wonder; and that which they once perceive they retain; although they do not know that they know; but as soon as it occurs they remember it. . . Therefore also reflection is adjoined more than with others; for the avidity, or curiosity, and love for such things produces reflection. 3259.

3261. The reason why the Spirits of Mercury have it for a law not to say to anyone the things which they know, but to object or interchange things opposite or foreign, is lest they should say to other Spirits things which could be of no use; for the Lord Himself inseminates Knowledges which are suitable for them; and therefore if the Spirits of Mercury, who wander about, were to insinuate them, the reformation of other Spirits would be more difficult; and therefore also the Spirits of Mercury shun those who are very much pleased with the memory of particulars; for the Spirits of our Earth lament that they have lost the memory of particulars.

3264. The inhabitants of Mercury said that in enumerating the Earths they had amounted to about 600,000.

3265. In a word, the inhabitants of Mercury are the memory of things-rerum, separated from the memory of images from things corporeal and earthly; from which memory is speculation, which is . . . the imagination of things-rerum; of its imagination is thought, which is their speech . . .

3266. They do not want to be called conceited, nor proud; but that it is a glorying from the faculty of their memory.

3269. They spoke about the Spirits of the Earth Mercury, who were present at a distance towards the right, about, as it appeared to me, the end of this universe . . . saying that they avail nothing . . . 3271.

3280. (The Spirits of Mercury mentioned.)

3288. How the Spirits of Mercury acquire for themselves the Knowledges of things-rerum.—Wherever they come they at once perceive from the Societies of other Spirits what they know about the things which are then the objects . . . Thus it was sometimes given them to know whatever I knew about any thing-re, solely by inhering in their own ideas, and so exciting the things which were with me—whether forgotten or not—which can fall into their sphere . . . And therefore, as they thus wander about, it is given them to know innumerable things, which they also retain. But still they confess that although they know indefinite things, nevertheless there are indefinite things which they do not know . . .

3289. But still they cannot know from other Spirits more things than is granted by the Lord; which was also shown them with me . . . it being suddenly closed, so that they could know nothing from me; and therefore, being angry, they said angrily that I knew nothing.

3318. The Spirits of Mercury enumerated many kinds of respiration . . .

A. 7. The first movement, which is the mercy of the Lord, is 'the Spirit of God brooding upon the faces of the waters.' 19.

24. After . . . the Lord's mercy has brought forth into day the Knowledges of truth and good . . .

30°. It is the mercy of the Lord alone which affects the will with love, and the understanding with Truth . . .

35°. (Man) would rush to Hell, unless the Lord had mercy on him.

57<sup>2</sup>. 'The waters from the sanctuary' = the life and mercy of the Lord.

105. 'The tree of lives' = the mercy of the Lord . . .

144. By the Divine mercy of the Lord. 148<sup>e</sup>. 371. 868. 1013<sup>e</sup>. etc. etc.

179. Such is the efficacy of the Lord's mercy.

223. 'The face of Jehovah' = mercy, etc. III.

224. (Therefore) it is evident that He never looks at anyone except from mercy.

224. Mercy, peace, and all good . . . are what cause the dictate with those who have perception ; and also with those who have conscience . . . and they always operate mercifully ; but they are received according to the state in which the man is.

245. Such things can never come from the Fountain of mercy, peace, and goodness.

451<sup>e</sup>. Grace with the prince is the mercy of the Lord . . .

559. The mercy of the Lord is described by 'to repent,' and 'to grieve at heart.' 587.

561. Remains . . . also states of mercy towards the poor and needy.

587<sup>2</sup>. The mercy of Jehovah or of the Lord involves each and all things which are done by the Lord towards the human race ; which is such that He has mercy on it, and on every one according to his state. Thus He has mercy on the state of him whom He permits to be punished ; and He has mercy on him to whom He gives to enjoy good. It is of mercy to be punished, because He bends all the evil of penalty into good ; and it is of mercy to give to enjoy good, because no one merits anything of good. For all the human race is evil, and from himself everyone rushes to Hell, and therefore it is of mercy that he is taken out thence ; nor is it anything else than mercy, because He has need of no one. Hence is it called mercy, because it takes man out of miseries and Hell ; thus relatively to the human race, which is such ; and it is the effect of love towards all, because they are such.

588. What the mercy of the Lord is no one can know, because it infinitely transcends the understanding of man ; but what the mercy of man is, man knows that it is to repent and to grieve ; and unless an idea about mercy is apprehended by man from another affection, of which he knows the quality, he can never think anything . . .

—<sup>e</sup>. For it is man who turns himself away from the mercy of the Lord ; never the Lord from man.

590<sup>2</sup>. From this with man . . . some idea seems possible to be apprehended as to what is in the mercy of the Lord ; namely, wisdom and love . . . The Spiritual of the Lord's mercy is wisdom ; the Celestial of it is love.

598. The mercy of the Lord involves and regards the salvation of the whole human race ; in like manner also His grace.

—<sup>2</sup>. But 'mercy' and 'grace' are distinguished in the Word, and this according to the difference of those who receive them. 'Mercy' is applied to those who are celestial, but 'grace' to those who are spiritual ; for the celestial do not acknowledge anything except mercy, and the spiritual scarcely anything except grace. The celestial do not know what grace is ; the spiritual scarcely know what mercy is ; they make it one and the same as grace ; which comes from the cause of the humiliation of heart of each, which differs thus ; they who are in humiliation of heart implore the mercy of the Lord ; whereas they who are in humiliation of thought ask for His grace ; and if they implore His mercy, it is done in a state of temptation, or else with the mouth alone and not with the heart.

—<sup>3</sup>. That a distinction is made in the Word between 'mercy,' and 'grace.' III.

—<sup>e</sup>. That 'mercy' regards celestial things, which are of love or the will, is evident from the fact that he is said to have 'done mercy,' and to have 'vivified the soul' (Gen. xix. 19).

615<sup>2</sup>. Charity is love towards the neighbour, and mercy . . .

714<sup>2</sup>. Although a man lives like a wild beast . . . still the mercy of the Lord is so great, because Divine and infinite, that it does not leave him ; but continually breathes into him His own life . . .

868. It is the Lord's mercy alone which delivers (the Angels) from Hell . . .

934<sup>3</sup>. The fire upon the altar, which was never extinguished, represented the mercy of the Lord. 2177<sup>4</sup>.

—<sup>e</sup>. The fire upon Mount Sinai, which represented the love or mercy of the Lord, was perceived before the people as a consuming fire . . . Such does the love or mercy of the Lord appear to those who are in the fire of the loves of self and of the world. 2842.

981<sup>2</sup>. Celestial men do not say grace, but mercy ; whereas spiritual men do not say mercy, but grace ; the source of which is, that the celestial acknowledge that the human race is nothing but filth, and in itself excrementitious, and infernal ; and therefore they implore the mercy of the Lord ; for mercy is predicated when there are such ; whereas the spiritual . . . do not acknowledge this, because they remain in proprium and love it ; and therefore they can with difficulty mention mercy, but easily grace. Each of these comes forth from the humiliation. In proportion as anyone loves himself, and supposes that he can do good from himself, and thus merit salvation, he cannot implore the mercy of the Lord.

1032. The Lord has mercy towards all the human race . . .

—<sup>2</sup>. The mercy of the Lord is infinite . . . and extends itself to all in the universal world.

—<sup>e</sup>. This would be contrary to mercy.

1049. The Lord's mercy in special towards the regenerate and those who can be regenerated. Sig. and Ex.

—<sup>e</sup>. With the Lord, 'to remember' = to have mercy.

1102<sup>e</sup>. When a man feels that he has mercy on him who is in calamity, and still more on him who is in error as to the doctrine of faith, he may know that he 'dwells in the tents of Shem.'

1528. Into such a fieriness is changed the life of the Lord's love and mercy which inflows with them.

1594<sup>4</sup>. Mutual love . . . consists in this : that one

... believes ... that the Lord, from infinite mercy, is continually withholding him from Hell ...

[A.] 1728<sup>2</sup>. Divine good is the essential itself of order, all things of which are of mercy. 2258<sup>2</sup>.

1735. To love itself, no other attributes are competent than those which are of pure love; thus of pure mercy towards the universal human race; which is, that it wills to save all and make them happy to eternity, and to transfer into them all things of its own: thus from pure mercy to draw all who are willing to follow to Heaven; that is, to itself, with the strong force of love.

1736<sup>3</sup>. (These expressions) are predicated of His love or mercy.

1925<sup>6</sup>. By 'the Angel of faces' is meant the Lord's mercy towards the universal human race, in that He has redeemed them.

1999. For in humiliation of heart there is the acknowledgment ... of the Lord's infinite mercy towards such (filth as man is).

2027<sup>6</sup>. These ... easily acknowledge (their salvation) to be of the Lord's mercy; for the life of charity is attended with this.

2129<sup>6</sup>. For the Lord has mercy on all, especially on those who have been in spiritual miseries and temptations ... thus who acknowledge themselves to be of themselves miserable, and believe it to be of the Lord's mercy alone that they are saved.

2165<sup>5</sup>. For the Lord is the Celestial itself because He is love of itself; that is, mercy itself.

2220<sup>3</sup>. That they have not mercy. Sig.

2235<sup>3</sup>. 'Justice' and 'mercy' (Hos.ii.19) are of love; and 'judgment' and 'compassions' are of faith from love. —<sup>4</sup>.

—<sup>6</sup>. By justice and judgment, in ancient times, was meant ... all mercy and grace.

2253<sup>6</sup>. For Esse itself, or Jehovah, is nothing else than mercy, which is of love towards the universal human race.

2258<sup>2</sup>. Divine truth condemns all to Hell; and therefore unless the mercy of the Lord—which is of good—were eternal, all men whatever would be condemned.

—<sup>3</sup>. Thus (the separation of the evil) is of mercy, lest the good should be injured.

—<sup>6</sup>. Therefore ... there is more mercy in punishing evils ... than (in) an untimely clemency.

2261. If in the truths there are goods, the man is saved; but from mercy.

—<sup>3</sup>. The Lord's life is mercy, which is of love towards the universal human race ...

2308<sup>2</sup>. That (the infants) may know that from the mercy of the Lord they are taken up from the Hell which is with them into Heaven ...

2334. In temptation ... they are in interior anxiety, even to despair, in which for the most part they are kept, for the reason that they may at last be confirmed in the fact that all things are of the Lord's mercy ...

2335<sup>3</sup>. Mercy itself and good itself can never condemn anyone; but it is the man, who, because he rejects good, condemns himself.

2401<sup>6</sup>. For His mercy is infinite, because it is Divine mercy itself, and in fact towards the universal human race; thus towards both the evil and the good.

2406<sup>2</sup>. But the mercy of the Lord is so great that man is elevated every moment (from the lowest Hell).

2412. 'In the clemency of Jehovah upon him' = from grace and mercy.

— That man is withheld from evil and is kept in good by the Lord is from pure mercy.

—<sup>6</sup>. The reason it is said grace and mercy (is that) they who are in truth and thence in good implore only grace; whereas they who are in good and thence in truth implore the mercy of the Lord; which comes from the unlike state of humiliation and thence of adoration with the one from what it is with the other.

2423. 'Thou hast made great Thy mercy' (Gen.xix.19) = what is like humiliation from the affection of good. ... For those who are in the affection of truth cannot so far humble themselves as to acknowledge from the heart that all things are of mercy, and therefore instead of it they say grace ... But, on the other hand, in proportion as there is more of the affection of good with anyone, in the same proportion there is more of humiliation in him in his mention of mercy.

2447<sup>5</sup>. Evil, Hell, and the devil do these things; never the Lord, who is mercy itself.

2589. That (the Gentiles) also are saved, may be known from this alone: that the mercy of the Lord is universal ...

2694<sup>4</sup>. When they are reduced to such a state that they perceive Hell in themselves ... they can then be brought into the true confession of faith, not only that all good is from the Lord, but also that all things are of His mercy ...

2826<sup>10</sup>. 'Those who wait for His mercy' (Ps.cxlvi.11) = those who worship from the love of good.

2854<sup>2</sup>. Jehovah does not have mercy through any looking to the Son; for He is mercy itself.

3063. 'And do mercy' (Gen.xxiv.12) = the influx of love; as is evident from the essence of mercy, which is love. Love itself is turned into mercy, and becomes mercy, when anyone is regarded from love or charity who is in need of aid; hence mercy is the effect of love towards the needy and miserable. But here by 'mercy,' in the internal sense, is meant love; and by 'to do mercy,' the influx of love, because from the Divine Itself of the Lord into His Human ...

3073. 'In this shall I know that thou hast done mercy with my lord' (Gen.xxiv.14) = that from love Divine is marriage; (for) 'mercy' = love Divine.

3118<sup>6</sup>. Whereas the man of the Celestial Church bows himself before the Lord, and implores mercy.

3120. 'Who hath not forsaken His mercy' (ver.27) = the perception of the influx of love. 'Mercy' = love.

3122. The Most Ancients, who were celestial, by the mercy and Truth which are from the Lord, understood nothing else than the reception of the influx of love to the Lord and thence of charity towards the neighbour; whereas the Ancients, who were spiritual, by the mercy and Truth from the Lord with themselves, understood charity and faith. Ex. —<sup>3</sup>, III.

—<sup>e</sup>. 'No mercy'=no reception of the influx of love.

3157. 'Now if ye are doing mercy and Truth with my lord' (ver.49)=the exploration of their consent from both faculties, the will and the understanding; (for) 'mercy'=that which is of good or of love; and 'Truth'=that which is of truth or of faith.

3605<sup>8</sup>. Here, 'hatred,' being predicated of Jehovah . . . =mercy; for the Divine is mercy.

3816. All good is from the Lord, and inflows, and this from mercy alone . . .

3875. In the supreme sense, love and mercy. Sig.

— . For the Infinite and Eternal which is predicated of charity . . . is mercy, which is love Divine towards the human race constituted in such miseries; for as man is from himself nothing but evil . . . and is regarded by the Lord from Divine love, his being elevated from the Hell in which he is of himself . . . is called mercy. Hence, as mercy is from the Divine love, by 'to adhere,' in the supreme sense is signified both love and mercy.

—<sup>4</sup>. The Divine love or mercy of the Lord is meant, in the supreme sense, by 'Levi.' 4606.

3921. In the supreme sense, justice and mercy. Sig.

— . 'To hear my voice'=mercy. For the Lord judges all from justice, and hears all from mercy. He judges from justice, because from Divine truth; and He hears from mercy, because from Divine good; from justice, those who do not receive the Divine good; and from mercy, those who receive it. Nevertheless, when He judges from justice, He judges also at the same time from mercy; for in all Divine justice there is mercy, as in all Divine truth there is Divine good.

—<sup>2</sup>. The Holy, which is good, corresponds to the Divine mercy of the Lord.

3923. The name 'Dan' involves . . . in the supreme sense, the justice and mercy of the Lord. 4608.

4007<sup>4</sup>. Attributing (merit and justification) to the Lord; thus all things to grace and mercy. Sig.

4075<sup>3</sup>. That unless the Divine had mercy on them, they would perish . . .

4217<sup>2</sup>. When he is receiving the bread of the Holy Supper, he thinks . . . about the Lord and His mercy . . .

4254. 'I am less than all the mercies, and than all the Truth, which Thou hast done with Thy servant' (Gen.xxxii.10)=humiliation in that state as to good and as to truth; (for) the predication of 'mercy' is concerning the good which is of love . . .

4783<sup>3</sup>. From the spiritual sense of the Word it is evident that the Lord has mercy towards everyone; thus if Heaven were from mercy or grace however the life has been, everyone would be saved. 5057<sup>2</sup>.

4796. By that 'the Lord elevates His faces upon' anyone, is signified that from the Divine affection which is of love He has mercy on him.

5042. 'He inclined to him mercy' (Gen.xxxix.21)=love Divine in each thing. 'Mercy,' in the supreme sense, =the Divine love. Refs.

—<sup>2</sup>. As the Lord, from the Divine in Himself, saw the quality of His human, namely, that it was in evil from what was hereditary, it is said that 'Jehovah inclined mercy to him;' and by these words, in the supreme sense, is meant Divine love in each thing; for the Divine mercy is nothing else than the Divine love towards those who are constituted in miseries; that is, towards those who are in temptations . . .

5057<sup>2</sup>. (They suppose that) reception into Heaven is from mercy alone . . .

5058<sup>e</sup>. Hence it is evident that choice and reception are not from mercy . . . Still, all things of the life of good and faith of truth are from mercy with those in the world who receive mercy; and the reception with them is from mercy; and they are those who are called the elect.

5068. The good, as they have received the Divine truth, are judged from good, thus from mercy. The evil, as they have not received the Divine truth, are judged from truth, thus not from mercy; for they have rejected this, and thence in the other life they continually reject it.

5132. 'And do mercy, I pray, with me' (Gen.xl.14)=the reception of charity; (for) 'mercy'=love; here, love towards the neighbour, or charity. . . The reason 'mercy'=charity, is that all who are in charity are in mercy; that is, all who love the neighbour have mercy on him; and therefore the exercises of charity are described in the Word by works of mercy; as in Matt. xxv.35.36.

—<sup>2</sup>. Hence, as charity is affected with good, it is affected with mercy towards those who are in miseries; the good of charity has this in it, because it descends from the Lord's love towards the universal human race; which love is mercy, because all the human race is constituted in miseries. Mercy sometimes appears with the evil, who are in no charity; but it is grief on account of what they themselves suffer; for it is [shown] towards their friends, who make one with themselves; and when their friends suffer, they suffer. This mercy is not the mercy of charity; but it is the mercy of friendship for the sake of self, which, regarded in itself, is unmercifulness; for it despises or hates all others except itself; thus except the friends who make one with itself.

5393. In the Hell (of the colon) are those who have been endowed with no mercy . . .

5480. 'He wept'=mercy; (for) 'to weep,' when predicated of the Lord . . . =to have mercy. That weeping is of grief and love, is known; consequently it is of mercy; for mercy is love grieving. Love Divine is therefore called mercy, because from itself the human race is in Hell; and, when a man apperceives this in himself, he implores mercy. III.

5585. 'Ye shall not see my faces'=that there is no compassion. For when 'faces' are predicated of the Lord, they=mercy or compassion. . . Not that there is no compassion with the Lord; for He is mercy itself; but when there is no medium which conjoins, it appears to the man as if there were no compassion in the Lord. Ex.

— . As 'the face of Jehovah'=the Divine love, it=of mercy; for mercy is of love towards the human race constituted in such great miseries. III.

[A.5585]<sup>2</sup>. Relatively to the human race, the Divine mercy (has appeared in a face). This, namely, the Divine mercy in the Divine Human, is called 'the Angel of faces.'

—<sup>6</sup>. For the man who in evil averts himself . . . that is, removes His mercy from himself.

5629. 'God Shaddai' give you merciea before the man' (Gen.xliii.14)=that spiritual truth may receive you graciously.

5691. 'Because his compassions were moved' (ver.30)=mercy from love. . . It is said mercy, because he was not as yet acknowledged by him . . . In the Original Language 'compassions' are expressed by a word which signifies the inmost and most tender love.

5706. Goods applied to everyone from mercy. Sig. and Ex.

5758<sup>2</sup>. To claim for one's self truth and good is contrary to . . . the acknowledgment that all salvation is from mercy; that is, that man is from himself in Hell, but is drawn out thence by the Lord from mercy. Nor can a man be in humiliation, consequently receive the mercy of the Lord—for this inflows solely in humiliation, or into a humble heart—unless he acknowledges that from himself there is nothing but evil, and that all good is from the Lord . . .

5816. That thus there is no mercy, and conjunction with truths in the Natural. Sig. . . When there is no mercy, there is no conjunction either; for there is no love, which is spiritual conjunction. The Divine love is called mercy relatively to the human race constituted in such great miseries. Ex.

—<sup>3</sup>. There would (then) be no reception of the mercy which continually inflows from the Lord through internal good; for there would be no medium; and, if there were no reception of mercy, there would be no conjunction either.

5873. 'He gave forth his voice in weeping'=mercy and joy.

5929<sup>2</sup>. For the things which are more remote, and not fully in correspondence, are not in such humiliation as to be able to implore mercy; nay, they cannot from the heart mention mercy; but in place of it grace. Ex.

6034. 'He wept long upon his necks'=mercy . . . for the first and the Continuous of conjunction is mercy; namely, that of the Lord.

6037. 'After that I have seen thy faces'=after the apprehension of mercy.

6180. 'And do mercy with me and Truth' (Gen.xlvii.29)=humiliation; (for) 'to do mercy'=the good of love . . . because all mercy is of love; for he who is in love or charity is also in mercy; and the love and charity with him become mercy when the neighbour is in need or misery . . . Hence it is that by 'mercy' is signified the good of love.

—<sup>2</sup>. (The words 'mercy and Truth.' Ill.)

6389<sup>2</sup>. Thus they regard the Lord's mercy as a debt . . .

6571<sup>3</sup>. Believe that everyone can be intronitted into Heaven from mercy alone.

6667. For these have no mercy, because they have . . . only the love of self.

6804<sup>2</sup>. (The covenant) on the Lord's part is mercy and choice.

6851. Mercy towards those of the Spiritual Church after infestations by falsities. Sig. and Ex.

—'. 'In seeing to see,' when said of the Lord,=mercy; for when the Lord sees anyone in misery, or affliction, He has mercy on him. The Lord indeed sees all, and thus has mercy on all; but it is not said of any others that He has mercy on them, than those who receive His mercy, who are they who are in good.

6852. The aid of mercy against those who wanted to drive them to serve. Sig. and Ex.

6997. 'The anger of Jehovah'=mercy. Ex.

—<sup>6</sup>. For all the punishings of the evil come forth from the mercy of the Lord towards the good . . .

7051. They believe that the election and salvation of man are from mercy . . . not considering that . . . the mercy of the Lord is towards every man who abstains from evil, and wants to live in good . . .
